

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

This is a Key-Numbered Volume

Each syllabus paragraph in this volume is marked with the topic and section number under which the point will eventually appear in the American Digest System. The lawyer is led from that syllabus to the exact place in the Digest where we, as digest makers, have placed the other cases on the same point — This is the Key-Number Annotation

THE
VOLUME 151

WHITE v. WHITE.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 6, 1912.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 232*)—TIME—JUDGMENT FOR RENT.

Upon recovery of a judgment for an annual rent, each year's rent should bear interest from January 1st following its maturity.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1234*)—SUPERSEDEAS BOND—EFFECT.

Under Civ. Code Prac. § 748, the obligors in a supersedeas bond are expressly made liable for any judgment the Court of Appeals may order to be rendered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4761-4777; Dec. Dig. § 1234.*]

On petition for rehearing. Petition overruled.

For former opinion, see 150 Ky. 283, 150 S. W. 388.

HOBSON, C. J. [1] The sum of $500 is fixed in the opinion as the rent of the farm for each year, to be divided between the parties in interest. Each year's rent will bear interest from January 1st following its maturity as fixed in the judgment of the circuit court.

[2] By the terms of the supersedeas bond the obligors therein are liable for any judgment this court may order to be rendered. See Civil Code, § 748; also original opinion in White v. White, 150 Ky. 283, 150 S. W. 388.

Petition overruled.

LEVY'S EX'X et al. v. LEEDS.†

1. WILLS (§ 441*)—CONSTRUCTION—ASCERTAINING INTENTION.

A testator's intention must be gathered, not only from the instrument itself, but from his relation to the parties in interest, the family arrangements, and circumstances surrounding him; and in ascertaining the intention the language of the will may sometimes be changed, words discarded as surplusage, or other words supplied, and words and sentences transposed.

2. WILLS (§ 616*)—CONSTRUCTION—REQUESTS FOR LIFE WITH POWER OF DISPOSITION.

A testator gave his property, including two houses and lots, to his wife for life, with full power to sell it, or any part thereof, and invest and reinvest the proceeds, and gave one-half of all that might remain at her death in trust for a daughter, during her life, such one-half to include a specified one of the houses and lots to be occupied by her free of charge during her life. It further provided that the trustee should not sell such house and lot without the consent of the daughter and her husband. Held, that the will imposed no limitation upon the power of the wife to sell such house and lot during her lifetime.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Chancery Branch, Second Division.

Action between Moses Levy's executrix and others and Mary E. Leeds. From the judgment, the executrix and others appeal. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Alfred Selligman and Joseph Selligman, both of Louisville, for appellants. Harrison & Harrison and James S. Pirtle, all of Louisville, for appellee.

NUNN, J. This appeal is from a judgment of the second division of the chancery branch of the Jefferson circuit court, construing the will of Moses Levy. The case was tried upon an agreed state of facts, which shows, among other things, that in 1902 Moses Levy owned a large estate, consisting of both real and personal property; that he made a will on that date; that he died leaving surviving him Henrietta Levy, his wife, and two children, a son, Frederick Levy, and a daughter, Lena, who married Emil S. Tachau; that he owned two lots fronting on First street in the city of Louisville; that during the lifetime of Moses Levy he, his wife and son, resided in one of these houses, and his daughter and her husband resided in the other. In the first clause of his will he directed that his debts be paid, and made many special bequests to charitable institutions. In the seventh clause thereof he provided as follows:

"(7) All the rest and residue of my estate of every kind and wherever situated I give and bequeath and devise to my beloved (wife)

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Henrietta Levy, for and during her life, with full and complete power and authority to her, to sell, dispose of, convey, invest and reinvest the same, or any part thereof, or the proceeds thereof from time to time as she may deem proper, the proceeds in such case to be held and controlled by her upon the same terms and conditions and with the same powers and authority as the original estate under this will, but no purchaser or purchasers from my wife shall be required to look to the application, investment or reinvestment of said proceeds or any part thereof.

"I further authorize and empower my said wife in her discretion to loan or advance to my son, Frederick Levy, from time to time so as to enable him to continue or go into business, such sum or sums as in her judgment will not in the aggregate exceed one-half of what will be said Frederick's share of said residuary estate under the provisions of this will at the time of my wife's death. Said Frederick shall execute his promissory note or notes to my wife as executrix of this will for the amount of such loans or advancements payable at such time or times as she may direct and bearing interest from their date at five per cent. per annum payable at such intervals as she may direct, and he shall be charged with such loans or advancements in the final division of my residuary estate under this will.

"I give, bequeath and devise all that may remain at the death of my wife of my estate given and devised by this clause to her as follows, to wit: One-half thereof I give and devise to my son, Frederick Levy, subject to a charge for such sum or sums as may have been loaned or advanced to him as hereinbefore authorized and remain unpaid at the time of her death, and in allotting such one-half to my son Frederick there shall be included therein as part thereof the house and lot now occupied by me as a residence, the same lying on the west side of First street in Louisville, Ky., beginning at a point. [Here follows description.] The other one-half of my estate given and devised to my wife by this clause and remaining at the time of her death I give and devise to the Fidelity Trust & Safety Vault Co. of Louisville, Ky., as trustee and in trust for my daughter, Lena Tachau, for and during her life, with remainder over upon my said daughter's death as hereinafter set forth.

"Said trustee shall pay the income of said one-half in quarterly-yearly installments to my said daughter, Lena, during her life and her receipts shall be sufficient evidence of the payment thereof to her. In allotting said one-half share as aforesaid, to said trustee, there shall be included therein as part thereof a house and lot now occupied by said Emil S. Tachau and Lena Tachau as a home, the same lying on the west side of First street in said city of Louisville, immediately adjoining the house and lot allotted my son Frederick as above on the north beginning [here follows description] which house and lot my said daughter shall be permitted during her life to occupy as a home free of charge. Said trustee shall have the duties, rights and powers concerning said trust estate herein-after set forth," etc.

The will further provided that the trust company could not sell this house and lot situated on First street without the written consent of Lena Tachau and her husband, Emil S. Tachau.

After the will was probated, the widow and two children joined in a deed conveying the two houses and lots situated on First street to Mary E. Leeds for the consideration of $12,000. Mrs. Leeds took possession of them, and has rented them out, collected the rents, paid the taxes and other charges thereon from that time to the present. It appears that Mrs. Leeds arrived at the conclusion that the will did not give Henrietta Levy, as executrix of her husband's will, the right nor power to sell the house and lot occupied by Lena Tachau; that she could not, therefore, pass a fee-simple title to it, as the husband of Lena Tachau did not join in the conveyance nor give his written consent. And it was for the settlement of this question that the parties agreed upon the facts and presented them to the lower court for settlement, as required by the Code. There is no question about the title being in Mrs. Leeds to the place occupied by Moses Levy and his wife during his life, which was also the place Frederick Levy was to get under certain contingencies named in the will. The only question for this court to consider is: Did a fee-simple title pass to Mrs. Leeds by the deed of the widow, Henrietta Levy, in her own right and as executrix of the will of her husband? If it did, the judgment must be reversed; if it did not, the judgment must be affirmed. To settle this question we must ascertain the intention of the testator from the entire will.

[1] Appellee's counsel contend that the intention of the testator must be gathered from the instrument itself, as well as from the relation of the testator to the parties in interest, the family arrangements, and the circumstances which surrounded the testator at the time he made the will, and that, in order to ascertain his intention, it is sometimes permissible to change the language of the will, to discard words as surplusage when they appear to be without meaning as used, to supply words, to transpose words and sentences, and many authorities are cited to support this contention, among them being Buschemeyer v. Klein, 139 Ky. 124, 129 S. W. 551. This is the correct rule in the construction of wills; therefore appellee's counsel claim that the following language, "which house and lot my said daughter shall be permitted during her life to occupy as a home free of charge," limits the power and right of the widow, the executrix, to sell and convey this house and lot.

[2] This language of the will, taken by itself, would seem to have that effect; but it does not so appear when considered in connection with the will as a whole. In the first part of the clause above copied, he devised to his wife, Henrietta Levy, all the rest and residue of his estate of every kind, wherever situated, for and during her life, with full and complete power and authority to sell, dispose of, convey, invest, and reinvest the same, or any part thereof, or the proceeds thereof, from time to time as she may deem proper. Further along in the same clause he used the following language: "I give, bequeath and devise all that may remain at the death of my wife of my estate given and devised by this clause to her as follows." He then continues by giving one-half of what remained to his son, and by disposing of the other one-half as follows: "The other one-half of my estate given and devised to my wife by this clause and remaining at the time of her death I give and devise to the Fidelity Trust & Safety Vault Co. of Louisville, Ky., as trustee and in trust for my daughter, Lena Tachau, for and during her life, with remainder over upon my said daughter's death as hereinafter set forth." Thus it will be seen that the language of the will which permitted Lena Tachau to occupy the house free of charge had reference to her occupancy after the death of Henrietta Levy, and while the daughter's estate was in the hands of the Fidelity Trust & Safety Vault Company. It is evident that the testator did not use this language intending to limit the power that he had given his wife to sell and convey his property during her life. He seems to have had great confidence in the honesty and business ability of his wife. He expressly, without any character of limitation, invested her with full and complete power to sell and convey all of his estate, both real and personal, or any part thereof.

The only language in the will which it is claimed placed any limitation upon the wife's right to sell and convey is that copied above, and that is only applicable after the death of Henrietta Levy, at which time the daughter's estate is to be in the hands of the Trust Company. He knew and was willing to risk the love of the mother for the daughter; and he knew that, as he had devised the mother considerable property, she would provide for the daughter and protect her interests. Taking the will as a whole, it seems that he scarcely expected his wife to dispose of these houses and lots, and expected that they would be undisposed of at her death; but there is nothing in the will indicating a purpose on his part to limit his wife's right in that respect. He was willing to risk her business acumen in that regard. The will appears to have been prepared by a person who understood the meaning of the language used. The will is plain and unambiguous, and there is no necessity to discard, transpose, or to supply words, or to change sentences, etc., to arrive at the true intention of the testator. It appears that the widow, in her individual right and as executrix, conveyed both of the houses and lots to Mrs. Leeds. Her daughter and son both joined in the deed, but unnecessarily. Her right and power was complete under the will of her husband, and her deed alone would have been sufficient to convey the fee-simple title to Mrs. Leeds.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to the lower court to dispose of the matter as indicated in the opinion.

HATFIELD v. HATFIELD.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 27, 1912.)

1. EASEMENTS (§ 3*)—RESERVATION OF WAY—APPURTENANCES.

Where a grantor of land reserved for himself a way to the highway, such reservation, being for the benefit of land retained, is an appurtenance to that land, and passes to the grantor's subsequent grantee, though not expressly mentioned in the deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. §§ 8-12; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

2. EASEMENTS (§ 44*)—EXTENT OF RIGHT—WAYS.

A grantor reserved through the land granted an existing way to the public highway. The way struck the highway at such an angle that to turn to the left it was necessary to make a short turn up an incline, and, to avoid this, the grantor habitually drove across the highway making a curve on his land across the road, thus having an easy turn to the left. Held, that, upon repair of the highway obviating this dangerous curve, the right of the grantor or his subsequent grantees to use the land across the highway was lost.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Grayson County.

G. W. Stone and J. C. Graham, both of Leitchfield, for appellant. Chas. V. Higdon and Z. T. Proctor, both of Leitchfield, for appellee.

HOBSON, C. J. William Hatfield brought this suit against George L. Hatfield to recover damages for the stopping up of a pass-way by the latter. On a trial of the case before a jury there was a verdict and judgment for the defendant. The plaintiff appeals.

The facts of the case are these: H. C. Wooldridge, who then owned a tract of 253½ acres of land, conveyed 138 acres of the tract to George L. Hatfield. The public road leading from Big Clifty to Clarkson ran through the tract. Wooldridge had a passway leading out to the road and striking the road at an angle, so that to turn toward Clarkson it was necessary to make a rather sharp curve up an incline. To avoid this, for a number of years Wooldridge had driven across the road, making a curve on his own land beyond it, and coming back to the public road. The public road had become washed, and the public had for some years followed this curve, and had not traveled the public road. In this condition of things in the deed to George L. Hatfield Wooldridge inserted the following stipulation: "It is expressly understood and agreed by the parties hereto that the road and right of way now existing through the tract hereby conveyed, shall remain open to the party of the first part." On January 4, 1909, Wooldridge sold and conveyed to W. H. Hatfield the remaining 115½-acre tract which he owned. In this deed there is no mention of the passway referred to, but by it Wooldridge conveyed the land "together with all the appurtenances thereunto belonging." The situation at the time this deed was made is shown by the following plot:

In August, 1911, the road supervisor repaired the public road and put it back on its original location, and, when this had been done, George L. Hatfield put his fence along the line of the public road, so that William Hatfield could no longer drive on the curve beyond the road indicated by the figures xyz on the plot; this curve being 100 feet long, and there being a space of 10 feet between it and the county road at the widest place. The thing in controversy is the right of William Hatfield to drive over the curve xyz, which is on the other side of the county road from his place. The circuit court told the jury that the reservation of the passway in the deed from H. C. Wooldridge to George L. Hatfield gave the plaintiff no right to the passway beyond the public road, or that part embracing the curve xyz. Of this instruction appellant complains.

[1] The purpose of Wooldridge in making the reservation was to retain for himself a way out when he sold the land lying between himself and the public road. This reservation was made for the benefit of the tract which he still owned and afterwards sold to William H. Hatfield. It was an appurtenance to that tract and passed to the grantee of that tract though it is not expressly mentioned in the deed; for, being an appurtenance, it ran with the land. Gibson v. Porter, 15 S. W. 871, 12 Ky. Law Rep. 917; Kamer v. Bryant, 103 Ky. 729, 46 S. W. 14, 20 Ky. Law Rep. 340; Ray v. Nally, 89 S. W. 486, 28 Ky. Law Rep. 425. But what Wooldridge reserved was a passway out to the public road.

[2] The right of way referred to in the deed was the right of way to the public road. When he reached the public road, the right of way ended. The object of the reservation was to give him a way out to the public road. It was not contemplated that he should have a right of way beyond the public road. It is true that he had been in the habit of driving beyond the road for convenience, but a reservation in a deed should not be extended so as to give him rights beyond the public road, when the purpose was to give him a right of way out to the road. We therefore conclude that the circuit court properly instructed the jury that the defendant had the right to close up the curve on the far side of the road.

If Wooldridge had continued to own the whole tract, can it be believed that he, when he fenced and cleared the land, would have kept up this curve on the far side of the public road, after that road was put back in its original location? In the construction of a reservation of a passway in a deed the grantor cannot demand of his grantee greater rights than a man would reasonably exercise in his own right if he owned both pieces of land. Each must exercise his rights with due regard to the rights of the other. The parties must be presumed to contemplate that in time the land would be cleared and inclosed, and they cannot be presumed to have contemplated that there should be two roads here, after the county road was put back in the proper place and the land was cleared and inclosed.

But under the deed William H. Hatfield has a right of way out, and, if the angle is too sharp for him to turn with reasonable convenience toward Clarkson, he is entitled to have the passway widened at this point so as to have a reasonable space to turn in the direction of Clarkson. No doubt the parties can agree as good neighbors upon a reasonable cutting off of the sharp angle at the point a; but if they cannot, and George Hatfield obstructs this angle so as to prevent William Hatfield from having a reasonable outlet in going in the direction of Clarkson, he may have remedy.

There is no question of adverse possession in the case, as the rights of the parties accrued when their deeds were made in 1908 and 1909. Before this all the land belonged to Wooldridge, and George L. Hatfield now owns his body of land subject to the reservation made in his deed.

Judgment affirmed.

RITTER v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF EDMONSON COUNTY.

1. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 69*)—SCHOOLHOUSE—ABANDONMENT OF SITE.

The intention of a school board to change the site of a school and the letting of a contract to build on the new site on which work was begun, but discontinued by order of the board, who decided to build on the old site, was not an abandonment of the old site within a deed providing that, on abandonment for school purposes, the site should revert to the grantors; school at the time being taught in it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. § 174; Dec. Dig. § 69.*]

2. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 68*)—STATUTES—SCHOOLHOUSES—TITLE TO PROPERTY.

A school board may erect a school on a site held under a deed providing that, on the abandonment of such site for common school purposes, the site should revert to the grantor under Ky. St. § 4426a, giving the board power "to purchase, lease or rent school sites." Section 4437, requiring a fee title for schoolhouse lots, being an earlier statute, and in conflict, does not apply.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. §§ 170-173; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

3. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 68*)—SCHOOLHOUSES—SCHOOL BOARD—DISCRETION.

In an action to restrain the erecting of a schoolhouse, evidence held to warrant a finding that the board did not abuse its discretion in choosing the old site.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Edmonson County.

Action by L. H. Ritter to enjoin the County Board of Education of Edmonson County from erecting a schoolhouse. From a judgment dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Logan & Hazell, of Frankfort, for appellant. Grider & Logan, of Brownsville, for appellee.

NUNN, J. This action was brought by appellant, a resident of subdistrict No. 1, of district No. 3, to enjoin the county board of education of Edmonson county from erecting a schoolhouse on a certain site which had been selected by the board. On a trial in the lower court the injunction was dissolved, and the action dismissed.

It appears that the place where the trustees were having the house erected was called the "old site"; that it was the place where the common school had been maintained in the district for at least 60 years; that it was used as such for at least 40 years before the trustees obtained a deed for it. It further appears that appellant's vendor and one of his adjoining neighbors made the deed to the district, and inserted therein the following clause: "Should the lot of ground cease from any cause to be the site for the common school of said district said lot is to revert to its grantors, and the house then standing is to be the property of the district to be removed from said lot."

[1] It appears that from four to six months before the board selected the old site upon which to erect this house it had selected another site 200 or 300 yards distant from the old site; that it had let the contract to build the house on this site, and the contractor had commenced the work. Appellant claims that by these acts the district abandoned this property, and it reverted to the grantors in the deed, or their heirs or assigns, and that he was entitled to most of the lot as his grantor conveyed most of it. It appears that, soon after the contractor began work on the new site, the board of education notified him to cease work; that within a few days after giving the notice the board met in the old schoolhouse, and considered the matter with reference to the change of site, and adjourned to meet another day; that they did meet again and finally rescinded the order making the change to the new site, and selected the old site, and directed the building to be erected there. There is nothing in the statutes to prevent the board from changing its mind and rescinding the order referred to. It had a perfect right to do so, and to select another place for the erection of the schoolhouse. The intention, which existed for a few months, to change the site of the schoolhouse, did not have the effect of itself to abandon the old site. The house on the old site was still in use—school was at that time being taught in it. The site was never changed. The intention of changing it was abandoned before the removal was complete.

[2] Appellant contends that the board had no right to erect the schoolhouse upon the old site, as it did not have the fee-simple title to it, and that his action ought, therefore, to have been sustained for two reasons: First, because the district had abandoned this site; second, because the deed containing the clause above quoted shows that the district had not the fee-simple title to the lot. The first reason, as above stated, is without foundation. As to the second, it is our opinion that the board had such a title as would authorize it to construct the building thereon. Section 4426a, Kentucky Statutes, says the county board of education shall have the power "to purchase, lease or rent school sites, to build, to repair and to rent schoolhouses," etc. This seems to be conclusive of the board's right to erect the house. Appellant's contention is that section 4437, Kentucky Statutes, an act of 1893, requires the school board to own the property in fee simple. It seems that this act is in conflict with the act of 1908 referred to in section 4426a, for this section expressly provides that the county board of education has power to purchase, lease, or rent schoolhouse sites. See, also, Evans v. Cropp, 141 Ky. 514, 133 S. W. 221.

[3] Appellant also contends that the county board abused its discretion in selecting the old site upon which to erect the schoolhouse, as the ground is rough, steep, and covered with large rocks; that it is unsanitary because the spring from which the school obtains water is lower than the schoolhouse, and is polluted by drainage from the school grounds, and therefore injurious to the health of the children attending the school. There was much testimony introduced showing that appellant's contentions are correct, but there was much more introduced showing that his claims were without foundation; that the place selected was better suited than any other near the center of the school district; that it was a nice shady place; that the spring afforded fine water, and was within 30 or 40 steps of the house; that the drainage from the school grounds entered a branch, but none of it flowed into the spring; that the spring is not what is called a "boiling spring," but came from under a large hill back of the schoolhouse; that the new site spoken of was more level than the old site, but had no shade or water nearer than the old site. It is admitted that the old grounds are rough, that it has considerable rock scattered over it, which appellant's witnesses said were dangerous to the children, but appellee's witnesses testified that the rock could be removed without much expense. A large majority of the school patrons of the district petitioned the board to erect the house on the old site, and we cannot say that the evidence shows that it abused its sound discretion in doing so.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

LONG v. BARBER ASPHALT PAVING CO. et al†

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 646*) — STREETS—EXISTENCE.

Where a street improved for travel has not been dedicated to the public or accepted or recognized by the municipality as such, the street is not a public street, though the owners intend to dedicate it to the public.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1419; Dec. Dig. § 646.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 450*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—ASSESSMENT DISTRICTS.

Where territory on one side of a street to be improved at the cost of territory in an assessment district was divided into squares by streets, while the territory on the other side was not so divided, the assessment district on the latter side must be limited to a line running the same distance from the street that the line on the other side of the street is run.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 465*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—ASSESSMENTS.

Where an assessment district for a street improvement has been properly fixed, the cost of the improvement must be apportioned to the property in the district, so that all of the property will bear its just proportion of the cost.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 198*)—INCUMBRANCES—LIENS FOR STREET IMPROVEMENTS.

Since a lien for the cost of a street improvement does not attach until the apportionment warrant has been issued, land in an assessment district conveyed after the ordinance for the improvement and the letting of the contract but before the work was done is not then incumbered by such a lien.

† Rehearing denied January 14, 1913.

LASSING, J. By an ordinance approved April 7, 1910, the city council of Louisville ordered the original construction of Bayly avenue from Frankfort avenue to Center avenue extended, and directed that "said work should be done at the cost of the owners of the ground on the east side of Bayly avenue from Frankfort avenue to the center line of Center avenue extended and extending back to a line midway between Bayly avenue and a private way, known as Birchwood avenue; and on the west side of Bayly avenue to the center line of Center avenue extended and extending to the line midway between Bayly and Ellwanger avenues." On May 16th following a contract for the original construction of this street was awarded to the Barber Asphalt Paving Company. On July 15th, and before the work was begun on the contract, George W. Long purchased of Nancy Jane Birch a tract of land lying, in part, within the zone affected by this improvement, said property being shown on the accompanying map by the letters x, y, v, z.

ceiving that the apportionment was inequitable and unjust, George W. Long and certain other property holders declined to pay the warrants issued against their property. The contractor instituted suit, in which it sought to have their property subjected in satisfaction of the warrants. In his answer the defendant, Long, resisted payment upon three grounds: First, that the ordinance was invalid, because the provisions of sections 2832 and 2833, Kentucky Statutes, had not been followed; second, because council erred in fixing the east line of the assessment district a greater distance from Bayly avenue than the western boundary line of said district was situated from said avenue; and, third, because certain property within the zone of the improvement was entirely omitted from assessment. He also made his answer a cross-petition against his vendor, Nancy Jane Birch, and pleaded as to her that, inasmuch as the improvement had been directed and the contract therefor let prior to his purchase of the property, under his contract

Work was begun shortly thereafter on the contract, and it was completed early in October. Immediately upon its completion, apportionment of the cost was made and warrants therefore were by the city of Louisville issued and placed in the hands of the contractor. In apportioning the cost, the city followed the provisions of the ordinance fixing the assessment district. The eastern boundary of the assessment district is evidenced by the dotted lines A-B, and the western boundary by the dotted lines C-D. Conwith her she was answerable on her warranty for any assessment which should be made against his property, and sought to have her required to pay such assessment as the court should, upon final hearing, hold his property answerable for. Issue was joined, proof taken, and upon final hearing the chancellor was of opinion that there was no merit in these respective contentions of the defendant, Long, and judgment was entered in accordance with the prayer of the petition, and dismissing his cross-petition. Long appeals, and seeks a reversal both as to the validity of the ordinance and the apportionment warrant issued against his property, and the finding of the chancellor against him on his cross-petition against Nancy Jane Birch.

[1] On the west side of Bayly avenue, the territory is defined into squares by principal streets, whereas on the east side of Bayly avenue the territory is not so defined, unless Birchwood avenue is a public way or street, for the distance from Bayly avenue to the first public street or road east of Bayly avenue is about 2,400 feet, a distance greatly in excess of the length of a city block. Council, in the draft of the ordinance, for this improvement, treated Birchwood avenue as though it were a public way or street, although in the ordinance it is referred to as a private way. There is no evidence in the record showing that this Birchwood avenue has ever been dedicated to the public as a street, or accepted or recognized by the city as such, although it is undoubtedly in its appointments equipped as well, if not better, than most of the public streets in the city. Still, the fact that it is highly improved cannot make of it a public street or way, if no steps have been taken to dedicate it to the public use. Defendant in his pleading denies that it is a public way, and there is no evidence whatever supporting the position of the plaintiff to the contrary. With the record in this condition we are constrained to hold that Birchwood avenue has not been shown to be a public way or street. A similar question arose in Nevin v. Roach, 96 Ky. 492, 5 S. W. 546, 9 Ky. Law Rep. 819. In that case it was shown that a street known as Madison, while improved, had not in fact been dedicated to the public use, or accepted by the city, although the owners contemplated so dedicating it at the time. It was held, upon consideration here, that the fact that it had been improved and that the owners intended to dedicate it to the public use was not sufficient, the court saying: "But it has never been accepted by the city, and therefore the case must be considered without regard to such a street, and it was not in existence when the improvement was ordered and the contract entered into, or when the work was completed."

[2] To the east of Bayly avenue the property is not divided or defined into squares by principal streets, and we have a case where the property on one side of the street is defined into blocks or squares by principal streets, and on the other side it is not. This identical question has likewise been before this court in the case of Preston v. Roberts, 12 Bush, 570, which arose out of the original construction of Barrett avenue in the city of Louisville. Brent avenue was a dedicated street lying to the east of Barrett avenue, and the assessment district was fixed at a point midway between Barrett avenue and Brent avenue. Upon the west side of Barrett avenue there was no dedicated or principal street within the distance of an ordinary city block, and council, in its ordinance, fixed the assessment district at a point 252 feet west of Barrett avenue. This figure was adopted upon the assumption that this distance would be halfway between Barrett avenue and a street which would in the future be opened to the east thereof and at a distance of 504 feet from Barrett avenue. The validity of this ordinance and apportionment was contested, and, upon consideration here, were held to be invalid. The court said: "Assessments should be made in accordance with the facts existing at the time, and cannot be properly based upon speculation as to what will occur in the future." To the same effect are Cooper v. Nevin, 90 Ky. 85, 13 S. W. 841, 11 Ky. Law Rep. 875, Nevin v. Roach, 86 Ky. 492, 5 S. W. 546, 9 Ky. Law Rep. 819, and City of Louisville v. Selva, 106 Ky. 730, 51 S. W. 447, 52 S. W. 809, 21 Ky. Law Rep. 349, 620.

In City of Louisville v. American Standard Asphalt Co., 125 Ky. 497, 102 S. W. 806, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 133, the litigation arose over the original construction of Rosewood avenue. The ordinance providing for its construction treated the territory on both sides of said avenue between Baxter and Von Borries avenues as being divided into squares by principal streets. The court found that the next street, running parallel with Rosewood avenue on the east, was 1,500 feet from Rosewood avenue; that this was too great a distance to be treated as a city square; and that, therefore, the assessment district should extend east of Rosewood avenue only to the same distance that it extended to the west thereof. In disposing of the question, the court said: "Now, what is the requirement of the charter in a case like this: Here the territory on the west side of the improvement was defined into squares, then under the express language of the charter the tax district on that side must be one-half the depth of the squares, and, this being true, the tax district on the east side can only be the same depth. This is necessary to comply with the requirements of the law of equality of burden. Preston v. Roberts, 12 Bush, 584; Cooper v. Nevin, 90 Ky. 88 [13 S. W. 841, 11 Ky. Law Rep. 875]. The general council have no more discretion in fixing the tax district for the east side than they have for the west side." The opinions in these cases are conclusive of the rights of the parties here. The ordinance correctly defined the boundary of the assessment district on the west side of Bayly avenue, and the territory to the east of Bayly avenue, not being divided or defined into squares by principal streets, the ordinance should have limited the assessment district on the east side of Bayly avenue to a line running the same distance therefrom that the assessment line on the west side of the avenue was run. In other words, if the line C-D is 250 feet from Bayly avenue, the line A-B should be a like distance therefrom.

[3] As to the second proposition, the statute provides that the cost of the construction must be apportioned to all of the property within the assessment district. The claim is that certain property lying within this district was omitted from assessment. This contention is not seriously denied, but it is insisted that a portion of the property so omitted belonged to appellant, and that to assess it for its proportionate share of the cost would increase, rather than diminish, the burden of taxation as to him. This contention, however, is based upon the idea that the assessment line lying to the east of Bayly avenue, as fixed in the ordinance, is correct; but since it has been determined that this assessment line is not correct, and under a correct assessment not nearly so much of appellant's property will lie within the assessment zone, we are unable to determine whether the assessment of this omitted property would be beneficial or harmful to him. However, inasmuch as the case must be reversed for other reasons, it is unnecessary to enter into a consideration of this question. When the assessment zone has been properly fixed, as above indicated, and the cost of the improvement is apportioned to the property in said zone, the statute should be strictly complied with and all of the property lying within said zone made to bear its just proportion of the cost. This disposes of the questions raised in the litigation between the contractor and the appellant, Long.

[4] As to the claim asserted by appellant against Nancy Jane Birch, we are of opinion that the ruling of the chancellor thereon was correct. Cases might arise where a distinction can be drawn between an incumbrance and a lien, but in the case under consideration there is no incumbrance until there is a lien. They are identical or synonymous, for the reason that, until the apportionment warrant is issued, there is no lien; and, in the absence of a lien, there is no incumbrance. The property is never liable for any part of the cost of the improvement until the apportionment warrant is issued. The right of the city to impose upon abutting property the cost of the original construction of a street is one of purely statutory origin. The owner of the property is not liable, in any event for the cost of the improvement, but the property itself is placed in lien therefor. This lien does not attach until the apportionment warrant has been issued. Until this has been done, the property cannot be said to be incumbered or burdened with any part of the cost of the improvement, for the reason that the burden has not been laid upon it. It is not the ordinance providing for the improvement, nor the letting of the contract, that burdens the property with its share of the cost of the improvement, but it is the improvement itself for which the property is held answerable. The lien must attach at some time, and this the statute provides shall exist from the date of the apportionment warrant. Now, although, at the time of the conveyance by Mrs. Birch to appellant, the improvement had been ordered and the contract let, the work had not, in fact, been done, and the contractor, under the broadest and most liberal construction that could be placed upon his contract, had, at the time of this purchase by appellant, no claim whatever upon this property for anything; and hence there was no incumbrance upon the property for which his vendor is in any wise answerable, and the chancellor correctly so held.

Judgment reversed as to the contractor, Barber Asphalt Paving Company, and affirmed as to appellee, Nancy Jane Birch.

BOARD v. LUIGART et al.

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 274*)—RENT-DISTRESS—REMEDIES FOR WRONGFUL DISTRESS.

The remedies for wrongful distress for rent prescribed by Ky. St. § 2303, and Civ. Code Prac. § 653, both of which require the tenant to execute a forthcoming bond for the property distrained, are not exclusive; Ky. St. § 2310, providing a remedy by replevin, section 7 providing remedy by action without bond, and the common law affording a similar remedy.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 274*)—RENT—WRONGFUL DISTRESS—DOUBLE DAMAGES.

In a common-law action for damages for wrongful distress, double damages provided for by Ky. St. § 2312, cannot be recovered, as it is in the nature of a statutory penalty.

3. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 139*)—WRONGFUL DISTRESS—LIABILITY—DOUBLE DAMAGES.

An officer who executes an illegal distress warrant or writ of attachment is liable only for the actual or market value of the property wrongfully seized or sold under the writ, and cannot be mulcted in double damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sheriffs and Constables, Cent. Dig. §§ 297-307; Dec. Dig. § 139.*]

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 274*)—SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 137*)—WRONGFUL DISTRESS—NATURE OF ACTION.

A petition in an action to recover damages for the illegal seizure and sale of household goods distrained for rent, averring that plaintiff occupied the premises under an agreement to pay a stipulated sum per month, which sum was to be derived from an illicit business to be conducted in the premises, that during the last months of the tenancy plaintiff derived no income from the premises, and hence, no rent was due for which distress would lie, and that, despite this and the fact that the property distrained was exempt, the principal defendant illegally instigated and caused the defendant constable to unlawfully distraint plaintiff's property which, being illegally sold at public auction, was purchased by the principal defendant—states a cause of action both at common law and under the statute as against the principal defendant and an action at common law against the constable for wrongful seizure and sale of the property distrained, the gist of the action not being to recover damages for a malicious suing out of the distress warrant, or for the malicious prosecution of a civil action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1154-1166; Dec. Dig. § 274; * Sheriffs and Constables, Cent. Dig. §§ 280-289; Dec. Dig. § 137.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Fayette County.

Action by Lucy Board against Gustave Luigart and others. From a judgment dismissing the petition, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

R. S. Crawford and J. H. Minogue, both of Lexington, for appellant. J. A. Edge, of Lexington, for appellees.

SETTLE, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the Fayette circuit court sustaining a demurrer to, and dismissing, appellant's petition, in an action to recover damages for the alleged illegal seizure and sale of her household goods under a distress warrant wrongfully issued for rent.

The petition, as amended, admits the renting by appellant of a house and lot in the city of Lexington from the appellee Gustave Luigart, and alleges that it was, with his knowledge, occupied and maintained by her as a bawdyhouse, and that for the use thereof he was to receive from her $60 per month, payable out of the proceeds or income derived from the illicit business she was to conduct therein; that she did, pursuant to the contract with the appellee Luigart, occupy and maintain the premises as a house of ill fame from some time in the year 1907 down to and including the month of July, 1911, during which time she paid to him a large part of the income derived from its maintenance as a house of ill fame, and all the rent that was due him thereon to the end of July, 1911; and that though she continued to occupy the property for some months after July, 1911, she neither paid nor owed him any rent upon the property for these months, as she derived no income thereon from the illicit business for which it was rented.

It is further alleged in the petition that she was and is the owner of a lot of household goods, kitchen furniture, piano, and other personal effects, an itemized list of which is filed with and made a part of the petition; that in November, 1911, the appellee Luigart wrongfully caused to be issued a distress warrant against appellee for rent alleged to be due him from her for the house and lot in question, which the appellee J. P. Embree, a constable of Fayette county, at the instigation and direction of the appellee Luigart, illegally levied upon the household goods, kitchen furniture, piano, and other property belonging to appellant described above, and thereafter, on the 13th of November, 1911, over the objection of the appellant, illegally sold same at public auction, at which sale the appellee Luigart became the pretended purchaser at the price of $225, a sum greatly less than its actual value; that the property was then reasonably worth $1,250, and the whole thereof was exempt from distress for rent and also from sale under execution, which fact was at the time well known to the appellees Luigart and Embree as before its distraint, and again, before the sale thereof, they were both so notified by appellant, and that she claimed it as exempt property. It is also alleged in the petition that appellant is now and was at the time of the seizure and sale of the property mentioned a bona fide housekeeper and person with a family, consisting of herself and four infant children; that she had no provisions, including breadstuffs and animal food, to sustain her family for one year or any part of that time; that practically all the property sold by appellees under the distress warrant consisted of articles which, under section 1697, Kentucky Statutes, were and are exempt from execution and distress for rent, and should have been specifically set apart to her as a person with a family; and that to the remainder she was and is entitled under the section, supra, in lieu of the provisions for the support of herself and family for the year, which she did not own or have on hand, and which remainder was not of value equal to $40 for each member of the family.

[1, 2] It is stated in the brief of counsel for appellant that the demurrer to the petition was sustained on the ground that appellant's only remedy against the distress warrant was the executing of a bond and presenting her defense to same as pointed out by section 2303, Kentucky Statutes, and that she could not by an action, as here attempted, recover of appellees damages for the illegal seizure and sale of her property. On the other hand, it is contended by counsel for appellees that the demurrer was sustained, because, in the opinion of the circuit court, the only remedy of the tenant in such a case is to execute the bond provided for by section 653 of the Civil Code, and make defense to the distress warrant when judgment is sought by the landlord on the bond; and that a judgment in favor of the tenant in a proceeding on the bond referred to is a prerequisite to the latter's right to sue to recover damages for the illegal seizure and sale of her property. Neither of these propositions is sound. As to the first, it is sufficient to say that section 2303,

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Kentucky Statutes, applies solely to attachments for rent, and, under its provisions, a person in possession of the property attached for rent may, as allowed by section 214, Civil Code, execute bond to the effect that the property or its value shall be forthcoming and subject to the order of the court on the trial of the attachment, or the defendant in the attachment may, as allowed by section 221, Civil Code, execute the bond therein mentioned to perform the judgment of the court, and thereby obtain a discharge of the attachment and restitution of any property taken under it or of the proceeds thereof, leaving the attaching landlord to his remedy on the bond. If the bond be given under section 214, Code, it is only an obligation for the forthcoming of the property; but, if given under section 221, its effect is to discharge the attachment, and to remove the attached property from the custody of the court and its officers. In a proceeding to enforce the payment of the bond given under section 221, neither the sufficiency of the grounds of attachment nor the liability of the property levied upon can be inquired into. On the other hand, the execution of the bond provided for by section 214 does not prevent the person giving it, or any claimant of the property, from setting up his claim thereto and resisting the grounds of attachment when judgment is attempted to be obtained on the bond; indeed, section 29, Civil Code, makes it his duty to assert his claim or make his defense. In the event the distress warrant is issued in behalf of the landlord for rent the tenant may replevy the amount demanded as provided by section 2310, Kentucky Statutes, which would prevent him from making any defense to the distress warrant, or he may execute the bond allowed by section 653, Civil Code, which provides: "If an officer levy or be about to levy a distress warrant upon any property, the tenant, his assignee or under tenant may exercise, with one or more sufficient sureties, to be approved by the officer, a bond to the party in whose favor the warrant issued, to the effect that he will pay to such party the amount of the rent specified in the warrant, with ten per cent. thereon, if the property be of the value of the rent so specified; or, if it be of less value, that he will pay to such party the value thereof, and ten per cent. thereon. For the purpose of taking this bond the officer shall cause the property to be appraised as is provided in section 646. The appraisalment shall be annexed and referred to in the bond. Upon the giving of the bond, the levy, if one have been made, shall be discharged, and the bond and warrant shall be returned to some justice of the peace of the county, if the amount claimed do not exceed fifty dollars; and, if it exceed that sum, to the clerk's office of the circuit court of the county." If the bond provided for in section 653, Civil Code, be given by the tenant, he may, when the party to whom the bond is executed shall move the court for a judgment thereon against the obligors, as provided in section 654, Civil Code, "make defense upon the ground that the distress was for rent not due in whole or in part or was otherwise illegal; or, if the property was levied upon, that it was by statute exempt from the levy; and may make any defense, by way of set off or counterclaim that is allowed by the Code in actions."

The remedy thus provided by sections 653 and 654 of the Civil Code is not, however, exclusive. The tenant may not be financially able to give the bond, or he may not wish to do so, and prefer by action to recover damages for the illegal seizure and sale of his property under the distress warrant, as allowed by section 7, Kentucky Statutes, which provides: "If property be distrained or attached without good cause for suing out such distress or attachment, the owner of such property may, in an action against the party suing out the distress or attachment, recover damages for the wrongful seizure; and if the property be sold, also damages for the sale thereof, and, the defendant's costs, in the distress or attachment including reasonable attorney's fees. In such cases the plaintiff shall not be held to allege or prove malice on the part of the defendant." It will be observed that this section permits the recovery of damages against the person wrongfully suing out the distress or attachment, and in such case section 2312, Kentucky Statutes, allows the recovery of "double damages for the wrongful seizure, and if the property be sold, for double the value thereof." The tenant may, however, instead of suing under the statute, bring a common-law action for damages against the person wrongfully procuring the distress warrant or attachment and the officer executing same for the wrongful seizure and sale of his property under the writ; but in such case the double damages allowed by section 2312, Kentucky Statutes, cannot be recovered. Bell v. Norris, 79 Ky. 48; Garnett v. Jennings, 44 S. W. 382, 19 Ky. Law Rep. 1712. The double damages or double the value of the property sold, provided for in section 2312, is in the nature of a penalty for which the person wrongfully suing out the attachment or distress is alone liable.

[3] The officer who executes the attachment or distress is only responsible in any event for the actual or fair market value of the property wrongfully seized or sold under the writ.

[4] The petition in the instant case appears to state a cause of action both at the common law and under the statute as against the appellee Luigart; but the facts alleged, if established by evidence, will also authorize a recovery against the appellee Embree, the officer executing the distress warrant, as in a common-law action, for the wrongful seizure and sale of the property distrained, namely, its fair market value when sold.

Yet another remedy, in addition to those mentioned, that of suing for a recovery of the specific property taken under a distress warrant, is afforded the tenant by section 33, Civil Code, which provides: "An action to recover the possession of specific personal property taken under a distress warrant, if it be brought by the tenant, or his assignee or under tenant, may be against the party who sued out the warrant; and the property claimed in such case may, under an order for its delivery, be taken from the officer who seized it, if he have no other claim to hold it, other than that appearing from the warrant. The indorsement of the levy on the property made upon a warrant by the officer holding it, shall be a sufficient taking of the property to sustain an action against the party who sued out the warrant." Section 31 allows such an action by the tenant against the officer taking the property; and section 82 the substitution of the plaintiff in the writ for the officer sued, upon the application either of the plaintiff or defendant, in the distress warrant.

The present action is not, as appellees' counsel seem to think, one to recover damages of appellees for a malicious suing out of a distress warrant, or for the malicious prosecution of a civil action, which can only be maintained after a judgment has been rendered determining that the property seized and sold was not subject to distraint. It is simply an action to recover damages for the wrongful issuance of the distress warrant and the wrongful seizure and sale of appellant's property thereunder, upon the grounds that the appellee Lugart was not entitled to the rent claimed, and that the property seized and sold under the distress warrant was exempt under the law. It follows from what we have said that in sustaining the demurrer to the petition the circuit court erred.

Wherefore the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to the circuit court to overrule the demurrer, and for further proceedings consistent with the opinion.

DURBIN, Sheriff, v. OHIO VALLEY TIE CO.

1. TAXATION (§ 611*)—REVIEW—FINDING OF CHANCELLOR—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in an action to enjoin a collection of taxes, held sufficient to support a finding that the owner had no notice of the assessment made by a county board of supervisors.

2. TAXATION (§ 863*)—MODE OF ASSESSMENT—NOTICE OR DEMAND.

An assessment of taxes by the county board of supervisors, without notice to the taxpayer, is void.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Estill County.

Action for injunction by the Ohio Valley Tie Company against A. M. Durbin, Sheriff. Injunction made perpetual on final hearing, and the Sheriff appeals. Affirmed.

Clarence Miller, of Irvine, for appellant. Riddell & Friend, of Irvine, for appellee.

HOBSON, C. J. The Ohio Valley Tie Company is a corporation, having its principal office and place of business in Glendean, Breckinridge county, Ky. It bought a number of ties on Station Camp creek and its tributaries, which it floated down to Irvine, and there loaded them on the cars by means of a hoist which it maintains. It failed to give in a list of its property to the assessor as of September 1, 1908. The county board of supervisors, in January following, made an assessment of its property at $11,500. The sheriff demanded payment of the taxes, and was about to enforce collection by a levy when it brought this suit to enjoin the collection of the taxes, on the ground that the assessment was void. On a final hearing of the case, the circuit court perpetuated the injunction. The sheriff appeals.

The facts of the case, as shown by the record, are these: Previous to 1904 the Dean Tie Company was in business in Estill county. In that year, however, it went out of business, and was succeeded by the Ohio Valley Tie Company. The board of supervisors, after making the assessment referred to, adjourned for a week, and directed notice to be given to the persons against whom assessments had been made. A notice was sent to the Dean Tie Company of an assessment against it. This notice was received by a man named Scrivener, who, a month or more afterwards, gave it to the general manager of the Ohio Valley Tie Company. This was the first notice that he had of the assessment by the board of supervisors, and it was some time after the board had adjourned. He then went before the county court and moved that court to exonerate the company from the assessment; but the county court refused to entertain the motion or allow any entry to be made of it. Thereupon this suit was brought. The company offered to pay the taxes upon the property which it in fact had in the county, excluding from the assessment the ties it owned, which were in transit through the county. The circuit court enjoined the collection of the excess of the taxes over and above the amount which the company admitted it owed.

[1] We give some weight to the finding of the chancellor on questions of fact; and we cannot say that the chancellor erred in holding, under the evidence, that the company had no notice of the assessment made by the board of supervisors, or that the amount of the tax which he required it to pay was less than it really owed.

[2] In Mt. Sterling Oil Co. v. Ratliff, 127 Ky. 1, 104 S. W. 988, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 1229, we held that an assessment by the board, without notice to the taxpayer, was void. We said: "While the board of supervisors seem to be empowered to assess all property that may have escaped the notice of the assessor, even though the name of the owner be undiscovered, it is without authority either to assess, or increase an assessment of, property without notice to the taxpayer."

This case was followed and approved in Ward v. Wentz, 130 Ky. 705, 118 S. W. 892. In that case we further said: "Under our statute the board of supervisors is given large powers and a wide discretion. Where its procedure is in conformity to the statute, its action is conclusive. In view of the large powers given, it should therefore proceed in strict conformity to the statute. The notice therein required is a jurisdictional fact, and, unless it is given, the board of supervisors has no power to act. Although appellees' agent knew the assessment had been raised, he did not appear before the board for the purpose of having it reduced. Such knowledge on his part did not dispense with the necessary notice required by the statute. If, however, he had actually appeared before the board of supervisors for the purpose of securing a reduction, this would have dispensed with the necessity for notice, as the entry of an appearance by a party to an action dispenses with the necessity for the service of process."

These decisions are conclusive of the case before us.

Judgment affirmed.

Z. HARRELL & CO. v. DANKS.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 5, 1912.)

LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—SALE OF STANDING TIMBER—TIME FOR REMOVAL—"UNFORESEEN CASUALTY OR MISFORTUNE."

A sale of standing timber, to be removed within a given time, is a sale of only so much of the timber as is removed within that time, or in a reasonable time thereafter, if the purchaser is prevented from removing it by act of God or of the seller, or by some unforeseen casualty or misfortune; and where standing timber was sold in May, 1910, to be removed in a year, and cutting was delayed until August and hauling until November, though the roads were in good condition in the fall, and it could easily have been removed, and though the buyer knew that the roads in winter would be bad, the buyer was not prevented from removing it by "unforeseen casualty or misfortune," and had no right to enter to remove it after the expiration of the year.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Cent. Dig. §§ 6-12; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Muhlenberg County.

Action by R. W. Danks against Z. Harrell & Co. Case transferred to equity, and from a decree for plaintiff defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Glenn & Simmerman, of Hartford, and Taylor & Eaves, of Greenville, for appellants. Willis & Meredith, of Greenville, for appellee.

CLAY, C. On May 19, 1910, plaintiff, for the consideration of $400 cash, sold to defendants, Z. Harrell & Co., all the timber on the south side of the public road where he then lived, with the exception of the sassafras and mulberry, which were reserved. The contract was in writing, and contained the following provision: "Z. Harrell & Co. to have twelve months to work the timber off the land."

Plaintiff brought this action against defendants to recover damages in the sum of $325. He alleged in his petition that after May 19, 1911, the defendant forcibly and unlawfully entered upon his said land and cut and removed certain timber therefrom. Defendants pleaded that all the timber which they removed from the land in question after the expiration of the 12 months provided in the contract was cut before the contract expired, and that they were prevented from removing same within the contract time by the unusual and unprecedented water fall, which made it absolutely impossible for them to remove the logs and ties so cut within the 12 months next after May 19, 1910, after which time they did not cut any timber of any kind from the land. Plaintiff filed a reply traversing the allegations of the answer. On motion of defendants, the case was transferred to equity. On final hearing, the chancellor rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff for $200. Defendants appeal.

The evidence shows that the defendants never began to cut the timber until the month of August, 1910, and that they did not begin to haul the timber from the land until the middle or latter part of November, 1910. They then hauled until about the 1st of January. After that they did no hauling until after May 19th, when the time for removing the timber expired. The timber for which a recovery is sought was removed during the months of June and July. The defendants showed by several witnesses that there was a freeze in December, followed by a thaw a few days later, which caused the roads to become very muddy. In addition to this, there was an unusual rainfall during the winter months and the early spring, and during all this time it was practically impossible to do any hauling. On the other hand, there was testimony to the effect that the weather during the fall of 1910 was fine for hauling, and that with one team and one crew of hands the timber could have been removed from the land in 100 days, and with more teams it could have been removed in a shorter time. It was also shown that, while the roads were muddy during the winter months, the conditions were not much worse than usually prevailed at that time of the year.

Defendants insist that, as the trees in question were severed within the time fixed by the contract of sale, they became the personal property of the defendants, and, in the absence of a clause in the contract forfeiting the title, the title remained in the defendants, and they had a right to remove the timber from plaintiff's land. In support of this position we are cited to the cases of Walcutt v. Treisch, 82 Ohio St. 263, 92 N. E. 423, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 554, and Plumer v. Prescott, 43 N. H. 277. While these cases sustain the proposition contended for by defendants, they are not in accord with our decisions upon the question. It is the well-settled rule in this state that a sale of timber on a certain tract of land, to be removed within a given length of time, is a sale of only so much of the timber as is removed within that time, or in a reasonable time thereafter, in case the purchaser is prevented from removing the timber by act of God or of the seller, or by some unforeseen casualty or misfortune over which he had no control. Jackson v. Hardin, 86 S. W. 1119, 27 Ky. Law Rep. 1110; Chestnut v. Green, 120 Ky. 385, 86 S. W. 1122, 27 Ky. Law Rep. 838; Ford Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. v. Cress, 132 Ky. 317, 116 S. W. 710; Bell Co. Land & Coal Co. v. Moss, 97 S. W. 354, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 6.

In an extended note to McRae v. Stillwell, 111 Ga. 65, 36 S. E. 604, 55 L. R. A. 513, the authorities on the question are collated, and the rule to be deduced therefrom is thus stated by the editor: "Where the conveyance specifies a particular time for the removal of the timber, the purchaser has generally been held to have forfeited all rights in the timber not removed within the time specified, although a few cases hold that he still retains the title to the timber but cannot remove the same, as his right of entry is gone. It would seem that the mere cutting of the trees within the time specified, without their removal from the land, is insufficient to preserve the purchaser's rights in the timber; but the manufacture of them into timber has been held a sufficient removal of them, although such timber still remains on the land."

The question is: Are the facts of this case sufficient to bring it within the exception to the rule that the timber must be removed within the time specified in the contract? In other words, were defendants prevented from removing the timber by extraordinary rainfalls, or by the act of the seller? There is evidence to the effect that there were unusual rains during the winter and early spring of 1911; that during this period the roads were very muddy, and the timber could have been removed only with great difficulty and expense, if, indeed, it could have been removed at all. At the same time the evidence shows that during the summer of 1910, and the fall of that year, the roads were in good condition, and the timber could have been easily removed during that time. The evidence also shows that the defendants knew of the probability that the roads during the winter months would become muddy and difficult to haul over, although they might not have anticipated that the conditions would be quite as bad as they afterwards turned out to be. With knowledge of this fact, they delayed cutting the timber until the month of August, and never began to haul at all until in the month of November. The chancellor was of the opinion that the defendants could not postpone the removal of the timber for a period of six months, during which time it could have been easily removed, and then complain that, because the roads were unusually muddy and impassable during the winter months, they were prevented from removing the timber by some act of God, or unforeseen misfortune or casualty over which they had no control. After carefully considering the evidence, we see no reason why we should reach a different conclusion.

The only other circumstance relied upon to bring the case within the exception to the rule is the testimony of one of defendants' drivers to the effect that plaintiff stated that he (plaintiff) "would not haul through the mud." Plaintiff denies making the statement; but, whether he made it or not, we are not inclined to hold that the remark was a sufficient interference on the part of plaintiff to excuse the defendants from the necessity of removing the timber within the time specified in the contract. The remark, if made at all, was made in the month of January, 1911, when defendants say that the roads were so muddy that they were unable to haul to any advantage.

Judgment affirmed.

LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO. v. ALLNUTT.
(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 3, 1912.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 848*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—VERDICT.

In an action for personal injuries to a child at a railroad crossing, evidence held to warrant a verdict for the plaintiff.

2. RAILROADS (§ 338*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—INFANTS—RAILROAD CROSSINGS.

A child of eight years is not charged with the same degree of care for his safety as an adult, and a railroad which has not given such a child, injured at a crossing, such warning of the movement of a train reasonably sufficient to prevent a child of his years from putting himself in peril cannot escape liability on the ground of contributory negligence.

3. RAILROADS (§ 350*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

In an action for personal injuries to a child at a railroad crossing, evidence held sufficient to take the question of the child's contributory negligence to the jury.

4. RAILROADS (§ 347*)—RAILROAD CROSSINGS—ADMISSIBILITY—PERSONAL INJURIES.

To show the duty a railroad owes the public at a crossing, evidence may be introduced to show the character of the crossing and the use of it by the public, not only at the time of an accident under investigation, but for a reasonable time before.

5. RAILROADS (§ 312*)—CROSSINGS—DUTIES.

A railroad must take notice of the location, use, and character of public crossings, and exercise such care as may be necessary to give reasonably sufficient warning of the movement of trains and cars to those using the crossing.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1056*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUDING EVIDENCE.

In an action for personal injuries to a child at a railroad crossing by a car on which there was no brakeman, it was not prejudicial to exclude evidence that, even had there been a man on the car at the time of the accident, he could not have stopped the car, where the recovery was based on insufficient warning.

7. RAILROADS (§ 350*)—CROSSINGS—DUTIES.

Where a railroad crossing was an exceptionally dangerous one, which many school children had to cross, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that having a watchman alone, or ringing the bell or blowing the whistle alone, or having a man stationed on the moving cars alone, would be adequate to afford reasonable protection to the public.

8. RAILROADS (§ 349*)—CROSSING ACCIDENTS—"GROSS NEGLIGENCE."

The pushing of cars over a crossing at a time when there were school children at the crossing, without ringing a bell or blowing a whistle, or without any person on the cars to control or give warning, the watchman on duty giving no warning, was "gross negligence," which is a reckless or wanton disregard of the rights or safety of others, or the doing of an act intentionally or maliciously, and punitive damages were properly allowed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Kenton County, Common Law and Equity Division.

Action by Allie Allnutt against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

S. D. Rouse, of Covington, and Benjamin D. Warfield, of Louisville, for appellant. Wm. A. Byrne, of Covington, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. In November, 1908, the appellee, Allie Allnutt, then about eight years old, was run over by one of the cars of the appellant company, and as a result lost both of his legs. To recover damages for the injury thus sustained, he brought this suit against the appellant company, and on the first trial of the case the damages in his favor were assessed by the jury at $19,000, but a motion for a new trial on behalf of the railroad company was sustained, and this verdict set aside. On the second trial there was a verdict in favor of appellee for $5,000 and this verdict, on his motion, was set aside. On the trial from which this appeal is prosecuted there was a verdict and judgment in favor of appellee for $11,750. To the ruling of the court in setting aside the first judgment, the appellee excepted and prepared, in regular form, a bill of exceptions and transcript of the evidence. To the ruling of the court in setting aside the second judgment, the appellant excepted and prepared, in due form, a bill of exceptions and transcript of the evidence. So that the record on this appeal consists of the record made up on each of the three trials, and we are asked by appellant to reverse the judgment on the last trial and direct the entry of a judgment on the verdict on the second trial, upon the ground that the trial court improperly set aside the verdict on that trial. On the other hand, we are asked by appellee to direct the lower court to enter a judgment for the amount of the verdict on the first trial, upon the theory that the court improperly set aside that verdict, but, if this cannot be done, that the judgment on the last trial be affirmed. As we have concluded to affirm the judgment on the last trial, it does not seem necessary to notice the arguments of counsel in respect to the preceding trials, but we may say that the discrepancy between the amount of the verdict on the first and second trials is largely accounted for by the fact that on the second trial the court refused to instruct the jury that they might award punitive damages.

Except in one particular, there is little controversy about the facts of this case. Latonia is a city of several thousand people, and one of the principal, if not indeed the principal, street in the city is Southern avenue, which is crossed by the tracks of the appellant railroad company. At the point where the railroad crosses this avenue there were, when the accident happened, 17 separate tracks in use by the railroad company, covering a space of some 200 feet in width across the avenue. At virtually all hours of the day there were trains, sometimes two or three of them at the same time, moving on the tracks across the avenue, and hundreds of people, in using this avenue each day, on foot and in vehicles, had to cross all of these tracks. Including the public who made use of this street and who were required to cross these tracks, were a large number of school children who lived on the west side of the railroad and attended two schools that were situated on the east side of the railroad, and when these children were going to school in the morning and returning in the afternoon this avenue, where it crosses the railroad tracks, was crowded with children romping, running, and playing, as school children usually do.

On the day Allie Allnut was injured he was returning about 4 o'clock in the afternoon from school on the east side of the tracks to his home on the west side, in company with a crowd of children. The evidence in his behalf shows that when he got to the eastern track Blackburn, the crossing watchman for the railroad company, was standing about the middle of the crossing, and between the tracks, not engaged at the time in warning the children that there was danger from moving trains—merely standing at his post. That appellee and other children, who were in his immediate company, walked or ran by Blackburn, without any notice or warning from him, and that, when appellee had passed Blackburn and gotten to the last track on the west side, Blackburn halloed at him, when he turned around, and, as he did so, stumped his toe and fell on the track, and about that time Blackburn, who had discovered that the child was going on the track in front of the moving train, made an effort to rescue him, and in the attempt fell on him, and just as appellee fell on the track a freight car, pushed by an engine, ran over his legs. The evidence for the railroad company is, in substance, that Blackburn, when he saw the children coming toward the track on the east side, went to meet them for the purpose of stopping them from crossing, as a train was switching on the western track; that some of the children stopped, in obedience to his request or order, and some of them, including Allie Allnut, ran by him; that when his attention was called to the fact that some of the children had gone by him, and in the direction of the moving train, he ran after them and caught Allie Allnut just as he got on the track in front of the moving cars, and in his effort to save him came near being run over himself. The car that ran over the child was the front car of a cut of six cars being pushed by an engine, and it had been uncoupled from the car behind it for the purpose of "kicking" it into a siding, towards which the engine was pushing it. There was no brakeman or other employé of the company on the car or cut of cars, nor was there any alarm or warning of the movement of the train by the ringing of the engine bell or other means. As the car had been disconnected from the engine and the car immediately behind it, of course the engineer could not control the movement of the car, and the condition was practically the same as if this car had been started by a movement of the engine across the avenue and was running without any person in control of it.

The grounds relied on for a new trial are: (1) That the court erred in refusing to direct a verdict for the railroad company; (2) that the verdict is flagrantly against the evidence; (3) that error was committed in permitting witnesses Oliver, Niedlander, Braimes, and Huff to testify as to customary conditions at the crossing; (4) that the court erred in refusing to permit Johnson to testify as to the distance in which the car could have been stopped; (5) that error was committed in the instruction.

[1] Concerning the grounds that a peremptory instruction should have been given, or that the verdict should have been set aside as flagrantly against the evidence, little need be said. There was ample evidence to take the case to the jury and to sustain the verdict. According to the evidence for appellee, he did not discover the moving engine and cars until he was in the act of crossing the track on which they were running, and did not have any warning from Blackburn or any one else of the movement of the train.

[2] It is true the car that ran over appellee was moving at a slow rate of speed, and that if he had been careful he could have seen it, but a child of eight years is not charged with the same degree of care for his own safety as an adult would be. It is probable that a grown person in crossing these tracks would keep a sharp lookout for the movement of trains, and in view of the danger attending the crossing would have exercised unusual care for his own safety. But, unless appellee was given such warning or notice of the movement of the train as would be reasonably sufficient to prevent a child of his years from putting himself in a place of peril, the railroad company cannot escape responsibility for the accident that befell him upon the ground that, except for his contributory negligence, it would not have happened. The warning or notice that might be amply sufficient in the case of a grown person might be entirely inadequate and insufficient in the case of a child of eight years, and therefore to excuse the railroad company, as a matter of law, from blame for an accident like this, under the conditions existing when it happened, the evidence should show that appellee was given such warning as would be reasonably sufficient to put a child of his years upon notice of the danger, and this the evidence does not do.

[3] On the contrary, the evidence for appellee shows that he received no notice or warning from the watchman until he was on the track in front of the moving car, and too late to escape injury, and that there was no one on the car to warn him of his peril. This being so, the question was for the jury, and they were instructed that, if they believed "from the evidence that at the time and place of the accident to the plaintiff mentioned in the evidence, but before the plaintiff had gone upon the railroad track upon which he was injured, the plaintiff knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known, of the approach of the car by which he was injured upon said track to the crossing at said place, and that thereafter plaintiff went upon said railroad track in front of said approaching car and was run over and injured by it, and if the jury shall further believe from the evidence that the act of the plaintiff in going upon said railroad track, under such circumstances as the jury shall believe from the evidence then and there existed, was a failure on the part of the plaintiff to exercise such care as children of his age, experience, and discretion ordinarily exercise under the same or similar circumstances, the jury shall find a verdict for the defendant." In our opinion this instruction correctly submitted to the jury the proper measure of care it was incumbent upon appellee to exercise for his own safety. City of Owensboro v. York, 117 Ky. 294, 77 S. W. 1130, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 1397; Kentucky Hotel Co. v. Camp, 97 Ky. 425, 30 S. W. 1010, 17 Ky. Law Rep. 297; Davis v. Ohio Valley B. & T. Co., 127 Ky. 800, 106 S. W. 843, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 627, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 402; Smith v. National C. & T. Co., 135 Ky. 671, 117 S. W. 280.

[4] The witnesses Oliver, Niedlander, Braimes, and Huff were permitted by the trial court, over the objection of counsel for appellant, to testify as to the use of this crossing by the public on and for a reasonable time continuously before the day of the accident, and as to the number of trains that used the tracks at the crossing at the time of the accident and for some time before, and they said that at the time of the accident, and for many months before, this crossing was used every day by great numbers of people, on foot and in vehicles, and that crowds of school children used it in the morning and afternoon in going to and returning from school. They further said that trains and cars were almost continually moving upon some of the tracks at this crossing, and that sometimes as many as two and three trains would be moving at the same time. This evidence was entirely competent for the purpose of showing the dangerous character of this crossing, and the duty that the railroad company was under to have it so protected as to give reasonably sufficient warning to the traveling public of the danger attending its use.

[5] In cases like this, a railroad company is chargeable with knowledge of the duty it owes of exercising such care as may be required to afford reasonably sufficient protection to the public. It must take notice, as other people do, of the location, use, and character of public crossings, and exercise that degree of care at each of them that may be necessary to perform its legal duty. This duty, in many cases, is larger than it is in others, and for the purpose of showing the measure of duty the railroad company owes, and the notice of this duty it will be presumed to have, evidence may be introduced to show the character of the crossing, the conditions existing, and the use of it by the public, not only at the time of the accident under investigation, but for a reasonable time before.

[6] It also complained that the court committed error in refusing to permit Frank Johnson, an employé of the company, to testify in what space the car could have been stopped if a man had been on the car at the brake at the time the appellee was injured. We are not entirely prepared to say that this evidence should not have been admitted as a circumstance tending to show that, if one of the employés of the company had been on the car, he could not have averted the accident. But it is very clear that this evidence had no material bearing on the case, for if it should be assumed, or even admitted, that a man in charge of the car could not have stopped it in time to have saved appellee after he came on the track, it would not in any degree lessen the liability of the company. The duty it was under to have some person on the car was not limited to the efforts this person might make in stopping the car, but extended to the efforts he might have made to warn appellee not to go on the track. It is quite probable from the evidence that, when appellee got on the track, the car could not have been stopped in time to avoid running over him, but, if there had been a person on the car, he might have prevented the child from getting on the track. In any event, we are satisfied that the exclusion of this evidence did not prejudice the rights of the company.

Much complaint is made of the instruction defining the duty of the company. This instruction reads in part as follows: "In the operation of the defendant's engine and cars or trains over the said crossing, it was the duty of the defendant's agents or servants in control of its engine, cars, or trains to give reasonable and timely warning, by the ringing of a bell or the blowing of a whistle, of the approach of its engine or cars or trains to said crossing to persons upon or about to go upon said crossing, and in backing cars across said crossing it was the duty of the defendant to have some one stationed upon the cars in such a position that he could discover the presence of persons upon or about to go upon the crossing, for the purpose of giving warning of the approach of the cars, and for the purpose of avoiding injury to persons in peril or apparent peril of being struck by the cars, if in the management of the cars after the discovery of their peril or apparent peril those in control of the movement of the cars could, by all reasonable means at their command, stop the car and avoid injury to them. If the crossing was an unusually dangerous one, it was the duty of the defendant to provide a watchman or watchmen reasonably sufficient to give reasonable and timely warning to the public using said crossing of the approach of trains." The objections urged to this instruction are that it imposed upon the railroad company the duty (1) of giving warning of the approach of the train by ringing the bell or blowing the whistle; (2) of having some one stationed on the car which ran over the appellee; (3) of having one or more watchmen at the crossing, if this was necessary to reasonably protect it. In support of these objections the argument is made by counsel "that, at a crossing where a flagman is maintained, the duty imposed upon him supersedes the other specified duties as to such crossings where no flagman is maintained. In other words, having a flagman at the crossing is the most extraordinary precaution that a railroad company can take. * * * Where this is done, and where the flagman performs the duties imposed upon him, * * * the railroad company, through said flagman, has performed its full duty in the way of affording both warning and protection to the highway traveler on the crossing." The effect of this argument, as we understand it, is that, when a railroad company has a watchman stationed at a crossing, the presence of this watchman, if he performs his duty, relieves it from the duty of ringing the bell, sounding the whistle, or having a man on a car that is being pushed in front of an engine or backed by an engine over the crossing, and from operating its train over the crossing at a reasonable rate of speed, and from keeping a lookout for the presence of travelers. Or, in other words, when a railroad company has a watchman stationed at a crossing, however dangerous the crossing may be, or however great the number of people who may use it, it may run its trains without notice or warning of any kind other than such as the watchman may be able to give, and may back or push cars without any person on them to control their movements or give warning to persons about to get on the track, and may run them at any speed it pleases.

[7] We are unable to agree with counsel in this conception of the duty that a railroad company owes at a crossing like the one in question. At some crossings one watchman who fully performed his duty might be legally sufficient, and the company might be relieved from the performance of the other duties it usually owes to the public at crossings. At other crossings a compliance with the statutory duties of ringing the bell and blowing the whistle, and in addition keeping a lookout, and running at a reasonable speed, might fulfill its duty without a watchman. Again at other crossings its duty might require it to have a watchman, to give warning of the movement of trains, and also to have a person stationed on cars being backed or pushed, and at yet other crossings gates might be necessary. No exact measure of duty can be laid down that would be applicable to all crossings. At each public crossing the railroad company must use that degree of care that is reasonably sufficient for the purpose of giving notice and warning of the movement of trains and cars to the public having the right to use the crossing, and this degree of care depends on the situation and surroundings of the crossing, the number of trains using it, and the number of the public who use it. Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Ry. Co. v. Champ, 104 S. W. 988, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 1054; Kentucky Central R. R. Co. v. Smith, 93 Ky. 449, 20 S. W. 392, 14 Ky. Law Rep. 455, 18 L. R. A. 63; Central Passenger Ry. Co. v. Kuhn, 86 Ky. 578, 6 S. W. 441, 9 Ky. Law Rep. 725, 9 Am. St. Rep. 309; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Popp, 96 Ky. 99, 27 S. W. 992, 16 Ky. Law Rep. 369.

Having this view of the duty a railroad owes at a public crossing, we think the court correctly advised the jury that it was the duty of the railroad company to exercise such care as was reasonably sufficient to protect the crossing, although this duty might require it to employ the means pointed out in the instruction. Under the undisputed facts, the crossing was an exceptionally dangerous one, and it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that having a watchman alone, or ringing the bell or blowing the whistle alone, or having a man stationed on the moving cars alone, would be an adequate performance of its duty, or that all of these precautions were not necessary to afford reasonable protection to the public.

[8] It is further insisted that it was error to instruct the jury that they might, in addition to compensatory, award punitive damages. In a number of cases we have ruled that in personal injury cases punitive damages are only allowable unless the act that caused the injury complained of was intentionally or maliciously done, or the injury was the result of a reckless or wanton disregard of the rights or safety of others on the part of the wrongdoer. Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Wilkins, 143 Ky. 572, 138 S. W. 1023; Continental Coal Corporation v. Cole, 146 Ky. 821, 143 S. W. 386; Straight Creek Coal Co. v. Huddleston, 147 Ky. 94, 143 S. W. 775; C., N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Ackerman, 148 Ky. 435, 146 S. W. 1113. This is the degree or quality of conduct that constitutes, in the meaning of the law, gross negligence, entitling the injured party to more than compensatory damages, and, whenever the trial court is of the opinion that the pleadings and evidence show that the wrongdoer has been guilty of the character of conduct above described, he should instruct the jury on the subject of punitive damages. With this definition of what constitutes gross negligence entitling the injured party to punitive damages, it only remains to be seen whether or not the evidence justified the instruction on this subject.

It is true the railroad company had a watchman at this crossing, but this is the only care it exercised to protect the public, having the right to use it, from injury by moving trains, and it is apparent from the evidence that the presence of this watchman was entirely inadequate to afford reasonably sufficient protection to the public at the time appellee was injured. It is probable that at sometimes during the day he could adequately guard the crossing, and it is likely that if its use had been confined to adults he could have given them sufficient notice and warning to save them from injury. But the evidence shows, and the railroad company should be charged with notice of it, that this crossing, during the morning, as well as in the afternoon, was crowded with school children going to and returning from school, and during the time the crossing was used by these children their safety demanded more efficient protection than one watchman could afford. The presence of the watchman did not lessen the other duties it owed to the public at this time in moving its trains, or excuse it from exercising the same care it would be required to exercise if no watchman had been stationed there. This being our view of the duty the company owed at the time appellee was injured, it follows that it was such a reckless disregard of the safety of the children using the crossing as amounted to gross negligence to push a train of cars over the crossing without bell or whistle sounding, or without any person on the cars to control or give notice or warning of their movement. We have so written in a number of cases. Peltier v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 29 S. W. 30, 16 Ky. Law Rep. 500; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Potts, 92 Ky. 30, 17 S. W. 185, 13 Ky. Law Rep. 344; *Conley v. HOBSON, C. J. The facts of the case of Hollis v. Watson, 89 S. W. 548, 28 Ky. Law Rep. 550, were materially different from the facts of this case. The circuit court has a discretion in ruling on motions for continuance, and we cannot say his discretion was abused here.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 204*)—RULINGS ON EVIDENCE—OBJECTIONS—WAIVER.

A defendant who did not object to the admission of improper testimony may not avail himself of the error on appeal.

2. EVIDENCE (§ 99*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—EXAMINATION BY PHYSICIAN.

A plaintiff suing for a personal injury may testify what physicians examined him, and that defendant's physician examined him.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1060*)—HARMLESS ERROR—MISCONDUCT OF COUNSEL.

The remark of counsel of plaintiff suing for a personal injury that defendant was insinuating that plaintiff was exaggerating, made in response to an objection to the admission of evidence, is not prejudicial, though improper in the absence of anything to show any such insinuation.

4. RAILROADS (§ 347*)—ACCIDENTS AT CROSSINGS—DEFECTIVE CROSSINGS—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action for injuries to a traveler caused by a defect in a railroad crossing, the evidence that wheels of vehicles of other travelers had been caught in the defect was admissible to show whether or not the crossing was in a dangerous condition, the condition at the crossing being practically the same at the time of the occurrences testified to as at the time of the accident complained of.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1046*)—HARMLESS ERROR—IMPROPER REMARK OF TRIAL COURT.

Where defendant moved for a peremptory verdict at the close of plaintiff's case, and, when the motion was overruled, informed the court that he rested and would offer no evidence, the statement of the court to the jury that defendant had no evidence to introduce was not prejudicial.

6. NEW TRIAL (§ 162*)—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES—POWER OF COURT TO REDUCE.

The general rule that trial courts have no power to remit any part of a judgment, and, if the judgment is excessive, they must award a new trial, does not apply where the items constituting the damages recovered are separable, so that the court may eliminate those not properly recoverable, in which case the court may require plaintiff to remit, or may, on plaintiff's motion, remit the damages representing items not properly recoverable.

7. DAMAGES (§ 228*)—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES—POWER OF COURT TO REDUCE.

Where, in an action for personal injuries, there was evidence that an operation would cost $200, but such operation was not shown to be reasonably necessary, and there was a general verdict for $5,700, necessarily composed of $5,000 for general damages, $400 for loss of time, and $300 for physician's bill incurred and to be incurred, the court could, on motion of plaintiff, remit the item of $200 physician's bills for the operation, and award judgment for the balance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 576-579; Dec. Dig. § 228.*]

8. RAILROADS (§ 350*)—ACCIDENTS AT DEFECTIVE CROSSINGS—RAILROAD CROSSINGS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Whether a traveler injured on a defective railroad crossing was guilty of contributory negligence held, under the evidence, for the jury.

9. RAILROADS (§ 326*)—ACCIDENTS AT DEFECTIVE CROSSINGS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Where a traveler on a highway knew of the defective condition of a railroad crossing, and he failed to exercise for his own safety such care as ordinarily prudent persons ordinarily would exercise under similar circumstances, and his lack of care contributed to the injuries received, and but for such lack of care he would not have been injured, he could not recover.

10. DAMAGES (§ 132*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

A man sustained an injury to his head, affecting one of the nerves, and an injury to his leg and hand, rendering the hand practically useless, and he suffered greatly from its swollen condition. Time lost was worth $400, and he incurred a physician's bill for $100. Held, that a verdict for $5,500 was not excessive.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Campbell County.

Action by William C. Meyers against the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Galvin & Galvin, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and William A. Burkamp, of Newport, for appellant. Ramsey Washington and Howard M. Benton, both of Newport, for appellee.

CLAY, C. The Oneonta and Twelve Mile road is a county road running between Alexandria, the county seat of Campbell county, and Oneonta, a station on the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, and a landing on the Ohio river. The road is used by a large number of people. Across this road the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company maintains two tracks—a main and a spur track. The two tracks are just far enough apart to allow cars to clear each other in passing. Between two of the rails of the spur track, at a point on the road, is an opening about 2½ inches wide. This condition existed at the time of the accident hereinafter referred to, and had existed for several years. Charging a failure of duty on the part of the railroad company in permitting the road and its tracks, at the point where the tracks crossed the road, to become and remain in a dangerous condition, and that, while driving across the track, one of the runners of his sled was caught in the opening between the two rails of the spur track, thereby causing him to be thrown from his sled and injured, plaintiff, William C. Meyers, brought this action to recover damages. He asked damages in the sum of $6,300, of which $300 was for medical services incurred and to be incurred, $1,000 for loss of time, and $5,000 for mental and physical suffering and permanent impairment of his power to earn money. The item for loss of time was subsequently amended to read $575. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $5,700. On motion of plaintiff the sum of $200 for medical services to be incurred in the future was remitted. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff for $5,500. Defendant appeals.

The accident took place on March 20, 1911. At the time of the accident plaintiff was returning to his home from Oneonta station. He was driving a sled which was being drawn by a pair of mules. In crossing the spur track one of the runners of the sled caught in the opening between the two rails, and plaintiff was thrown out. His leg was bruised between the knee and the hip. He received a blow over the eye, which injured the supra-orbital nerve, and caused a catarrhal condition of his head. The principal injury was to his hand, which became badly swollen and inflamed, and remained in that condition for several months. The tendons of the hand were so affected that plaintiff has practically lost the use of it. This condition is permanent. Plaintiff was confined to his bed two or three months, and could not walk on his leg for five or six months. He suffered intensely from his injuries, and it is very probable that he will continue to suffer for some time to come. The testimony showed that up to the time of the trial he had incurred a physician's bill of $100. There was also evidence that, in order to have an operation performed, it would be necessary to incur an additional physician's bill of $200.

[1] While it was not proper for the court to permit the two physicians who examined plaintiff for the purpose of testifying to state what the reasonable value of their services was, defendant did not object or except to their testimony, and cannot therefore avail itself of the error.

[2] The court did not err in permitting plaintiff to testify that defendant's physician examined his hand. There was no impropriety in permitting him to tell what physicians examined him, and to tell who they were, even if one of them happened to be a physician in the employ of the defendant.

[3] While the remark of plaintiff's counsel when this evidence was objected to, to the effect that the other side was insinuating that they were exaggerating, and they wanted to show that they gave them every opportunity they wanted, was improper in the absence of anything in the record showing that such was the case, we are not inclined to hold that the statement was prejudicial error.

[4] During the progress of the trial, the court permitted two or three witnesses to testify either that the wheels of their vehicles had been caught in the opening in the spur track, or they had seen vehicles of others so caught. It was shown that, when these occurrences took place, conditions were practically the same. In admitting this testimony the court admonished the jury that it could be considered for the sole purpose of throwing light on the question whether or not the crossing was in a dangerous condition or otherwise, and for no other purpose. One of the issues was: "Did defendant permit the roadway where its tracks crossed it and its tracks to be and remain in a dangerous condition?" The fact that, conditions being the same, other vehicles were caught in the opening in the spur track, is certainly a circumstance tending to show the dangerous condition of the track and roadway. With the limitation contained in the admonition of the court, we think the evidence was clearly admissible. Georgetown, etc., v. Cannon, 7 Ky. Law Rep. 379; 29 Cyc. 611.

[5] At the conclusion of the evidence for plaintiff, the defendant moved for a peremptory. After overruling the motion, the court said: "The defendant informs the court that they have no evidence to introduce." To this statement the defendant objected and excepted. Thereupon the court said: "I don't recall just the expression I used, but the stenographer has it that I indicated to you that the defendant had no evidence to offer, to which the defendant objects. The court withdraws that, and uses the language of the defendant that they would offer none." To this statement the defendant also objected and excepted. Counsel for defendant insists that this statement of the court was very prejudicial, because it not only put the defendant in the attitude of having no evidence to introduce, but attracted with especial emphasis the attention of the jury to this fact. The point is made that the defendant had the right to rest its case upon the evidence introduced by plaintiff, without having the attention of the jury called either to the fact that it would offer no evidence, or it had no evidence to offer. We are unable to see how the statement of the court could have prejudiced the substantial rights of the defendant. Whether defendant says "the defendant rests," or "the defendant will offer no evidence," or "the defendant has no evidence to offer," and the court so informs the jury, the result is practically the same. If, as a matter of fact, the defendant does not offer any evidence, the jury knows it, whether informed by the court or not; and manifestly their verdict cannot be influenced by giving them information of that which they cannot fail to know. While the motion for a new trial was pending, the court, over the objection of the defendant, entered the following order: "Upon motion of plaintiff, the sum of $200, covering future medical services, is remitted from the judgment recovered March 6, 1912."

[6] It is insisted that, under the practice of this state, trial courts have no power to remit any portion of a judgment, but that, if the judgment is excessive, they must award the defendant a new trial. While this is the general rule (Brown v. Morris, 3 Bush, 81; L. & N. R. Co. v. Earl's Adm'r, 94 Ky. 370, 22 S. W. 607, 15 Ky. Law Rep. 184), yet where the items constituting the damages recovered are separable, so that the court may eliminate those not properly recoverable from those recoverable, the court has power to require the plaintiff to remit, or may, on plaintiff's motion, remit, so much of the damages as represents the items which are not properly recoverable (Johnson's Adm'r v. Johnson, 104 Ky. 714, 47 S. W. 883, 20 Ky. Law Rep. 890; Masterson v. Hagan, 17 B. Mon. 325).

[7] Here the plaintiff asked general damages in the sum of $5,000. The proof shows that he lost eight months' time, and that his time was reasonably worth $50 a month, making a total of $400 for time lost. Up to the time of the trial he had incurred a physician's bill of $100. There was evidence to the effect that an operation on his hand would cost $200. However, the witness who so testified also advised against the operation. Manifestly, the verdict is composed of the following items: $5,000 for general damages; $400 for loss of time; $300 for physician's bills, incurred and to be incurred. The evidence fails to show that the operation involving the item of $200 physician's bills to be incurred in the future was reasonably necessary or would have to be performed, and it being possible to separate this item from the verdict and judgment, and leave the balance of the judgment intact, we conclude that the remittitur of $200 was properly adjudged.

[8] Another point urged by the defendant is that the court erred in overruling its motion for a peremptory. Particular stress is placed upon the fact that plaintiff himself admits that he knew of the opening between the two rails, and that he had frequently warned others of the danger. It is therefore insisted that if he, with knowledge of the opening, drove his sled into it, he was guilty of such contributory negligence as precludes a recovery. While it is true that plaintiff did know of the existence of the opening, and had known of it for some time, and had also warned others of the danger, yet it also appears that on the occasion in question he had stopped just before reaching the track in question for the purpose of effecting a sale of his tobacco. When he started to cross, there was a man with a team on the other side waiting for him to get over. He says that he thought he heard a train whistle in the distance, and that he had his mind on the approaching train and momentarily forgot the opening in the track. There was also evidence that the sled itself would have a tendency to slide along the tracks. The opening was not a large one, which a person could easily avoid. It is by no means certain that, if he had had his attention fixed on the opening he could have avoided it. It was just as much his duty to use ordinary care to discover the approach of a train and keep out of its way as it was to avoid striking the opening in the rails with his sled. Under the circumstances, therefore, we cannot say as a matter of law that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. The question was one for the jury.

[9] The court told the jury that if they believed from the evidence that on the occasion in question plaintiff, having had previous knowledge of such defective condition in said crossing, failed to exercise for his own safety such care as ordinarily prudent persons ordinarily exercise under the same or similar circumstances, and that such lack of care on his part contributed to the injuries received by him, and but for such lack of care on his part he would not have been injured, they should find for the defendant. This instruction is not subject to complaint.

The defendant offered several instructions, to the effect that if the plaintiff knew of the opening between the rails in the track, and of the danger thereof, and with such knowledge drove upon the crossing and his sled was caught in the opening, the jury should find for the defendant. Instructions of this character were in effect a peremptory instruction for the defendant, and were properly refused for the same reason that the motion for a peremptory was overruled.

[10] Aside from the injury to plaintiff's head, which seems to have affected one of the nerves, and the injury to his leg, which lasted for some time, it appears that plaintiff suffered greatly from the swollen and inflamed condition of his hand, and that his hand is now, and will continue to be, practically useless. That being true, we cannot say that the verdict is so excessive as to strike us at first blush as being the result of prejudice or passion.

JUDGMENT (§ 138*)—DEFAULT—VACATION—TIME.

An order of the trial court, directing that the allegations of the petition, as amended, be taken as confessed, is an interlocutory order, which may be set aside by the court at a subsequent term, without following the Code provisions for vacating judgments.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 249-251, 254; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

On petition for rehearing. Former opinion modified, and petition overruled.

For former opinion, see 149 Ky. 482, 149 S. W. 884.

SETTLE, J. A careful reconsideration of the record in this case gives us no reason for withdrawing or changing the conclusion reached in the opinion on the merits of the case. The petition for a rehearing contains, however, a just criticism of that part of the opinion which apparently conveys the meaning that an order made by the trial court at one term, directing that the allegations of the petition, as amended, be taken as confessed, could not be set aside at a subsequent term, except in the manner provided by the Code for vacating judgments.

Manifestly such an order, being merely interlocutory, can for cause be set aside by the court at a subsequent term. What should have been said, and was intended to be said, in the opinion, was that the record showed no grounds for setting aside the order, pro confesso, at the subsequent term. The correction of this error had been made for the publication of the opinion in 149 Ky. 482, 149

S. W. 884, before appellee's petition for a rehearing was filed.

The opinion is modified to the extent indicated, but in other respects adhered to. Therefore the petition for a rehearing is overruled.

SHACKLETTE et al. v. GOODALL et al.

1. FRAUD (§ 50*)—ACTUAL FRAUD—CONSTRUCTIVE FRAUD—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden of proving actual fraud is on the party alleging it; but where fraud, implied from the fiduciary or confidential relation of the parties, is charged, the burden is on the person against whom complaint is made to show the fairness of the transaction.

2. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 4*)—CONTRACTS (§ 99*)—GIFTS (§ 47*)—FRAUD—EQUITABLE RELIEF.

Equity will set aside transactions in which influence obtained through confidential relations has been abused, on the ground of fraud and undue influence; and the presumption of fraud arises more readily in case of gifts than in cases of contracts, and the presumption of undue influence is more or less strong, according to the nature of the relation of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 4.* Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 448-453, 1197-1199, 1799, 1800; Dec. Dig. § 99.* Gifts, Cent. Dig. §§ 81-86; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

3. DEEDS (§ 196*)—CANCELLATION—GROUNDS—PRESUMPTIONS.

The mere fact that a grantor was 75 years old when executing deeds to collateral heirs does not raise a presumption of incapacity on his part or undue influence on the grantees' part.

4. DEEDS (§ 70*)—CANCELLATION—GROUNDS—CONFIDENTIAL RELATIONS.

The rule that fraud is imputed in cases of voluntary conveyances between persons standing in confidential or fiduciary relations to each other may be extended to conveyances supported by a consideration, where the consideration is so grossly inadequate as to render the conveyance fraudulent.

5. DEEDS (§ 196*)—CANCELLATION—GROUNDS—FRAUD—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where heirs of a deceased grantor sought to set aside a conveyance in trust for a nephew of the grantor on the ground of fraud, and the answer alleged that, though the deed, perhaps incorrectly, recited a consideration of a substantial sum paid, there was, in reality, a valuable consideration for the deed in the services which the nephew had previously rendered the grantor, which services were of greater value than the land conveyed, and there was nothing to show any confidential relations between the grantor and the nephew, more than was implied from the mere fact of kinship, the case of the heirs must rest on actual fraud, and to recover they have the burden of establishing fraud.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Ohio County. Action by Sally Shacklette and others against E. H. Goodall and others. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Barnes & Smith and Fogle & Fogle, all of Hartford, for appellants. Heavrin & Woodward, of Hartford, for appellees.

MILLER, J. Jacob C. Warden, a bachelor 75 years of age, residing in Ohio county, died in January, 1911. On and between December 18, 1909, and November 26, 1910, he had conveyed five tracts of land to his collateral kindred. By the first deed, dated December 18, 1909, he conveyed 15 acres to L. R. Goodall, who was the husband of Warden's niece, for a recited consideration of $300. A second deed was executed by Warden on September 6, 1910, and conveyed 32 acres to his nephew, Jacob B. Warden; the recited consideration being services rendered by said Jacob B. to his uncle. By the third deed, dated October 12, 1910, Warden conveyed 8½ acres to L. R. Goodall, the husband of Warden's niece, for a recited consideration of $300. The fourth deed was dated November 26, 1910, and conveyed 20 acres of land to E. H. Goodall as grantee, but really in trust for Jesse M. Warden, a nephew of the grantor, for a recited consideration of $300, paid. The fifth and last deed, dated November 26, 1910, conveyed three-fourths of an acre of land to Jessie Phipps, a grandniece of Warden, for a recited consideration of $200. The petition alleges that none of the recited considerations was paid.

On January 4, 1912, the appellants, Sally Shacklette, M. L. Phipps, and Laura Greenwood, as heirs at law of Jacob C. Warden, brought this action against the several grantees in the deeds above named, for the purpose of having said deeds canceled and set aside, upon the ground that they were without consideration and had been procured by the undue influence, fraud, and collusion of the several grantees therein. Upon motion of the defendants, the circuit court required the plaintiffs to elect which of the several actions alleged to have been wrongfully joined in the petition they would prosecute; and, in response to that ruling, the plaintiffs elected to prosecute the action to cancel and set aside the fourth deed, dated November 26, 1910, which conveyed 20 acres to E. H. Goodall, in trust for Jesse M. Warden, as above set forth.

The first paragraph of the answer traversed the allegations of the petition, while the second paragraph affirmatively alleged that for many years prior to November 26, 1910, the date of the deed, Jesse M. Warden had rendered personal service, labor, care, and attention to and for Jacob Warden, and at his special instance and request; and that for and in consideration of said services, and in part payment therefor, Jacob C. Warden had executed and delivered to Goodall, as trustee, the deed sought to be canceled. The reply made the issue by controverting the affirmative allegations of the answer.

The action having been submitted and heard upon the pleadings, without any proof, the circuit judge dismissed the petition, and from that judgment the plaintiffs prosecute this appeal.

[1] The correctness of the judgment of the circuit judge depends upon where the burden of proof lay. Appellants admit that in cases of actual fraud the burden of proof is on the party complaining to prove his case; but he invokes the contrary rule applicable to cases of fraud to be implied from the fiduciary or confidential relation of the parties, where the burden is on the person against whom complaint is made to show the entire fairness of the transaction.

If the facts alleged in the petition were sufficient to put the defendants upon their proof, notwithstanding their answer, the burden was upon them, and the trial judge was wrong in dismissing the petition.

[2] This case, if it can be maintained, comes under the third species of fraud, according to Lord Hardwicke's classification in the leading case of Chesterfield v. Janssen, 2 Ves. 125, 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. 428, which is presumed from the circumstances and conditions of the parties contracting. The general rule is that relief will be afforded, in equity, in all transactions in which influence has been acquired and abused, in which confidence has been reposed and betrayed. The relief stands upon a general principle applying to all the varieties of relations in which dominion may be exercised by one person over another. And the presumption of fraud will arise more readily in cases of gifts than in cases of contracts.

The question always is: To what extent may undue influence be presumed from the relation of the parties? This presumption of undue influence is more or less strong, according to the nature of the relation which the parties occupy towards each other. The relation in which the presumption exists, perhaps, in the highest degree is that of solicitor and client; the next highest, that of guardian and ward; then that between parent and child, and trustee and cestui que trust.

In cases of contract between lawyer and client, the burden is on the lawyer of showing its fairness. Carter v. West, 93 Ky. 211, 19 S. W. 592, 14 Ky. Law Rep. 191. And the same rule applies to the case of gift from the ward to his guardian immediately after the ward has attained his majority, or while he is still under the guardian's influence.

[3] But in the case at bar none of these fiduciary or confidential relations existed.

While it is true the grantor was 75 years of age, that fact would not, of itself, raise a presumption of incapacity on his part or undue influence on the grantee's part.

Appellants rely upon Smith v. Snowden, 96 Ky. 32, 27 S. W. 855, 16 Ky. Law Rep. 353; Wilson v. Winsor, 71 S. W. 495, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 1343; Highland v. Highland, 73 S. W. 791, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 2242; Koger v. Koger, 92 S. W. 961, 29 Ky. Law Rep. 235; and Hoeb v. Maschinot, 140 Ky. 330, 131 S. W. 23.

In Hoeb v. Maschinot, supra, the rule governing cases of this character was stated as follows: "Where there exists between two persons a relation of confidence and trust, by which one exerts such an influence over the judgment of the other as to subvert the latter's will and independence, a conveyance by the latter to the former will be set aside as fraudulent upon seasonable complaint. Whether such influence was exerted is a question of fact to be determined from the circumstances. Evidence of the fact may consist of such relationship of blood, or consanguinity, or as attorney and client, guardian and ward, physician and patient, and the like; and when such relationship is shown, and a voluntary conveyance beneficial to the grantee, the burden of proving that in that transaction the other mind acted freely, of its own volition, is on the person benefited, or the conveyance will be set aside. Smith v. Snowden, 96 Ky. 32 [27 S. W. 855, 16 Ky. Law Rep. 353]; Maze's Ex'r v. Maze [99 S. W. 336], 30 Ky. Law Rep. 679. The reason of the rule is it is not customary for people to give away their property, particularly to strangers in blood. It is also known that one who has the entire confidence of another can induce the latter to do with his property that which a stranger could not. Everyday observation is full of incidents of overreaching of that character. Such abuse of confidence is, in law, a fraud."

It will be noticed that the rule as above formulated applies to cases in which there has been a voluntary conveyance which is beneficial to the grantee. And in examining the cases relied upon by appellants it will be found in each case, not only that a confidential relationship existed, but that the deed was without consideration, and was beneficial to the grantee.

In Smith v. Snowden, supra, a father and mother, over 70 years of age, conveyed their land to two of their sons, without any consideration; it being pointed out that not even the consideration of love and affection was hinted at.

Likewise, in Wilson v. Winsor, supra, a husband and his wife conveyed the wife's land to the husband's brother, for the purpose of preventing her children from receiving any benefit therefrom; and, as it was without consideration, and really for the husband's ultimate benefit, the court declared it fraudulent.

A similar state of facts controlled Highland v. Highland, supra. In that case the husband and his wife conveyed her land to Higbee, and Higbee conveyed it back to the husband; there being no consideration for either conveyance, and the purpose and effect of the two deeds being to convey the wife's land to the husband.

Again, in Koger v. Koger, supra, William Koger, Sr., at the age of 86, conveyed his land, for no consideration, to two of his sons, leaving ten of his children and two grandchildren of a deceased daughter, unprovided for.

And in Hoeb v. Maschinot, supra, the conveyance was from the mother-in-law to her son-in-law, and without consideration.

[4] It will be noticed, therefore, that the cases relied upon by appellants all come within the rule as above stated in Hoeb v. Maschinot, which imputes fraud in cases of voluntary conveyances made between persons who stand in confidential or fiduciary relations to each other. We do not mean to say that the rule is confined in its operation to cases in which there is no consideration, since there may be cases calling for its application, in which the consideration might be so grossly inadequate as to render the conveyance fraudulent, when the other conditions required by the rule are found to exist.

[5] In the case at bar, however, the answer expressly alleges that, although the deed, perhaps incorrectly, recites a consideration of $300, cash paid, there was, in reality, a valuable consideration for the deed in the services which the nephew had theretofore rendered his uncle, which were of greater value than the land conveyed. This allegation of consideration is not in conflict with the terms of the deed, which recites a consideration of $300 in cash, since it is not uncommon for parties to a contract to treat the satisfaction of a debt as a payment in money, or cash.

Moreover, there is nothing in the case to show there were any confidential relations between Jacob C. Warden and his nephew, more than are implied in the mere fact of kinship; and, if any presumption is to arise from the bare statement of that relationship, it would be that the uncle was the stronger character of the two.

The pleadings, as we view them, present a case of actual fraud rather than a case of implied or constructive fraud; and, since the rule requires a plaintiff who charges actual fraud to make out his case, the burden was upon appellants, and the circuit judge properly so ruled. Hunt v. Nance, 122 Ky. 282, 92 S. W. 6, 28 Ky. Law Rep. 1188.

Judgment affirmed.

RIDDELL v. WILCOX et al.

1. PARTITION (§ 77*)—SALE OF LAND—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Under Civ. Code Prac. § 490, providing that a vested estate jointly owned by two or more persons may be sold by a court of equity though plaintiff or defendant is an infant, where the property cannot be divided without materially impairing its value, or the value of plaintiff's interest, the court may order a sale of real estate owned and in possession of an adult and an infant, though such property consists of an 80-foot lot in a town not having 1,000 inhabitants, where the property was so remote as to make it practically a suburban lot, and where homeseekers do not erect dwelling houses on 40-foot lots, and where it could not be divided without materially impairing its value.

2. PARTITION (§ 93*)—SALES—IRREGULARITY IN PROCEEDINGS.

Where the court ordered a sale of land owned by an adult and an infant, and the infant was before payment protected by the lien retained by the judgment, any irregularity in the time of the execution of the bond to the infant required by Civ. Code Prac. § 493, did not affect the validity of the sale.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Estill County.

Action by Ben F. Wilcox for the sale of property owned by himself and an infant. From a judgment overruling exceptions to the report of sale made to Ann M. Riddell and confirming the sale, Ann M. Riddell appeals. Affirmed.

Hugh Riddell and Robt. R. Friend, both of Irvine, for appellant. R. W. Smith and Clarence Miller, both of Irvine, for appellees.

SETTLE, J. It appears from the record in this case that the appellee Ben F. Wilcox and the infant appellee Maggie Lee Gum are the joint owners of a parcel of ground in Collins addition to the town of Irvine, fronting 80 feet on Main street and having a depth of 150 feet to an alley. The property is without buildings, is otherwise unimproved, and no income or profit therefrom has ever been received by the owners. This action was brought by the appellee Wilcox, one of the joint owners, and B. R. Gum, statutory guardian of the infant Maggie Lee Gum, against the latter to obtain a sale of the property and a division of the proceeds between the joint owners. The infant was properly brought before the court, and a defense made for her by a guardian ad litem. Following the taking of depositions in support of the averments of the petition judgment was rendered by the circuit court directing a sale of the property, and when sold by the commissioners, after due advertisement, the appellant Ann M. Riddell, being the highest and best bidder, became the purchaser at the price of $800, for which amount she executed, with approved security, a sale bond as required by the judgment bearing interest from date. When the sale was reported to the court by the commissioner, appellant filed exceptions to same upon the ground that the court was without jurisdiction to adjudge a sale of the property, and that her purchase of same and the deed of conveyance therefor from the commissioner could not pass to her a valid title thereto. The exceptions were overruled by the court, and the sale confirmed. Appellant excepted to the judgment manifesting these rulings; hence this appeal.

The petition seems to have rested the right of the joint owners to a sale of the property upon the grounds, first, that it was permissible under section 489, subsec. 3, Civil Code, in order that the infant's share of the proceeds might be applied to her maintenance and education; second, that it was also permissible under section 490, subsec. 2, Civil Code, because of the indivisibility of the property. Waiving a decision of the question whether the sale of the property could have been adjudged on the first ground at the suit of the adult joint owner and statutory guardian of the infant, it is sufficient to say that its sale was authorized on the second ground.

[1] Section 490, Civil Code, provides: "A vested estate in real property jointly owned by two or more persons may be sold by order of a court of equity, in an action brought by either of them, though the plaintiff or defendant be of unsound mind or an infant. (1) If the share of each owner be worth less than one hundred dollars. (2) If the estate be in possession and the property cannot be divided without materially impairing its value, or the value of the plaintiff's interest therein." It is apparent from the averments of the petition, the deeds filed as exhibits, and the proof furnished by the depositions found in the record that the real estate sold was owned jointly and by and in the possession of the appellee Wilcox and the infant appellee Maggie Lee Gum, and that it was a vested estate. It is further manifest from the evidence that the property was and is indivisible; that is, that it cannot be divided without materially impairing its value, and that both joint owners were and are benefited by its sale. At first blush, it would seem that an 80-foot lot might be advantageously divided into two lots, having a frontage of 40 feet each; and this would be true if the ground were situated in a larger and more populous town or city, or, even in the business section of Irvine, where it could be utilized as a site for a mercantile house or office building. But Irvine is a small town of not exceeding 1,000 inhabitants, and this property is so remote from its business and residential centers as to make it practically a suburban lot; and, as according to the evidence homeseekers in Irvine do not erect dwelling houses upon 40-foot lots, its partition into small lots would render them, at least for many years to come, well nigh valueless, if not wholly unsalable. In view of the foregoing facts, it may well be said that the property is, in the meaning of the Code provision, indivisible. Therefore, it was properly sold as a single lot. It is conceded that the price realized for the property was its full market value and in excess of the amount at which it was appraised.

[2] We have found no irregularity in the proceedings preceding or following the sale. Even the bond to the infant required by section 493, Code, was executed by the guardian before the sale, although it might have been subsequently executed at any time before the payment of the sale bond by the purchaser; the infant being in the meantime protected by the lien retained by the judgment on the property.

As appellant will, under her purchase at the decretal sale and by the deed to be made her by the Commissioner, take a good and marketable title to the property sold, the circuit court in overruling her exceptions and confirming the sale committed no error. Wherefore the judgment is affirmed.

JELICO COAL MINING CO. v. LEE.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 5, 1912.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 278*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence in an action by a coal mine employé for injuries from the car on which he was riding being derailed by being struck by a hanging cross-beam held to sustain a verdict for plaintiff.

2. TRIAL (§ 251*)—INSTRUCTIONS—PLEADING TO SUSTAIN.

Where, in a coal mine employé's action for injuries from the car on which he was riding being derailed by being struck by an overhead cross-beam, the defendant pleaded contributory negligence only in general terms, the court did not err in refusing an instruction, not supported by the allegations of defendant's answer, that plaintiff could not recover if he loaded the car and left one end of a piece of timber projecting, so that it struck a post, causing the wreck and his injury.

3. TRIAL (§ 251*)—INSTRUCTIONS—PLEADING TO SUSTAIN.

While an instruction may be based on acts of contributory negligence contemporaneous with the injury, although they are not pleaded, an instruction based on such acts occurring before or after the injury cannot be given, unless they be specially pleaded.

Tye & Siler, of Williamsburg, for appellant. R. L. Pope, of Williamsburg, for appellee.

NUNN, J. Larkin Lee, a boy 19 years of age, was injured in appellant's coal mine while driving a mule hitched to a cut of two or three cars. The front car, the one upon which he was riding, was thrown from the track, and his thumb was caught between it and a prop on the side of the mine, and mashed off near the second joint. He also received other injuries, but it is not necessary to mention them here. He instituted this action in the lower court to recover damages occasioned by the injuries, and the jury awarded him $525, and appellant seeks a reversal of the judgment of the lower court for two reasons: First, because the verdict was flagrantly against the evidence; second, because the court erred in instructing the jury.

[1] It appears that Lee had been working in appellant's mine for some time as a "gin hand"; that on December 1, 1910, he, under the directions of his boss, Hollars, commenced to drive a mule hitched to cars along the entry of the mine; that he had never before been engaged at that character of work, and he so informed Hollars before he began; and that he had been so engaged only four or five days before he was injured. The testimony for the boy shows that he was directed to, and did, hitch the mule to the cars which were near the entry of the mine, and which were loaded with timber to be used in the mine; that he took his seat on the front of the front car at the usual place; that, when he had driven the mule about 300 feet along the entry, he, by the aid of a lamp on his cap, discovered one end of a cross-beam which was used to support the roof hanging down six or seven inches, and he ducked so as to pass under it, but some of the timbers on one of the other cars, which extended up above the bed of the cars, struck the hanging cross-beam, and gave the cars such a jerk as to cause the wheels of the front car to leave the track, resulting in the injury to Lee before stated and also in an injury to his leg. The petition alleged that appellant was negligent in placing Lee to work in an entry where such defective and dangerous conditions prevailed, that Lee was ignorant of the danger himself, and that appellant knew or could have known of it by the exercise of ordinary diligence. It was also alleged that the entry through which Lee was driving was too narrow; that it was only about six feet wide, when, to be safe, it should have been nine or more feet wide; that, as the entry was so narrow, the posts which supported the cross-beams used to hold the roof had to be placed dangerously near the car track; that the posts were only from four to six inches from the track when they should not have been closer than fourteen inches. And it was alleged that Lee was unaware of the dangers incident to the use of such an entry, and that appellant knew it. By its answer appellant made a specific denial of the petition, and alleged contributory negligence in general terms, but did not mention any particular act of Lee constituting such negligence.

Appellee and his witnesses sustained the allegations of the petition. Appellant introduced its boss, Hollars, and he testified that he saw the condition of the cars soon after the wreck and injury to Lee. He stated that he saw the cross-beam down; that it was not caused to fall as stated by appellee, but was knocked down by one of the timbers which was projecting from the bed of one of the cars some inches, and this, in the judgment of the witness, was the cause of Lee's injury. This witness also testified that Lee could have saved himself from injury by spragging the wheels of the car which he failed to do. He says that it was Lee's duty to load the cars, and that he was present and saw him load the cars upon this occasion. Lee testified that he did not load the cars; that they were loaded and ready to be carried into the mine when he was directed by Hollars to hitch onto them; that they were properly loaded; that none of the timbers were projecting from the cars; and that, if any were found in that condition after his injury, it was caused by the shake-up in the wreck. There was also testimony by another witness who was a laborer in the mine, to the effect that this cross-beam was hanging the evening before the accident, and that he had noticed it several times during several days previous thereto.

[2] The court instructed the jury upon appellee's theory of the case as stated in his petition, and there is no criticism of this instruction. The pleading and testimony introduced upon the trial authorized it. The court gave, on behalf of appellant, an instruction on contributory negligence almost in the language of its pleading. Appellant asked an instruction to the effect that if the jury believed Lee loaded the car and left one end of a piece of the timber projecting, and it struck one of the posts and caused the wreck of the cars and his injury, then they should find for appellant. The court refused to give this instruction, and this is the main alleged error which appellant urges for a reversal of the case, and, in support of this contention, it cites the case of L. & N. R. Co. v. King's Adm'r, 131 Ky. 347, 115 S. W. 196. In that case such an instruction was authorized for the reason "that it grouped all the facts constituting the defendant's defense of contributory negligence." A defense should be made in the pleading and testimony. There was no allegation in the answer that authorized the court in the trial of the case at bar to give such an instruction. The instruction in behalf of appellee was based upon his petition in which he had made specific allegations, but no such allegations were contained in the answer upon which to base an instruction in behalf of appellant.

[3] The distinction is: Before a party can have an instruction presenting special facts showing contributory negligence, such facts must be pleaded, if they are shown to have occurred either before or after the injury; but, on the other hand, if the alleged contributory negligent acts occurred at the time of the injury, it is proper to base an instruction on them, although they are not pleaded. If the court had singled out the fact of the improper loading of the cars and based an instruction upon it, the instruction would have been erroneous, for the reason that the testimony of appellant tended to show contributory negligence on the part of Lee, other than the improper loading of the cars; for instance, his failure to sprag the cars. As to this matter, however, Lee says he did not sprag the cars nor attempt to do so, as Hollars had told him not to, and, as the entry was so narrow and the post so close to the track upon which his cars traveled, it would have been dangerous for him to do so.

From what we have already said it appears that the lower court did not err in failing to give a peremptory instruction in behalf of appellant, and that the verdict of the jury is not flagrantly against the evidence.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

HOUGH & SPRADLIN CO. v. CLARK.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 5, 1912.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 118*)—MASTER'S LIABILITY—DEFECTS IN POLES AND METHODS OF WORK—DANGEROUS SUBSTANCES.

Where a wooden rod or pole was the safe and approved means of loading dynamite into a drilled hole, and an overseer, on coming to holes so deep that there was no pole long enough to load them, directed a blasting man to use an iron pipe, with the assurance that it was safe, but which, because of its greater weight and rougher surface end, might and did discharge the dynamite, injuring the blasting man, the master was negligent in not furnishing a reasonably safe appliance for the work, whether or not the overseer knew the danger in using the iron pipe; since a master cannot, in the use of dynamite, direct an inherently dangerous method of handling it, and escape liability by showing that he did not know it was dangerous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 177, 202, 209; Dec. Dig. § 118.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 289*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—ACTING ON ASSURANCE OF SAFETY—DANGEROUS SUBSTANCES.

Where a wooden rod or pole was the safe and approved method of loading dynamite into drilled holes, and, on coming to holes so deep that there was no pole of sufficient length to be had, a blasting man on the order of his overseer, and upon his assurance of safety, used an iron rod, causing a premature explosion and resulting injury, the question of his contributory negligence was for the jury.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 236*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—OBEDIENCE TO ORDER—ASSURANCE BY MASTER.

A servant, though assured by an overseer that an iron pipe was a safe tool or appliance in loading dynamite into drilled holes, was guilty of contributory negligence if it was so obviously unsafe that an ordinarily prudent person of the servant's experience would not have used it.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 296*)—ACTION FOR INJURIES—INSTRUCTIONS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

In a servant's action for injuries from a premature explosion of dynamite while he was loading it into drilled holes by means of an iron pipe, under the master's order and assurance of safety, where his experience of several years in the use of dynamite in blasting was in evidence, an instruction directing the jury to consider ordinary prudence in the light of the circumstances attendant upon the doing of the work fairly presented the defendant's theory of contributory negligence, notwithstanding such assurance of safety.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1180-1194; Dec. Dig. § 296.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pendleton County.

Action by Joseph C. Clark against the Hough & Spradlin Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

S. D. Rouse and D. Collins Lee, both of Covington, for appellant. Applegate & Clarke, of Falmouth, for appellee.

LASSING, J. [1, 2] Appellee, Clark, was engaged as blasting man by the appellant railroad construction company. Part of his duty was to load the drilled holes with dynamite. For this purpose the accustomed and approved instrument was a wooden rod or pole used as a pusher to force the dynamite down into the holes. Coming to a cut demanding deeper holes, appellee found that no pole he had was long enough to load them. The overseer, according to Clark's testimony, directed him to use an iron pipe for the work, assuring him that it was safe. Clark did so. While it was being used in loading a hole into which some 85 sticks of dynamite had been placed, a premature explosion occurred, badly injuring Clark. He sued and recovered judgment for $2,000, predicated his case upon the unsafe tool supplied him. The company appeals.

The defendant was not entitled to a peremptory instruction. The evidence shows that a wooden pole was safe, and that an iron one, both because of its greater weight, and because its rougher surface and end might by abrasion discharge some portion of the crumbled dynamite in the hole, was not safe; that, notwithstanding this fact, Clark was directed by his boss to use it, with an assurance that it was safe. The boss does not undertake to deny the conversation. The master in supplying this iron tool did not furnish his servant a reasonably safe appliance for the work in hand. Clark says that he did not know the danger in the use of the iron rod. It is true that he had some question as to the safety of it, but he obeyed his employer, and accepted his judgment. Whether in doing so he was guilty of contributory negligence was for the jury. Pullman Company v. Geller, 128 Ky. 72, 107 S. W. 271, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 884, 129 Am. St. Rep. 295. Whether Newman, the boss, knew as a matter of fact the danger in using the iron rod, is immaterial. A master cannot, in the use of dynamite, direct an inherently dangerous method of handling the dangerous agency, and then escape liability for resulting injury by saying that he did not know the method was dangerous. This is not a case of a confessedly dangerous implement known to the servant, and used by him upon the master's promise to repair, as in Burch v. Louisville Car Wheel Co., 146 Ky. 275, 142 S. W. 414, relied on by appellant, necessitating a special pleading of the fact, as held in that case. On the contrary, this case turns on the primary failure of the master to furnish a safe tool, which is fully pleaded in the petition.

[3, 4] The court told the jury that notwithstanding the master's assurance, if the tool was so obviously unsafe that a person of ordinary prudence would not, under the circumstances, use it, the finding should be for the defendant company. Appellant complains that ordinary prudence, within the facts appearing here, should have been defined explicitly as that which ordinarily would be used by one of Clark's experience in the use of dynamite; i. e., that the jury should have been told that notwithstanding the master's assurance of safety, if the tool was so obviously unsafe that an ordinarily prudent person of Clark's experience would not have used it, they should find for the defendant. The argument is sound; but in our judgment the instruction given fairly presented this idea to the jury. A part of the circumstances surrounding Clark proven upon the trial was his experience of several years in the use of dynamite in blasting. The instruction given directed the jury to consider ordinary prudence in the light of the circumstances attendant upon the doing of this work. While it might well have been somewhat more explicit, it fairly and satisfactorily presented the theory for which appellant contends.

Judgment affirmed.

WOOD v. CUMBERLAND TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 6, 1912.)

1. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 15*)— —MAINTENANCE OF LINES—NEGLIGENCE— —PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Though a telephone company was negligent in insulating its wires, it is not liable for a fire caused by lightning which was carried into a building on the wire, unless but for its negligence the building would not have burned.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 9; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

2. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 20*)—IN- SULATION OF WIRES—ACTIONS FOR INJURIES.

In an action to recover damages for a fire alleged to have been caused by the negligent failure of a telephone company to insulate its wires which entered a building, evidence held insufficient to go to the jury.

3. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 20*)—DE- FECTIVE INSULATION—NEGLIGENCE.

In an action to recover damages for a fire alleged to have been caused by a telephone company's negligence in failing to insulate its wires which entered a building, the plaintiff has the burden of showing that the fire was caused by the company's negligence.

4. NEGLIGENCE (§ 136*)—ACTIONS—SUBMIS- SION OF QUESTION TO JURY.

In a negligence action where the evidence is equally consistent with the existence or nonexistence of negligence, the case should not be submitted to the jury; the party affirming negligence having failed to prove it.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Muhlenberg County.

Action by P. S. Wood against the Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Flexner & Gordon, of Louisville, and Willis & Meredith, of Greenville, for appellant. Newton Belcher and Belcher & Sparks, all of Greenville, and Clarence Finn, of Owensboro, for appellee.

SETTLE, J. On the trial of this case in the court below, a verdict was rendered for appellee in obedience to a peremptory instruction given by the court at the conclusion of the appellant's evidence. So the only question arising on this appeal is whether or not the evidence introduced in behalf of the appellant was sufficient to take the case to the jury. The action was brought by appellant to recover of appellee damages for the burning of his storehouse and goods, situated at Belton, a village in Muhlenberg county; it being alleged in the petition that the destruction of the property was caused by the negligence of appellee in falling to properly insulate its wires connected with and used in operating a desk telephone within the building and in failing to provide the telephone or wires with a lightning arrester; furthermore that the striking of the telephone wires by lightning, somewhere in the vicinity of the building, produced and carried into it an electric current of unusual force which started the fire, either by coming in contact with the goods stored therein, or overheating the wires within the building.

The building was in size 70 feet by 100 feet, constructed of brick with a roof of tin. Its interior was divided into three apartments connected by arched openings in the partition walls, and the buildings, as a whole, occupied as a general or department store. There was a single room built over the southwest corner of the store building, which appellant occupied as a sleeping room, and from this room a stairway led down into the store below. The telephone wires entered the main building at its north or rear end through the upper part of a window to the left of the door, and within the building extended along one of the partition walls, back of pine shelving, connecting with the telephone near a desk in the interior of the building.

The fire occurred about 1 o'clock in the morning, and was first discovered by appellant, who was awakened from sleep by the smoke which entered the bedroom over the store. He made his escape from the building by descending from its roof to that of a coal-house adjoining, thence to the ground. It is manifest from the bill of evidence appearing in the record that the telephone wires were uninsulated where they entered the building, and that they were neither there, nor elsewhere, provided with a lightning arrester; indeed this is admitted by appellee. The evidence shows that porcelain tubes should be used for insulating such wires where the building is entered by them, and that the safety of persons operating telephones requires the use of lightning arresters for grounding the electric currents during the prevalence of electrical or thunder storms.

[1] If it could be said that appellant's right to recover damages, as claimed, depended wholly upon whether appellee's failure to insulate its telephone wires and provide a lightning arrester was negligence, the peremptory instruction should not have been given. But, as it was incumbent on him to further show that such negligence was the proximate cause of the burning of his storehouse and goods, it remains to be determined whether the evidence introduced in his behalf conduced to prove that the telephone wires were struck by lightning outside the building, thereby creating upon them an additional electric current of unusual force which, because of the negligent failure of appellee to properly insulate the wires or provide a lightning arrester, they conducted into the building and caused the fire.

As said in City of Louisville v. Bridwell, 150 Ky. 589, 150 S. W. 672, with respect to an accident resulting in an injury to the person of the plaintiff: "It seems to be well settled in law that, if the injury is the result of concurring causes, for one of which only the defendant is responsible, he must answer; or, where the injury is the combined result of negligence and accident, the negligent party must answer unless the injury would have happened if it had not been negligent." 1 Thompson, § 68; City of Louisville v. Hart's Adm'r, 143 Ky. 171, 136 S. W. 212, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 207; Whitman-McNamara Tobacco Co. v. Warren, 66 S. W. 609, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 2120; City of Louisville v. Johnson, 69 S. W. 803, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 685; 29 Cyc. 498.

[2-4] Much of appellant's evidence conduced to prove that, as late as 9 o'clock on the night of the fire, the atmosphere was apparently charged with electricity, which manifested itself in frequent flashes of what is known as sheet lightning in various parts of the horizon. The evidence, however, falls short of showing that the electrical disturbances referred to could have imparted to the telephone wires an electric current of sufficient strength to have overheated them within the building or cause them to transmit the current into and ignite the building or its contents; indeed, no witness saw any display of electricity upon or about the wires, and appellant, who was in the store that night and did not retire until after 9 o'clock, gave no testimony that his telephone was affected in any way by the display of electricity on the outside.

It is true that appellant testified that some time during the night, and before the fire, he was awakened by a "loud clap of thunder" and vivid flash of lightning; and the witness Latham, whose residence is a half mile distant from Belton, testified that, while standing in his door, he heard a loud "clap of thunder" and saw a great flash of lightning apparently in the direction of Belton. He was unwilling to say whether this was 25 minutes after 12 or 25 minutes before 1 o'clock, although he at the time looked at his watch, but was confident that it was one or the other. It is insisted for appellant that the above evidence, together with the fact that the fire was discovered about 1 o'clock, was sufficient to make it reasonably certain that the telephone wires were struck by lightning, which imparted to them a current of electricity so powerful as to cause them, in the absence of proper insulation, to pass it into the store and ignite it. We are unable to accept this conclusion. If the telephone pole from which wires run into the building, and which stood within 50 feet of it, had shown any marks of a lightning stroke, or other poles in the vicinity had shown such marks, or anything in the appearance of the wires had indicated such an electrical visitation, it would have given support to appellant's theory as to the origin of the fire; but, without such support, the theory rests wholly upon conjecture.

According to the testimony of appellant, the first discovery of the fire was made by him. When first seen by him, the flames were coming out from the cornice and immediately under the eaves of the building in numerous places, and the tin roof was rising and falling from the heated air beneath. Moreover, after he got to the door at the front of the building, where he could see the entire inside, including the central part where the telephone was kept, he could see no light of any kind. From these facts it might well be argued that the fire began in the ceiling and worked its way downward to the contents of the store, and that if the lightning, which accompanied the thunder heard by appellant and Latham, did any execution at all, it struck the store building instead of the telephone lines, and thereby ignited and destroyed it.

In considering the evidence, we have not overlooked the fact that the top of the window, where the telephone wires entered the building, was one of the places, and perhaps the first place, through which the flames were seen by the witness Tipton to proceed; but it should be borne in mind that this window, according to the evidence, was the only one of the building lowered at the top, and it had been kept so from the time the telephone wires were run into the building. Being the only opening to the burning building, it afforded the only outlet for the escape of the heat and flames, and both would naturally follow the draft it produced. We do not mean to express the opinion that the fire resulted from the lightning striking the building, but only to say that the evidence furnishes as much proof of its having occurred in that way as that it was caused by the transmission of an electric current into the building over the telephone wires, which had been imparted to them by lightning. Neither theory is supported by any satisfactory evidence, therefore neither is tenable.

So many fires are of mysterious origin that it may safely be said half of them cannot be accounted for. What may have caused the burning of appellant's storehouse cannot be reasonably ascertained from the evidence upon which he relies in this case. It is simply another mysterious fire originating from an unknown and unexplained cause; and it will not meet the ends of justice to permit a jury to enter the field of speculation or conjecture in order to arrive at a verdict which is to determine the legal rights of litigants. Appellee is not required to account for the fire. On the contrary, the burden is upon the appellant to show that it is in some way chargeable to its negligence, and this he has failed to do. The case comes clearly within the rule announced in Louisville Gas Co. v. Kaufman & Straus, 105 Ky. 131, 48 S. W. 434, 20 Ky. Law Rep. 1069; Hughes v. Railroad Co., 91 Ky. 526, 16 S. W. 275, 13 Ky. Law Rep. 72; Wintuska's Adm'r v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 20 S. W. 819, 14 Ky. Law Rep. 579; and numerous other cases, including the very recent case of McDonald's Adm'r v. Louisville Car Wheel & R. S. Co., 149 Ky. 801, 149 S. W. 1142. In Louisville Gas Co. v. Kaufman & Straus, supra, the rule in question is thus stated: "When the question is one of negligence or no negligence, it is well-settled law that, where the evidence is equally consistent with either view—the existence or nonexistence of negligence—the court should not submit the case to the jury, for the party affirming the negligence has failed to prove it."

Wherefore the judgment is affirmed.

HATTERICH v. BRUCE.

1. PARTITION (§ 12*)—JOINT ESTATES OF INFANTS—DOWER RIGHTS—"VESTED ESTATE."

Where infants jointly own land, subject to the unassigned dower of their mother in a third of it, and all live on it, there is a "vested estate" therein, jointly owned and in possession, within Civ. Code Prac. § 490, subsec. 2, authorizing such an estate to be sold in an action by either owner, though one be an infant, if the property be indivisible, so that the sale is properly allowed if the action is brought by the guardian of the infants, the widow consenting to take the present value of her dower, though she join as plaintiff.

2. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 92*)—SALE FOR PARTITION—BOND OF GUARDIAN.

The bond required by Civ. Code Prac. § 493, to be executed to infants by their guardian before a sale is ordered, need not be given in an action for sale for partition under section 490, subsec. 2; they being protected by section 497, providing that in such action the share of an infant shall not be paid by the purchaser, but shall remain a lien on the land till he comes of age, or his guardian execute bond as required by section 493.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Harrison County.

Action by Mary Bruce, guardian, for sale for partition. From the judgment overruling exceptions to the report of sale, Henry Hatterich, the purchaser, appeals. Affirmed.

Cason & Cox, of Cynthiana, for appellant. Chester M. Jewett, of Cynthiana, for appellee.

SETTLE, J. This is an appeal, prosecuted by the purchaser of real estate at a decretal sale, from a judgment overruling his exceptions to the report of sale and cou-firming the report. The real estate consists of a house and lot situated in the city of Cynthiana. The price bid therefor by appellant was $1,100, which exceeded its appraised value by $300. It was jointly owned in fee by the four infant children of William Wallace Bruce named in the record, subject to the dower of their mother, Rose C. Bruce, therein.

[1] William Wallace Bruce died intestate November 8, 1906, a resident of Boyle county, Ky., survived by his widow and four infant children. The widow was appointed and duly qualified as statutory guardian of the four infant children, and she in her own right, and as such guardian, and the children in their own right, brought suit, under section 490, Civil Code, to obtain a decree for the sale of the house and lot in Cynthiana and a division of the proceeds among them, according to their respective interests. It is conceded that the parties in interest were all properly before the court, and that the proceedings leading to the decree and sale were in all respects regular.

Confirmation of the sale was resisted by the purchaser, upon the ground that the circuit court was without jurisdiction to adjudicate a sale of the property; it being claimed that the estate was not a vested one, in possession and jointly owned, within the meaning of section 490, subsec. 2, Civil Code. The section of the Code, supra, provides: "A vested estate in real property jointly owned by two or more persons may be sold by order of a court of equity, in an action brought by either of them, though the plaintiff or defendant be of unsound mind or an infant: (1) If the share of each one be worth less than $100.00. (2) If the estate be in possession and the property cannot be divided without materially impairing its value, or the value of the plaintiff's interest therein."

The depositions appearing in the record show, beyond doubt, the indivisibility of the property; that the house thereon is in a bad state of decay and of little value; that it would require from $800 to $1,000 to repair the property; and that only by its sale could loss to the joint owners be prevented.

Since the death of William Wallace Bruce, dower in this property has not been assigned the widow; but she and the children have been all the while in possession and control thereof, having together received and used the rents in the ratio of their respective interests. As the jurisdiction to sell the lands of infants is purely statutory, it necessarily follows that in an action brought for that purpose the statute must be substantially pursued. We have repeatedly held that the circuit court is without jurisdiction, under section 490, Civil Code, to order a sale of indivisible real property in an action brought by the widow against an infant, who owns the property subject to the dower right. Fullenwider v. Johnson, etc., 145 Ky. 19, 139 S. W. 1096; Liederkrans Society v. Beck, 71 Ky. (8 Bush) 597; Lee v. James, 81 Ky. 446.

It appears that in Fullenwider v. Johnson, etc., supra, the parties interested in the land were the widow and her infant child; the widow being the plaintiff and the infant the defendant in the action. The infant owned the fee, subject to the widow's dower; that is, a life estate in an undivided one-third of the land. This status, it is said in the opinion, did not constitute a joint ownership in the proper meaning of the Code; and that "to constitute a joint ownership the shares of the owners must generally extend to the whole estate, and be such as that neither of the joint owners would have an interest in the proceeds set apart to the joint owner." This conclusion is explained in the opinion, after differentiating the case from that of Atherton v. Warren, 120 Ky. 151, 85 S. W. 1100, 27 Ky. Law Rep. 632, as follows: "Here the whole estate is owned by one, subject to a life estate in one-third, and the life tenant is asking that the property be sold for a distribution of the proceeds; and in the proceeds going to the life tenant the remainderman has an interest, as upon the death of the life tenant her share would go to him, unless the value of the life estate could be paid over to the life tenant. In view of these facts, it cannot be held that the joint ownership is of such a character as to authorize a sale of the property upon the petition of the life tenant."

In Malone v. Conn, etc., and Aims, etc., v. Conn, 95 Ky. 93, 23 S. W. 677, the tenant by the curtesy brought suit against the remaindermen for a sale of the land, under section 490, Code, upon the ground of its indivisibility, but the sale adjudged by the lower court was held invalid, upon the ground that, the possession being wholly with the estate for life (i. e., the life tenant), there was no joint ownership or possession, in the meaning of section 490, Code; therefore its provision did not apply. The doctrine announced in Malone v. Conn and Aims, etc., v. Conn, supra, was applied in Berry v. Lewis, 118 Ky. 652, 82 S. W. 252, 26 Ky. Law Rep. 530, Id., 118 Ky. 652, 84 S. W. 526, 27 Ky. Law Rep. 109. Liter v. Fishback, 75 S. W. 232, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 260, and Swearngen v. Abbott, etc., 99 Ky. 271, 35 S. W. 925, 18 Ky. Law Rep. 184, in none of which cases was there a joint ownership or possession of the property sought to be sold, in the meaning of the statute.

In Atherton v. Warren, 120 Ky. 151, 85 S. W. 1100, 27 Ky. Law Rep. 632, it was held that a sale of indivisible real estate would be permitted, under section 490, Code, where, as in that case, one owned the fee in his share, and the other share was owned by a life tenant and remainderman; or, to be more precise as to the interests of the parties, except as to one share, all the joint owners of the property were vested with the fee. In the one share referred to the remainder was owned by infants, and the life estate by their father.

In Wormald's Guardian, etc., v. Heinze, 90 S. W. 1064, 28 Ky. Law Rep. 1022, the judgment of the circuit court refusing a sale of the real estate involved, under section 490, Code, was reversed. Suit was brought by the infant and her guardian to obtain the decree. The property was jointly owned by the infant and her aunt, one moiety each; but the father of the infant owned a dower right in her undivided half, the value of which he was willing to take in money. The father and aunt were made defendants. In the opinion Atherton v. Warren, supra, was relied on as an authority in point, and the doctrine therein announced held to entitle the infant to the sale of the property as prayed.

In our opinion, the case at bar comes within the rule declared in Atherton v. Warren, and Wormald's Guardian v. Heinze. The possession of the property is jointly held by the infants and their mother, though the latter is but the tenant for life in an undivided third in value of the whole; and the property cannot be divided without materially impairing its value and that of the several owners therein. Moreover, the widow asks, and will be permitted to take absolutely, the value of her dower in money, payable out of the proceeds of the property; the amount to be fixed by judgment of the court, according to her life expectancy as estimated by the insurance life tables.

As before remarked, the cases in which apparently similar sales of the property were refused were actions brought alone by the widow as life tenant, or a tenant by the curtesy of the entire property sought to be sold. Whereas here the action was brought by the infants and their guardian, as well as by the life tenant. This case, because of its dissimilarity, is not to be controlled by the opinion in Fullenwider v. Johnson, supra; for in that case, although the whole estate was owned by one, subject to the life estate of the widow in one-third, the sale of the property was asked at the suit of the widow alone, and the remainderman, in case of a sale of the property, would have had an interest in the life tenant's share of the proceeds, as upon her death it would go to him. Here the infants can have no interest in the widow's share of the proceeds of the property, as she will be paid the present value of her life estate therein. So, in view of this fact, and the further fact that the sale is asked by the infant owners and their guardian, the joint ownership is of such character as to authorize a sale of the property upon their petition; and, as the widow, by joining as a plaintiff in the petition, is but voluntarily uniting with the infant to accomplish what she would have consented to if made a defendant to the action, the right of the parties to the sale of the property cannot be affected by the fact of her being a plaintiff.

It seems to have been the policy of this court to withhold its approval of sales of real property, under section 490, Civil Code, when made at the suit of life tenants owning unassigned dower therein, or life tenants by the curtesy, but not to prevent such sales when asked by joint owners or tenants in possession, interested as are the infants in this case.

Not only is the proposition last stated supported by Atherton v. Warren and Wormald's Guardian, etc., v. Heinze, supra, but it is likewise supported by Jenkins v. McVaw, 145 Ky. 205, 140 S. W. 150, wherein it was held that a court of equity has jurisdiction, under section 490, subsec. 2, Civil Code, and at the suit of infants by their statutory guardian, to sell real estate owned by them, and in which they also had a right of homestead, under section 1707, Kentucky Statutes. The widow of the decedent and mother of the infants, who owned a dower interest in the land, and was equally entitled with the infants to a homestead, was a plaintiff in the action.

In view of the construction given the provisions of section 490, subsec. 2, Civil Code, by the three authorities last mentioned, we think the circuit court had jurisdiction to adjudge a sale of the property purchased by the appellant.

[2] The validity of the sale was not affected by the failure of the guardian to execute the bond required by section 493, Civil Code, before the sale was ordered. In a sale of property under section 490, subsec. 2, Civil Code, the bond to the infant, required by section 493, need not be given. The judgment provides that the share of each of the infants in the proceeds of the property shall remain a lien thereon, bearing interest, until the guardian of the infants execute bond as required by section 493. This provision of the judgment amply protects the infant, and the required bond may yet be executed by the guardian before payment by the purchaser of the sale bond executed by him. Such procedure is allowed by section 497, Civil Code, which provides: "In the action mentioned in subsection 2 of section 490, the share of an infant, or of a person of unsound mind, shall not be paid by the purchaser; but shall remain a lien on the land bearing interest until the infant become of age, or the person of unsound mind become of sound mind, or until the guardian of the infant, or the committee of the person of unsound mind, execute bond as required by section 493."

Judgment affirmed.

FLUEHART COLLIERIES CO. v. ELAM.

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 118*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—SAFE PLACE TO WORK.

Where a mining company failed to provide a passageway by which the miners could go from one part of the mine to the other without passing through elevator shafts, and as a result an employé was injured, the fact that there was no statute or rule of the state mining department requiring such passageway did not relieve the company from liability; the duty to provide such passageway being imposed by common-law principles.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 177, 209; Dec. Dig. § 118.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 211*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—SAFE PLACE TO WORK.

By accepting employment in a mine, an employé assumed the risk of such accidents as might happen in the ordinary course of his employment, but not any risk arising from failure of the company to exercise ordinary care to furnish him a reasonably safe place in which to work; the risks assumed by a servant not embracing risks brought about by the master's failure to perform his duty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 557; Dec. Dig. § 211.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 289*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Where a coal miner with no experience in shaft mines accepted employment in one, and two days thereafter, without having been warned and while in the exercise of ordinary care, was injured from a descending elevator while he was passing through the elevator shaft in obedience to a general order from his foreman to go to the opposite side of the mine to which there was no passageway other than through such shaft, he was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, though he knew in a general way of the possible danger.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 107*)—DUTY OF MASTER—SAFE PLACE TO WORK.

The duty of a coal mining company to provide its employé with a reasonably safe place was not confined to the precise spot in which he worked, but included the places to and from which he might be required to go in performing his duties.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 270*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—EVIDENCE—PRECAUTION AFTER INJURY.

In a coal miner's action for injuries from being struck by a descending elevator while he was passing through the elevator shaft because there was no safe passageway, it was error to admit evidence to prove that a passageway was constructed around the elevator shaft after the accident.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

The admission of evidence of precautions taken by the master by constructing a safe passageway after injury to the employé was harmless, where the uncontradicted evidence showed that the employer was negligent in not having a safe passageway which would obviate the necessity of its employés going through the elevator shaft where plaintiff was injured.

7. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 270*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—EVIDENCE—PRECAUTION AFTER INJURY.

Evidence of subsequent improvements or repairs is excluded because it does not establish that the wrongdoer was guilty of negligence before the accident.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Johnson County.

Action by J. C. Elam against the Fluehart Collieries Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Howes & Howes, of Paintsville, and Auxier, Harman & Francis, of Pikeville, for appellant. Fogg & Kirk, of Paintsville, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. This appeal is prosecuted from a judgment for $1,500 entered upon the verdict of a jury in a suit by the appellee against the appellant to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by him. At the time of the injury complained of the appellee was a coal miner, engaged in working for the appellant coal company. The mine operated by the appellant was what is known as a "shaft mine"; the shaft extending from the surface of the ground a distance of about 110 feet to the coal. In the shaft there were two elevators operated by machinery, situated on the surface of the ground, and these elevators were used for the purpose of bringing coal from the mine to the surface and taking miners and employés of the company to and from the surface to the mine. They were intended to be so operated as that, when one was at the bottom of the mine, the other would be at the surface of the ground, and, when an elevator descended to the floor of the mine, it rested upon a framework of sills; the floor of the elevator being level with the floor of the mine. The shaft in which these elevators ran was located in the main entry of the mine, and the miners in using this entry in going from one side of the mine to the other were obliged to walk through the shaft in which the elevators ran. When one elevator was down to the floor of the mine, the miners would walk through the elevator, but when the elevators were above the mine floor, as often happened, they would walk over the place where the elevator rested when down. The company had not provided any means or method of warning the miners of the descent of these elevators, and, so if one of the elevators was not at the bottom of the mine, the only way in which they could tell where the elevators were was by looking, as no signal or notice was given of their movements. At the time appellee was injured he was directed in a general way by the foreman to go to another part of the entry, and obedience to this order made it necessary that he should go through the elevator shaft. At this time neither of the elevators were at the bottom of the mine, and, as appellee was passing over the space where the elevators came down, one of them, quickly descending in the usual way, caught him, and he was pressed against the floor of the mine by the bottom of the elevator, receiving severe injuries.

The case for the appellee was put upon the ground that the company was negligent in failing to furnish him a reasonably safe place in which to work, and in failing to warn him of the danger in going through these elevator shafts; while the company defended upon the ground that the appellee assumed the risk of injury in accepting employment, and, besides, was guilty of such contributory negligence as would defeat a recovery.

[1] The evidence shows, practically without contradiction, that the method of requiring the miners to pass through these elevator shafts in going from one part of the mine entry to another was unsafe. It further shows, without contradiction, that a passway could have been made with little expense on the sides of this shaft, through which the employes could have gone with safety in passing from one part of the mine entry to the other, thus avoiding the necessity of going through the elevator shaft. It is further shown by the evidence that there was no time fixed for the descent of these elevators, and that no warning or notice of any kind was given of their descent. In short, the overwhelming weight of the evidence establishes that the company did not exercise ordinary care to furnish appellee a reasonably safe place in which to work, but, on the contrary, furnished him a place in which it was extremely dangerous to work, although it could have been made safe by the expenditure of a few dollars.

It is said, however, by counsel for appellant that as there is no statute in this state requiring mineowners to provide a passageway around elevator shafts, and as the state mine inspecting department did not object to or complain of the failure of the appellant to have the passageway, it should not be treated as having altogether failed in its duty of furnishing appellee a reasonably safe place in which to work. But the fact that there is no statute in this state on the subject of providing a passageway around elevator shafts, or the fact that the state mining department was apparently negligent or indifferent in the performance of its duty, did not excuse appellant from discharging the duty it was under to exercise ordinary care to furnish its employes with a reasonably safe place to work. This duty is imposed upon the master by common-law principles, and does not require statutory enactment or mining department direction to make it effective. As the evidence for appellee made out a good case in his behalf upon the point that the coal company was remiss in its duty in the respect mentioned, it only remains to be seen if the defenses of assumption of risk and contributory negligence can save the appellant from the loss it invited by its failure to have a passageway.

[2] In accepting employment the appellee assumed the risk of such accidents and resulting injury as might happen to him in the ordinary and customary course of his employment, but he did not assume any risk from accident or injury caused by the failure of the coal company to exercise ordinary care to furnish him a reasonably safe place in which to work. The risk that the servant assumes does not embrace or include risks that are brought about by the failure of the master to perform his duty. This case furnishes a good illustration of this exception of the doctrine of assumption of risk. Here the servant was injured by the failure of the master to exercise ordinary care to furnish him a reasonably safe place in which to work, and when the servant, in the performance of his duty, was injured by the failure of the master in this respect, it is no defense for the master to say that, "although I was negligent and the breach of duty I committed resulted in the injury, nevertheless, you took the risk of nonperformance of duty on my part, and therefore cannot recover."

We have said in more than one case that the doctrine of assumed risk should be sparingly applied, and in this case it has no place at all.

[3] Nor was the appellee guilty of such contributory neglect as would defeat a recovery. It is true he was an experienced miner, but he had never worked in a shaft mine until he accepted employment from appellant two days before he was injured, and, except for the slight knowledge of the manner in which the elevators were operated acquired by his use of the elevators four times during these two days, he had no knowledge gained from experience concerning the danger attending the operation of the elevators of the danger attending the act of passing through the elevator shaft when one of the elevators was not fully down. When he started through the elevator shaft and did not find either of the elevators there, he probably knew that one of them would be down in a short time; just when he had no means of knowing. He also, of course, knew that, if he was caught by the descending elevator, it would cost him his life or cripple him severely. But this knowledge and his failure to wait until the elevator came down did not as a matter of law defeat his right to a recovery. He testified that, when he was ordered by the foreman to go to another part of the mine, obedience to the order made it necessary that he should pass through the elevator shaft, and that when he got to the shaft, and did not see any elevator there, he looked up the shaft, but did not see the descending elevator, nor did he hear it coming, and started through, and was caught, as before stated.

It is argued by counsel for appellant that appellee should have taken particular pains to find out where the elevator was, and should have exercised a high degree of care to protect himself from injury by it, as he must have known in a short time at least it would come down. He was not, however, under the circumstances, required to exercise more than ordinary care for his own safety, and the question as to whether he exercised the degree of care necessary to excuse him from such negligence as would defeat a recovery was properly submitted to the jury, and the jury in finding a verdict in his behalf must have believed that he exercised the measure of care required of him.

[4] It is also complained that the court committed error in adding to the instruction telling the jury that it was the duty of the appellant to use ordinary care to furnish appellee a reasonably safe place to work the words, "And a reasonably safe way to pass to and from his work while inside the mine, considering the circumstances, place and character of work to be done." We do not think the criticism of this instruction is well taken. It was as much the duty of appellant to exercise care to furnish appellee a reasonably safe way to go to and from his work while inside the mine as it was to exercise care to furnish him a reasonably safe place in which to work. The duty of appellant to exercise ordinary care to furnish appellee a reasonably safe place was not confined to the precise spot in which he worked, but included the places to and from which he might be required to go in performing his duties.

[5, 6] The further error is assigned that the court permitted counsel for appellee to prove that a passway had been constructed around the elevator shaft after the accident to appellee occurred. The admission of this evidence was error, but not prejudicial under the facts of this case.

[7] The ground upon which subsequent improvements or repairs is excluded is that this evidence does not establish that the wrongdoer was guilty of negligence before the accident happened. Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Morton, 121 Ky. 398, 89 S. W. 243, 28 Ky. Law Rep. 355. But in this case the uncontradicted evidence shows that it was negligence not to have a passway, and so evidence that appellant made a passway after the accident could not have prejudiced its rights, as in making the passway it only did what all the witnesses said should have been done before the accident.

Upon the whole case we think the appellant had a fair trial, and the judgment is affirmed.

GROSS et al. v. COMMONWEALTH.

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 369*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where two persons were killed at practically the same instant by the same persons, and possibly by the same shot, the court, on the trial of accused for the murder of one of such persons, properly admitted in evidence the murder of the other to show the whole transaction.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 823*)—INSTRUCTIONS—SELF-DEFENSE.

The error in an instruction defining murder and aiding and abetting, arising from the failure to give defendant firing the fatal shot the benefit of the plea of self-defense, but only giving to him the right to defend his codefendants, is cured by an instruction defining the right of self-defense and giving each of defendants the full benefit thereof.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Perry County. Ned Gross and others were convicted of manslaughter, and they appeal. Affirmed.

John O. Eversole, of Booneville, and F. J. Eversole, John B. Eversole, Wootton & Morgan, and E. C. Wootton, all of Hazard, for appellants. James Garnett, Atty. Gen., and O. S. Hogan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth.

TURNER, J. The 15th of February, 1912, was fixed as the time for the trial, at Buckhorn, in Perry County, before the police judge, of Willie and Andrew Johnson, charged with some misdemeanor growing out of reprehensible conduct the Sunday night before at the church in that town. An attempt was made at the time to arrest them; but they resisted and escaped. The four appellants, Ned and Jordon Gross, Steve Sandlin, and Charley Riley, were the chief witnesses against the two boys upon the charge aforesaid. It appears that prior to this time there had been some hostile feeling between some of the appellants and Levi Johnson, an uncle of the two boys; and it is manifest that the feeling was aggravated by the occurrence at the church. On the morning of the 15th of February, Levi Johnson, John Davidson, Thomas Deaton, Joe Smith, and the two boys, Willie and Andrew Johnson, went to Buckhorn from the home of Granville Johnson about two miles distant, for the purpose of attending the trial; but when they reached there they ascertained that Granville

Johnson, who had preceded them, had already succeeded in having the police judge continue the trial to another day. They proceeded to the home of the police judge, where they remained a while, and from there to the home of Levi Johnson, who lived in another part of the town. It appears that the six, all of whom were related in one way or another, remained together, or practically so, the whole day; and it further appears that the two Grosses and Sandlin, who were also related, and the appellant Riley, their associate, had frequent conferences during the day, and remained together most of the time. It is manifest from the whole record that both parties expected trouble during the day; and it is equally plain that neither party took any great precaution to avoid it. After having taken dinner at Levi Johnson's, the Johnson party started back to Granville Johnson's; Levi Johnson and John Davidson riding the same horse. The two Grosses and Riley were standing in front of a store near the post office, and Sandlin was at his residence, a short distance away. After the Johnson party left the post office, where they had stopped a short time, some words passed between John Davidson and one of the Grosses; and thereupon the two Grosses hastily repaired to a coalhouse near the residence of Sandlin, and the shooting began. The evidence is conflicting, both as to who began the wordy altercation and as to who fired the opening shots; but it is manifest that the appellants were well prepared for the difficulty, as it appears that the two Grosses each had their pistols, and that Sandlin had his shotgun conveniently near in his home, loaded with buckshot, and that Riley had that day brought his gun from his home, and had it in the Sandlin residence. After the firing of the first two or more shots with the pistols, Sandlin, through a window in his house, fired two shots with his double-barreled shotgun, and subsequently there was a general firing from both sides. Levi Johnson and John Davidson were each shot several times, and lived only a few minutes. The appellants, at the March term of the Perry circuit court, were all four indicted, charged with the murder of Levi Johnson, in one count, and in another Ned Gross and Steve Sandlin were charged with his murder, and Jordon Gross and Charley Riley with being present and aiding and abetting in the same. They were each found guilty of manslaughter, on a joint trial, and all appeal.

[1] They complain that the lower court permitted the commonwealth throughout the trial to keep before the mind of the jury, by the introduction of its evidence, the fact that John Davidson had also been shot and killed by one or more of appellants, although the appellants were only on trial for the killing of Levi Johnson, and insist that it was prejudicial error to permit evidence of the commission of one crime to go before the jury when the defendants were on trial for another. In a proper case the point would be well taken; but it appears here that the two men, Johnson and Davidson, were killed at practically the same instant; that they were riding the same horse; that they were killed by the same party, or parties, and possibly even by the same shot. We cannot see how, in any practical way, the court could have avoided keeping from the attention of the jury at all stages of the trial the fact that some one or more of the appellants had killed John Davidson as well as Levi Johnson. It would have been impossible, in fact, to have introduced the evidence before the jury in such way as to enlighten them as to the whole transaction, without continually keeping before them the patent fact that John Davidson was killed at the same time, and practically under the same circumstances, as Levi Johnson. Miracle v. Commonwealth, 148 Ky. 453, 148 S. W. 1136.

[2] The first instruction is the one defining murder, and the second deals with the aiding and abetting feature. It is complained of both of these instructions that they do not give the defendant who actually fired the fatal shot the benefit of the plea of self-defense, but only give to him the right to defend his codefendants. And this is true; but in the third instruction this error is cured, as that instruction is a well and carefully drawn definition of the right of self-defense, and gives each of the appellants the full benefit thereof.

A careful reading of the record is most convincing that appellants have each had a fair and impartial trial.

Judgment affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Common Pleas Branch, Second Division.

Action by Barbara Samuels against the Louisville Railway Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Popham, Trusty & Roose, of Louisville, for appellant. Fairleigh, Straus & Fairleigh and Howard B. Lee, all of Louisville, for appellee.

CLAY, C. Plaintiff, Barbara Samuels, brought this action against defendant, Louisville Railway Company, to recover damages for personal injuries. She charged in her petition that on or about October 30, 1910, she desired to become a passenger on a car of the defendant company at Fourth and N streets in the city of Louisville; that defendant stopped its car at said point for said purpose, whereupon she attempted to board same while the same was at rest, when defendant and its agents in charge of said car, with gross negligence, while she was in a place of peril, and before she had been given a reasonable opportunity to fully board and enter said car, did then and there cause and permit said car to violently start forward with an unusual and violent lurch, whereby she was thrown against portions of the car with great force, and permanently injured in her limbs, body, and back, and in her internal regions and nervous system, and causing her great mental and physical suffering, and permanently impairing her earning power, to her damage in the sum of $5,000. Defendant's answer contained a traverse and a plea of contributory negligence. The jury returned a verdict in favor of defendant. Judgment was entered accordingly, and plaintiff appeals.

Plaintiff testifies that she was standing at Fourth and N streets when the car stopped. She had just gotten on the platform when the car gave a surge, and she fell and struck her side on the back rail. The car started with an unusual jerk. When the car started, she was right at the edge of the platform where she got up. When she fell, her side hurt her so badly she could not get her breath. After the accident she suffered a great deal. She first went to see Dr. Coleman, who examined her and told her to return. She did not go to see him again. She afterwards went to see Dr. Gatz, who applied some adhesive plasters to the place where she was hurt. Since the accident she had been unable to do her work well. She could not walk upstairs as she had done previous to the accident, but had to hold to the steps. Her side still hurt her a good deal when she was walking around and doing her work.

Mrs. Annie Eskridge, a neighbor who lived just across the street from plaintiff, was with plaintiff at the time of the accident. She testifies that they had a baby with them, a great-grandchild of plaintiff. She put the baby on first. Plaintiff then started to board the car. Fearing the baby would fall, Mrs. Eskridge got on the car in front of plaintiff. When Mrs. Eskridge reached the center of the platform, the car gave a sudden jerk, which would have thrown her had she not caught the railing. Plaintiff was thrown against the rail of the car. When they returned to plaintiff's home, witness discovered a ridge along plaintiff's side about three inches long, which was swollen and bruised. Nearly every night during the winter, she waited on plaintiff, applying liniments to the bruised parts and rubbing them. Before the accident plaintiff had no difficulty in moving around. During the winter plaintiff was not able to get out and do her work. At the time witness testified, plaintiff had improved, though she was not able to do her work well then.

J. F. Williams, who appeared at the courthouse on the morning of the trial and who had never talked to any one regarding the case, testified that he was on the corner of Fourth and N streets at the time plaintiff was injured. Saw plaintiff getting on the car, when the car started, causing plaintiff to fall and hit her side. Did not think plaintiff had time to get into the car. She had just reached the top step when the car started. Could not say whether the car started with an unusual jerk or not.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes.

Dr. Gatz testified that he was called to attend plaintiff on November 7, 1910. Found very little objective evidence of injury. Plaintiff complained of suffering pain in her back and left side. He prescribed several different liniments for her. Her symptoms were mostly subjective. Upon his last visit, plaintiff's suffering was not as great as it had been before.

For the defendant, Mr. Funk, its general superintendent, testified that he knew nothing of the accident until the suit was filed. He then caused an investigation to be made, and every employé on the line questioned, but was unable to secure any information in regard to the alleged accident. Later, he caused plaintiff's deposition to be taken, and then made another investigation, but was unable to learn anything in regard to any injury to plaintiff at the time and place complained of.

Dr. W. H. Coleman testified that he was consulted by plaintiff on November 4, 1910. Plaintiff complained of soreness between the hips and ribs. The memorandum he took at the time shows, "No abrasion of the skin at all." There was no evidence of injury except her statement that she was suffering. Her condition was normal as to pulse and in other respects.

[1, 2] It is first insisted that, inasmuch as plaintiff made out her case by uncontroverted testimony, the court erred in refusing a peremptory instruction to find for her. While it is true that plaintiff and Mrs. Eskridge say that the car was started with an unusual jerk, J. M. Williams, who claims to have been present and to have seen plaintiff board the car, testifies that he could not say that the car was started with an unusual jerk. In view of this fact, and of the further fact that plaintiff and her chief witness failed to remember certain things which witnesses similarly situated would ordinarily remember, and in view of the fact that the physicians were unable to find any objective symptoms of injury, we conclude that the question whether or not the car was started with an unusual jerk, and whether or not plaintiff was injured was properly submitted to the jury. In a case very similar to this the court held that the jury, in weighing the testimony of the witness, may consider his demeanor and appearance, and from these and other circumstances may conclude that the witness is not worthy of credit, and disregard his testimony. Howard v. Louisville Railway Co., 105 S. W. 932, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 309.

It is next insisted that instruction No. 1 given by the court did not properly present the law of the case. This instruction is as follows: "If you believe from the evidence in this case that the plaintiff, Barbara Samuels, while the defendant's car was standing at Fourth and N streets at the time in regard to which you have heard testimony, attempted to board the same, it became the duty of the agents and employes of the defendant, Louisville Railway Company, to exercise the highest degree of care to enable her to board the car in safety, and if you believe from the evidence in this case while she was in the act of boarding the car, and before she got to a place of safety upon the car, those in charge of the car started the car suddenly and with an unusual jerk, and she was thrown thereby against the car or any part of it and injured thereby, the law of the case is for the plaintiff and you should so find. But unless you believe from the evidence that while the car was standing she was in the act of boarding the car, and before she got to a place of safety upon the car those in charge of the car negligently suddenly started the car forward with an unusual jerk, and she was thereby thrown against the car and injured, the law of the case is for the defendant, and you should so find."

[3] The particular complaint of this instruction is that plaintiff was entitled to a reasonable opportunity to board the car, and that if the defendant failed to give her a reasonable opportunity to board the car she was entitled to a recovery, whether the car was started by a usual or an unusual jerk, while the instruction authorized a recovery only in the event that there was a sudden and unusual jerk. The principle of law contended for by plaintiff is correct. If a car be moved while a passenger is upon the steps of the car, and before he has had a reasonable opportunity to reach the platform, and he is thereby injured, he is entitled to recover, whether the car is moved by an ordinary and usual or an unusual and unnecessary jerk. The negligence consists in the mere act of moving the car before the passenger has had a reasonable opportunity to board it. L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Arnold, 102 S. W. 322, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 414; C. & O. Ry. Co. v. Borders, 140 Ky. 548, 131 S. W. 388, 140 Am. St. Rep. 396. On the other hand, where the passenger has had an opportunity to reach the platform of the car, the company is not liable unless the car is started with an unusual jerk, except in those cases where the passenger is old, feeble, crippled, or in a condition which makes it reasonably apparent to those in charge of the car that he needs unusual care and precaution for his protection. Lexington Railway Co. v. Britton, 130 Ky. 676, 114 S. W. 295; I. C. R. R. Co. v. Ball, 150 Ky. 531, 150 S. W. 668.

[4] If therefore plaintiff had pleaded that the car was started before she had a reasonable opportunity to board the same, or had pleaded facts showing that she was entitled to unusual care and precaution, her complaint of the instruction would be well founded. Such, however, is not the case. She alleges that she was injured "before she had been given a reasonable opportunity to fully board and enter said car."

[5] Under the rule that a pleading must be construed most strongly against the pleader, this was simply an allegation that she was injured before she had been given an opportunity to enter the car. We therefore conclude that the instruction complained of is not erroneous when considered in the light of the averments of the petition and the evidence introduced by plaintiff.

[8, 7] Complaint is made because the court gave an instruction on contributory negligence. While it is true that there is no evidence tending to show that plaintiff was negligent while getting on the car, and an instruction on contributory negligence should not therefore be given, it is apparent that the verdict of the jury was not rested on this instruction. That being true, we conclude that the giving of the instruction was not prejudicial to plaintiff's substantial rights. Shellman v. Louisville Railway Co., 147 Ky. 529, 144 S. W. 1060; Louisville Railway Co. v. Byer's Adm'r, 130 Ky. 442, 113 S. W. 463; C. & O. Ry. Co. v. Ward's Adm'r, 145 Ky. 736, 141 S. W. 72; Bennett v. Louisville Railway Co., 122 Ky. 61, 90 S. Appeal from Circuit Court, Lawrence County.

Action by Goldie Hall and others against John Bartram's administrator and others. From a judgment dismissing the petition, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

H. C. Sullivan and Stewart & Vinson, all of Louisa, for appellants. M. S. Burns, of Louisa, for appellees.

LASSING, J. Samuel Frazier, a resident of Lawrence county, Ky., died some time prior to September, 1896, the owner of a small landed estate in said county. He left surviving him a widow and nine children. After his death one Peter Cline, who had years before procured a judgment against Samuel Frazier, instituted a suit in equity against his widow and heirs at law, in which he sought to have the land sold in satisfaction of his debt. Such proceedings were had that at the September, 1896, term of the Lawrence circuit court, a judgment was rendered adjudging to plaintiff a lien upon the land, and directing that it be sold in satisfaction of plaintiff's debt, subject to the right of the widow to a homestead therein. Commissioners were appointed to set apart to the widow a homestead. This was done, and the balance of the land was sold. The lands remaining after the homestead was set apart failed to bring a sum sufficient to satisfy plaintiff's debt, interest, and costs, and thereafter the court directed a sale of the homestead tract, subject to the widow's right of occupancy during her life; and in pursuance of this order of court the homestead tract was sold. These lands were purchased by one Lark Maynard, who afterwards assigned a two-thirds interest in his bid and purchase of each tract to John Bartram, and the remaining one-third interest to Elijah Maynard. John Bartram, by assignment, later became the owner of this one-third interest. The widow remained in possession of the homestead tract until her death, about the year 1908. There were living with her at the time of her death her son-in-law, Odd Hall, and his children. When the purchasers, W. H. and John Bartram, demanded possession of the homestead tract, Hall and his children declined to vacate, and they, together with certain others of the children of Samuel Frazier, set up claim to the land, alleging that the purchase of same by W. H. and John Bartram was made pursuant to an arrangement entered into by W. H. Bartram with the heirs at law of Samuel Frazier, deceased, whereby the said W. H. Bartram was to purchase the land, sold at commissioner's sale, and hold it for their benefit. They thereafter tendered to W. H. and John Bartram the money which they paid for said lands, with interest. This the said W. H. and John Bartram declined to accept. Thereupon Odd Hall, as next friend for his children, instituted a suit against W. H. and John Bartram and certain of the heirs at law of Samuel Frazier, whom he made defendants, and sought to have the purchase made by the Bartrams declared to be for the benefit of his children and the other heirs at law of Samuel Frazier, deceased. John Bartram in his answer alleged that he purchased the land for the benefit and protection of W. H. Bartram, and that he had no personal interest in the transaction. W. H. Bartram alleged in his pleading that, after the death of Samuel Frazier, he purchased the interest of six of the heirs of Samuel Frazier in their father's estate, and took from them title bonds or contracts of sale for their said interest; that, after he had made these purchases, Peter Cline undertook to subject the landed estate of Samuel Frazier to the satisfaction of a judgment, which he had procured against the said Frazier many years before; that, when the court directed the land sold in satisfaction of this judgment, he was compelled to, and did, become a bidder upon the lands to the extent of his interest therein; and that, when Lark Maynard conveyed to him a two-thirds interest in his bid and purchase, this represented his six-ninths interest in the estate which he had bought from the heirs; and that the said Lark Maynard, in pursuance of an agreement and understanding had with the heirs prior to the sale, at the same time conveyed the remaining one-third of his purchase, representing the interest of the three remaining heirs, which he had not bought, to Elijah Maynard. He denied that he had made any arrangement or agreement with the heirs, or any of them, whereby the purchase which he made was to inure to their benefit, or that the land was to be held by him for their benefit, with the understanding that he was to be repaid the purchase price, with interest. Upon this issue proof was taken and the case submitted for judgment. Upon consideration, the chancellor was of opinion that the plaintiffs had failed to show the existence of any trust arrangement between themselves and W. H. Bartram, and he thereupon entered a judgment dismissing their petition. The plaintiffs appeal, and seek a reversal of the finding of the chancellor.

The entire record of the suit of Cline against the heirs and creditors of Samuel Frazier, deceased, is copied into and made a part of this record. From an examination of that record it appears that in the exceptions filed to the report of sale by W. H. Bartram he alleged that he was the owner by purchase of six interests in the estate of Samuel Frazier, and in said pleading he set out the names of the heirs whose interests he had purchased. All of these heirs were at the time parties to the suit. So that it cannot be said that the claim now asserted by W. H. Bartram is the result of an afterthought. By this pleading it is clearly shown that, before the reports of sale were confirmed or deeds made, he was asserting title to six-ninths of this land, under and by virtue of his purchase, from the heirs themselves. The record further shows that, although he had possession of and held all of the land except the homestead interest from the time of his purchase until after the death of the widow, no claim of ownership was ever asserted by any of the heirs at law of Samuel Frazier; nor was there any evidence whatever to the effect that at any time from 1897, when this land was openly and publicly sold to W. H. Bartram, through his agent, did any of the heirs at law of Samuel Frazier offer to repay to him the purchase price, with interest, or any part thereof, or do or say anything in the least indicative of a claim or recognition of a right on the part of any of the heirs of Samuel Frazier, deceased, to any interest in this property. He recognized from the date of his purchase only the right of the widow to a homestead interest in so much of the farm as the commissioners, appointed by the court for that purpose, set apart to her. He and his brother testify emphatically that there was no arrangement or agreement between him and the heirs, or any of them, whereby he was to become a bidder at the decretal sale of the land for their benefit. There are some facts and circumstances brought out in the evidence which tend to support the contention of appellants. The chief of these is a writing, signed by Lark Maynard either just before or immediately after he bid in this land. Said writing is as follows: "It is hereby understood that in the sale of the Frazier lands each heir shall pay Lark Maynard his part of ($376.00) three hundred and seventy-six dollars as it comes due, this Amt. being against Samuel Frazier's estate, there being nine shares estate. Feb. 15, 1897. [Signed] Lark Maynard."

Now, it is insisted that, inasmuch as this writing was prepared under the supervision of W. H. Bartram, it was a recognition on his part that the land, when bid in by Maynard acting as his agent, was to be held by him for the benefit of the nine children. Said writing is susceptible of said construction, but, on the other hand, it is likewise susceptible of a construction entirely harmonious with the theory of appellees. At that time there were nine heirs. Six had sold their interest to their uncle, W. H. Bartram. The other three had not disposed of their interest. Bartram was not proposing to buy, except to protect himself. Maynard was to bid in the property and execute bond for the purchase price; and the purpose of this agreement was to show that in bidding Maynard was not acting for himself, but for some one else. Bartram stood in the place of and represented six of the heirs, and, of course, stood answerable or responsible to Maynard for six-ninths of the purchase price, and the other three heirs were responsible, each for his one-ninth. Evidently this latter arrangement was carried out, for Maynard thereafter transferred one-third of his bid and purchase to Elijah Maynard, who had married one of the Frazier girls, and had paid to Lark Maynard the one-ninth interest representing his wife's portion, and the interest of the other two children, who had not sold to W. H. Bartram. Now, if, as contended by appellants, W. H. Bartram had entered into an arrangement with his nephew and nieces whereby he was to purchase and hold this land, as trustee for them, we are at a loss to understand why he took title to only two-thirds, and left three of the heirs to arrange for themselves. Such conduct is inconsistent with the theory advanced by appellants.

When all of the facts and circumstances are considered in connection with the conduct of the parties during the more than ten years following the sale of this land, we are of opinion that the chancellor was justified in holding that the purchase made by appellees was for their own benefit, and that no trust arrangement or agreement existed between them and any of the heirs at law of Samuel Frazier, deceased.

Judgment affirmed.

SMITH v. SCOTT'S EX'R.

1. WILLS (§ 88*)—INEFFECTIVE DEED.

Where a testator attempted to divide his property during his life, and executed instruments, using the common terms of conveyancing and containing granting and habendum clauses, but did not acknowledge these instruments or deliver them, and they were treated by his children as ineffectual deeds, they must be accepted as deeds ineffectual to pass any interest because not acknowledged or delivered, for an instrument is not a will if it attempts to pass an interest in the life of the maker and is operative before his death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 208-217; Dec. Dig. § 88.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 138*)—CONSTRUCTION—POWERS OF EXECUTOR.

Where testator's will recited that he desired his executor to sell his home place and invest the proceeds in good interest-bearing bonds or real estate notes, and that he empowered him to execute a deed for the sale of such real estate, the executor had ample power to sell and to convey title to a purchaser.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Simpson County.

Action by Lewis D. Scott's executor against D. W. C. Smith. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

L. B. Finn, of Franklin, for appellant. Roark & Finn and G. T. Finn, all of Franklin, for appellee.

LASSING, J. Lewis D. Scott died testate, a resident of Simpson county, Ky., the owner of certain real estate. By his will, which was duly probated, he directed his executor to sell said real estate. In pursuance of said authority, Dave Scott, whom he named as executor, sold the land to D. W. C. Smith and tendered him a general warranty deed therefor. Conceiving that there was a defect in the title, Smith declined to accept the deed. Thereupon the executor instituted a suit to compel him to do so.

[1] The defendant by way of defense, while admitting that the title to said property was perfect in the decedent, pleaded that the decedent in his lifetime had executed a writing whereby he conveyed, or attempted to convey, the land in controversy to one of his children for life, with remainder to said child's children, if he had any living at his death, and, if not, then the land should revert to his estate; that, by reason of said writing, the executor had no power to convey and pass title to the fee to said land; and that he should not, on this account, be required to accept the deed so tendered to him. In his reply, the executor admitted that the decedent, in his lifetime, attempted to divide his landed estate among his children, and convey to each the portion thereof which he desired him to have; that he, in furtherance of this desire, executed and delivered to one of his children, a daughter, a deed to one portion of his land; but that, although he prepared deeds to his two sons, they were never acknowledged by him or delivered to his sons; and that he died while they were in this condition. He pleaded further that the children and heirs at law of said decedent had never attempted to take or hold the lands under said incomplete writings; and that they were not then laying claim to said lands in any manner, except under and by virtue of the will of decedent, which had been probated and under which the executor had made the sale. The incomplete deeds had been filed in a suit between the two sons and their sister, in which they attempted to have the deed made to her by their father set aside. The record in that suit was searched for said papers, but they had been lost or misplaced; and, there being no copies extant, neither the original papers nor copies could be filed with the record in this case. From the evidence heard, it is clear that these writings were intended as deeds. The draftsman, in the preparation, had used language in the caption, granting, and habendum clauses, commonly used in conveyancing, and, while the papers were each signed by decedent, they were never acknowledged or delivered, and at his death were found at his home among his private papers. Since the said papers were neither acknowledged nor delivered, they cannot operate as deeds; and, unless they can be treated as wills, they cannot be regarded as having any binding force or effect.

In Ward v. Ward, 104 Ky. 857, 48 S. W. 411, 20 Ky. Law Rep. 986, the distinguishing characteristic between a will and a deed is pointed out to be that, in a deed some estate vests in the grantee during the life of the grantor, whereas under a will no estate is granted or vests until after the death of the testator. In Eckler v. Robinson, 96 S. W. 845, 29 Ky. Law Rep. 1038, the court, speaking through Chief Justice Hobson, said: "The rule is that, if a paper passes no interest in the lifetime of the maker, whatever may be its form, if it is operative only upon his death, it is a will and to be effective must be probated. On the other hand, the object of all construction is to arrive at the intention of the parties and their intention, where it is apparent on the face of the papers, will be carried into effect if it can be fairly done under its terms." Accepting then, the intention of the decedent, at the time these writings were drawn, as a guide in determining their character, we are constrained to hold that they were intended by him as deeds and not as wills. After his death, his children viewed them in the same light, for they never probated, or offered to probate, them. Being incomplete as deeds, they are of no binding force or effect whatever.

[2] The only remaining question is, Does the language used by the testator confer upon the executor power to sell and convey his real estate? Upon this point the will provides: "I desire that my executor hereinafter appointed sell the home place [this is the land in question] located north of Franklin, Ky., on the Louisville and Nashville pike and invest the proceeds in good interest bearing bonds or real estate notes. * * * I hereby appoint my brother Dave Scott as my executor empowering him to execute deed to the sale of the real estate mentioned above and to act without bond." This is an unqualified direction, first, that his executor shall make a sale of this land; and, second, that, having made the sale, he shall convey the land. Authority could not have been given in any more direct, positive, or unambiguous terms. The chancellor correctly held that the executor was empowered to make the sale and by deed convey or pass the title to his purchaser. We are further of the opinion that the deed tendered by the executor passed the fee-simple title to the land; and, appellant having failed to show any good reason why he should not accept the deed and pay for the land, the chancellor did not err in requiring him to do so.

Judgment affirmed.

SUNDAY (§ 19*)—INJURIES TO PROPERTY—VOID CONTRACT.

Though a contract hiring a horse for a pleasure drive on Sunday may have been void under Ky. St. § 1321, the owners of a horse would not thereby be precluded from maintaining an action of tort for the death of the horse from the negligent manner in which it was driven after the defendant secured possession of it.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Nelson County.

Action by Hinkel & Edelen against T. Pruitt. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded.

W. H. Fulton and Geo. S. & Jno. A. Fulton, all of Bardstown, for appellants. Nat W. Halstead and Sam W. Eskew, both of Bardstown, for appellee.

HOBSON, C. J. Hinkel and Edelen own a livery stable in Bardstown. They brought this suit against T. Pruitt to recover for the loss of a horse. The material allegations of the petition are these:

"On the ——— day of September, 1911, at the special instance and request of defendant, T. Pruitt, they hired him a horse and buggy with the understanding and agreement that he would drive said horse not more than 10 or 12 miles, but they say that said defendant, not observing said agreement, but in violation thereof, drove said horse some 34 miles or more, and so carelessly and neglectfully drove said horse as to cause same to die from said reckless and neglectful driving about one-half hour after his return to plaintiffs' stable from said drive, and plaintiffs say that the death of said horse was due to the fast and long and hard drive so recklessly and negligently made and done by the defendant, and said horse was of the value of two hundred dollars ($200), and plaintiffs have been damaged in the sum of $200 by defendant's reckless and negligent acts in the premises." The defendant filed an answer in which he denied the allegations of the petition. Afterwards he filed an amended answer as follows: "Defendant avers that he hired said horse and buggy and said horse sued for herein and mentioned and described in the petition herein on the 3d day of September, 1911; that said 3d day of September, 1911, was a Sabbath day, usually known as Sunday, and that the only contract, understanding, or agreement which he had with the plaintiffs with reference to said horse and buggy was had, made, and done on said Sabbath day, the 3d day of September, 1911, and that he hired said horse and buggy from plaintiffs on said Sabbath day, and used said horse and buggy on said Sabbath day only, and returned it to the plaintiffs on said Sabbath day. He says that said entire transaction was made, had, and done on the Sabbath day, and that the contract made and entered into by and between the plaintiffs and this defendant with reference to the hiring of said horse was all made on said Sabbath day, or Sunday, and that at the time said defendant hired said horse and buggy from the plaintiffs that he notified said Edelen from whom he hired said horse and buggy that he was hiring said horse simply for a pleasure drive, and not as a matter of necessity at all, and the plaintiff Edelen well knew that the purpose for which this defendant was hiring said horse and buggy was a matter of a pleasure drive on said Sunday afternoon. And he says that said plaintiffs hired said horse and buggy to this defendant simply for a pleasure drive, and same was to be used by defendant for a pleasure drive, and not in a case of, or for any matter of, necessity at all, and all of this the plaintiffs well knew at the time they hired the said horse and buggy to this defendant, and know same now." The plaintiffs demurred to the amended answer. The court overruled the demurrer, and, the plaintiffs standing upon their demurrer, their petition was dismissed. They appeal.

Section 1321, Ky. St., among other things, provides: "No work or business shall be done on the Sabbath day, except the ordinary household offices, or other work of necessity or charity, or work required in the maintenance or operation of a ferry, skiff or steamboat, or steam or street railroads." Under this statute, it has been held that contracts made on Sunday are void, and that no action can be maintained thereon. Slade v. Arnold, 14 B. Mon. 287; Murphy v. Simpson, 14 B. Mon. 419. It is insisted for appellee that a pleasure ride not being a work of necessity or mercy, and the liveryman knowing at the time the purpose for which the horse was hired, the contract was void, and no action lies. But the case involves a tort committed subsequently to the making of the contract.

The gist of the plaintiffs' cause of action is the defendant's negligent driving of the horse. Their cause of action does not necessarily rest on the contract between them and the defendant. It rests on the tort which the defendant committed in abusing the horse after he got it in possession. The fact that he got the horse in possession on Sunday does not excuse him if while so in possession he by his negligence killed the horse. A man who has the possession of the property of another on Sunday is as much under obligation not to mistreat it as on any other day. If the defendant had gone to the plaintiffs' barn and taken the horse out without any contract with them, and so driven it as to kill it, he could not excuse himself on the ground that the wrong was done on Sunday. But he was as much bound to take reasonable care of the horse when he got it on Sunday under a void contract as he would be if he had so gotten it on any other day. The plaintiffs' consent for him to use the horse on Sunday simply gave him the rightful possession of the horse; but, though he was rightfully in possession, when he abused the horse, he committed a tort for which he is liable. In Newbury v. Luke, 68 N. J. Law, 189, 52 Atl. 625, the court in disposing of a case like this said: "In the present case the defendant argues that the plaintiff's right of action rests upon a contract of bailment made on Sunday, and, as that contract is void, the action must fail. The fallacy is exposed by reference to the fundamental maxim—'causa proxima, non remota, spectatur.' The Sunday hiring and the Sunday driving happened to furnish the conditions under which the death of the horse was occasioned. But its death was the direct and natural result of the overdriving and abuse, and of these alone. These causes would have produced the same result if they had occurred on any other day of the week, just as it would have produced it had they occurred without any contract of bailment whatever. It follows that the Sunday violation is as clearly nonessential upon the defendant's liability as are such questions as exact location of the occurrence, the day of day, the color of the horse, and the sex. But, if an inquiry into the contract of bailment were material, what is the result? If the contract falls, because made on Sunday. That destroys the defendant's right to drive the horse, but it certainly does not destroy the right to overdrive it. It vitiates the temporary right of use, but it does not destroy the permanent right of property. In so far as it leaves the defendant's liability upon the same basis as if the horse had been taken without the leave or license of the plaintiff. To same effect, see Nodine v. Doherty, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 59.

In Costello v. Ten Eyck, 86 Mich. 49 N. W. 152, 24 Am. St. Rep. 128, the defendant had taken the plaintiff's horse to graze, and the horse had died from being subjected to a disease by negligence of the defendant; but he insisted that he was liable for the death of the horse because the contract was made on Sunday. Regarding this contention, the court said: "Having taken the horse into his possession, though under a void contract, he yet owed a duty to the plaintiff to exercise some degree of care over it. He was bound to give the plaintiff notice of the disease, so that the plaintiff might have removed the property, or have taken some precaution himself, or have refused to put the horse in the pasturage there." In Merritt v. Earle, 29 N. Y. 86 Am. Dec. 292, the plaintiff delivered horses to a carrier on Sunday. The horses were lost. When sued, the carrier defended on the ground that the contract was made on Sunday. In answer to this contention the court said: "But it is not material whether the contract made was good or void. It was enough to entitle the plaintiff to recover, that the defendant, being a common carrier, had in his custody for transportation the plaintiff's property, and by his negligence or in violation of duty it was lost. It gave the plaintiff a right of action which was disconnected from the statute relating to the observance of Sunday. Allen v. Sewell, 2 Wend. [N. Y.] 328." In Hughes v. Atlantic Steel Co., 136 Ga. 511, 71 S. E. 728, 36 R. A. (N. S.) 547, Ann. Cas. 1912C, it was held that a servant who was working on Sunday in violation of law was injured by the incompetence of a fellow servant employed by the master also in violation of the Sunday statute, and the master relied on the statute in bar of a recovery. It was held that the servant could recover as the violation of Sunday law was not the efficient cause of the injury; and in a note thereto a number of other cases are collected, the courts have ing that it is no defense to a carrier that a passenger was traveling on Sunday in violation of law, or that the servant was employed in violation of the Sunday law. See, also, I. C. R. Co. v. Dick, 91 Ky. 434, 15 S. W. 665, 12 Ky. Law Rep. 772; Commonwealth v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 80 Ky. 291, 44 Am. Rep. 475.

We do not see that the case here can be distinguished from those cited. The carrier commits a tort when he suffers a passenger to be injured by his negligence or when he loses that which he undertakes to carry. The master commits a tort when by his negligence his servant is injured. In all these cases, although the contract was in violation of the Sunday law, a recovery has been allowed for the tort, and we do not see that a horse delivered to another under a contract of hiring or other bailment can on principle be distinguished. While there are not a few decisions holding otherwise, it seems to us that the rule above indicated is in keeping with the previous rulings of this court and rests upon sound principle. In Power v. Brooks, 7 Ky. Law. Rep. 204, it was said that, where a liveryman who hires a team to a customer on Sunday knows that the customer is hiring it only for a pleasure trip, there is a violation of the Sunday law, and the contract is void. The principle there laid down would apply if this were a suit on the contract of hiring to recover the price agreed to be paid for the use of the horse. But, if we leave out of view entirely the contract and the breach of it, there remains the fact that the defendant committed a tort by overdriving the horse, if he thus negligently brought about its death. The fact that the contract was void did not license him to abuse the horse with impunity, and, if he committed a tort by not taking reasonable care of the horse after he got it in his possession, he is liable.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

TAYLOR v. PURDY et al.

1. WILLS (§ 88*)—WHAT CONSTITUTES—DISTINGUISHED FROM "DEED."

Where an instrument contained the usual words of conveyance, having premises, habendum, tenendum, reddendum, condition, warranty, and covenants, and was not authenticated as a will, but was acknowledged as a deed, it must be accepted as a deed, the grant being in the present tense, for a will is an instrument which vests no present interest, but only appoints what is to be done after the death of the maker.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 208-217; Dec. Dig. § 88.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7463-7468; vol. 2, pp. 1919-1924; vol. 8, p. 7630.]

2. GIFTS (§ 18*)—"GIFT INTER VIVOS"—DELIVERY.

To constitute a gift inter vivos, there must be a delivery, either actual or symbolical.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. §§ 29-33; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3091-3093; vol. 8, p. 7671.]

3. GIFTS (§ 22*)—DELIVERY—REQUISITES.

A delivery to effectuate a gift must be according to the nature of the thing given; hence the gift of property, evidenced by a written instrument executed by the donor, is valid upon delivery of the instrument.

4. GIFTS (§ 49*)—DELIVERY—INSUFFICIENCY.

In an action involving title to personalty, evidence held to sufficiently establish the delivery of a deed of gift.

5. GIFTS (§ 47*)—DELIVERY—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where a deed of gift in favor of infant beneficiaries appeared in the possession of the trustee of the gift, its delivery will be presumed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. §§ 81-86; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

6. GIFTS (§ 4*)—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY—SUFFICIENCY.

Where a deed of gift conveyed all of the donor's estate, real and personal, the description was sufficiently definite to be valid and carried with it a note in favor of the donor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. §§ 3, 17; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Marion County.

Action by John Taylor against William S. Purdy and others. From a judgment dismissing the petition of plaintiff to subject certain land to execution, he appeals. Affirmed.

John McChord, of Lebanon, for appellant. W. H. Spragens and S. A. Russell, both of Lebanon, and C. C. Boldrick, guardian ad litem, of Lebanon, for appellees.

MILLER, J. At the September, 1909, term of the Marion circuit court, the appellant Taylor recovered a judgment against the appellee W. S. Purdy for $600; and at the January, 1910, term of the same court, Taylor recovered a further judgment against Purdy for $200. On February 4, 1911, Xerxes Purdy I, the father of W. S. Purdy, died intestate, leaving the appellee W. S. Purdy and Mrs. Bettie Thornton as his only children and heirs at law. On March 27, 1911, Taylor caused executions to issue upon his judgments, and levied them upon W. S. Purdy's supposed undivided half interest in a farm of 106 acres in Marion county, which had belonged to his father, Xerxes Purdy I. It developed, however, that on July 5, 1909, Xerxes I had conveyed his farm to his grandson, Xerxes II, for $2,000; the purchase price being evidenced by the note of Xerxes II, the purchaser, for that amount.

Furthermore, on May 28, 1910, Xerxes I had executed the following paper, known in the record as the deed of gift to wit: "Brad-fordsville, Ky., May 28, 1910. This deed of gift and conveyance, made and entered into this May 27th, 1910, by and between Xerxes Purdy, Sr., of Bradfordsville, Ky., party of the first part and Lucy Ann Purdy his wife of the 2nd part witnesseth: That the said X. Purdy, Sr., in consideration of the love and affection he bears his wife, has given and does by these presents give, grant and convey to the said Lucy Ann Purdy his wife, all the right, title and interest, now vested in him to any real estate, and all the personal estate of every kind whatever, which he now holds or may die possessed of, to have and to hold in fee simple during her natural life, and at her death to be divided equally between the children of W. S. Purdy and Mrs. Bettie Thornton, wife of Dr. Geo. Thornton, to be held in trust, and used and invested for the benefit and advantage of said children by their parents, the said W. S. Purdy and Mrs. Bettie Thornton, during the lifetime of said parents. Witness my hand this May 28th, 1910. X. Purdy, Sr." Both deeds were properly acknowledged before a notary public, and were recorded on April 8, 1911, more than two months after the death of Xerxes I. Taylor brought this action to set aside the deed to Xerxes II upon the ground that it was voluntary and had never been consummated by a delivery of the deed to the grantee, and to subject W. S. Purdy's interest in the farm to the payment of appellant's debt. The petition further alleged, in the alternative, that, if the deed to Xerxes II was valid, the deed of gift, which conveyed all the estate of Xerxes I to the children of W. S. Purdy and Mrs. Thornton, was not only procured by fraud and duress, and had never been delivered, but was ineffectual in law for any purpose, even should its delivery be conceded or established. The issue as to duress and undue influence has been abandoned, and the case has been tried here upon the issues raised as to the delivery of the two papers, and the legal effect of the deed of gift.

At the time the two deeds were executed, Lucy Ann Purdy, the wife of Xerxes I, was living. Mrs. Purdy died, however, on July 19, 1910, about seven months prior to the death of her husband. It is established by the proof, if not conceded, that the sale to Xerxes II was bona fide and for a fair price. He, however, paid nothing upon his purchase money note for $2,000, which was found among the papers of Xerxes I after his death. Appellant contends that the deed of gift of May 28, 1910, did not operate either to establish a trust in favor of W. S. Purdy and Mrs. Thornton and their children, or as a gift inter vivos, because neither the deed nor the note was ever delivered to either of them; and, since that paper was ineffectual for any purpose, one-half the estate of Xerxes I descended, under the statute, to his son W. S. Purdy, and is liable for appellant's debt. Appellant further contends that, if the deed of gift should be treated as having been delivered, and as sufficient to establish a gift, it was nevertheless testamentary in character, and, not having been executed as a will, it failed of operation for that reason, thereby causing the property to descend as above indicated. On the other hand, the appellees insist that the deed of gift contains a good declaration in trust, and that it was delivered by Xerxes I during his lifetime to W. S. Purdy, one of the beneficiaries under the deed. The circuit court took appellees' view of the case and dismissed the petition, and from that judgment Taylor prosecutes this appeal.

[1] As to the contention that the paper of May 28, 1910, is testamentary in character, rather than a deed, and must fail for want of proper execution under the statute, little need be said. The rule is that, if the instrument has no present operation, if it intended to vest no present interest, but only appoints what is to be done after the death of the maker, it is a testamentary instrument, and good only if made and proved as a will. Rawlings v. McRoberts, 95 Ky. 350, 25 S. W. 601, 15 Ky. Law Rep. 771; Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 602, 2 Sup. Ct. 415, 27 L. Ed. 500. In Rawlings v. McRoberts, supra, we said: "The contention of the appellants, who were the plaintiffs below, is that, although the document is couched in the form of a deed, and has the usual words of conveyance, yet it is, in fact, a testamentary disposition of the property described, and hence a will. They sue for the land sought to be conveyed to the appellees, because the writing, as a will, is not effective through lack of proper attestation under the statute. It is, of course, true that the form of the instrument is not conclusive of the intention of the maker of it, nevertheless, if the writing have all the requisites of a deed, it is a fact throwing light on the intention. Here we have grantor and grantee and the ordinary words operative of conveyance; we have the thing granted, the consideration expressed, the execution, including signing, attestation, and acknowledgment, delivery, acceptance, and registration. As Lord Coke would put it we have the premises, habendum, tenendum, redendum, condition, warranty, and covenants." See, also, Hunt v. Hunt, 119 Ky. 42, 82 S. W. 998, 26 Ky. Law Rep. 973, 68 L. R. A. 180, 7 Ann. Cas. 788.

The paper under consideration is in the form of and authenticated as a deed. It is not authenticated as a will, and in our opinion was never intended to operate as a will. On the contrary, as was pointed out in Rawlings v. McRoberts, supra, the words of the grant—those which are operative of conveyance—are in the present tense, and became effective immediately upon the delivery of the instrument; and, under the authorities above referred to, it must be treated as a deed.

[2] In order for personal property to pass

as a gift inter vivos, there must be a delivery of the property, either actual or symbolical. Payne v. Powell, 5 Bush, 249; Merritt v. Merritt's Ex'r, 9 Ky. Law Rep. 721; Rodemer v. Rettig, 114 Ky. 637, 71 S. W. 869, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 1474; Simmonds v. Simmonds, 133 Ky. 498, 118 S. W. 804; Forworthy v. Adams, 136 Ky. 403, 124 S. W. 381, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 808, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 327; Stark v. Kelley, 132 Ky. 376, 113 S. W. 498; Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 602, 2 Sup. Ct. 415, 27 L. Ed. 500.

[3] As to what will amount to a delivery, 20 Cyc. 1196, says: "Delivery, to be effectual, must be according to the nature and character of the thing given, and hence may be actual or constructive according to the circumstances. There must, however, be a parting by the donor with all present and future legal power and dominion over the property. The general rule is that a gift of property, evidenced by a written instrument executed by the donor, is valid without a manual delivery of the property. However, there must be a delivery of the instrument declaring the gift in order to make such gift valid."

The above rule is, in effect, approved in Bunnell v. Bunnell, 111 Ky. 566, 64 S. W. 420, 65 S. W. 607, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 800, 1101. So much of the opinion in Payne v. Powell, 5 Bush, 252, as declares that a transfer of personal property by writing alone will not satisfy the requirements of delivery was unnecessary to the decision of that case, as was explained in Rodemer v. Rettig, 114 Ky. 637, 71 S. W. 869, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 1474. If, therefore, the deed of gift was delivered by the grantor, the case comes directly within the rule above announced.

[4, 5] Upon the issue of delivery, the evidence is brief. It appears from the testimony of Reynlerson, the notary who took the acknowledgement to the deed of gift, that he carried it to his office for the purpose of writing out his certificate, and then delivered the deed to W. S. Purdy, one of the trustees named therein. There is no other testimony upon this point; and, in the absence of any testimony explaining or attacking the delivery thus made by Reynlerson, we must assume that he acted properly and at the direction of the grantor. Moreover, the deed appearing in the possession of the trustee, a presumption of its delivery will be indulged on behalf of the infant beneficiaries. The delivery having thus been shown, the deed operated as a gift inter vivos.

[6] Appellant contends, however, that the description of the property conveyed is too indefinite to embrace the note of Xerxes II for $2,000. We do not attach much importance to this suggestion. In Graham v. Botner, 18 Ky. Law Rep. 638, 37 S. W. 583, George Nellman conveyed to his sister by deed "all his property, real and personal"; and, in answer to the argument that the description of the property was too indefinite and uncertain to pass anything, the court said: "The description of the property conveyed enables those who claim under it, as against George and his heirs, to identify it. It affords a means of identification; and, if George Nellman was living, he could neither assail the deed on the ground of fraud, nor would he be permitted to say that, when he conveyed all his estate, real and personal, it was so indefinite as to render the conveyance void, for it could be shown by proof allunde what estate he had when the writing was delivered. Pond v. Bergh, 10 Paige [N. Y.] 140; Wilson v. Boyce, 92 U. S. 320 [23 L. Ed. 608]; [Parker v. Teas], 79 Ind. 235; [McCasland v. Aetna Life Ins. Co.] 108 Ind. 130 [9 N. E. 119]."

The deed under consideration is as broad in its terms as the deed in Graham v. Botner, supra. It conveyed all of the grantor's right, title, and interest in any real estate, and all the personal estate of every kind, which he then had, or might have, at the time of his death, to his wife, Lucy Ann Purdy, for life, and at her death it was to be divided equally between the children of W. S. Purdy and Bettie Thornton, for whose use and benefit it was to be held during the lifetime of their parents.

We are of opinion that the deed of May 28, 1910, operated as a gift inter vivos; and, that being true, it is unnecessary to consider whether it created a valid trust.

The judgment of the circuit court was right, and it is affirmed.

THOMAS' ADM'R v. EMINENCE DISTILLING CO.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 4, 1912.)

1. DEATH (§ 76*)—CAUSE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for a boy's death claimed to have been caused by fever and spinal meningitis, resulting from water negligently polluted by defendant distilling company, evidence held not to show that the polluted water proximately caused the boy's death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. § 94; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

2. DEATH (§ 76*)—EVIDENCE—CAUSE OF DEATH.

It must appear, beyond a mere possibility or a bare probability, that the alleged negligence caused decedent's death in order to recover.

3. EVIDENCE (§ 596*)—SUFFICIENCY.

Plaintiff must establish his cause of action by evidence which does more than support a mere guess as to the existence of the facts establishing liability.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2446-2448; Dec. Dig. § 596.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Henry County.
Action by Richard Thomas' administrator against the Eminence Distilling Company.

From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. O. Jackson, of New Castle, and Clore, Dickerson & Clayton, of Cincinnati, Ohio, for appellant. Turner & Turner, of New Castle, Chas. H. Sheld, of Louisville, Moody & Barbour, of New Castle, and Willis, Todd & Bond, of Shelbyville, for appellee.

CLAY, C. Richard Thomas, at the time of his death, was an infant eight years of age. On May 25, 1911, he fell into Fox Run creek. He died on September 15, 1911. Charging that the defendants, the Eminence Distilling Company, Simon Well, and Charles Bright, unlawfully and negligently polluted and poisoned the waters of Fox Run creek, and thereby caused the death of the decedent, A. W. Thomas, his administrator, brought this action to recover damages. At the conclusion of all the evidence, the court directed a verdict in favor of the defendants. Judgment was entered accordingly, and plaintiff appeals.

During the years 1910 and 1911, the Eminence Distilling Company was engaged in operating a large distillery near the town of Eminence in Henry county. Charles Bright was its general superintendent. Simon Well was feeding and slopping a large number of cattle on the premises. In the inclosure in which the cattle were confined, the Distilling Company constructed a concrete dam. The dirty water and excrement on the surface of the pen were permitted to flow and accumulate in a pool. There the solid matter would settle to the bottom. There was a sluice gate near the bottom, and in the center of the dam. Across this gate was a wire screen with 12 meshes to the inch. When solid matters would settle in the bottom, the sluice gate was opened, and the water and such parts of the solid matter as would pass through the screen were permitted to flow into Fox Run creek. On the 4th day of April, 1911, there was a cloudburst at the headwaters of Fox Run, and the concrete dam was washed away. A cypress dam was then installed. In May the cypress dam gave way. When these dams gave way, the accumulated filth ran into the creek and polluted it.

A. W. Thomas, the administrator of the decedent, lived in the years 1910 and 1911 on a farm situated about two miles south of the distillery on Fox Run creek, which flows through the farm. On May 25, 1911, the decedent, Richard Thomas, fell into the creek and swallowed some of the water. He became sick and vomited more or less. The boy's condition improved for a few days, but about two weeks later he became quite sick. A physician was then called and diagnosed the case as intermittent fever, and treated the boy for this disease. About the 2d of July, the physician pronounced the case one of typhoid fever. This disease continued for several weeks; and, when the boy had practically recovered from typhoid fever, he was taken ill with spinal meningitis. On September 15th he died.

The evidence for plaintiffs tends to show that an enormous quantity of decaying and fermenting animal and vegetable matter passed from the pool at the distillery into the creek. As it descended the valley and the stream widened, the polluted waters spread out into shallow pools, depositing on the farm of plaintiff and near his house a large amount of putrid matter, some of which appeared as a foul scum, and some as a rotting sediment, and the odor emitted therefrom was very noisome. Three or four physicians testified that typhoid and meningitis were germ diseases, and that, while those germs apparently originated with the human, the liberated germs were carried by the wind, on the bodies, feet, and wings of fowls, birds, and insects to, and deposited into, such pools. That such stagnant and polluted water was a most fertile field and hotbed for breeding large and malignant colonies of disease germs. While such germs are present in almost all localities, they are generally present in limited numbers, and in such emaciated condition that they are not likely to produce diseases unless the small and weakened colonies are placed in some nutritious and suitable breeding ground, in which event they will multiply and develop into large and malignant colonies, capable of infecting strong and healthy persons. Two or three physicians gave it as their opinion that decedent was infected by germs which came from the polluted water of the creek. It developed, however, on cross-examination that they had made no examination of the waters of the creek, and could not say from personal knowledge that any typhoid or meningitis germs, or, in fact, any disease germs, were present in the creek, or in any of the pools referred to. While giving it as their opinion that the boy died from disease germs coming from the waters of the creek, they admitted that such germs could be carried by insects, flies, bugs, chickens, and turkeys, and that it was a pure guess as to where a patient took typhoid fever.

It is unnecessary to give the evidence adduced by the defendant. The rule is that when the plaintiff introduces his evidence, and at its conclusion the defendant moves the court to instruct the jury peremptorily to find for it, whether the motion is then determined by the court or not, it must be decided, on the plaintiff's evidence, without reference to any fact shown by the evidence introduced on behalf of the defendant, unless that evidence tends to make out a case for plaintiff; for, in so far as there is a conflict in the evidence, the question, if material, is for the jury. Goins v. North Jellico Coal Co., 140 Ky. 323, 181 S. W. 28.

The question is, Did plaintiff succeed in making out a case? Counsel for plaintiff insist that the evidence clearly establishes the following propositions: "(1) That the Distillery Company, Charles Bright, and Simon Well produced the putrid and infectious matter. (2) That they placed it in a position to be concentrated in a cesspool. (3) That the cesspool did arrest the flow and hold the water in a stagnant pool for longer and shorter periods, during which time continued decomposition and decay progressed. (4) That a stagnant pool containing decaying animal and vegetable matter creates a nutritious and fertile field for the multiplication and development of malignant typhoid and meningeal germs, and other matter deleterious to health and life. (5) That such matter was put by the appellees in a place where it could be released into Fox Run, and that they made preparation by constructing a sluice gate for the express purpose of flowing this putrid matter into the stream at intervals, and after it had been detained long enough to become infected with these pathological germs. (6) That the appellees did, in pursuance of said intention and preparation, liberate this polluted matter into Fox Run, and deliberately caused it to flow into and upon the premises occupied by the appellant and his intestate. (7) That, when the water was so turned loose, it was emitting a foul odor, and was known as a matter of common knowledge to be so infected. (8) That much of this putrid matter was deposited in the pools of the stream, and in the valley on the premises of the appellant and near to his residence. (9) That this playful and innocent child fell into a pool of this contaminated water, and swallowed a large portion of it, and his clothes were saturated. (10) That during the night thereafter he became quite ill, and continued ill from that date until his death. (11) That large numbers of flies were gathered upon the fetid matter and continued to bear this noxious and poisonous material from the creek to the residence and surroundings where the child lived. (12) And show by the attending physician that such stagnant and putrifying flow was filled with these typhoid and meningeal germs, and that they could be carried to the patient by drinking the water, by coming in contact with abraded surfaces, and by being conveyed on the feet and bodies of the fowls and flies. (13) That infection is commonly produced by this means. (14) The attending physician emphatically testified that this stream was so infected, and that the boy was infected by that stream, and that the infection caused his illness and his death."

[1] While it is true that several of the above propositions are established by the evidence, it is clear that the main propositions—that is, the ones upon which plaintiff's case depends—are not established.

[2] In order for plaintiff to recover, it was necessary to show that the pollution of the creek by defendant was the proximate cause of decedent's death. A possibility, or a bare probability, that his death was so caused is not sufficient. Plaintiff should have shown the actual presence of disease germs in the creek; that the boy drank water from the creek; and that, within the usual period of incubation after drinking the water, the boy became ill therefrom and died. Physicians who testified for plaintiff admit that they made no examination of the waters for the purpose of detecting the presence of disease germs. Without evidence to this effect, the cause of the boy's death is mere speculation. They admit that he might have taken the typhoid fever or spinal meningitis from germs that came from other sources. They made no examination of the water in the well on plaintiff's farm, or of the water of the spring from which plaintiff and his family drank after the well went dry. These waters may have contained the germs which produced the disease from which the boy died. They admit that the disease might have been transmitted by flies, bugs, or other animals that had visited privies or other infected places. As there was no positive evidence of the presence of disease germs in the creek, and as the boy's death occurred nearly four months after falling in the creek, it is just as probable that his death resulted from germs transmitted in some other way as from germs taken from the creek.

[3] Had the case been submitted to the jury, they could have done nothing more than guess at the cause of the boy's death; and it is a well-settled rule that a defendant's rights should not be guessed away for one upon whom the burden rests of establishing a cause of action. *L. & N. DENTON et al. v. MILLER et al.

COURTS (§ 246*) — APPEAL — JURISDICTION — CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS.

Though the bill charged unconstitutionality of the statute under which defendant was created, such question, not being referred to in the brief of complainants on their appeal, and appearing to be abandoned, and there being nothing to justify the court in taking it up on its own motion, does not take the appeal out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Civil Appeals.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 743-748; Dec. Dig. § 246.*]

Appeal from Chancery Court, Rhea County; T. M. McConnell and V. C. Allen, Chancellors.

Suit by J. J. Denton and others against R. C. Miller and others. From an adverse decree, complainants appeal. Transferred to Court of Civil Appeals.

W. L. Givens, of Dayton, for appellants. Miller & Swafford, of Dayton, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. This cause presents a controversy wholly within the jurisdiction of the Court of Civil Appeals, but for the fact that the bill charges the unconstitutionality of chapter 236 of the Acts of 1907, under which the defendant county board of education was created. But this question seems to have been abandoned. It is not referred to in the brief of complainant's counsel, and we see nothing in the act which would justify the court in taking up the question on its own motion. Under such circumstances there is no constitutional question before the court, and the case is entirely with the Court of Civil Appeals. The cause is therefore ordered to be transferred to that court.

A copy of this opinion will be attached to the record and accompany the transfer.

BROWN et al. v. SULLIVAN COUNTY.

1. COUNTIES (§ 18*) — DISTRICTS — CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

Const. art. 6, § 15, provides that the different counties of the state shall be laid off as the General Assembly directs into districts of convenient size, so that the whole number in each county shall not be more than 25, or 4 for every 100 square miles. Const. 1796, art. 5, § 12, provided for the division of districts according to a population basis. Held that, in view of the act of 1835 found in Shannon's Code, § 97, enacted under a constitutional provision identical with the present one, providing for the division of counties into districts on the basis of the population, the instant constitutional provision must be taken as giving the Legislature power, either to divide the counties on a population basis, into districts of not more than 25 in number, or according to territory, into districts not in excess of 4 in 100 square miles, and hence Priv. Laws 1911, c.

620, dividing a county of 430 square miles into 22 districts, is not invalid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. §§ 17, 18; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 19*)—CONSTRUCTION OF CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS—CONTEMPORANEOUS CONSTRUCTION.

The act of 1835 (Shannon's Code, § 97), must be regarded as a contemporaneous construction of the constitutional provision, and that construction, having been acquiesced in since 1835, will be adhered to.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 14, 15; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Sullivan County; Dana Harmon, Judge.

Suit by J. C. Brown and others against Sullivan County. From a judgment dismissing the suit, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Phlegar, Powell, Price & Shelton, of Bristol, for appellants. C. J. St. John, of Bristol, for appellee.

GREEN, J. This suit was brought by certain citizens and taxpayers of Sullivan county to enjoin the issuance of $200,000 of the county's bonds for road purposes.

It was alleged that chapter 620 of the Acts of 1911, which authorize these bonds, was unconstitutional and void, and it was also alleged that the county court of Sullivan county, which, pursuant to the said act of the Legislature, directed the issuance of said bonds, was organized in an illegal manner, and was therefore without power to effect this bond issue.

The act of the Legislature is attacked as being in violation of section 17 of article 2 of the Constitution; it being insisted that it contains several matters not covered by the caption and incongruous therewith. This contention has been disposed of orally, and will not be considered in this opinion. It is sufficient to say that we do not find the act of the Legislature subject to the objections urged against it.

[1] It is insisted, however, that Sullivan county is entitled to have but 17 civil districts under the Constitution, whereas, as a matter of fact, it has 22. These 22 districts are represented by justices of the peace in the county court, and it is urged that the county court of this county is therefore organized in violation of the Constitution and is accordingly an illegal body.

In section 15 of article 6 of the Constitution it is provided that "the different counties of this state shall be laid off as the General Assembly may direct, into districts of convenient size, so that the whole number in each county shall not be more than 25, or 4 for every 100 square miles. There shall be two justices of the peace and one constable elected in each district by the qualified voters therein," etc.

The plaintiffs' contention is that no county can have more than 4 civil districts for every 100 square miles, and that, in no event, can the number exceed 25. They allege that Sullivan county has but 430 square miles, and that, in the ratio of 4 districts to every 100 square miles, this county would not be entitled to have more than 17 civil districts; that the division of the county into 22 civil districts is unconstitutional. This is the plaintiffs' construction of the constitutional provision quoted.

We do not think this is the true meaning of this portion of the Constitution. The language, inserting in parentheses the omitted words, which are plainly implied, reads as follows:

"The different counties of this state shall be laid off as the General Assembly may direct, into districts of convenient size, so that the whole number in each county shall not be more than 25, or (so that the whole number in each county shall not be more than) 4 for every 100 square miles."

We think it was intended by the Constitution to intrust the manner of districting the counties to the Legislature, according to a population basis or a territorial basis, as the Legislature should think best. Within limitations, the counties were to be laid off as the Legislature might direct.

Under the Constitution of 1796, justices were selected not exceeding two for each captain's company, on a population basis. Article 5, § 12. Under the present Constitution, and that of 1834, the regulation of this matter was committed to legislative discretion, with a proviso limiting the entire number of districts in each county. If the counties were divided on a population basis, then the entire number of civil districts was limited to 25. The Legislature was authorized to create any number of civil districts, not exceeding 25, in each county. On the other hand, if the Legislature divided the counties into districts in proportion to the area of each county, then the Constitution limited the number of districts to not more than 4 for each 100 square miles. It was not intended by this provision to declare that 25 districts should be created only in counties covering 625 square miles.

The section quoted appears alike in the Constitutions of 1834 and 1870. In 1835 the Legislature enacted the following law, contained in Shannon's Code, § 97, and section 79 of the Code of 1858:

"The number of districts shall be proportioned to the voting population of the county, as follows: For every 3,000 qualified voters, and upwards, there shall be twenty-five districts; for every 2,500 qualified voters, and under 3,000, there shall be twenty districts; for every 2,000 qualified voters, and under 2,500, there shall be seventeen districts; for every 1,500 qualified voters, and under 2,000, there shall be fifteen districts; for every 1,000 qualified voters, and under

1,500, there shall be twelve districts; for every 700 qualified voters, and under 1,000, there shall be ten districts; for less than 700 qualified voters, there shall be eight districts."

[2] This act, as stated, has been on our statute books since 1835. It is a contemporary legislative construction of the language of the Constitution in question here, as it appeared in the Constitution of 1834. It shows that at that time this provision of the Constitution was construed as authorizing the Legislature to divide the counties of the state into civil districts on a population basis. We think this was an authorized construction. At any rate, this construction has been acquiesced in and accepted as correct since 1835, and all the counties of the state have been divided into districts in this manner. Even, therefore, if we were of opinion that the original act of 1835 was based on a misinterpretation of the Constitution (which we are not), we would refuse, at this late date, to hold such legislation unconstitutional.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the county court of Sullivan county was not illegally organized, and inasmuch as the majority of that body voted for the issuance of these bonds, in pursuance of the legislative act, the plaintiffs can make no question upon the regularity of the action of the county court in this respect.

The circuit judge dismissed the suits of the plaintiffs, and his judgment will be affirmed.

LOGAN & MAPHET LUMBER CO. v. CROSS et al.

1. JUDGMENT (§ 572*)—CONCLUSIVENESS— JUDGMENT ON DEMURRER TO BILL— GROUNDS.

A decree overruling or sustaining a demurrer is res judicata; and when a single ground of relief is well stated in the bill the overruling of a demurrer thereto is conclusive as to facts subsequently proven in substance as alleged; and where the demurrer is sustained, and the bill dismissed, the decision is an adjudication on the facts as stated in the bill; and when the bill presents several grounds of relief, and the court acts upon each ground, the decree is res judicata; but a general judgment overruling a demurrer to a bill setting up several grounds of relief, without an opinion showing the ground of the court's action, amounts only to a decision that there is enough in the bill to require an answer.

2. JUDGMENT (§ 572*)—CONCLUSIVENESS— JUDGMENT ON DEMURRER TO BILL.

Where a bill was demurred to on the grounds that complainant was not entitled to relief for want of equity in the bill, and because he participated in the fraud therein alleged, that complainant was not entitled to the relief sought, or any relief, because the fraud alleged was not one of which it had the right to complain, and because the bill showed on its face that the cause of action accrued more than one year after the reversal of the judgment for error before the bill was filed, this court's judgment that in every respect the demurrer was not well taken, and affirming the decree overruling it, and remanding the cause for answer and further proceedings, is res judicata as to a new bill containing the same matters.

Bill by the Logan & Maphet Lumber Company against C. C. & C. Cross. Plea of res judicata sustained.

J. F. Baker, of Huntsville, and Shields, Cates & Mountcastle, of Knoxville, for complainant. E. G. Foster, of Huntsville, for defendants.

NEIL, J. The first and fundamental question to be determined is whether the matters contained in the present bill must be considered as settled between the parties, in so far as they are the same as those contained in the bill immediately preceding it, filed by the present complainants against the present defendants, and determined by this court in 1910, on bill and demurrer.

To the extent that the two bills are the same, we are of the opinion that the matters involved must be considered settled, as hereinafter more particularly stated.

This conclusion is resisted by defendants on the ground that the judgment of this court overruling the demurrer was general, unaccompanied by a written opinion showing the grounds of the court's action and therefore that, under the authority of Battle v. Street, 85 Tenn. 291, 2 S. W. 384, Jourolmon v. Massingill, 86 Tenn. 90, 5 S. W. 719, Clark v. Pence, 111 Tenn. 20, 26, 27, 76 S. W. 885, and other cases cited therein, it must be true that the judgment amounted to a decision only that there was enough equity in the bill to require an answer, thus leaving undetermined all of the points made in the demurrer.

The basis of the doctrine referred to is that where there are several grounds of relief set up in the bill, and the decision is simply that the demurrer be overruled, it cannot be known whether the court considered each ground separately, and so determined them all, or considered merely that there was enough in the bill on some one or more points to require an answer, even though others might not present sufficient grounds of relief. The present case, however, cannot be decided on the principle stated, because the judgment entered in the former cause shows that each ground of the demurrer was separately acted on and overruled.

This is rendered manifest by the following statement. The grounds of demurrer filed to the former bill were these:

"1. The complainant is not entitled to the relief it prays, nor to any relief, for want of equity on the face of the bill, and because complainant participated in the fraud therein alleged, in that the bill shows that the complainant failed and refused to appeal from the decree fully and finally adjudicating the rights of the complainant and defendants as to the lumber and the value thereof it now seeks to recover, and that it thereby willingly, knowingly, and actively participated in the fraud of which it complains.

"2. The complainant is not entitled to the relief it prays, nor to any relief, because the error and fraud complained of, if it exists as complainant avers, is not one of which it has the right to complain.

"3. The complainant is not entitled to the relief it prays, nor to any relief, because the bill shows on its face that the cause of the action accrued more than one year after the reversal of the judgment for error, before the bill in this cause was filed, and because the cause of action accrued more than one year after the time the decree was entered, in which the right to file a proper bill by complainant was not prejudiced by the decree therein before the bill in this cause was filed."

The judgment of this court on the foregoing grounds of demurrer was:

"This court being of opinion that the demurrer in said cause in the court below is in every respect and on every ground not well taken, the decree of the chancellor overruling same is in all respects affirmed, and said cause is accordingly remanded to the chancery court of Scott county for answer and further proceedings."

It is thus perceived that this court determined in the former case, against defendants, each of the points now insisted upon as matters of defense arising out of the proceedings contained in that litigation between these parties, to which Joe Wright was a party, viz.: The court, in overruling said grounds of demurrer, adjudged on the facts stated in the bill that complainants did not participate in the fraud alleged as having been committed by Joe Wright, and the present defendants, by failing and refusing to appeal from the decree referred to in the bill in that behalf, that the fraud complained of was not one as to which complainants were debarred seeking relief, that the former adjudication was not a bar to the present action, and that the complainants were not precluded by the one-year statute of limitations; that is, that complainants were not precluded by the fact that the cause of action set up in the bill accrued more than one year after the time the decree was entered which gave them the right to file a new bill without prejudice.

[1, 2] It may be properly remarked at this place that the court, while continuing to recognize the general doctrine laid down in the three cases referred to, has in recent years, when it intended that the overruling of a demurrer should have merely the effect of deciding there was enough in the bill to require an answer, generally, if not invariably, so stated in terms in its decree. This sometimes occurs when the court is of the opinion that the bill is defectively drawn, not fully stating the equities of the complainant, and that justice requires the facts should be examined by the court as displayed at large in the evidence that may be adduced. It was never intended, by the rule referred to, to deny that when a single ground of relief is well stated in the bill, and directly assailed by demurrer, and the demurrer is overruled applicable to that particular point, such decision is binding on all parties, and not subject to further question on the same facts, if the facts are subsequently proven in substance as alleged in the bill. If it were not intended that such adjudication, when precisely ascertained, should be binding, it would be idle to permit a discretionary appeal on overruling a demurrer, under section 4889 of Shannon's Code. Indeed, it was held in Groomes & Uhrick v. Thelme, 13 Lea, 320, that a decision overruling a demurrer is res adjudicata. It has been generally stated in our cases that a decree either overruling or sustaining a demurrer is res adjudicata. Murdock v. Gaskill, 8 Baxt. 22, and cases cited in headnote. It was said of these cases in Rodgers v. Dibrell, 6 Lea, 69, 74, and also in Battle v. Street, supra, that all that is decided in overruling a demurrer is that the bill contains sufficient equity to require an answer. The two classes of cases, we think, may be harmonized on this principle. Where a demurrer is sustained, and the bill dismissed, that is a clear adjudication on the facts of the case stated in the bill. Where the demurrer is overruled when filed to a bill stating a single ground of relief, and it thus can be seen precisely on what the court acted, that state of facts must be treated in that litigation as sufficient to furnish ground of relief, if substantially proven in the evidence. So, where a bill presents several grounds of relief, and it can be seen that each one of these was acted upon by the court, the same result follows. Where the bill presents several grounds of relief, and the decree overruling the demurrer is general, of course, it cannot be known on what ground the judgment of the court was entered, and hence this results only in the decision that there is enough equity in the bill to require an answer. Where there is an opinion filed stating the grounds on which the court acted in overruling the demurrer, the matters so decided must be treated as settled between the parties, and not subject to be subsequently controverted in that case, and must be considered as entitling the complainant to relief if the grounds are subsequently maintained in the evidence. In the present case the bill to which the demurrer was overruled was, after a remand of the cause, dismissed on the complainant's own motion, and a new bill prepared containing the same matter, filed within a year thereafter; the dismissal having occurred because the complainant could not get his case ready for trial at the term of the court during which it was called. Under such a state of facts the decision overruling the demurrer would be binding on the parties, and not subject to question on proof of the facts alleged. The evidence fully sustains the allegations of the two bills, wherein they are the same.

SOUTHERN RY. CO. v. MICHAELS et al.
(Supreme Court of Tennessee. Nov. 26, 1912.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 124*)—COMPENSATION—TIME OF ASSESSMENT.

In proceedings to assess compensation for lands taken by condemnation, the valuation must be made as of the date of the actual taking, so that, where defendants, in a proceeding to condemn mill property, closed its plant after the filing of the petition, but before the taking of possession by the plaintiffs, that matter was proper to be considered in assessing damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 332-344; Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

2. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 134*)—COMPENSATION—ASSESSMENT—POTENTIAL VALUE OF PROPERTY.

In assessing compensation for land taken by eminent domain, the potential value of a pocket in the river in which defendant had stored logs when the property was used for mill purposes could only be estimated as a part of a going business, and where, before the taking of the property, the mill was closed, with little likelihood of its ever being reopened, its value as for a future use of the property for a mill site was too speculative to be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 356; Dec. Dig. § 134.*]

Certiorari from Court of Civil Appeals.

Proceedings in eminent domain by the Southern Railway Company against T. M. Michaels and others. From a judgment assessing damages for defendants, all parties bring certiorari. Reversed and remanded.

Jourolmon, Welcker & Smith, of Knoxville, for plaintiff. A. C. Grimm and Lucky, Andrews & Fowler, all of Knoxville, for defendants.

LANDSEN, J. The Southern Railway Company filed its petition in the circuit court of Knox county for the purpose of condemning a right of way for the use of its road through the property of the defendant Michaels. The defendant's property has a frontage on the north bank of the Tennessee river of about 1,150 feet and a like frontage on the south side of McCannon street. It is about 85 feet wide at the western end, and about 400 feet wide at the eastern end, and contains about 6 acres. The right of way condemned extends through the property its full length east and west. The defendant had a sawmill located on his property at the time the petition was filed, which he has operated for a number of years. His mill had a capacity of about 1,250,000 feet per annum. The north bank of the river adjacent to the mill site formed a pocket in the river on the south side of the mill, which was used by the defendant as a harbor in which to hold logs for the supply of his mill. The harbor has a capacity of about 1,000,000 feet, or practically enough to supply the mill for one year. The course of the defendant's business operations was to purchase logs adjacent to the tributaries of the Tennessee river many miles above Knoxville, and float them down to Knoxville, and harbor them in the pocket adjacent to his mill. In this way he kept his mill supplied with logs.

There is proof tending to show that the construction of the petitioner's road through the defendant's property had the effect to destroy the value of the harbor in connection with the operation of the mill on defendant's land.

The original petition was filed August 15, 1906, containing the usual averments in condemnation proceedings, and especially the averment of power in the petitioner to appropriate the defendant's property under the law of eminent domain. On September 6, 1906, the defendants answered the petition, and denied the power of the petitioner to condemn and appropriate a right of way across their premises. On February 21, 1907, the petitioner filed an amended petition, which is here mentioned only for the purpose of stating that the defendants in their answer to this pleading again denied the right of the petitioner to take and appropriate a right of way through their property.

Soon after the original petition was filed, the defendants sawed up what logs were anchored in the harbor above referred to and suspended the operation of their mill. The case was pending in the circuit court until April 8, 1911, a period of almost five years. There is no explanation of the cause of this long delay in the preparation and trial of the case, except what appears to be conceded by counsel to the effect that there was an understanding that the trial of this case should await the determination by this court of the similar case of Southern Railway Company v. E. T. Sanford et al. At all events, on April 8, 1911, the defendants moved the court to dismiss the petition for want of prosecution, whereupon it appears that a writ of inquisition was awarded, and a jury of view appointed, and the case proceeded to final determination without further delay. The first jury of view valued the land sought to be appropriated by petitioner at $3,000, the incidental damage at $500, and the incidental benefits at $500. Upon exception, this report was set aside and a new jury of view was appointed. The second jury estimated the value of the land at $3,000, the incidental damages at $3,800 and the incidental benefits at $800, making a total of $6,000. Both sides appealed from the report of this jury of view, and there was a trial before the circuit judge and a jury in the regular way, and the value of the property taken was fixed at $3,000, the incidental damages at $9,000, with no incidental benefits, and a judgment was entered upon this verdict in favor of the defendants for $12,000, together with interest from the day of the filing of the original petition, making all together $15,988.

The trial judge instructed the jury in substance that they should estimate the value of the land taken as of the day upon which it was taken, "which is the day on which defendants were served with a legal notice of the institution of the proceedings in this case." The Court of Civil Appeals held that the trial judge was in error in instructing the jury to assess the value of the property as of the day of the filing of the original petition, and held that the property should be valued as of the day when it was actually appropriated by the petitioner; but that court was of opinion that the error of the trial judge was harmless, for the reason that the right of way of the petitioner as located through the defendant's property destroyed the value of the defendant's mill, and also its future use for a mill site, to be operated after the manner that defendant had theretofore operated the mill in question. They modified the judgment of the circuit judge on the question of interest, and allowed interest only from the day of the actual appropriation of the property by the petitioner.

The Southern Railway Company filed its petition for writs of certiorari, and assigned the action of the Court of Civil Appeals in holding that the action of the circuit judge was harmless for error. The defendants filed a petition for writs of certiorari, and assigned the action of the Court of Civil Appeals in disallowing interest from the day of the filing of the petition in the court below for error.

[1] That the charge of the circuit judge to the effect that the land sought to be taken should be valued as of the day of the filing of the original petition was error there can be no doubt, upon the authority of Railroad Co. v. Moggridge, 116 Tenn. 445, 92 S. W. 1114, and Cunningham v. Railroad Co., 126 Tenn. —, 149 S. W. 103.

[2] The petitioner introduced proof tending to show the value of the property at the time it was appropriated by the railway company, and this line of testimony fixes the value at far less than the amount found by the jury. The defendant introduced testimony tending to show the value of the property on the day of the filing of the original petition, at which time the defendant's mill was in full operation as a going business concern. This line of testimony fixes the value of the property at a much larger figure than the testimony offered by the petitioner, and a great many of the witnesses fix its value far above the verdict of the jury. There is proof tending to show that after the defendant abandoned its mill, and before the railway company took possession of its right of way, the plant depreciated materially in its building and machinery. It can be clearly gathered from the testimony that the mill itself was abandoned indefinitely by the defendant, and that it would probably never again be used as it had been before the filing of the original petition of condemnation. At all events, this is a question that should have been submitted to the jury for their consideration in fixing the value of the defendant's property under the testimony of the witnesses.

It was held in Woodfolk v. Railroad, 2 Swan, 437, that the proper rule for the valuation of property taken under the law of eminent domain is the fair cash value of the land as if the owner were willing to sell and the appropriator were willing to buy that particular quantity at that place and in that form—that is, at the place where the land is taken and in the form in which it exists at the time it is taken. That case establishes the principle that the property is to be offered at its fair cash value and taken in statu quo. It was held in Alloway v. Nashville, 88 Tenn. 514, 13 S. W. 123, 8 L. R. A. 123, that the rule of just compensation required by our Constitution includes an appraisement of every element of usefulness and advantage in the property. But this does not mean that all of its capabilities of value are to be estimated separately, and the aggregate put down as the true value, for the reason that they do not exist independently of each other, and cannot all be realized at the same time. Likewise its value is not to be restricted to any particular capability, for the reason that that would not include the other elements of value, and would also tend to make the degree of benefit to the party appropriating the land for particular purposes the real measure of value.

In Southern Railway v. Memphis, 148 S. W. 662, April term, 1912, it was held that if property taken for public use possess a particular value to the owner, because of the actual use to which he is devoting it at the time it is taken, the rule of just compensation requires that the owner be paid for the fair cash value of the property in the form in which it is taken. So that, if property appropriated for public use has potential values merely, which are undeveloped by the owner at the time of the taking, every element of usefulness and advantage which the property possesses is to be taken into view in arriving at its fair cash value. But if the property possess a special value for a particular use, and that value is being utilized by the owner, he is entitled to be compensated for the value of the property to him at the time it is taken.

Therefore, if the defendant's mill was being actually used in connection with the harbor at the time the mill was destroyed by the location of the railway line upon his property, he would be entitled to be compensated for the fair cash value of his mill as a going concern, and in this view the value of the harbor might be singled out in the testimony, and its use to his mill and mill operations could be estimated as a part of the value of the property taken. But if the mill had been abandoned, and the defendant was no longer using the harbor in connection with his mill, it would possess a potential value only, which could not be singled out by the witnesses, and a price placed upon it separate from the other elements of usefulness which the property might possess. In that event, the rule as stated in Alloway v. Nashville would apply, and in the first event the rule stated in Railway v. Memphis would apply.

With these cases in mind, it is impossible to say that the error of the trial judge was harmless. As previously stated, the testimony of the petitioner tended to show the value of the property after the mill had been abandoned, and at the time the land was appropriated by the railway company. The testimony of the defendant tended to show the value of the property when the mill was a going concern, and witnesses sought to state the value of the harbor to the mill while running, in dollars and cents. It needs no argument to show that the value of the harbor as a distinct element of usefulness in the property cannot be singled out and valued separately, when the owner is not devoting it to any particular use. In the first place, any opinion of its value would be merely speculative, and, in the second place, such a rule would require one appropriating the property to pay for a value which exists only potentially, and not actually.

The justice of this holding is well illustrated when the holding of the court in Cunningham v. Railroad, supra, is considered. In that case it was held that the petitioner might dismiss its petition for condemnation at any time before it executes the bond required by statute, or pays the money into court. In this case there was a delay of nearly five years from the filing of the petition until the execution of the bond, and in that time the defendant's mill was abandoned and ceased to be a going concern. If the petitioner had dismissed its petition, as it clearly had the right to do, and had abandoned its purpose to appropriate defendant's property, it is manifest that the difference between the value of a going mill and an abandoned one would have fallen upon the defendant. Nor is this an inequitable result, especially under the facts of this case. The petitioner averred its right to take the defendant's property under the law of eminent domain, and this right was denied by the defendant, thereby staying the hand of the petitioner until the question was adjudged. Almost immediately after the filing of the original petition, the defendant abandoned his mill. This loss rightfully and properly should fall upon him. The result is that the judgments of the Court of Civil Appeals and of the circuit court are reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

WEIDNER et al. v. FRIEDMAN et al.

(Supreme Court of Tennessee. Nov. 23, 1912.)

1. DISORDERLY HOUSE (§ 2*)—NATURE OF OFFENSE—"NUISANCE."

The keeping of a disorderly house is a nuisance, both at common law and under the statute, and the offense is a misdemeanor, for which the ordinary remedy is by criminal proceedings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Disorderly House, Cent. Dig. §§ 1, 2, 9; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4855-4864; vol. 8, p. 7734.]

2. INJUNCTION (§ 232*)—CONTEMPT—FINE AND IMPRISONMENT.

The chancery court, in punishing a disobedience of its injunction as contempt, may impose only $50 fine and 10 days' imprisonment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 519-528; Dec. Dig. § 232.*]

3. NUISANCE (§ 75*)—INJUNCTION—DISORDERLY HOUSES—CHANCERY JURISDICTION.

The chancery court has only a limited jurisdiction to grant relief from the maintenance of a disorderly house at the suit of a private person, who must prove special injury to himself, different in kind from that suffered by the general public; and hence it has no jurisdiction of bills by private property owners to enjoin the owners, proprietors, and inmates of disorderly houses in a red light district, where it is practically impossible to apportion the blame or to ascertain from the evidence the jurisdictional facts as to how much each house is responsible for the special injury alleged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Nuisance, Cent. Dig. §§ 176-184; Dec. Dig. § 75.*]

4. DISORDERLY HOUSE (§ 2*)—NATURE OF OFFENSE.

Renting a house for use as a disorderly house and conducting or being an inmate of such house constitutes a criminal offense, subject to fine and imprisonment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Disorderly House, Cent. Dig. §§ 1, 2, 9; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

5. NUISANCE (§ 75*)—INJUNCTION AGAINST DISORDERLY HOUSE—LACHES.

A bill to enjoin the maintenance of a number of disorderly houses in a red light district, which have existed there for more than 25 years, should be dismissed for laches.

6. INJUNCTION (§ 219*)—JUDGMENT OR ORDER—EFFECT OF APPEAL.

Where the chancery court is without jurisdiction of bills against the owners, proprietors, and inmates of disorderly houses to enjoin their maintenance, the dismissal of such bills on certiorari does not affect its contempt proceedings for disobedience of the injunctions granted, although, as the injunction orders were such as would have been superseded if timely application had been made therefor, because decided in advance of a hearing upon the merits, the imprisonment orders should be remitted.

Appeal from Chancery Court, Hamilton County; T. M. McConnell, Chancellor.

Bills by M. G. Weldner and others against Irene Friedman and others for an injunction to suppress disorderly houses as nuisances. From a judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals, confirming a decree for complainants and adjudging defendants in contempt for disobedience of injunctions, defendants bring certiorari. Judgment and decree reversed, with directions to dismiss the bill, and orders in contempt proceedings modified and affirmed.

Cook & Swaney, Meachan & McGaughy, and Spears & Lynch, all of Chattanooga, for complainants. T. Pope Shepherd and Murray & Latimore, all of Chattanooga, for defendants.

NEIL, J. Bills, original, amended, and supplemental, filed against certain proprietors of disorderly houses and their inmates, and the owners of some of the houses wherein the illegal business is carried on, in Chattanooga, to suppress all of the houses as nuisances by permanent injunction, and to perpetually enjoin the owners from leasing the houses for such unlawful purpose. These houses are located in what is known as the "red light district" of Chattanooga, covering parts of Florence and Helen streets, most of them adjoining each other, and all near together. The bill was filed by private citizens owning property in the neighborhood—that is, within a block, or two or three blocks—on the ground of special and peculiar injury to them, in marring the comfort of their homes, and injuring the rental and sale value of their property. Originally there were very many complainants, but as to most of them the bills were dismissed on their own motion, and they were taxed with all of the costs accrued to that time, by the chancellor. Others entered no formal dismissal, and, while remaining nominally complainants, have really abandoned the case, so that there are now left only five active complainants. Their names are H. A. Weldner, H. Fritts, Joseph Josephs, H. Koblentz, and F. E. Tyler. A decree according to the prayer of the bill was rendered against all of the defendants, but only the following of them appealed to the Court of Civil Appeals, viz.: J. C. C. Garner, O. E. Pooler, Laura Hines, Bessie McBee, Ada Culver, Lucile Martin, Pauline Miller, Nellie Gray, Sallie Smith, Lillian Sterling, and Annie Bouley. The two first were proceeded against as owners of the property, or some of it. Laura Hines, Ada Culver, Lillian Sterling, and Annie Bouley were proceeded against as madames, or proprietors of houses, and the others as inmates.

The Court of Civil Appeals affirmed the decree of the chancellor, and thereupon the case was brought to this court by the writ of certiorari. It is insisted in behalf of petitioners, defendants below, that the evidence is insufficient to support the decree, that the evidence does not sustain the charge that complainants suffered any injury in person or property different in kind from that suffered by the general public, and that, in any event, the evidence does not point particularly to any one of the several defendants sued as proprietors and inmates, but only in a general way to all of the "red light district."

It is claimed by defendants, as matter of law, that no judgment of abatement as to the individual houses can be rested on such general and indefinite evidence. On the other hand, it is averred by complainants that there is evidence in terms implicating all, at least in a general way, and that this must be held to include each. Likewise complainants put forward the proposition of law that all can be proceeded against as being jointly engaged in the commission of a nuisance, and held liable, even though no conspiracy between them be proven, on the ground that they are so near together locally, and their operations are so synchronous, that they must be treated as together creating the nuisance complained of. The rule is also invoked that, where there is a concurrence between the chancellor and the Court of Civil Appeals, this court will not reverse, if there is any evidence to support such concurrence. It is claimed by complainants that there is evidence to support such concurrence on the point of special damage peculiar to the complainants, as distinguished from the general public; and they point to the fact that defendants do not deny that they, respectively, are proprietors and inmates of disorderly houses on the streets mentioned.

[1-3] There is no doubt that the keeping of a disorderly house is a nuisance. It was so at common law, and is so under our statute. It is a misdemeanor, and the ordinary remedy is in the criminal court, which court can act most effectively by fine and imprisonment, and judgment of abatement. The chancery court has only a limited jurisdiction, which is defined in Weakley v. Page, 102 Tenn. 179, 53 S. W. 551, 46 L. R. A. 552, as the power to grant relief at the suit of a private person only when he can prove special and peculiar injury to himself, different in kind from that suffered by the general public. That case is in accord with the weight of authority in other jurisdictions. Everywhere the powers of the court are confined within the narrow limits there laid down, and some cases take even a more restricted view. We are not disposed to expand and extend the doctrine further by construction. There would, by such course of decision, result extreme danger to the usefulness of the chancery court, the danger of overwhelming the court with a mass of litigation which would occupy its time to the exclusion of the vast range of its ordinary duties. The danger is well illustrated by the history of the present case as disclosed by this record. A preliminary injunction of a very drastic character was issued against defendants. They obeyed for a time, and left the district, that is, the "red light district," but afterwards returned, and renewed their former way of living. Then ensued two proceedings for contempt, preserved and presented here in four large volumes, in addition to the two large volumes embracing the main case. These contempt proceedings were brought to punish defendants for resuming their unlawful business in violation of the injunction. Fines and imprisonment were imposed. These proceedings are not distinguishable from ordinary prosecutions against such offenders in the criminal court, except in the form of them, and the charge that they violated an injunction, instead of the criminal law. It is easy to see how the offense could be, and would be, again and again repeated, after receiving the punishment of $50 fine, and 10 days' imprisonment, all that the chancery court can impose for a contempt. It is true that this may be said of any case in which the chancery court undertakes to suppress a nuisance, particularly any nuisance of the kind involved in the case now before us. This should be a warning to the court to be extremely careful in assuming jurisdiction of such cases, confining the exercise of its powers in this regard within the narrowest limits consistent with duty.

[4] Should it assume jurisdiction in one bill to suppress a whole settlement of such people? We think not. The task should be left to the criminal court, where it most properly belongs. It is one thing to bring before the court a single house of the kind, with its inmates, and quite another to hale before the court a congeries of such houses, and troops of women occupying them. In the first case the court can carefully and adequately examine into and decide the question whether the single house in question has been instrumental in causing damage to nearby owners of a kind special and peculiar to them as distinguished from that done to the public at large. But where a large number of such persons are brought before the court for several such houses, it is practically impossible to apportion the blame, or to ascertain from the evidence how much each house is responsible for the special injury claimed to have been inflicted; so that it must result, as in the present case, in a contention that all must be held equally guilty, because of the fact that the number of such houses so congregated causes crowds of men and boys to gather on the streets and go in and out of these resorts, the use of profane and vulgar language in the streets by men who gather there, the traipsing of the women, denizens of such houses, from one house to the other, or along the street, in pursuit of a man or men, the occasional exposure of person on the part of some woman in a house or houses not identified or distinguished from the mass of houses; in short, a jumbled aggregation of general evidence to no house in particular, but to all of the houses as an assemblage of illegal resorts. Relief in such a case must necessarily rest upon the postulate that the chancery court has power to break up and destroy such a nest of vice, although it is unable to see from the evidence from what special house the injury proceeded which is the necessary prerequisite to give the court jurisdiction. The task is too much for the chancery court. It cannot accomplish it. On the other hand, it can be accomplished by the criminal court. There no special damage to private persons need be proven. The crime of conducting a disorderly house, or of acting as inmates of one, or of renting a house to be used for such purpose, is all that need be proven. All persons so offending can be punished, not merely by a small fine and short imprisonment, but by heavy fines, and imprisonment for any term less than 12 months, and the houses can be broken up.

[6] We have proceeded thus far without mentioning another objection to complainants' claim to relief in the chancery court, if the other objections mentioned were out of the way. That is laches. This "red light district" has been in operation in Chattanooga 25 or 26 years, according to the witnesses for complainants themselves; some witnesses say, from 30 to 40 years. Parties who apply to a court of chancery for injunctive relief must apply promptly, on the penalty of a refusal to entertain the bill because of laches. In Caldwell v. Knott, 10 Yerg. 210, 212, where the nuisance complained of was a milldam, the court held that a delay of 10 years, without more, was too much, and the court referred with approval to the case of Weller v. Smeaton, 1 Cox, 103, and Reid v. Gifford, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 19, wherein it was held that 3 years' delay was too long. These cases were referred to and approved in the case of Madison v. Copper Co., 113 Tenn. 331, 351-355, 83 S. W. 658, in which many other cases were cited showing that even a much shorter time would serve to bar relief in equity under peculiar facts; and it was said in that case that, although the defense of laches had not been raised in the lower court by the parties, this court could itself raise it when it appeared on the record. In the present case there was a delay of, not 3 years, or of 10 years merely, but for more than a quarter of a century.

[6] The result is that the original, amended, and supplemental bills must be dismissed as to the complainants still remaining before the court. The dismissal of the said bills will have no effect upon the contempt proceedings. It was the duty of defendants to obey the injunction, and their failure to do so was a contempt of court for which they should be punished. We are of the opinion, however, that the imprisonment should be remitted, because the injunction order was such as would have been superseded, if timely application had been made therefor, since by this order the chancellor decided on the application for a temporary injunction the merits of the cause in advance of a hearing thereon.

The cause will be remanded to the chancery court of Hamilton county for the enforcement of the judgment for contempt, as herein modified, and with directions to dismiss the bills when these matters are finally disposed of.

The defendants found guilty under the respective contempt proceedings will pay the costs of these proceedings in the chancery court in so far as they are unadjudged. Defendants to the respective contempt proceedings in this court will pay the costs of this court and the Court of Civil Appeals.

The complainants still remaining such in the record will pay all of the unadjudged costs of the chancery court. The five active complainants, who have prosecuted the original cause in this court and in the Court of Civil Appeals, will pay the costs of said original cause in both courts.

It follows that the decrees of the Court of Civil Appeals and of the chancellor in the main case are reversed, while the judgments of both of these courts in respect of the contempt proceedings are modified and affirmed.

KING et al. v. COX et al.

1. TRIAL (§ 177*) — DIRECTED VERDICT—EFFECT OF MOTION—WAIVER OF JURY TRIAL.

Concurring motions by both parties for peremptory instructions will not operate as an agreement that the controversy shall be determined by the trial judge, so as to take the case from the jury.

2. TRIAL (§ 176*)—DIRECTED VERDICT — EFFECT OF MOTION—WAIVER OF OBJECTION TO EVIDENCE.

By moving for peremptory instructions a party does not waive objection to the rejection or admission of evidence, as he does by demurring to the evidence.

3. TRIAL (§ 155*)—DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE.

A demurrer to the evidence withdraws the case from the jury and submits it to the court, to apply the law to the admitted facts; and where the evidence is written, or, though parol.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes is certain, the other party must join, or waive such evidence.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 548*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE.

A demurrer to the evidence is complete in itself, and need not be preserved by bill of exceptions to review a ruling thereon.

5. TRIAL (§ 156*)—DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

That evidence is conflicting does not prevent the case from being submitted on demurrer to the evidence; all reasonable inference therefrom being drawn in plaintiff's favor in such case.

6. TRIAL (§§ 156, 178*)—DIRECTION OF VERDICT—ASSESSMENT OF DAMAGES.

Upon sustaining a motion for peremptory instructions, the case may be remanded to the jury for assessment of damages, while, on demurrer to the evidence, all of the evidence on damages must be found in the demurrer, and the amount fixed by the court.

7. INJUNCTION (§ 241*) — ENFORCEMENT OF BOND.

Under Shannon's Code, § 6259, providing that the damages resulting from an injunction may be ascertained by the court upon reference to the master, or upon an issue of fact tried as other issues of fact, if the parties elect to have a jury, defendant either may have reference to the master for assessment of damages, or bring independent suit on the injunction bond.

8. EVIDENCE (§ 162*)—BEST EVIDENCE.

The fact of a dissolution of an injunction must be shown in an action on an injunction bond by the best evidence, which is the record of the injunction suit; Shannon's Code, § 5579, providing that a judicial record is proved by production of the original, or by copy thereof certified by the clerk.

9. EVIDENCE (§ 366*)—DOCUMENTS — ENTIRE RECORD.

In order to prove the dissolution of an injunction in an action on an injunction bond by a copy of the record in the injunction suit, a copy of the whole record must be produced.

10. EVIDENCE (§ 183*) — BEST EVIDENCE—COPIES OF JUDICIAL RECORD.

In an action on an injunction bond, in which it is sought to prove dissolution by copies of the pleadings, a writ, and bond, evidence held not to show that the pleadings, writ, and bond were lost, so as to admit in evidence certified copies thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 605-637; Dec. Dig. § 183.*]

Certiorari to Court of Civil Appeals.

Action by Sam. L. King and others against W. H. Cox and others. The judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals affirmed a judgment in the circuit court for plaintiffs, except as to one of them, and both parties bring certi-orari. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

Harr & Burrow and A. C. Keebler, all of Bristol, and O. A. Brown and H. H. Smith, both of Blountville, for plaintiffs. Mullenix & St. John, of Bristol, for defendants.

NEIL, J. The present action was brought in the circuit court of Sullivan county on an injunction bond, which the plaintiffs in error had executed in a case formerly brought by them in the chancery court of that county. Numerous objections to evidence were offered in the trial court by the plaintiff in error, and overruled by the trial judge. Both sides moved for peremptory instructions. The court thereupon overruled the motion of plaintiffs in error, but sustained that of defendants in error, and directed a verdict in favor of the defendants in error for the sum of $1,460. From this judgment, after a motion for new trial had been made and overruled, an appeal was prosecuted to the Court of Civil Appeals. In that court the judgment was affirmed as to all of the defendants in error except J. F. Yoakly. Both sides filed a petition for certiorari in this court, and both were granted, and the case was set down for argument.

The Court of Civil Appeals held that, inasmuch as both parties had moved for peremptory instructions, this was a mutual agreement to take the case from the jury, and to permit it to be decided wholly by the trial judge, and that each side, by such motions, waived all objections to evidence. That court, in support of the first proposition, relied upon two cases decided by it: Railway Co. v. Crutcher, 1 Tenn. C. O. A. 231, and Aizenshtatt v. Mayor, Id. 805. For the proposition that such motions waived all objections to evidence, reliance was had upon the rule that a demurrer to the evidence has that effect, and it was held that a motion for peremptory instructions was substantially the same as a demurrer to the evidence, and therefore must operate in the same manner upon such objections.

This view lies at the threshold of the present controversy, and must be disposed of before other questions can be considered.

[1] As to the first proposition, this court has taken a different view, from the two cases cited from 1 Tenn. C. C. A., in a recent case, decided at the present term, Virginia-Tennessee Hardware Co. v. Ollie Sue Hodges, 149 S. W. 1056. It was held in that case that such concurrent motions did not have the effect of an agreement by the parties that the whole controversy should be determined by the trial judge. After discussing the grounds on which this court thought the decision of the question must rest, it was said, in conclusion:

"We are of the opinion that, under the true practice, the motion of each party should be treated for what it is, a matter wholly distinct from and adverse to that of his adversary; that neither is put in a worse position, so far as concerns his ultimate right of review, by his adversary's making a similar motion; that such motion should stand as if made and remaining alone, and should be disposed of on its own merits; that the only question submitted to the trial judge is the question of law above indicated; that as a necessary preliminary to responding to this question he must determine whether there is any substantial conflict in the evidence; that if he find such conflict, or undisputed evidence from which conflicting inferences may reasonably be drawn, on material points, he should submit the case to the jury; that if he is of opinion there is no such conflict he should sustain the motion of one party or of the other, according to his view of the facts and the law; that the party whose motion has been overruled may have the action of the trial judge reviewed on appeal, without the necessity of asking the submission of any special question or questions to the jury; that on such appeal he may attack the action of the trial judge, in overruling his motion and in sustaining that of his adversary, and may put forward his contention of the facts and assail that of his adversary; and the appellate court will for itself ascertain the facts, and will determine whether the trial judge should have sustained the one motion or the other, or should have submitted the case to the jury."

The question, then, as to whether a motion for peremptory instructions is a waiver of the right to assign errors in the appellate court on the rulings of the trial judge on points of evidence, must be determined without regard to whether both parties made motions or only one of them.

[2] The question, therefore, is reduced to the inquiry whether the making of a motion for peremptory instructions waives objections made to the rejection or admission of evidence on the part of the person making the motion. Aside from the fact of concurrent motions, it is insisted that, if either plaintiff or defendant below make such motion, he waives all such errors. The argument in support of the contention seems to be that a motion for peremptory instructions is practically identical with a demurrer to the evidence. It is held in this state, and others, that where a demurrer to the evidence is filed, this does waive such errors, regardless of whether the motion was successful or unsuccessful. Southern Railway Co. v. Leinart, 107 Tenn. 635, 64 S. W. 899; Coleman v. Bennett, 111 Tenn. 705, 711, 69 S. W. 734.

[3-5] The two motions have points of similarity, but also material points of difference. In the demurrer to the evidence the defendant sets out all of the evidence admitted by the trial judge in behalf of the plaintiff, and confesses its truth. This is clinched by the joinder of the plaintiff. It is absolutely binding on the demurring party with all legal and reasonable inferences that may be deduced therefrom, and is equivalent to a special verdict. It withdraws the case from the jury, and submits to the court the application of the law to the facts. Where the evidence is written, and without the aid of parol, it is certain, the party offering it must join in the demurrer, or waive the testimony. If the plaintiff refuse to do so, except in terms which the court disapproves, his evidence is considered as withdrawn, and the jury must find a verdict for the defendant. The party who prevails on the demurrer is entitled to final judgment in his favor. The demurrer is complete in itself, and no bill of exceptions is needed for its preservation. Hopkins v. Railroad, 96 Tenn. 409, 34 S. W. 1029, 32 L. R. A. 354; Smithers v. Railroad, 96 Tenn. 459, 35 S. W. 560; Railroad v. Brown, 96 Tenn. 559, 35 S. W. 560; Thane v. Douglass, 102 Tenn. 307, 5 S. W. 155; Artenberry v. Railroad, 103 Tenn. 266, 52 S. W. 878; Barr v. Railroad, 103 Tenn. 544, 58 S. W. 849; Mitchell v. Railroad, 100 Tenn. 329, 45 S. W. 337, 40 L. R. A. 426; Manufacturing Co. v. Morris, 100 Tenn. 654, 58 S. W. 651; Coleman v. Leinart, 111 Tenn. 705, 714, 69 S. W. 734; Road v. Sansom, 113 Tenn. 683, 84 S. W. 694. "The office and function of a demurrer to evidence is to test the strength of plaintiff's case upon his own testimony, and not upon the testimony of both parties, nor upon facts agreed to by both parties." Bridgeport Co. v. Railroads, 103 Tenn. 490, 495, 53 S. W. 739, 740. Even if the evidence is conflicting this does not prevent the case from being submitted under a demurrer to the evidence. "It is said, if the evidence is conflicting, that must be looked to which is most favorable to plaintiff on demurrer to evidence. This is not a correct statement. The evidence must be looked to as a whole, and reasonable inferences drawn from it in plaintiff's favor; but none of it must be excluded simply because unfavorable, but only shown by other evidence to be incorrect." Corbett v. Smith, 101 Tenn. 368, 374, 47 S. W. 694, 695.

On a motion for peremptory instructions no joinder is necessary. It may be made to the close of the plaintiff's evidence, or to the close of all of the evidence. If the evidence is conflicting on material points, if diverse inferences as to material facts can be drawn from evidence not conflicting, the case must go to the jury, and cannot be decided by the court. The motion for peremptory instructions does not necessarily dispose of the whole case. Although there may be no conflict as to the right of action, there may be as to the amount of the recovery, and that event the latter question will be tried by the jury. The party making the motion is not required to formulate the dence and sign a statement thereof as under a demurrer; but the motion is made orally on the evidence as delivered before the court. Likewise, if there be a question as to the credibility of witnesses, the case must go to the jury. While a party who files a demurrer to the evidence must sustain it at his peril, the penalty being a judgment against him if he fail, such is not the result on failure to sustain a motion for peremptory instructions. The effect simply is that the case goes to the jury for trial. The party who files a demurrer to the evidence says, in effect, by his written submission, that there is no doubt as to any of the facts, and purports to set them all out, and, if there is any apparent conflict in the evidence so set forth, this by the act itself of filing the demurrer submits the decision and determination of this question of fact to the court, for the harmonizing of all the evidence in respect thereof; while one who files a motion to instruct, although he asserts that the evidence is without conflict, yet he does so in submission to the rule of law that if there be any conflict on any material or determinative question of evidence it is the duty of the court to overrule such motion and submit the case to the jury. When a demurrer to the evidence is filed, the case as already stated is absolutely at once withdrawn from the jury, on a joinder of the plaintiff; while on a motion to instruct the question is submitted to the court whether the case shall be withdrawn. The opinion of the court is merely invoked as to whether it is a case proper for the jury, or one for the court alone, and the motion includes in effect a request of the court for appropriate action in the event of his decision one way or the other. Under the former practice no verdict of the jury is necessary, proper, or permissible; in the latter case the jury must render a verdict, albeit under the direction of the court. The trial judge may instruct the jury of his own motion without any application by either party, and neither party can compel the other; in a demurrer to the evidence it is necessary that the defendant make the application, and when he does so the plaintiff must enter his joinder. A motion for new trial is necessary as a preliminary to test, in the appellate court, the correctness of the action of the trial judge in giving or refusing to give a peremptory instruction, and the whole matter, including the evidence, must be incorporated in a bill of exceptions. No such motion is necessary to test the disposition of a demurrer to the evidence, nor, as we have previously stated, is it necessary that a bill of exceptions should be used in connection therewith. Tyrus v. Railroad, 114 Tenn. 579, 86 S. W. 1074; Traction Co. v. Brown, 115 Tenn. 323, 89 S. W. 319; Kinney v. Railroad Co., 116 Tenn. 450, 92 S. W. 1116; Railroad v. Williford, 115 Tenn. 108, 124, 88 S. W. 178; Seymour v.

Railroad, 117 Tenn. 98, 98 S. W. 174; Norman v. Railroad, 119 Tenn. 401, 104 S. W. 1088. Of course, the purpose of both methods is to expedite the trial of causes, and the rule is that a peremptory instruction, sustained in the trial court and affirmed in the appellate court, will end the case; and a peremptory instruction, offered and refused in the trial court, but adjudged good in the appellate court, will have the same effect. So on the sustainment of a demurrer to the evidence, either in the trial court or in an appellate court, the case will likewise be at an end.

[8] The exception must be stated, however, that upon sustaining a motion for peremptory instructions there may be a remand for the assessment of damages on evidence to be heard before the jury, while in the latter all of the evidence as to damages must be found in the demurrer itself and the amount of damages fixed by the court. Authorities supra, and also Railroad v. Hayes, 117 Tenn. 680, 697, 99 S. W. 362; Railroad v. Roe, 118 Tenn. 601, 625, 626, 102 S. W. 343; Box Co. v. Gregory, 119 Tenn. 537, 105 S. W. 350.

It is perceived that, although the results attained by the two methods are in most aspects the same, yet they have material differences in the practice and administration thereof; that the demurrer to the evidence is in the nature of a pleading, and belongs to the precedents that control that class of subjects, while the motion to instruct belongs to the class of subjects necessary to be incorporated in a bill of exceptions along with other matters not of record, and necessary to be made a part of the record in order that the action of the trial judge in respect thereof may be tested on appeal.

We perceive no reason arising out of the nature of the subjects involved why a party who asks a peremptory instruction should be held thereby to waive any error committed against him in the matter of admission or rejection of evidence. During the progress of the trial he offers evidence which he believes to be competent and this is rejected. He saves his exception to be used on appeal; in like manner when evidence is admitted over his objection. After the court, by his rulings on testimony, has eliminated all evidence he deems improper, and has thus caused to be left a residuum, one or the other of these parties desires to raise a question of law that, even on this residuum, the case is with him. When the party comes to make his motion for new trial, we can see no incompatibility in assigning as grounds both that his honor improperly granted or refused a peremptory instruction, and improperly admitted or disallowed evidence offered. The contrary view deprives a litigant of a part of his case; or, to put the matter differently, it imposes a penalty on him for endeavoring to shorten the litigation. It says to him, in effect: You must condone the errors the judge has committed against you in his rulings on the admission and rejection of evidence as the price of the privilege of making a motion for a peremptory instruction. We repeat there is no incongruity between a party insisting on having corrected errors against him of the kind just mentioned, and those committed against him in overruling his motion for peremptory instructions, and the law imposes no estoppel. It is perfectly reasonable for him to say in the appellate court that the trial judge erred in admitting or rejecting evidence, and also, in addition thereto, he erred in ruling against him the motion for peremptory instructions. There is not only no conflict between the two grounds of relief, but they are homogeneous, and both arise naturally under a bill of exceptions. The opposite view seems to be based on what we deem an imperfect analogy between the motion for peremptory instructions and the demurrer to the evidence. It does seem, we grant, inappropriate for a defendant, at the close of the plaintiff's evidence, to incorporate all of that evidence in a demurrer, admitting it all as true, along with all legitimate inferences to be drawn therefrom, and thereby compel the plaintiff to a joinder, and then, when the demurrer is overruled, to assign error on the ground that he objected to some of the evidence, and that the objection was erroneously decided against him. The answer is: After the ruling was made against you, you deliberately wrote out the evidence and signed it, and said it was true. On a motion for peremptory instructions, however, not only may there be evidence wrongly admitted against the party making the motion, but he may have offered competent evidence which was refused, and this would not appear under the motion at all, and he would not get the benefit of it. Such a situation could not occur under a demurrer to the evidence, because, as stated, that is only offered at the close of the plaintiff's evidence, and it embodies only that evidence. It is true that, where the person who makes the motion for peremptory instructions seeks, on appeal, to assign errors upon evidence admitted over his objection, his case is, in a general way, similar to that of one who demurs, in so far as both invoke the decision of the trial judge as matter of law on all of the evidence introduced.

Still, we think the rule should be different in the two cases on grounds already stated, arising out of the difference between matters based on pleadings and those falling within bills of exceptions. The difference is rested in part on a technical distinction, but the rules covering the whole subject are technical. Moreover, the practice of directing verdicts, or giving peremptory instructions to juries, is recognized as a distinct advance upon the old system of demurring to the evidence, and we deem it unwise to hamper this practice with the rules which restricted that system, and made it so unwieldy in use, and so dangerous to parties who sought to employ it. Besides this, it is certainly true that no good reason, technical or otherwise, could be offered for refusing to permit a party to assign error on the refusal of the trial judge to admit competent evidence, which, because refused, could not enter at all into the motion for instructions. This being granted, it would be a useless refinement to make a distinction between evidence of that kind and evidence admitted over objection.

For the reasons stated, we are of the opinion that a party, by making a motion for peremptory instructions, does not waive any exceptions he may have reserved against the action of the trial judge in his rulings against him on questions of evidence; and that he, on his motion for new trial, may assign such errors, along with the action of the trial judge in granting to his adversary, or in refusing to himself a motion for peremptory instructions.

This view was intimated in Tyrus v. Railroad, supra, wherein it was said, in substance, that on motion properly made in the court below for a peremptory instruction, and an improper refusal of it by the trial judge, this court would be enabled to dispose of the case finally, and thereby save to the parties and the state the delay and expense of an additional trial, "in the absence of any reversible error in rulings upon evidence or otherwise." Perhaps the matter in quotation marks was not necessary to the decision of the case, but it clearly indicates the view this court entertained at that time of the question now before us.

It is urged that the practice above indicated would permit counsel to experiment with the court. It is no experiment to object to incompetent evidence, and to the action of the trial court in excluding competent evidence, but a right which belongs to every litigant. It is no experiment, when all the evidence is in which the court permits to go in, then to take the judgment of the court as to whether on uncontroverted evidence the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict, or the defendant, by appropriate motions made by either or both of the parties. The practice by which a party making a motion for peremptory instructions is held to forfeit exceptions reserved to the admission of incompetent evidence, or the exclusion of competent evidence, shortens the litigation, it is true; but it also shortens the rights of litigants.

On the trial of this case in the court below, many objections were offered by the defendant to evidence which were overruled by the trial judge. The only ones which we need consider, however, may be thus stated: Plaintiffs offered in the trial court certain parts of the record in the injunction suit, in order to get before the court and jury the essential point of evidence that in the suit referred to, out of which the bond sued on arose, the injunction had been dissolved and held wrongfully issued. Plaintiffs below did not offer the whole record, but only the following, viz.: A paper purporting to be a copy of the bill issued out of the master's office, when it was filed; carbon copies of the demurrers of the defendants and of their answers (these were presented by the attorney for plaintiffs in the present suit, as office copies preserved by him as attorney for defendants in the former suit); a certified copy of the decree of the court; a certified copy of the injunction bond; a certified copy of injunction writ; and a certified copy of the rule docket. These various papers were objected to, first, on the ground that a certified copy of the whole record was necessary; and, secondly, that the copies of the papers referred to—that is, the pleadings and the injunction writ and bond—could not be supplied in the manner attempted without evidence that the office of the master had been diligently searched and they could not be found. The trial judge overruled these objections, and his action thereon is assigned as error.

[7-9] On dissolution of an injunction, defendant may have either a reference to the master for the assessment of damages, or bring an independent suit on the bond. Shannon's Code, § 6259; Terrell v. Ingersoll, 10 Lea, 77, 80, 84. This follows as a matter of course upon dismissal of the bill. Ragan & Buffett v. Aiken, 9 Lea, 623. But the fact of such dissolution must be shown by the best evidence; that is, the record of the injunction suit. "A judicial record of this state is proved by a production of the original, or by copy thereof, certified by the clerk or the person having the legal custody thereof under his seal of office, if he have one." Shannon's Code, § 5579. A copy of the whole record must be produced. Duncan v. Gibbs, 1 Yerg. 256; Garrick v. Armstrong, 2 Cold. 267; Willis v. Louderback, 5 Lea, 561; Phipps v. Caldwell, 1 Heisk. 350; Railway Co. v. Seymour, 113 Tenn. 523, 83 S. W. 674; Smith v. Hutchison, 104 Tenn. 394, 58 S. W. 226. A modification of this rule is found in Russell v. Houston, 115 Tenn. 536, 91 S. W. 192, to the effect that it may be dispensed with, in case of the records of courts of general jurisdiction, where it appears that a part of the record is lost and cannot be produced, and the party seeking to use the record as evidence produces all of it that is accessible.

[10] It is insisted for the plaintiffs that this was done; that they produced and offered in evidence all of the record of the injunction suit that could be found. The defendants insist that there is not sufficient evidence in the record to show that any part of the former record was lost.

The testimony upon this subject is as follows: N. J. Phillips, the clerk and master of the chancery court, testified thus:

"I will ask you if you have the original bond—injunction bond—executed by Samuel L. King and others in the cause of Samuel L. King and others against W. H. Cox? A. I reckon not. The file is not in my office. I suppose they are in Bristol. I haven't the papers now at all; some of the lawyers must have them. Q. I show you what purports to be a certified copy. (Witness examined the paper handed him.) A. Yes; I made that. Q. Did you make search for the bond? A. Let me see if I did. I don't remember just now what I did say about it. (Reads the certified copy, and replied that it so states; that he made search for the bond.) Q. I will ask you if this is a correct copy of the injunction writ that was served upon the parties? (Hands witness paper.) Q. Have you made search for the original papers in this case? A. Yes, sir. Q. Have you been able to find them? A. No, sir. Q. Do you know where they are? A. No, sir; I made that certified copy last October. Some of the lawyers may have them, but I can't tell where they are. I let C. A. Brown have them, and he took them to Bristol, and gave them to A. G. Keebler. (Mr. Keebler here states that he brought them back to Blountville, and gave them either to the clerk and master, or some attorney in the case.) Q. Is that a copy of the injunction? A. Yes; that is a copy of the injunction and the sheriff's return on it."

The witness was examined on December 19, 1911. The certificate to the bond on which he bases his answer as to the search was made on the 22d day of May, 1911. He does not testify that he made any search in his office after that time. This certificate of the 22d of May, 1911, states "that the original bond is lost or unintentionally mislaid, and cannot be found on diligent search." The certificate to the copy of the injunction writ on which he bases his statement as to that matter was made on the 31st of October, 1911.

C. J. St. John testified: "I find in my file a copy of the bill that was delivered to my client when the service was made." This copy was thereupon offered and objected to as stated. Accompanying this were filed uncertified copies of papers purporting to be the demurrers and answers of the defendants in that suit. The witness testified that these papers were prepared by him at his office, and that the carbon copies were copies of the originals which were filed in the court; that the copy of the original bill was a copy made out by the clerk at the time that the summons was issued, and delivered to his client with the summons.

We do not think that a sufficient ground was laid for the introduction of these irregular copies, or for using only a part of the record as the only part accessible. It does not appear that the clerk and master had made any recent search in his office, or that any inquiry had been made among the attorneys of the parties in that former litigation, or who the attorneys were. Judge St. John, the witness whose testimony has just been referred to, and who testified that he was counsel in that case, made no statement upon the subject as to whether he had examined or looked in his office for the file. It appears that Mr. Keebler was an attorney in the cause, and his statement appears to the effect that he had the papers and returned them, either to the clerk and master, or gave them to some other counsel in the case, and so the question is left wholly at large. It does not appear that the master had made search in his office during the months intervening between May and October, or between October and December. It ought to appear that all available sources of knowledge had been exhausted by diligent and recent search. Among these available sources indicated by the present evidence were the clerk and master's office at Blountville and the offices of the various attorneys who had been engaged in that cause. For all that we can see, the whole record may have been in the clerk and master's office at the time he testified, or may have been in the office of one of the attorneys. Under these circumstances, we are of the opinion that the trial judge committed error in admitting these detached papers. Rhea v. McCorkle, 11 Heisk. 415; Whiteside v. Watkins (Tenn. Ch.) 58 S. W. 1107; Vaulx v. Merriwether, 2 Sneed, 686; Pharis v. Lambert, 1 Sneed, 228; Girdner v. Walker, 1 Heisk. 191; 17 Cyc. 543 and 548; 1 Greenleaf on Ev. § 558.

It results that the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals must be reversed, also the judgment of the circuit court, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

The Court of Civil Appeals reversed the judgment as to Yoakly on a special ground stated in the opinion of that court. It is unnecessary and improper that we should consider that ground in the present attitude of the case, and the reversal of the Court of Civil Appeals as to that matter is based upon the necessary reversal of the judgment of the circuit court.

The costs of the appeal will be paid by the plaintiffs.

1. JUDGES (§ 47*)—DISQUALIFICATION—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

A judge is not disqualified to act in a case merely because he will be a witness on the trial, in view of Shannon's Code, § 5594, expressly providing that the judge is a competent witness for either party in any case tried before him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. §§ 214-219, 222, 223; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

2. JUDGES (§ 49*)—DISQUALIFICATION—BIAS AND PREJUDICE.

A judge is not absolutely disqualified to hear and determine a case merely because he is personally prejudiced against a party; it being left to his personal discretion whether he will act.

3. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT (§ 51*)—DISBARMENT—PRELIMINARY PROCEEDINGS.

Under Shannon's Code, § 5781, authorizing courts to strike from their rolls any practicing attorney or counsel upon satisfactory evidence that he has been guilty of misconduct, section 5782, requiring the charges against an attorney or counsel to be reduced to writing and a copy furnished the party accused, section 5783, prohibiting persons stricken from the rolls to practice in any court, and section 5784, giving such an attorney the right to appeal, the trial judge has the right, and it is his duty, to formulate charges against attorneys, where the matters are wholly or largely within his knowledge, without waiting for any motion by any member of the bar.

4. JUDGES (§ 47*)—DISQUALIFICATION—BIAS AND PREJUDICE.

A trial judge, who, before making charges against an attorney, based on matters within his knowledge, tested his recollection of the matter by consulting others having knowledge thereof, was not thereby disqualified to hear and determine the disbarment proceeding on the ground that he had become the prosecutor; it being necessary for the protection of the bar that judges shall make some preliminary investigation before making such charges.

Certiorari to Court of Civil Appeals.

Proceedings for the disbarment of Robert T. Cameron, an attorney. Judgment disbarring respondent was reversed by the Court of Civil Appeals, and the cause remanded, and the proceeding is brought to the Supreme Court by certiorari. Judgment remanding the case affirmed.

Littleton, Littleton & Littleton, of Chattanooga, for plaintiff in error. M. N. Whitaker, Dist. Atty. Gen., and T. Pope Shepherd, Asst. Dist. Atty. Gen., both of Chattanooga, for the State. Frank Spurlock, Frank M. Thompson, and S. Bartow Strang, all of Chattanooga, opposed.

NEIL, J. In the criminal court of Hamilton county, on January 13, 1912, plaintiff in error was served with the following citation:

"It appearing to the court that Robert T. Cameron is a practicing attorney at this bar, and it further appearing to the court from such facts in the possession of and within the knowledge of the court that said Robert T. Cameron has been guilty of such acts of immorality and impropriety as are inconsistent with the character and incompatible with the faithful discharge of the duties of his profession, that he has been guilty of a studied and matured purpose to commit a fraud upon the court, to wit:

"(1) That said Robert T. Cameron was attorney for and represented one J. E. White in this court at the September term on the charge of unlawfully selling whisky within four miles of a schoolhouse; that said White was convicted of said offense and was fined $250 and sentenced to four months' imprisonment in the workhouse; that a motion for a new trial was made by said Cameron for said White, which was overruled by the court and appeal was granted to the Supreme Court, and defendant given 30 days to file his bill of exceptions. All of the proceedings of said trial were taken in shorthand by M. O. Cates, an experienced and reputable stenographer, and a transcript of his stenographic notes was made by the said Cates and presented to the said Cameron. A bill of exceptions was presented by the said Cameron to Attorney General Whitaker for his approval, with the representation that it was the stenographer's report of said trial. The Attorney General, having confidence in Attorney Cameron, and believing his statement to be true, made a casual examination and approved said bill of exceptions as presented by the said Cameron. The court, understanding that said bill of exceptions was the stenographer's report of said proceedings, made only a slight examination thereof, but discovered that there was no proof in the record showing that the sale of whisky in question was made within four miles of a schoolhouse.

"The court, remembering that such fact was proven and should be in the record, inserted and interlined in the paper presented by Mr. Cameron the words 'within four miles of a schoolhouse where a school was kept,' signed said bill of exceptions, and had it filed.

"During this term of court, on the 9th day of January, 1912, said Robert T. Cameron appeared before the court and asked that said interlineation as aforesaid be stricken out, and stated that such facts were not proven on the trial of said case; that he especially remembered it, and would make affidavit to that effect. The court promised to strike out said interlineation if it should appear that the statements of said Cameron in this respect were true. The said R. T. Cameron knew when he made said statement to the court that it was absolutely false, and he made it for the purpose of deceiving and practicing a fraud upon the court, and for the purpose of fraudulently procuring a new trial for his client before the Supreme Court.

"(2) Said Robert T. Cameron is charged with willfully, knowingly, corruptly, and fraudulently changing and altering the first seven pages of the transcript of the stenographic report furnished him by the said M. O. Cates, which transcript as furnished by said Cates was a correct report of the testimony produced and the proceedings on the trial. The said Cameron inserted five pages of his own composition, which did not correctly state the testimony, and correctly show the proceedings on said trial, and the said Cameron knew that his said statements as shown in said transcript were not correct, but were false and fraudulent. After altering and changing the transcript as aforesaid, the said Robert Cameron presented said paper to the court, with the representation that it was the stenographer's report of the proceedings of said trial. All of this was done by the said Cameron for the purpose of deceiving and defrauding the court, and procuring the court to certify a false and fraudulent bill of exceptions in said case.

"(3) That the said R. T. Cameron further undertook to deceive the court by attempting to have the stenographer, M. O. Cates, who reported the case, to make a statement to the court which was false and misleading in respect to the stenographic report of said case, so as to procure the court to strike out of the bill of exceptions what the court had interlined, to wit, 'within four miles of a schoolhouse where school is kept.'

"It is therefore ordered and adjudged by the court that said Robert T. Cameron be ordered to appear before the court on Saturday, January 20, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m., and show cause why he should not be disbarred from the further practice of law in the courts of this state, and his name stricken from the roll of attorneys.

"It is further ordered by the court that the Attorney General, M. N. Whitaker, and the Assistant Attorney General, T. P. Shepherd, are directed by the court to conduct these proceedings in behalf of the state of Tennessee.

"The clerk is hereby directed to issue citation to said Robert T. Cameron in accordance to this order and furnish him a copy of this order."

On February 13th plaintiff in error appeared by counsel, and moved the court to permit the cause to be heard by some other judge of concurrent jurisdiction, on the ground that Hon. Samuel D. McReynolds was interested in the event of the suit; and in this behalf he invoked article 6, § 11, of the Constitution of the state, which provides as follows: "No judge of the Supreme or any inferior courts shall preside in the trial of any cause in the event of which he may be interested."

In support of this motion he filed the following affidavit:

"In this case Robert T. Cameron makes oath that by and through his counsel he has moved the court to grant him a hearing before some judge who has no interest in the event of this suit. And to that end he has asked, and he now asks, that this honorable court interchange with Hon. T. M. McConnell, chancellor, residing here and now in the city, or Hon. Charles R. Evans, circuit judge, residing here and now in the city, or any circuit judge, chancellor or criminal judge in the state of Tennessee, having concurrent jurisdiction with your honor, Hon. S. D. McReynolds, in matters of this character.

"Protesting all the while his respect for and his confidence in the uprightness and integrity of this honorable court, affiant does not believe that he can get a fair and impartial hearing of the issues before this honorable court for the following reasons, which he humbly begs to respectfully submit:

"First. Your honor, affiant is informed and believes, entered the order against affiant, citing him to appear and show cause why he should not be disbarred; and this order was entered on your honor's own motion, and is in substance a recitation that affiant is guilty of the things with which he is charged. Therefore your honor stands in relation of prosecutor in this case, and to that extent is a party to the suit or proceedings.

"Second. Your honor, affiant is informed and believes, is a witness in the case about a most material matter of fact, and your honor is the only witness against affiant as to the matter of fact; and your honor has on divers occasions and in divers places stated to divers people your honor's version of the conversation between your honor and affiant as to that matter of fact which caused your honor to enter this order, and which is the gist of this action against affiant; and your honor is naturally interested in the event of the suit and in having your honor's version of the controversy sustained and accepted.

"Third. Your honor has, as your affiant is informed, on several occasions expressed feelings of prejudice against affiant, and on one occasion used substantially this language:

"It does not make any difference whether Cameron confesses or not. I can prove his guilt."

"Affiant, protesting his high regard for your honor's position, and yet feeling no more keen resentment than what is human and possible at what your honor may have said in a moment of sudden exasperation, because of some real or reckoned sin of affiant, respectfully and humbly insists that, with this opinion formed and expressed about affiant, your honor, in the nature of things, is bound to have some interest in the event of the suit.

"Affiant avers that your honor is prosecutor and witness, and has, by virtue of your honor's position, selected counsel to represent your honor in the prosecution of affiant; that your honor has expressed the opinion that affiant is guilty of the charges, has caused an order to be entered solemnly declaring and reciting that affiant is guilty, and affiant respectfully and most earnestly insists that your honor is interested in the suit.

"All the time protesting that he means no disrespect to your honor, or your honor's high office, but that he may be tried according to the forms of law, and in the manner prescribed by law, and under the Constitution of his country, affiant makes this affidavit in support of the motion filed, that he may be tried by a court having no strong feeling against him, no fixed opinion as to what the facts of this case are, and no interest in the result."

The court overruled this motion, to which action the plaintiff in error excepted.

Thereupon the cause came on for trial on the merits, and the plaintiff in error introduced his sworn answer, which was treated as his deposition. It was as follows:

"That he is 35 years of age, and has been a practicing member of the Chattanooga bar for a period of 9 years. That he has had, and now has, a remunerative practice, and that his business has been and is in the federal, chancery, circuit, and criminal courts; the greater volume of it being in the circuit courts.

"That he has some criminal practice, and that soon after the May, 1911, term of the criminal court of Hamilton county, he was engaged to defend one J. E. White, indicted at that term for selling intoxicating liquors within four miles of a schoolhouse where school was kept, and for selling liquor without a license."

The presentment was then set out, but it is not necessary to reproduce it here.

"That at the September term, 1911, the case of the state against J. E. White was regularly called on the docket for trial, and that respondent, Cameron, appeared in court as of counsel for White, and applied to the court for a continuance of the case on the grounds and for the reasons that two material witnesses for the defendant White were absent. A subpoena had been issued for one of these witnesses, Sam Johnson, but had not been returned, and on learning of this the day before the trial the defendant White had attempted to locate Johnson in the city and had failed. And said respondent stated to the court that the witness was not absent by the consent or procurement of defendant White, and that he expected to have him present at the next term if a continuance should be granted, and that he expected to prove, and would prove by said Johnson, that Johnson was in the place of business of defendant White when the only witness for the prosecution, one Red Gordon, was alleged to have purchased the liquor, the sale of which the indictment was founded upon, and that Johnson would prove that Gordon did not buy the liquor from the defendant White. That if any whisky had been sold or delivered to Gordon by defendant White, he would have seen it, and that he, Johnson, would prove that said state witness, Gordon, had since the date of the alleged sale of whisky by defendant White confessed to him, Johnson, that he purchased no whisky from defendant White.

"Respondent, on behalf of his client, White, further insisted on a continuance of the case because of the absence of a witness, named Stocks, who would testify that he was in the defendant White's place of business with Johnson when Red Gordon was alleged to have purchased the whisky from White, and that Stocks would testify that Gordon did not make the purchase, that he, Stocks, would have seen it if he had made it, and that no whisky was delivered to Gordon by White.

"Gordon, a negro, was the only witness for the prosecution.

"With these statements treated by agreement as sworn to, the application was overruled by the court, and the defendant put to trial.

"This application for a continuance was made at the morning session of the court, when there was no stenographer present. Court then adjourned, and at the afternoon session respondent renewed his application for a continuance, but did not state his grounds as fully as on the original application.

"Under this state of affairs, the feelings of respondent were considerably wrought upon by the action of the honorable court in what the respondent then considered an arbitrary action in putting his client, whom respondent believed innocent, to trial without his witnesses, and affiant was doubtless more or less ugly, offensive, and unpleasant in the trial of the case, all of which he now deeply regrets. And finally, when the judge, Hon. S. D. McReynolds, called the Attorney General to the judge's stand and carried on a whispered conversation with him for a minute, and the Attorney General turned directly to the witness then in the chair and began to ask questions, respondent supposed and believed the judge had been directing the Attorney General what questions to propound to the witness, and the respondent almost involuntarily and with great feeling exclaimed, substantially:

"I except to the court's action in assisting the Attorney General in this prosecution."

"Whereupon the court fined respondent for contempt of court, and the trial of the case proceeded with increased and increasing bitterness between the respondent and the court.

"Respondent here and now admits that his conduct and bearing toward the court was improper, and he deeply regrets it.

"The case proceeded to a verdict, and the defendant J. E. White was convicted. Respondent made a motion for a new trial, and set out all the grounds hereinbefore named in his application for a continuance, and procured the affidavit of the defendant J. E. White."

The answer then reproduced the several affidavits which were made on the motion for new trial by White and his two witnesses, or persons whom he had desired to use as witnesses on the trial of the said case of State v. White; but they need not be set forth here, as they have no bearing on the controversy as it now stands in this court.

"If respondent's recollection is correct, and he thinks it is, the motion for a new trial was filed on Friday. The following day was motion day in the criminal court, and in the natural course of events the motion for a new trial in the White case was called the following day. When it was called, respondent was engaged in the trial of a criminal case for one of his best clients before a committing magistrate, and, when the clerk of the criminal court called respondent over the telephone and told him that the motion for a new trial in the White case was about to be disposed of by the court, respondent requested the clerk to inform the court of his situation; that is, that he was in the midst of a trial and could not get away, and to ask the court that the motion be heard on another day.

"In response to this the clerk informed respondent that the court would not grant the request. Then the respondent asked the clerk to get the Attorney General to come to the telephone. In response to this the clerk replied that the Attorney General declined to come.

"The court disposed of the motion for a new trial in this way, in the absence of respondent and his client, and overruled the motion, fined respondent's client $250, and sentenced him to four months' imprisonment.

"Respondent went to the clerk to file his affidavits, and was informed by the clerk that his honor, Hon. S. D. McReynolds, had directed that the respondent be not permitted to file the affidavits.

"Respondent honestly believed that his client was innocent, and the court's failure to grant a continuance, and subsequently a new trial on the affidavits, and the action of the court in passing upon the motion for a new trial in the absence of the defendant White and his counsel, and in refusing to continue said motion to another day, was arbitrary, and that it indicates an unfriendly personal feeling, if not a distinct animus, toward respondent, and he was, therefore, thereafter particularly careful to not offend the court or to appear to violate any of its rules.

"In the trial of the White case respondent had a stenographer employed to report the case, and when the proceedings above referred to were had, and the last act in the unpleasant trial before his honor, Judge McReynolds, was over, he requested the stenographer to furnish a transcript of his notes, so that a bill of exceptions might be presented to the court. The stenographer, Mr. M. O. Cates, had this done, and gave to respondent a report. Respondent took said report, and changed the form of application for continuance as may be seen on inspection, getting the application in entirely good form, as he believed, and now believes, stating exactly what occurred, and how it occurred, protecting his client's interest, and making the record he was preparing speak the truth. Respondent changed the form of expression, but it comported exactly with what occurred, and with no view of deceiving the court, or practicing a fraud on the court.

"Respondent put in the report what occurred on the first application for a continuance, because the stenographer was not present at that time.

"On page — of the report furnished respondent by the stenographer, Cates, there was a declaration of the distinguished Attorney General, which was marked 'Question No. 15,' and which was in the following words:

"The place where he sold the liquor was in four miles of a schoolhouse?"

"And the reported response of the witness, Red Gordon, to this declaration on the part of the Attorney General, was: 'Yes, sir.'

"Respondent did not remember that such proof was made, did not believe it was made, does not remember it now, and does not believe it now.

"The alleged question is, and was, in the nature of a declaration by the distinguished Attorney General, and not in the form of a question, and affiant was impressed, when he saw it in the record, that if he had heard it on the trial he certainly would have objected to it as being leading, and suggestive, and unknown to the forms of law, and he did not remember hearing the Attorney General make this alleged question by cutting it out of the report.

"With these changes in the report he took it to Hon. M. N. Whitaker, Attorney General, who is careful and painstaking in matters of this kind, told him it was the stenographer's report, with some changes made by him, respondent, and began to point out in the report the application for a continuance, where he had changed its form to state the true facts, and yet put it in better form. The Attorney General replied substantially as follows:

"I am not going to examine it now, Bob. I have not time. It may be filed as of this date, and you may leave it here. I want to examine it."

"Respondent then left it with the Attorney General for two or three days, until the Attorney General told respondent over the telephone that he could go to his, the Attorney General's, private office and get the record, that he had left it on his desk or table, and that it was all right.

"Respondent then filed it with the court, or the clerk of the court, and it was in the possession of, or at least accessible to, Hon. S. D. McReynolds from that period up until the time that respondent was cited to appear, on having called the judge's attention to the condition of the record.

"Respondent discovered that the said honorable court, S. D. McReynolds, had interlined with a pen, at question 15, these words:

"And within four miles of a schoolhouse where school was kept."

"Respondent knew that said proof was not made, at least he did not believe that it was made, he does not now believe it was made, and he did not then believe it was made, and he, therefore, took the record, and went to Hon. S. D. McReynolds, and complained of this interlineation, and asked that it be stricken out.

"His honor inquired as to what stenographer reported the case, and respondent, after some study, said it was Cates, M. O. Cates. The judge then told respondent to go to the said Cates and have his notes examined, and if that proof was not shown in the note of the stenographer he would strike it out. Respondent did go to Cates, and he here and now expressly and earnestly denies that he attempted to get Cates to deceive the court, or to practice fraud on the court.

"Respondent told Cates what the judge had inserted in the record, and asked Cates to telephone the judge that what he had inserted was not in his notes. Respondent knew that it was not, knows it was not, in the notes, and he did not then believe, and does not now believe, that the proof interlined was made, and he believes that the stenographer will verify his statement.

"Respondent says this in no disrespect to his honor, S. D. McReynolds, and respondent in no way intimates that Judge McReynolds was not acting in good faith when he made the interlineation.

"Respondent is aware that any arbitrary action on the part of the court, or the Attorney General, or action that respondent may have imagined was arbitrary (and he here and now avers that he has no object to reflect on the honor, dignity, or integrity of either of these distinguished officials), would warrant or justify him in deliberately changing a record, whether it was a correct or incorrect record; but he solemnly avers that he had no purpose to change the record, or fraudulently alter it in any way, but he was making the record which he verily believed, and which he now believes, speak the truth. He submitted it to the Attorney General, and left it with him for two days before it became a record authorized to be filed, and he then took it to the court for final inspection before it should become a part of the record. When Hon. S. D. McReynolds entered an order citing him to appear and show cause why he should not be disbarred, respondent was greatly troubled in mind and pained and mortified. The order in itself is a declaration of respondent's guilt. It recites that Robert T. Cameron made an absolutely false statement to the court.

"It recites that he did it for the purpose of practicing fraud on the court.

"It adjudges respondent guilty, and recites that the facts are in the possession of and in the knowledge of the court.

"Respondent was shocked and mortified when he was cited to appear and show cause why he should not be disbarred. He consulted several lawyers, friends of his, and members of the Chattanooga bar, and to a number of them he confided his troubles; and in that state of mind which this great sorrow naturally put him, he said things and did things which in a manner reflected on this honorable court. He has since realized, and he now more fully realizes, that this character of talk and this conduct on his part was highly reprehensible; that it was an unjust and an unwarranted reflection on this honorable court, and he deeply and greatly regrets it, and whatever may be your honor's course in this case, respondent profoundly apologizes for this mark of disrespect to the court, and asks that this honorable court consider the great sorrow that had suddenly come upon him, involving his character, the happiness of his family, and everything that was and is near and dear to him.

"And having fully answered, respondent prays to be hence dismissed."

The next witness was his honor, Judge S. D. McReynolds, who was presiding on the trial which we now have under examination. He testified as follows:

"I can make that statement first, and give you gentlemen the right to ask me any question you may desire.

"The White bill of exceptions was in the hands of the Attorney General, so I was informed. When I saw it, as I remember it, it was presented to me by the clerk. In going over it—although it had been O. K'd by the Attorney General, the court generally looks over these matters—and in looking over this bill of exceptions, I found that 'within four miles of a schoolhouse, where school was kept,' was not in there. The court was of opinion that that was asked, but did not take his own opinion about it, but also inquired of the Attorney General, and perhaps of the assistant clerk, or deputy clerk, who stated he thought it was proven, or words to that effect. And, after the bill of exceptions was on my desk for some time—and by the way, I will say that the bill of exceptions did not reach me within the time—within the time given, but I was informed by the Attorney General that Mr. Cameron had presented the bill of exceptions to him within the time, so the bill of exceptions did not reach me until after the time expired, but I did not want Mr. Cameron to lose his rights in the court by not getting in the hands of the court, so finally

I took up the bill of exceptions. And finally it gets here, and I directed the clerk to mark the bill of exceptions filed within the time, so Mr. Cameron would not lose his rights of appeal, because it had been in the hands of the Attorney General and did not reach the court. I presumed the clerk had marked it. I never thought anything more about it until about the 9th of January. I was in the office, and Mr. Cameron appeared and said he wanted to see me. The court was busy. Just a minute or two afterwards I stepped to the door and called Mr. Cameron. He came into the office and said: 'You have inserted something here which ought not to be here.' He was standing up with the bill of exceptions laid on the arm of the desk turning over to find it. I said: 'In reference to four miles of a school-house?' He said, 'Yes,' knowing that was the correction I remembered having made. He showed it to me, and I said: 'From the best information I can get, that was in there. I asked the Attorney General, and he said it was in there, or said it was proven.' I then asked Mr. Cameron did he have any special knowledge about this matter not being proven. He said he did. He said he would swear to it, and he mentioned it to Mr. Tatum before the trial—before the motion. I said: 'Of course, Mr. Cameron, if this does not belong to the bill of exceptions, and it was not proven, and you can satisfy the court that that is correct, the court will strike it out of the record. While, of course, that means a reversal of the lawsuit, that is neither here nor there; if that was not proven, the court will strike it out.' I then said to him, 'What stenographer was in this case?' I understood him to answer rather this way, 'Marsh.' He said, 'Marsh,' and went on to describe the stenographer that takes notes here sometimes, and that I can mention if you desire. I said to him I would not put much credibility in his reports, because I had had some little experience here with him in another case. He then said, 'Morrison.' I said, 'Do you mean Charlie Morrison?' He said, 'Yes.' The court said to him: 'If it is Charlie Morrison, Buchanan, or Cates, they are all reputable stenographers, and you can see them, and can see about it. If they state to you that it was not in there, I will strike it out'—and asked him to see them. He went out of the office, and left the bill of exceptions. I don't know whether he left it with me, or carried it back to the clerk's office. The court immediately went around to the other court, and found Mr. Morrison, and asked him about it. Mr. Morrison said he was satisfied he was not the man that reported it; that he did not think he reported but one case here. The next morning I was called by Mr. Cates—Gentlemen, I realize this is not competent right here, unless you show that Mr. Cates was instructed or had some authority to speak from Mr. Cameron, but I can give you this statement if you desire that.

"Mr. Jesse Littleton: We do not make any objection, your honor.

"Court (continuing): Mr. Cates then brought me the copy of the transcript which he claimed to have furnished to Mr. Cameron, and I went over it, and I found—

"Mr. Jesse Littleton: Now, if your honor please, it has not been proven to be a copy of the transcript.

"Mr. Whitaker: We will prove that.

"Court: I will stop there. That is all the court can state now, unless you make the others things competent.

"Mr. Jesse Littleton: I will ask your honor this: Will your honor allow me to ask you—after examining Mr. Cates, to ask you two or three questions?

"Court: Yes, sir; any time."

The next witness called was the stenographer, M. O. Cates. This witness testified that he was the stenographer who took the case of State v. White, and that he made a correct record of the proceedings, and that he offered upon the trial of the present case a correct copy of his report, fully compared with his notes.

He further testified that, after his notes were written up, he took the original and carbon copies both to Mr. Cameron, with a bill for both; that he never saw the original copy again until after Judge McReynolds ordered him to bring the carbon to his office. He identified the original copy which he handed to Mr. Cameron.

In making out the identification the witness was asked:

"Look at this copy, and say whether or not that, as a whole, is the document you handed to Mr. Cameron. A. To the best of my knowledge and belief, the first page is, the second page is not, neither is the next, neither is the next. The balance of it is my work, to the best of my knowledge and belief. Q. State whether or not you had the pages numbered when you presented it? A. Yes, sir. Q. There is five pages substituted for seven of your own pages; did you count them? A. I think that is right.

"Mr. Shepherd: Now, if your honor please, without reading these two pages, I will just treat them as read, showing the difference in the two records.

"Court: All right.

"Q. Now, Mr. Cates, the carbon copy that has been introduced is the carbon copy of your notes? A. Yes, sir; that is the carbon copy of the original transcript I delivered to Mr. Cameron."

"Mr. Shepherd: Q. Now, Mr. Cates, did Mr. Cameron come to your office some time after the 9th of January, and make any statement to you with reference to this transcript? A. He came to my office some time during January; I don't know what part of the month. Q. State what he said to you. A. I cannot state the exact words, the language of Mr. Cameron; I can give the substance. Mr. Cameron came to my office and told me what Judge McReynolds inserted in the record, and he said he did not think it was in there. Q. Did he have that record with him? A. He did not. Q. What else did he say? A. He told me that when he went to see the judge about it—now this is the substance of it—the judge insisted that he was not absolutely sure it was in there, neither was Mr. Whitaker sure it was in there. He told me he had changed the form of the application for a continuance to a certain extent, and had called their attention to it, and that it was all right, and then he said that Judge McReynolds told him that, if I would call him up and state that what he had added was not in the record, he would strike it out, and then Mr. Cameron asked me to look at my notes, and [I] looked at them and told Mr. Cameron what was there. Then Mr. Cameron insisted that what the judge had added to the transcript was not in there, and I told him that it was not, and then he asked me to call him up and state that the thing that he had inserted in the transcript was not in my notes. Q. State whether or not you got your carbon copy and showed Mr. Cameron what the carbon copy showed? A. I did not at the time Mr. Cameron was talking about it; I had forgotten that I had a carbon copy. Q. Did you get your notes? A. I did. Q. Read your notes to Mr. Cameron? A. Yes, sir. Q. You read your notes in accordance with that carbon copy, did you not? A. Yes, sir. Q. And then he asked you to call up Judge McReynolds and say to him that the thing was not in your notes?

"Mr. Jesse Littleton: We object, your honor, to Mr. Shepherd stating that.

"A. Yes, sir. He asked me to call up Judge McReynolds and say that what he had inserted, the language, was not in my notes.

"Mr. Jesse Littleton: Was that after you had read the notes to him? A. Yes, sir.

"Mr. Shepherd: Did he ask you to say anything else? A. Did not. Q. Well, did he say anything about the judge doing that, or what was said? A. Well, after I had read the—what my notes showed, why he stated that the way it was, he had left out just a little, and that judge had added a little, and that is the sum and substance of it. Q. Did he state whether or not he still wanted you to call up the judge and make that statement to him? A. I think that was the last thing he said to me as he left the office. Q. Did you call up Judge McReynolds? A. I did. Q. Then later you came to Judge McReynolds' office? A. Yes, sir. Q. And then found the discrepancies? A. Yes, sir; I did not compare the application for continuance. I compared the page to my testimony. Q. What else did Mr. Cameron say about this White case? A. Why, he stated that he had gone to Judge McReynolds and told him he did not believe that was in there, and Judge McReynolds thought it was in there, and thought that another stenographer named Norris had reported the case, and he told him, 'No,' that Cates had reported the case, and that he had done his reporting in that case, and then that Judge McReynolds told him to have me call Judge McReynolds up, and if I would state that was not in there, he would strike it out, and he also made the remark that he would not miss reversing the case for $500."

On cross-examination:

"Q. When he came to you about this matter, he did not offer you any inducement to deceive the court, did he? A. He did not. Q. He did not offer you any inducement, or any reward of any kind, to say anything to the court? A. He did not. Q. He did not intimate that he wanted you to deceive the court, did he? A. He merely asked me to call the court up and say that the language he had added was not in my record. Q. Do you remember what was in that record, Mr. Cates, what part was changed—do you remember what was in there? A. I think so. I have my shorthand notes with me. Q. Look at that question 15, 'The place where he sold that liquor was without [within] four miles of a schoolhouse?' A. That is correct according to my notes. Q. Is that a correct copy? A. Yes, sir. Q. Now, look here, where Judge McReynolds interlines, and compare that: 'In Chattanooga, Hamilton county, and within four miles of a schoolhouse where school is kept.' Is that in your notes? No, sir; not the exact language. Q. It is not in your notes anywhere, 'where school was kept?' A. No, sir. Q. That is not in your notes? A. No, sir. Q. Mr. Cates, did Mr. Cameron ever talk with you about this since that time? A. He never has. Q. He never has mentioned it to you? A. No, sir. Q. He has not sent for you? A. He has not. Q. You have talked with the judge about it and compared notes? A. Yes; when I brought the record over here we talked about it, and we compared the two. Q. And you gave the judge all the information you had relating to it? A. I think I did; yes, sir, all that he asked me to."

Then comes the following in the record:

"Judge S. D. McReynolds, being cross-examined by Mr. Jesse Littleton, testified as follows:

"Q. Has your honor any special recollection of it being proven, 'where school was kept?' A. No; as I stated to Mr. Cameron, that I only had a general recollection now that that was really proven. No; no special recollection that it was proven. Mr. Littleton, I thought it was proven, in reference to 'within four miles of a schoolhouse.' I never considered it very material 'where school was kept.' I inquired about it—asked the Attorney General if he had any recollection of it, and the Attorney General said it was, and he would make affidavit it was, and I inserted it. Q. You not only discussed it with the Attorney General, but with the clerk, or the deputy clerk? A. I think I did mention it to him. Q. Now, then, Judge, the clerk and the Attorney General and you agreed that it was proven? A. Yes, sir; we thought that it was. I do not know that I mentioned 'within four miles of a schoolhouse where school was kept,' because I never thought that was material. Q. Well, did your honor just insert that 'where school was kept' without any recollection? A. General recollection only. Q. And you did not discuss that with the Attorney General? A. I don't think I did—I don't know whether I mentioned 'where school was kept' or not. Q. But you did discuss whether 'within four miles of a schoolhouse' was proven? A. Oh, yes; and he told me he would make affidavit that it was proven. Q. That 'within four miles of a schoolhouse' was proven? A. Yes, sir. Q. The Attorney General did? A. Yes, sir. Q. Now, did the clerk agree with the Attorney General? A. I think he did. Q. Now, then, Judge, after you had discussed this with the Attorney General, you added this, 'within four miles of a schoolhouse where school was kept'? A. Yes, sir. Q. And you have no independent recollection now that it was proven, 'where school was kept'? A. I certainly have not. Q. Did your honor add this in here: 'It was a White Oak whisky bottle'—did your honor add this, 'He said it was'? A. That was made after comparing this—after I got the carbon, merely to show the difference in this page and the page that was furnished him.

"Court: I will state this for you. Mr. Cates called me up, he said at the direction of Mr. Cameron—

"Mr. Jesse Littleton: If your honor please, we object to anything Mr. Cates said.

"Court: Well, Mr. Cates has been on the stand. He said this, and I might tell you what he said Mr. Cameron told him.

"Mr. Jesse Littleton: If your honor please, he had no authority to speak for Mr. Cameron. The only way in which you could make that competent would be to contradict this gentleman. And if your honor please, we do not want to impeach him, and we think it is incompetent.

"Court: What Mr. Cates told me?

"Mr. Jesse Littleton: Yes, sir; we do. We insist that is incompetent in any phase of the lawsuit. That is not a part of the res gestæ; it is hearsay."

The next witness was M. N. Whitaker, the District Attorney General. He testified as follows:

"Q. You are the Attorney General of this circuit, are you, Mr. Whitaker? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you try the case—represent the state in the trial of State v. J. E. White? A. Yes, sir. Q. At the last term of court?

A. Yes, sir. Q. State whether or not you remember whether in the trial of that case it was proved that the sale of whisky in question occurred in four miles of a schoolhouse? A. Yes, sir. Q. You remember that proven? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did Mr. Cameron present to you a transcript of the record in that case? A. The stenographer's report. Q. This transcript of the report? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you O. K. that paper? A. Yes, sir; that is my O. K. on the back of it. Q. State what Mr. Cameron said to you at the time he presented it with reference as to whether or not it was a stenographic record. A. Mr. Cameron came to my office with this bill of exceptions in this case, and, if I remember correctly, it was the last day in which he had to present it under the law, and for that reason he wanted me to pass on it at once. I said to him that I was busy, and did not have time to do it then, but that I would agree that the bill of exceptions be filed as of that date. That was satisfactory to him, and he either indorsed that then on the bill of exceptions or later, and left it there with me, but before leaving I asked him if he had presented me the stenographer's report of the case, and he said he did. So I examined it, either the next day or the day following, I am not sure which, made a very superficial examination of it, because of it being a stenographer's report, and I O. K'd the bill of exceptions without discovering that it did not contain the statement that the whisky was sold within four miles of a schoolhouse. Q. Did Mr. Cameron say anything to you with reference to his having changed it to some extent? A. I am sure he did not, but I am conscious that human memory is frail at the best. If he had stated that to me I would have examined it—examined it carefully. I have no recollection of his telling me that he had changed it in any way, and if he had told me that, I don't believe I would have O. K'd the bill of exceptions without a more careful examination. Q. State whether or not you O. K'd the bill of exceptions under the impression that it was the stenographer's report? A. Yes, sir; I did. Q. State whether or not you knew that the paper had been changed in any way when you presented it to Judge McReynolds? A. I did not. Now, I want to state this: That at the same time I had a bill of exceptions on my desk in another case, I forget what case it was, from Mr. Schoolfield, and I passed up both bills of exceptions at the same time. Mr. Schoolfield's was one of his characteristic bills of exceptions, gotten up according to his own recollections of the case, and I had a lot of trouble trying to correct it, and make it state anything like what I believed the occurrences were, as is usual, and I know I thought at the time that I wished he had presented me a stenographer's report like Mr. Cameron did.

"Mr. Jesse Littleton: We object to what the Attorney General thought.

"Mr. Shepherd: It shows the direction of the Attorney General's—

"Mr. Jesse Littleton: Direction of what he thought; but we object to that, and we move to strike that out.

"Court: Overrule the objection."

On cross-examination:

"Questions by Mr. Jesse Littleton:

"General Whitaker, you say you had two bills of exceptions, one for Mr. Cameron, and one for Mr. Schoolfield? A. Yes, sir; I think Mr. Schoolfield's had been there for several days. Q. How long had this bill of exceptions Mr. Cameron left with you stayed there? A. I am not clear in my mind. I believe about two days. Q. Two days? A. Yes, sir; I think so. Q. And from the day he left it there with you it remained in the same room until you glanced over it and O. K'd it, and then telephoned him to come and get it? A. Yes; after I passed on it, and O. K'd it, I called him up over the telephone, and told him where it was in my office, and told him, if I was not there when he came, he would find it at a certain place, and, if my recollection serves me correctly, he came in my absence and got it. Q. You have tried a great many cases that have been appealed? A. Sir? Q. You have tried a great many cases that have been appealed recently? A. Oh, yes. Q. And so bills of exceptions are being constantly presented to you for your O. K. and approval? A. Oh, yes. Q. You say human memory is frail at best—you do not pretend to recollect, Mr. Whitaker, what conversation occurred between you and the attorney in any particular case in every particular? A. I do not in every case; but I do in this particular case. Q. You remember what occurred between you and Mr. Cameron? A. No; I only— Q. You do not pretend to say that your memory has been impressed with this or that remark? A. How is that? Q. You do not pretend to say that your memory has been impressed with what occurred in this particular case more than in any other? A. No; no; I don't. Q. Now, Mr. Whitaker, in this bill of exceptions that was filed, in which his honor inserted this, have you any recollection of it being proven in the trial that it was 'without four miles of a schoolhouse, where school was kept?' A. I have no recollection on the proposition of where school was kept; I have no recollection of that.

"Mr. Whitaker: That is all for the state.

"Mr. Whitaker: I think the court ought to state whether or not Mr. Cameron disclosed whether or not it was a stenographic report.

"Court: The court has stated the first conversation between Mr. Cameron and himself. And it was on the proposition to strike this out that the court wanted the evidence. And shortly after that Mr. Cameron came up to the court while he was on the bench, and asked me what I was going to do about that White case, and I said to him, 'Things don't look regular about that Mr. Cameron, and you will likely get an opportunity to explain it,' and I asked him—

"Mr. Jesse Littleton: Now, if your honor please, with all due deference to your honor, that does not throw any light on the issues of the case, and is simply a colloquy between your honor and the defendant, and I think it is an injustice to him.

"Court: It was in reference, Mr. Littleton, to this bill of exceptions.

"Mr. Jesse Littleton: Now, your honor has testified as to what occurred between your honor and the defendant at different times.

"Court: That is, as to what occurred in the office. I was going to tell you what occurred at the bench.

"Gen. Whitaker: If it was in relation to the bill of exceptions, if it was what your honor told the defendant—

"Court: After I got it.

"Mr. Jesse Littleton: We object.

"Court (continuing): I said to Mr. Cameron that he would likely get a chance to explain this matter, and he made some remark, and I told him that I found that a question had been substituted in the first witness' examination, and another question left out, and the question left out was, 'Was that within four miles of a schoolhouse?' and he said something about his stenographer copying it, and he told me her name, and then made some remarks about the court not allowing him to file some affidavits. That is as far as the conversation went. I believe he said—I don't know, but I believe he said, a young lady by the name of Miss O'Rear; I don't know whether there is any such young woman or not, but I believe that is what he said."

The defendant then introduced some 14 witnesses, who testified, in substance, that defendant was a person of good repute and of good character. No evidence was introduced in behalf of the state to controvert this.

There was no other evidence introduced upon the trial of the cause.

The trial judge thereupon rendered a judgment holding the defendant guilty on all of the charges made against him, and adjudged him disbarred. From this judgment an appeal was prayed to the Court of Civil Appeals. In that court a decision was rendered to the effect that under the facts appearing in the record Judge McReynolds was disqualified to try the case, and on this ground his judgment was reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

From the foregoing decision a certiorari was prosecuted to this court, and the case is now here for examination and decision.

[1] The first question to be determined is whether Judge McReynolds was disqualified.

Much is said in the brief of counsel for

Mr. Cameron, based on the fact that the trial judge was a witness in the cause. Our statute settles this matter in a few words. It is laid down in Shannon's Code, § 5594: "The judge of a court is a competent witness, for either party, in any case tried before him, either of a civil or criminal nature." This was taken from chapter 13 of the Acts of 1824, and has ever since remained the law of this state, unrepealed and unmodified. However inconvenient or embarrassing it may be for the trial judge to be cross-examined by the attorneys for one side or the other, or for him to pass upon objections to the competency of questions and answers, or whatever may be said as to the policy of the statute, it is the law of this state, and must be obeyed. Questions of policy are for the Legislature.

[2] It is also insisted that the trial judge was personally prejudiced against defendant because of the facts which had transpired during the trial of the case of State v. J. E. White; also on the motion for continuance, and the motion for new trial. Several of the states of the Union have statutes upon this subject, laying down the rule that this will make a judge incompetent. We have no such statute; moreover, we doubt the policy of such legislation. It is entirely conceivable that an upright and honest judge may decide justly and impartially as between his bitter personal enemy and his warm personal friend, administering the rules of law without fear or favor. Such a situation should be left to the personal delicacy of the judge, and not be a matter of absolute law. It is easy to conceive that under the opposite rule an upright and impartial judge would often be recused by affidavits as to his personal prejudices against one party or the other, to the great detriment, embarrassment, and delay of the administration of justice. It is exceedingly easy for litigants and counsel to imagine that a judge is prejudiced against a party, or against his counsel, who has failed to successfully prosecute, or successfully defend, any one or more cases. It is an infirmity of human nature that counsel, whose feelings and personal interests are deeply enlisted in every important case they try, are frequently unable to attribute want of success to the inherent weakness of the case, or to their own shortcomings in the management of it. It is a matter of general knowledge among lawyers that the refuge of defeated counsel is far too often abuse of the court, referred to pithily by lawyers as "cussin' the court." When the tide turns, and success crowns the effort of previously disappointed counsel, his opinion of the intelligence, learning, and probity of the court experiences a high, upward tendency. To allow personal feelings like these on the part of counsel to determine what judge shall try a case, it seems to us, would be disastrous. The new judge selected might not meet the approval of the counsel of the other side, and he would also have to be recused, and so on, resulting in a scramble, undignified and humiliating.

[3] It is also urged that the trial judge acted improperly in making an order on his minutes, formulating charges against the defendant. There is nothing in this. Where the trial judge has information of improper conduct on the part of any member of his bar, it is not only his right, but his duty, to formulate charges, and to appoint counsel to represent the state in the prosecution of such charges. In the present case Judge McReynolds appointed the District Attorney General and his assistant. This was entirely proper. There is no other way authorized by law to initiate such charges, when the matters involved are in the knowledge of the court alone. Of course, it is true that any member of the bar may bring to the knowledge of the court improper conduct on the part of any other attorney, and ask for a rule on such attorney to show cause why he should not be disbarred. However, where the matter on which the disbarment is predicated is wholly or largely within the cognizance of the judge, there is no impropriety in his making the rule himself, without any motion on the part of any member of the bar. Such was the course of this court in the case of In re S. J. Henderson, 88 Tenn. 531, 13 S. W. 413.

The provisions of the Code upon this subject are as follows:

Section 5781: "The several courts of this state may strike from their rolls any person not authorized to practice in such courts, and also any practicing attorney or counsel, upon evidence satisfactory to the court that he has been guilty of such misdemeanor, or acts of immorality or impropriety, as are inconsistent with the character, or incompatible with the faithful discharge, of the duties of his profession."

Section 5782: "If charges are preferred against an attorney or counsel to any court, they shall be reduced to writing, and a copy furnished the party accused, who may appear and show cause against the charges."

Section 5783: "The person stricken from the rolls under either of the foregoing sections, or for other good cause, shall not be permitted to practice the profession in any court of record in this state."

Section 5784: "When any inferior court shall order any attorney thereof to be stricken from its roll of attorneys, or prohibit any attorney from practicing therein, such attorney shall have the right to appeal from such order or refusal to the Supreme Court, as in other cases, and, for that purpose, shall have his bill of exceptions, as in actions at law, and the Supreme Court shall render such judgment as is meet and proper in the premises."

The first three of these sections were taken from the acts of 1815, 1817, and 1821.

As shown in Smith v. State, 1 Yerg. 228, the origin of the practice above outlined is to be found in an old English statute passed in the reign of Henry IV. This statute first provides for placing attorneys upon the roll after examination as to their character and attainments, and as to their taking the oath, and then provides: "And if any such attorney be hereafter notoriously found in any default of record, or otherwise, he shall forswear the court, and never after be received to make any suit in any court of the king. They that be good and virtuous, and of good fame, shall be received and sworn at the discretion of the justice; and if they are notoriously in default or misdemeanor may be removed upon evidence either of record or not of record." It is remarked in the case referred to that this statute has received the sanction of four centuries, and that there is nothing in any provision in any act of assembly of this state which is not in strict affirmance of this old act. The case then proceeds to outline the practice where the charges are initiated by some one other than the judge. It is said that a charge may be exhibited to a judge, in or out of court, alleging the default or misdemeanor complained of, and, if the judge deem the charge sufficient to warrant disbarment, he shall cause the attorney to be furnished with a copy, and cite him to appear in open court, when the proceedings are conducted in all respects as under the British statute. This information, it seems, need not be made to the judge in the form of affidavits filed in open court, but he may take knowledge from any source that may seem to him reliable. On this subject the court said, in the case referred to: "Pleas and demurrers never entered the mind of the Legislature, when prescribing the mode of proceedings by the act of 1815. They only meant that the plain man, ignorant of law, should have a plain remedy against a man of a profession possessing many advantages in skill over him; that his statement should be taken as prima facie true, the same as the affidavits upon which the rule was grounded by the previous practice, requiring legal skill, not always and in all situations to be easily obtained against another lawyer. The practice is a correct one, from which innocence has nothing to fear." From this it appears that the judge of a court may consider information given him by any reputable person in respect of the conduct of the members of his bar, and if he deem this information reliable he may make a rule upon the attorney to show cause why he should not be disbarred.

[4] There can be no sound objection that, before making the rule, the trial judge conducted such investigations on his part as would enable him to ascertain whether there was any probable foundation for the charges. This power in the judge is not only a necessary one to enable him to perform his duty correctly, but it is in its nature highly beneficial to the bar, and has a strong tendency to protect its members against frivolous charges of disappointed litigants. It would, without doubt, be seriously embarrassing, and very unjust to the bar, if it should be held the duty of the judges of this state to make a rule upon an attorney to show cause, upon the mere fact that information of improper conduct had been conveyed to them, without more. It would be equally unfortunate for the proper discipline of the bar, and the purging of unworthy members from its body, if the judge were bound to await formal application in open court by some other member of the bar. We all know how loath are members of the bar to assail another member in this manner, even though he may be guilty, or charged with being guilty, of very bad, disreputable conduct. Under the law the members of the bar are appointed to office by the body of judges, and the power that appoints can likewise remove. As to the method of the exercise of that power, this is to be determined by the court, in the absence of legislative direction.

Now, recurring to the duty of the judge before he causes to be entered a rule against a member of the bar to show cause, we have seen how necessary for the protection of the bar it is that he shall make some investigation in order to ascertain whether the charge is one merely frivolous. In this view we do not think the strictures upon Judge McReynolds contained in the brief of defendant's counsel are well based, wherein they discuss his action in conferring with the District Attorney General and the clerk as to whether the testimony in question had been given in court on the trial of the White Case; that is to say, it was proper for the judge to test his own recollection of the matter by the recollection of others who were present at the trial and heard it. It is not just to characterize such investigation as the preparation of a case by opposing counsel, nor on such facts to charge that the judge was both prosecutor and judge.

It was set forth in the answer of defendant, taken as his deposition, that Judge McReynolds said openly and publicly, in effect, that it did not matter whether defendant confessed the charges or not; that he, the judge, would prove his guilt. It is argued from this that his honor had already decided the case before hearing the defense. There is no contradiction in the record that the judge did make this statement.

It is likewise objected that Judge McReynolds, also in the language of the rule which he caused to be entered, decided the case before it was heard. The rule contains the following preamble and conclusion:

"It appearing to the court that Robert T. Cameron is a practicing attorney at the bar.

and it further appearing to the court, from such facts in the possession of and within the knowledge of the court that said Robert T. Cameron has been guilty of such acts of immorality and impropriety as are inconsistent with the character and incompatible with the faithful discharge of the duties of his profession, that he has been guilty of a studied and matured purpose to commit a fraud upon the court, to wit: [Specifications.] It is therefore ordered and adjudged by the court that said Robert T. Cameron be ordered to appear before the court on Saturday, January 20, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m., and show cause why he should not be disbarred from the further practice of law in the courts of this state, and his name stricken from the roll of attorneys."

The language used indicates that the judge had already decided the matters involved in the citation.

Now the question to be determined is whether a judge is competent to try a case, where he has already decided it against the defendant before the latter has been heard in his defense.

It is provided in article 6, § 11, of the Constitution of 1870:

"No judge of the Supreme or inferior courts shall preside on the trial of any cause in the event of which he may be interested, or where either of the parties shall be connected with him by affinity or consanguinity within such degrees as may be prescribed by law, or in which he may have been of counsel, or in which he may have presided in any inferior court, except by consent of all the parties."

In Shannon's Code, § 5706, it is provided:

"No judge or chancellor shall be competent except by consent of all parties to sit in the following cases: (1) Where he is interested in the event of any cause; (2) or connected with either party by affinity or consanguinity within the sixth degree, computing by the civil law; (3) or has been of counsel in the cause; (4) or has presided on the trial in the inferior court; (5) or in criminal cases for felony where the person upon whom, or upon whose property the felony has been committed is connected with him by affinity or consanguinity within the sixth degree, computing by the civil law."

Neither the Constitution nor the statutory provision covers in terms the case of a judge who has already decided the controversy before he has heard it. We are of the opinion, however, that such a case falls within the meaning of both; that is, of the provision in each that no judge shall preside in any case in which he may have been of counsel, or in which he may have presided in any inferior court. The purpose of these two provisions was to guard against prejudgment of the controversy. It was necessarily supposed, as the basis of these provisions, that where a judge had been of counsel he had already made up his mind as to the merits of the case; equally where he had presided in the trial of the case in the inferior court, and had decided it, or had taken part in the decision of it. Now, it seems idle to assume that it was the intention of the people who made the Constitution, and of the representatives of the people who passed the act reproduced in section 5706, that the mere fact of a judge's having been of counsel, or of his having presided on the trial of a cause in an inferior court, should render him incompetent, when he would be competent to hear a particular controversy which he had already decided before hearing. The fundamental principle is that parties litigant are entitled to an impartial judge. It is only when the people are satisfied that impartial judges decide their controversies that they entertain feelings of reverence for the judgments of the courts of the land. We say the people. We mean the people at large. There are always discontented, unhappy, and morose spirits who will question the good intentions of judges, though they be men of spotless honor and blameless life. Such men have no criterion of praise or blame, except in so far as they can see personal profit or personal loss to themselves, measured by the results of the cases which they conduct before the courts. The views of such persons count for nothing. But it is of immense importance, not only that justice shall be administered to men, but that they shall have no sound reason for supposing that it is not administered. It is of lasting importance that the body of the public should have confidence in the fairness and uprightness of the judges created to serve as dispensers of justice. The continuance of this belief, so long entertained by the people of this country, and so well warranted by the history of the judiciary as a body, is largely essential to the future existence of our institutions in their integrity. We say it is a fundamental principle that the judge shall be impartial. We are aware that there may be a difference of opinion as to the true test, in the absence of constitutional or statutory provisions. The history of English law shows this. Therefore we deem it important that we should stand by the Constitution and the statutes; but, in construing these, they should not be subjected, as we believe, to a mere dry and literal rendering, but should be applied according to the spirit, instead of the mere letter. The reason of the law is the law. Moreover, in addition to the section of the Constitution above referred to, we believe the case falls also within article 1, § 17, which provides: "That all courts shall be open; and every man, for an injury done him in his lands, goods, person, or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law, and right and justice administered without sale, denial, or delay."

Beyond question it is not according to due course of law to compel a man over his protest to try his case before a judge who has already decided it, and has announced that decision in advance of the hearing. It is equally true that such compulsion is a denial of justice.

[6] In what has been said we are not to be understood as holding that a judge can be recused on the ground that he has already decided the case, merely by motion supported by affidavits so stating. It must appear, as in the present case, beyond any doubt that such decision has been made. If the judge deny such to be the fact, that ends the controversy; and it cannot be pursued further, or re-examined on that point in this court. This is the rule established in cases of mandamus upon judges to incorporate into bills of exceptions matters of evidence alleged by the petition to have been wrongly excluded. If the judge returns there was no such evidence, that ends the matter. State ex rel. v. L. P. Cooper, 107 Tenn. 202, 64 S. W. 50; State ex rel. v. Maiden, 110 Tenn. 487, 75 S. W. 710. By referring to these cases it is not meant that a judge must, in the kind of case before us, make denial on special oath when so charged. Any statement by him on the subject must be regarded as made under his official oath.

In what we have said we do not desire to be understood as indulging in harsh criticism of Judge McReynolds. The record of this case shows that he was sorely tried by the very bad conduct which defendant confesses to in his answer, and for which he furnished a very late apology. It was very natural that Judge McReynolds, after having been subjected to such disrespectful treatment at the hands of Mr. Cameron during the trial of the case of State v. White, should have felt some resentment therefor, and thus have been hurried into a hasty determination of the matters involved in the present case. Of course, it was his duty, sitting as a judge on the bench, to suppress every feeling of personal resentment, and to forbear the decision of the case, even in his own mind, until he should hear the evidence and the arguments of counsel, and it was entirely possible to do so. It would have been far safer, however, and more in accordance with the proprieties of the situation, after having formulated the charges (in the form of charges, and not of decision), to have interchanged with some other judge to try the case, in view of the personal feeling which he entertained by reason of the gross discourtesy to which he had been subjected by counsel in the matters leading up to the present controversy. He did not, however, do this, nor was he bound to do so; but he was bound not to decide the case in advance, either orally or by a decision put upon the record, as shown by his language copied into this opinion. Having so decided the matter, he immediately became incompetent to try it. It was then his duty to interchange with some other judge for the trial of this particular case, or to call some other judge to sit for him in his court and hear the case.

[7] It is insisted in behalf of the state that, notwithstanding the incompetency of Judge McReynolds, this court should proceed to try the case de novo, and render such judgment as he ought to have rendered, according to the rule laid down in chapter 32 of the Public Acts of 1911. But the mere statement of the rule shows the unsoundness of the suggestion, since the trial judge should not have entered any judgment at all, being incompetent as he was. Chapter 32 has no bearing upon such situation. That chapter presupposes a competent judge, and the duty of this court to re-examine his proceedings for error. It is provided in that act that no verdict or judgment shall be set aside, or a new trial granted, on the ground of error in the charge of the judge to the jury, or on account of the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or for error in acting on any pleading, or for any error in procedure—all of which things presuppose a competent judge in charge of the case, passing on questions of pleading, evidence, and procedure, and giving instructions to the jury. It is provided in the statute referred to that the appellate courts of this state shall not reverse on any of the grounds stated, unless it shall affirmatively appear that the error complained of has affected the results of the trial. Whose error? Manifestly the error of a competent judge in charge of the case in the court below. To apply this statute to a case where the judge is incompetent, and his incompetency not only not waived, but openly objected to, would be not only to deprive the litigant of his right to his trial in a court of first instance, but would require this court to exercise original jurisdiction, since there is no doubt that under such circumstances the judgment of the court below is simply void. Reams v. Kearns, 5 Cold. 217; Smith v. Pearce, 6 Baxt. 72; Mathis v. State, 3 Helsk. 127. These cases are subsequently qualified on another point in Holmes v. Eason, 8 Lea, 754, and Posey v. Eaton, 9 Lea, 500, and Crozier v. Goodwin, 1 Lea, 125. It was held that they were erroneously determined in so far as they decided that the judgment was void when rendered by an incompetent judge; no objection to his competency appearing to have been made at the time by either of the parties. It was held that in such case the incompetency was waived. In Holmes v. Eason the court said: "At common law, it was well settled that, although no judge ought to act where, from interest or from any other cause, he is supposed to be partial to one of the suitors, yet his action in such case was regarded as an error or irregularity not affecting his jurisdiction, and to be corrected by a vacation or reversal of his judgment, except in the case of those inferior tribunals from which no appeal or writ of error lies.

Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal Co., 16 Eng. L. & Eq. 63; Washington Ins. Co. v. Price, 1 Hopk. Ch. (N. Y.) 1. And, generally, if the facts are known to the party recusing, he is bound to make his objection before issue joined, and before the trial is commenced; otherwise he will be deemed to have waived the objection in cases where the statute does not make the proceedings void. Moses v. Julian, 45 N. H. 52, 84 Am. Dec. 114; Shropshire v. State, 7 Eng. (12 Ark.) 190. The decisions of this court first above cited are in accord with these conclusions. If the objection be raised of record, and the court undertake to proceed notwithstanding, the judgment might be held void under these principles, as was done in Reams v. Kearns. But if no objection be made, and the court is permitted to go to a trial of the case on the merits, the judgment is clearly not void on its face, and something more than the mere existence of the fact on which the incompetency rests should be required to authorize a resort to another tribunal. The terms of the statute are sufficiently met by holding the proceedings invalid if the objections be made, unless the incompetency be waived in the mode prescribed by the statute. In this view, the judgment would be voidable, not void, in all cases in which the record failed to show the preliminary objection." In the present case, as we have already noted, due objection was made in the trial court.

It was held in Wroe v. Greer, 2 Swan, 172, that where a case was tried before a justice of the peace, who was incompetent, and then appealed to the circuit court, the trial might proceed, regardless of the incompetency of the justice of the peace, because, it was said, the appeal vacated his judgment, and that the trial in the circuit court was de novo. We have no case in this state that follows Wroe v. Greer on this special point. Under all of the other cases the rule appears to have been to reverse and remand. In Holmes v. Eason, supra, such is stated to have been the rule at common law, citing Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal Co., 16 Eng. L. & Eq. 63. This case is also cited with approval in Harrison v. Wisdom, 7 Heisk. 99, 111. And see Arnold v. Embree, Peck, 134; Witt v. Russey, 10 Humph. 208, 51 Am. Dec. 701, Mason v. Westmoreland, 1 Head, 555, and Reams v. Kearns, supra, in which the practice seems to have been used, or stated as the proper course, without discussion or doubt. It is true that all of these cases, except Reams v. Kearns, arose on a want of jurisdiction of the subject-matter in the justice of the peace; the amounts sued for being beyond that jurisdiction, though within that of the circuit court. The principle is the same, however, as where a judgment has been rendered by a judge in the lower court who was personally incompetent—that is, without jurisdiction or power to try the case —where that incompetency was not waived, but expressly objected to before him. An appeal from such a judgment in the circuit or chancery court could not confer power upon the Supreme Court to dispose of the merits of the controversy; nor could the transfer of the cause to this court by the writ of certiorari have that effect. All that this court ought to do, or could do, in such a case, would be, in the exercise of its supervisory power over all inferior tribunals, to reverse and remand for a lawful trial. Having discovered this first and cardinal error, it will go no further. It was so held in Reams v. Kearns. Parties have the right to have their cases tried before the regularly constituted tribunals of the state, and neither the judges of this court, nor the judges of any inferior courts, can deprive them of it. A court is not lawfully constituted, as to the special case, if the judge is incompetent to try it, and his incompetency is objected to at the time. As to that case it is the same as no court if the judge be incompetent. It is not only the right of a party under the distribution of judiciary powers directed by the Constitution, and ascertained and formulated by legislative acts, to have his case first tried in the lower court; but it is important that he should have the benefit of those proceedings, not only for the aid they may furnish on a subsequent trial in this court, or the Court of Civil Appeals, but also because of the possibility of a termination of the controversy in that court without the expense and delay of a trial in an appellate court. A denial of such preliminary trial is a deprivation of the right guaranteed to every citizen to have his case tried according to due course of law, and is a violation of article 1, § 17, of the Constitution, supra. There is one case, however, Bolling v. Anderson, 4 Baxt. 550, where, among many other objections taken to the decree of the chancellor, one was that he was incompetent to try the case. Without discussing the question of practice, the court, after considering all the points, reversed the decree and discharged the garnishment. It was shown in that case that the judgment nisi was pronounced against one Turley, as garnishee, by Chancellor Harrison, who, it appeared on the record, was incompetent. The court said that the decree must fall on that ground, and also on the ground that no notice of the garnishment had been served on the garnishee, Turley; that sci. fa. was ordered issued returnable to the first Monday in December, but was made returnable to the first Monday in February. On these grounds the court considered the case and reversed the decree. The question of practice was not discussed.

The case of Wroe v. Greer was decided upon two points: First, that the incompetency of the justice of the peace was waived, because the party failed to make the objection before him; secondly, in the alternative, that, even if it had not been waived, it would cease to have any application to the case, because the appeal to the circuit court had the effect to supersede the judgment of the justice of the peace, and the case was tried de novo upon its merits before a competent court. The court said it was the same as if the case had been originally instituted, as it might have been, in the circuit court. "The question" (said the court) "whether the competency of the justice had been waived while the case was before him had ceased to be of any utility or effect in the case, now that it was no longer before him, and was again to be tried upon its original facts in the same manner as if there had been no former trial." It is also true that in disbarment proceedings, on appeal to this court, the case is tried de novo. Ralph Davis v. State, 92 Tenn. 684, 23 S. W. 59. So far the analogy between the two cases holds. But it fails in one essential point. After an appeal to the circuit court from a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, the witnesses are introduced in the circuit court just as if there never had been any trial before the justice. The case comes before the circuit court simply upon the warrant, and the return of the officer showing service. In the case now under examination, however, the evidence was taken in open court, and objections were offered to testimony, and rulings thereon made by the disqualified judge—all preserved by a bill of exceptions. In other words, he presided at the trial, which we are to review for the purpose of discovering whether there were any errors committed. While a trial de novo in this court on appeal from a decree of the chancery court must be had without giving any weight whatever to the findings of the trial judge, yet there are various orders which can and do very materially limit at times the scope of the relief that can be granted by this court. The same is true, of course, on appeals of the same nature from a circuit or criminal court, with the added disadvantage that the disqualified judge has to pass upon the report of the evidence contained in the bill of exceptions, and authenticate that instrument, and make it a part of that record of the cause. On the contrary, on an appeal from a justice of the peace's judgment the case is absolutely open, on new evidence, just as if there had never been a trial before him. We are of the opinion, therefore, that Wroe v. Greer must stand upon its own facts, and that it is not an authority for such a case as we have before us.

It results that we affirm the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals in remanding the case for new trial before a competent judge. We do not, however, agree with that court in all the reasons which it gave for its decision, or further than that, on disqualification of the judge appearing, the case should be reversed and remanded. We do not express any opinion whatever on the facts of the case, deeming it improper to do so, inasmuch as the facts must come before a trial judge, and be heard and first passed on by him.

3. MARRIAGE (§ 40*)—PRESUMPTION OF CONTINUANCE—MARRIAGE.

A marriage once shown to exist is, as a rule, presumed to continue until the contrary is shown.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marriage, Cent. Dig. §§ 58-69; 79; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

4. EVIDENCE (§ 60*)—PRESUMPTIONS.

All things are presumed in favor of life, liberty, and innocence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 81; Dec. Dig. § 60.*]

5. BASTARDS (§ 3*)—PRESUMPTION.

Since a wrong is never presumed in absence of proof to the contrary, it is presumed that a child is legitimate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bastards, Cent. Dig. §§ 4, 5; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

6. BASTARDS (§ 3*)—CONFLICTING PRESUMPTIONS.

The presumption that a marriage once established continues must give way to the presumption in favor of the legitimacy of children born to one of the parties while thereafter living with another person in such manner as to constitute a common-law marriage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bastards, Cent. Dig. §§ 4, 5; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

7. MARRIAGE (§ 50*)—COMMON-LAW MARRIAGE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence in an action to try title held to show a common-law marriage between the persons named.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marriage, Cent. Dig. §§ 79-89; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

8. MARRIAGE (§ 50*)—COMMON-LAW MARRIAGE—PROOF.

Strong proof is necessary to establish a common-law marriage.

9. EVIDENCE (§ 159*)—BEST EVIDENCE.

While the law requires the best proof the case is susceptible of, it does not require impossibilities such as the production of records of the courts of another state, and, where the nonexistence of a divorce decree in another state was in issue, the best evidence of its nonexistence would be the evidence of the custodian of the divorce records of the courts of such state or other person familiar with such records, and evidence by a judge of the county court, justice of the peace, and notary public of a county in Missouri that he searched the records of a certain county in another state and found no divorce decree was not the best evidence of the fact that no divorce had been granted in that county.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 471, 474; Dec. Dig. § 159.*]

10. EVIDENCE (§ 586*)—WRIGHT—NEGATIVE TESTIMONY.

Evidence in an action to establish title held not to show that a divorce was not granted to certain persons in a certain county in Arkansas.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2432-2435; Dec. Dig. § 586.*]

11. BASTARDS (§ 6*)—PRESUMPTION OF LEGITIMACY.

At common law a child was considered legitimate if the husband was shown to have been within the four seas within a certain period, and was capable of issue, and at the present time a child will not be adjudged illegitimate unless it cannot be prevented.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bastards, Cent. Dig. §§ 9, 10; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

12. BASTARDS (§ 1*)—PRESUMPTION OF LEGITIMACY—"DECREED"—"DEEMED."

The father of the child in question by his alleged second marriage had previously married, and he and his wife parted and lived apart. It was not shown that either of them procured a divorce, but he afterwards ran away with another woman, and they subsequently came back to the neighborhood where his former wife resided and to her knowledge lived together openly and notoriously as man and wife and discharged all of the duties of that relation toward each other until he died. Rev. St. 1909, § 342, provides that the issue of all marriages "decreed null in law or dissolved by divorce shall be legitimate." Held, that the word "decreed" was substantially equivalent to the word "deemed," which was used in the statute as it formerly stood, and, under the statute as construed, the children begotten by the husband of his alleged second wife were legitimate.

Graves and Woodson, JJ., dissenting.

In Banc. Appeal from Circuit Court, Pemiscot County; Henry C. Riley, Judge.

Action by Addie Nelson and another against Talitha Jones and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded for decree as directed.

Ward & Collins, of Caruthersville, for appellants. Arthur L. Oliver, of Caruthersville, for respondents.

LAMM, J. In November, 1906, plaintiffs sued to try and to determine title to 77.15 acres of land in Pemiscot county, described by metes and bounds in the petition, and lying on the state line. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal.

John Jones was the common source of title. His first wife was Emma Perry. By her he had a daughter, Addie, now intermarried with Nelson, her coplaintiff. Some two years after the birth of Addie, John and Emma separated, and Emma (while John was yet alive) married Luther Brown, a minister of the gospel. Afterward she died. John (it is claimed by defendants and denied by plaintiffs) married Lizzie C. Harrington during the life of his first spouse. Afterwards John was killed. Defendants Talitha, Josie, and George Jones are his infant children by her. After John's death, Lizzie C. intermarried with her codefendant, William Chism. All parties live in Arkansas.

The main issues threshed out below were divorce, marriage, and bastardy. The pleadings, proofs, and admissions are such that (unless Addie is estopped to claim an exclusive title) she inherits the land if she be the only legitimate child and sole heir of John Jones. Contra, if the infant defendants are his legitimate children, then Addie inherits only an undivided one-fourth and they the remaining three-fourths. So, if Lizzie C. was lawfully married to John Jones, she is endowed. If, however, she was not, then she is not. There was another issue, viz.: It is alleged in the answer that Addie and the defendants (as joint plaintiffs) brought a suit against one Briggance (the source or character of Briggance's title does not appear) to determine title in 1906 to the same land in the Pemiscot circuit court; that such proceeding ripened into a decree vesting the title out of Briggance and into them; and that defendants, at the instance and by the procurement and acquiescence of plaintiff Addie, were put to such efforts, trouble, outlays, and expense in and about that proceeding as raised an estoppel, wherefrom they plead estoppel in aid of their title. By replication Addie admits such Briggance suit, but pleads her minority by way of avoiding the force of the estoppel.

The cause was tried to the court, and, though instructions were asked for defendants, yet the nature of the relief sought, together with the issue of estoppel raised by the answer and the form of the judgment, put the case, we think, in equity. We have been inclined to view suits to determine and decree title as of equitable cognizance except where the issues are so framed by the pleadings as to make the proceeding a lawsuit. There is nothing in the pleadings in this case showing either party entitled to a jury. In this view of it, we shall review the facts and determine the case on our own estimate of them, giving to the court below the proper advantage of position in weighing oral testimony. The facts are these: Mississippi county, Ark., is just across the line from Pemiscot county, Mo. About 1886 there lived on the North Chickasawba in said Mississippi county John Jones and Emma Perry. About 1886 or 1887 they were married by a justice of the peace. Their families lived not a great ways apart, and both the Perrys and the Joneses were farmers. After his marriage John cropped in the neighborhood for four or five years. As said, some two years after Addie was born John and Emma separated. There lived not far away one Harrington. Harrington had a daughter, Lizzie C. Emma Jones and Lizzie Harrington were "girls together," and, though Harrington moved about a good deal, yet the young women knew each other pretty well. Whether it was John or Emma at fault in the separation does not appear. The best we can make out is that their ways parted about 1891. They never lived together as husband and wife thereafter, or in any wise recognized any conjugal duty to each other. She returned to her father's house with her baby, and John raised a crop and stayed in the neighborhood with his acquaintances for a time variously estimated at from four to eight months, when, to use the phrase of the witnesses, he "ran away" with Lizzie Harrington.

Miss Harrington's sister "ran away" at the same time with one Reece. They one and all floated in a dugout or canoe from North Chickasawba to a place or creek called "Marked Tree," there took a train to West Memphis, there crossed the Mississippi river, and went on to Bolivar county in the state of Mississippi. On the way to Bolivar county, they stopped at a way station, according to Lizzie's account, and both these runaway couples there hastily married; a man officiating who "looked like" a minister, and there is faint evidence of a "license." Reece did not testify, and his whereabouts are unknown. Lizzie's sister did not testify. She seems to have afterwards married a man named Scallion, but, whether she is living or 'dead, Lizzie said she did not know. After several months Jones and she come back to Yarbro, Mississippi county, Ark., hard by North Chickasawba, and there, all the testimony shows, they lived together and held each other out as man and wife in the face of all men and to the knowledge of their old acquaintances and kinsfolk. She was thenceforward known as Mrs. Jones. Not far away at the time lived Emma, the first wife, and the testimony tends to show she knew they were consorting publicly together as man and wife and holding themselves out as such. After one or two years they moved a little ways north just over the state line into Missouri, about 10 miles from Yarbro and North Chickasawba, and settled on the farm in question which Jones then bought. While at Yarbro he got his child, Addie, and kept her in his family. While not quite clear, yet we gather, when Jones made that move, he took Addie with him and kept her there at his new home with his putative new wife until he was killed on June 2, 1896. At their new home in Pemiscot county, as in their old in Mississippi county, Ark., John Jones and Lizzie lived continuously, openly, and habitually as man and wife, the neighborhood recognized and treated them as such, and this recognized and reputed relation continued down, as said, to the day of his death. There is no countervailing testimony on this phase of the case. In the meantime there was born to the twain three children, the infant defendants, and these three with Addie, supervised and mothered by Lizzie C., made up his household. During all this time, as said, his first wife lived a few miles away in Arkansas. While the testimony on behalf of plaintiff leaves the matter in doubt, yet it sufficiently appears from other testimony that the first wife intermarried with Luther Brown, a preacher, during the lifetime of John Jones, as said, and had a child by him. Straightway on the death of John Jones the first wife claimed Addie and took her away. There was no record of a divorce by either John or Emma from the other introduced in evidence. The records of Mississippi county, Ark., were searched for such record by Mr. Ballard, one of plaintiffs' attorneys, but he found no such record. Lizzie testified that before she ran away with Jones, when he asked her to marry him, he told her he had a divorce; that she believed him without making further inquiry, and married him in good faith as a single man. She lived some distance from Osceola, the county seat (30 miles, with no railroad), and had never been there. We take it the road there at that time lay through swamps and was not an inviting line of travel. She explained her elopement by saying that her father objected to Jones as a suitor for her hand because he (Jones) was a "widower" and "kind of rough." On behalf of plaintiff, the brother of the first wife was allowed to testify, over the objections of defendants' counsel, that Emma Jones was never divorced from John, and that John Jones was never divorced from Emma. He testified further that, if they had been divorced, he would have known of it "by the report." He was allowed to testify that the community of North Chickasawba, his home region, would have known of such divorce by "neighborhood rumor," if there had been one; also that once when he called at the house of John Jones in 1895 John and Lizzie "got in a racket" and he heard John say to her they were not married. This she denied. Elsewhere in his testimony he said Jones told him so three or four times. One Hicks was also allowed to testify, over objection, that Reece told him on the return from Bolivar county that "they were not married."

At the time of the trial, the land was not occupied. Most of it was not cleared. The little bit that had been under the plow had again run wild, and we infer the total value was small. Questions hinging on challenges to some of plaintiffs' testimony and adverse rulings below are in the case, and, if it is necessary to determine those questions, the facts will appear further along, as well as any other facts vital to the justice of the case.

As to the issue of estoppel, it is out of the case on appeal. When Mrs. Nelson was on the stand, she testified she became of age October 18, 1906. This was after all four children brought a suit through their joint guardian and curator against Briggance to reinvest themselves with title. The Briggance suit was determined on the 8th of August, 1906. The record shows that on that day it was adjudged in that suit that "the plaintiffs [the four children] are the owners of the property, and the defendants have no interest in the property." When Mr. Ballard, one of plaintiffs' counsel in this suit, and plaintiffs' counsel in the Briggance suit, was on the stand, a question was asked him, on cross-examination, intended to elicit facts creating an estoppel. On objection, evidence of that character was ruled out. That ruling was put upon the foot that Addie Nelson was a minor at the time. We do not read the briefs of appellants' counsel as predicated error of that ruling, or that they claim title through the judgment in the Briggance suit. Indeed, counsel treat the whole matter as of little or no appellate value.

[1] There is no plea of res adjudicata in the case, and we need not look into that matter or estoppel. Accordingly those questions are put to one side.

A foreword to the opinion may not be amiss, viz.: In the presence of blameless and innocent children, and in the presence of a situation made sordid and squalid by ignorance and poverty, all of which appear in the lines and between the lines of this record, the facts (read through judicial blushes) bespeak judicial charity and mercy to the very verge of the law to work out a just result. In our opinion the judgment is wrong and should be reversed. This because:

[2] (a) Of divorce, marriage, and bastardy. There is a presumption that, when a status is once established, it is generally presumed to continue until the contrary is made manifest by the proof. That sensible presumption (subject to exceptions) is of everyday use in the affairs of man, and such presumption is a legal one constantly applied by courts.

[3] Under it a status of marriage once shown might be presumed to continue until he who asserts the contrary establishes its discontinuance by divorce. But in all enlightened systems of jurisprudence it has been found necessary to make exceptions to general rules, which by reason of their universality are sometimes found deficient to attain the full ends of justice in a given case. Such exceptions, when well established as grounded on principle, are as potent as the general rule itself.

[4] There is a primary maxim of the law that, in favor of life, liberty, and innocence, all things are to be presumed. (In favorem vitæ, etc.)

[5] There is another: A wrong is not to be presumed. There are presumptions springing from the loins of those noble maxims which are the crowning glory of our law, viz., that the law presumes innocence, not guilt; morality, not immorality; marriage, not concubinage; legitimacy, not bastardy.

[6] Accordingly, when the presumption that a marriage once established continues to exist is confronted, under proper proof, by presumptions in favor of innocence rather than crime, in favor of morality instead of vice, the former presumption gives way and the latter obtain. So that the settled law in this jurisdiction is that if A. and B. are married, and afterward A. and C., by virtue of a common-law or ceremonial marriage, consort together as husband and wife during B.'s life, under the circumstances disclosed in this record, the burden of proof that A. and B. were not divorced (and that consequently the relations between A. and C. are meretricious and criminal) is upon the party asserting the fact, though it is a negative fact and hard to prove. On plaintiffs, then, was the burden to prove the negative fact that there was no divorce between John Jones and Emma Jones. We have been so lately and fully over this matter, speaking through our Brother Graves, in the Johnson Case, infra, that it would be unseemly and smacking of vanity in the writer to attempt to further expound the law. Johnson v. Railways, 203 Mo. loc. cit. 401, 101 S. W. 641, et seq. and cases cited. That case was followed in the later case of Maler v. Brock, 222 Mo. 74, 120 S. W. 1167, 133 Am. St. Rep. 513, 17 Ann. Cas. 673. Vide, Plattner v. Plattner, 116 Mo. App. loc. cit. 412, 91 S. W. 457; Bishop v. Brittain Inv. Co., 229 Mo. loc. cit. 729, 129 S. W. 668, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 568, et seq.

[7] That there was at least a common-law marriage between Harrington and Jones is sufficiently established. For several years they openly held themselves forth to the world in the neighborhood of their old acquaintances and kinsfolk by the manner of their daily life, by conduct, demeanor, and habit, as man and wife. They assumed that mutual relation apparently in good faith. The community accepted it. Children were born to them. They established a home to which Jones took his child by his first wife and reared her. They seem to have been treated as husband and wife by the relatives of both women. It is unthinkable that in a Christian community, however primitive, the first wife and her relatives would have permitted Addle to remain in the Jones' household if they thought him hatching a brood of bastards in a wanton nest. Did they knowingly subject her to the domination and teaching of an immoral woman? On what decent theory did the first Mrs. Jones remarry except on the assumption she was divorced? The main witness for plaintiff, the brother of the first Mrs. Jones, puts himself in the attitude of eating salt at Jones' table in a house desecrated and dishonored by flaunted lust, if his theory as a witness be accepted.

[8] This court has put itself on record as in favor of stringent proof of common-law marriages. Bishop v. Brittain Inv. Co., supra. We think the proof in this case meets the rigid and wholesome requirement of that case. It comes within the facts and doctrine of a line of Missouri cases cited in appellants' brief (q. v.). Deeming a common-law marriage established, plaintiffs did not successfully carry the burden of showing no divorce. Two or three witnesses who knew the parties spoke of never hearing any one speak of a divorce. They were allowed to tell there was no neighborhood rumor of one. But that character of proof, if of any value at all, is not the cogent proof required by them to overcome the strong presumption of innocence.

Mr. Ballard, as said, one of plaintiffs' attorneys, described himself on the witness stand as judge of the county court, justice of the peace, and notary public in Pemiscot county. Assuming he has the astuteness and learning appurtenant and appertaining to that aggregation of offices, yet we cannot assume that his investigation of the court records of the courts of another state furnishes the best evidence of their contents. He went to Osceola, in Mississippi county, Ark., a few days before the trial, searched the records there, and was allowed to testify that he found no decree of divorce between John Jones and Emma Jones.

[9] The law requires the best proof the case is susceptible of. It does not require impossibilities, and therefore did not require the production in our courts of the records of the courts of a sister state. Where there is a mass of records to examine, the law does not require the production of certified copies of all of them to prove the negative fact that a certain decree cannot be found. Such proof may rest in parol ex necessitate rel. But there should and could have been furnished the testimony of the custodian of those records, or of other persons who qualified as familiar with them and all of them, in order that the negative fact might be clearly shown. Mr. Ballard testified he examined certain books and indexes. How did the trial court know they were all of the minute books, record books, and indexes? All the trial court knew in that behalf he knew from what Ballard testified. How could a stranger to these records like Ballard know? As figs do not grow on thorns, neither does certainty grow on uncertainty. In Chilton v. Metcalf, 234 Mo. 27, 136 S. W. 701, where evidence of the same character was elicited from the clerk of the court himself, comment is made upon the fact that the clerk's evidence did not satisfactorily account for all the records.

[10] While creating suspicion and doubt, yet we hold the testimony too loose and insufficient to clearly prove there was no divorce at Osceola. Moreover, why should we assume the doubtful fact that Emma Jones may not have acquired a residence elsewhere than in Mississippi county, where she herself could have procured a divorce?

[11] It is common learning that under the old common law, in aid of legitimacy of children, if the husband be shown to have been "within the four seas" within a stated period, and was capable of begetting issue, the wife's child was allowed to be legitimate. That liberal rule bespeaks an ancient and rooted judicial tenderness toward children. Neither in old nor in modern times has it ever been allowed just to hold a child a bastard unless there is no judicial escape from that dire conclusion. The premises considered, the Scotch form of verdict, "not proved," must be our judicial finding on the negative issue of no divorce and on the issue of bastardy.

[12] (b) There is another view of the case equally conclusive, viz.: In our statute of descents and distribution is the following: "The issue of all marriages decreed null in law, or dissolved by divorce, shall be legitimate." R. S. 1909, § 342. That statute once read: " * * * And the issue of all marriages deemed null in law or dissolved by divorce shall nevertheless be legitimate." R. S. 1825, p. 328, § 8. For the first time in Gen. St. 1865, p. 519, § 11, the statute uses the word "decreed" instead of the former word "deemed"; and, as there changed, it has been handed down as live written law to this very day. When that change in the statute was first brought to the attention of the courts, the notion was indulged that probably the change was a clerical error. Pratt v. Pratt, 5 Mo. App. loc. cit. 544. However, in Green v. Green, 126 Mo. 17, 28 S. W. 752, 1008, it was held that, if the change had only appeared in one revision, it could justly be held an inadvertence. But since it appeared continuously in subsequent revisions, this court would assume it was intentionally used. On that assumption we held the word "decreed," in a technical sense, is almost meaningless in practical effect; further that the Legislature did not intend its meaning should be materially different from the word "deemed" in the original act. 126 Mo. at page 24, 28 S. W. 752, 1008. Adopting that view of it on the reasoning of the Green Case, then we fall back upon the exposition of the act as it originally read. There is a wealth of such exposition in our reports. The student in jurisprudence, curious to follow the stream of law interpretation up to its original source, is referred, for the philosophy and application of that statute, to Lincecum v. Lincecum, 3 Mo. 441; Johnson v. Johnson, 30 Mo. 72, 77 Am. Dec. 598; Buchanan v. Harvey, 35 Mo. 276; Dyer v. Brannock, 66 Mo. loc. cit. 418, 27 Am. Rep. 359, et seq.; Boyer v. Dively, 58 Mo. 510; Green v. Green, supra; Gates v. Seibert, 157 Mo. loc. cit. 272, 57 S. W. 1065, 80 Am. St. Rep. 625, et seq.

In the Lincecum Case a man had a second wife in Missouri and a first wife in South Carolina. The children of the second marriage were allowed to share in the estate with those of the first. In the Johnson Case there was a common-law marriage with an Indian woman, a daughter of Keokuk, and children were born thereof. Afterwards Johnson sent Keokuk's daughter back to her tribe, thereby exercising a tribal law right so to do. Afterwards, on the eve of his marriage to a white woman, he declared himself a bachelor. Afterwards he reared his Indian children as his own, educated them, and gave them a place in his social circle. We held them legitimate. In the Buchanan Case, Harvey, while residing with a band of the Blackfeet tribe of Indians on the upper Missouri, where under Indian custom polygamy was lawful, married two squaws and died in the Indian country leaving a daughter by each, Susan and Adeline. In the distribution under an administration in St. Louis, Susan and Adeline were declared legitimate under the doctrine of the Johnson Case. In the Dyer Case, Wilson contracted a common-law marriage with Jane Collins, and from that union sprang a daughter Cynthia. Five years afterwards, during Jane's lifetime, he married Sarah Ann Adams, by whom he had a child who survived its mother and died. Afterwards he sent for Jane Collins and Cynthia, lived with them until his death, and treated Cynthia as his daughter. Sarah Ann Adams owned real estate which was inherited at her death by her child by Wilson. We held that he inherited the property from his child by Sarah Ann Adams, and that the descendants of Cynthia (the latter marrying one Dyer) were the offspring of a legitimate child of Wilson and were entitled to recover the property in ejectment. In the Green Case, William Green married in Ireland, abandoned his wife, was never divorced, and during her lifetime married in this country, reporting himself a single man. The children of the last wife were held legitimate.

In construing that beneficent and remedial statute, we ought not to apply the discredited and bitter proverb that the fathers have eaten sour grapes and the children's teeth are set on edge. That proverb was held unjust by noble authority at a very early day. Ezek. 18: 2-3; Jer. 32: 29-30. We are bound to construe the statute so as to advance the interest of innocent children for whose benefit the statute was passed and who, for no fault of their own, up to that time were in hard lines. The plain language of the statute, as illuminated by the construction given it by this court, makes children in the fix of the infant defendants legitimate. We confess to an indisposition to bastardize them by implication or construction. Says Napton, J., in the Dyer Case: "We have no authority, upon grounds of public policy or for the promotion of private morals, to make restrictions or exceptions which the Legislature has not seen proper to make." 66 Mo. at page 419, 77 Am. Dec.

598. Attending to that language, it must be steadily borne in mind, as said that the reason of the existence—the essential object—of the law was to help blameless children and spare them penury and infamy. We are not unmindful of the precept that the greatest incitement to guilt is the hope of sinning with impunity, but the force of that statute, as indicated by the above quotation, is not spent on promoting the morals of parents. In the Green Case, some stress is laid on the good faith of at least one of the parties contracting the second marriage. It may well be that, in order to constitute a marriage at all, there should be an element of good faith, a bona fide intention to marry, as over against an intention to indulge a mere prank, or mere casual sexual commerce, etc. But, even on that view of the law, we think the good faith of Miss Harrington sufficiently appears in this case. She is not to be judged by dainty speculative refinements. Ignorant, immature, and taking color from a lowly and primitive environment, we must allow some value to those factors on the question of good faith. Her faith must be seen through her works. Her actions speak louder than any words in showing her good faith when she lived, for half a decade after her elopement, fearlessly and openly among her neighbors and acquaintances filling the office of a wife and a mother with the man she then took as her husband. Those officers, courts, and grand juries charged with law enforcement in the region seem to have acquiesced in the status she established for herself until Jones died. Neither they nor her neighbors cast any stones at her. Is that not some little evidence they thought her honest?

The views expressed make appellants' assignments of error relating to the admission of testimony fill no office worth while.

For the reasons set forth, the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to enter a decree in accordance with this opinion. Let that be done.

LAMM, J. Coming into banc from Division 1 on a dissent, the foregoing opinion is adopted by the court in banc as its opinion. All the Judges concurring, except GRAVES and WOODSON, JJ., who dissent.

STATE ex rel. FEDERAL LEAD CO. v.
REYNOLDS et al., Judges.

(Supreme Court of Missouri. Nov. 14, 1912.)

1. REFERENCE (§ 8*)—COMPULSORY REFERENCE—PROPRIETY.

Under Rev. St. 1909, § 1906, providing that, where the parties do not consent to reference, the court may direct a reference where the trial of an issue of fact shall require the examination of a long account, a compulsory reference is proper in a suit on contracts involving lengthy accounts, credits, and counter-claims.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Reference, Cent. Dig. §§ 18-23; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

2. REFERENCE (§ 103*)—APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1017*)—REPORT OF REFEREE—EXCEPTIONS—REVIEW.

In case of reference in equity or compulsory reference in an action at law, the trial court may not only sustain exceptions to the referee's report and set aside his findings, supplanting them with findings of its own, but such rulings and acts are subject to review by the appellate court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Reference, Cent. Dig. §§ 188-206; Dec. Dig. § 103; Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3996-4005; Dec. Dig. § 1017.*]

3. COURTS (§ 231*)—STATE COURTS—JURISDICTION OF MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.

The amount in dispute by which the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is fixed is not necessarily determined by the amount of the judgment appealed from, nor by the amount claimed in the petition or counterclaims, but should be determined by the amount that actually remains in dispute between the parties on the appeal, the court having the right to look into the record to determine the amount in dispute; and hence an appeal from a judgment sustaining objections to the referee's report giving defendant judgment over for $2,500 on its counterclaim, and disallowing all defendant's counterclaims and allowing plaintiff a judgment of over $6,500, falls within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

4. PROHIBITION (§ 35*)—COSTS.

Where a writ of prohibition is issued against the judges of an intermediate appellate court, it should go at the relator's costs, for judges should not be mulcted in costs for errors of judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. § 84; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

Robert & Robert, of St. Louis, for relator. Seneca N. Taylor, of St. Louis, for respondents.

LAMM, J. The Federal Lead Company, complaining of the St. Louis Court of Appeals for that it was exercising jurisdiction of an appeal from a judgment of the St. Francois circuit court in favor of Abbot-Gamble Company against said Lead Company, moved for a preliminary rule here in prohibition. Such rule was issued and served, citing respondents, the judges of that court, to show cause. By their return and by a demurrer thereto an issue at law is sprung, to wit, whether on that return and on the record lodged in the Court of Appeals in the original cause (and presented here for our consideration) the rule should be made absolute and a writ go. At a certain time the Abbot-Gamble Company sued the Lead Company in three counts, the subject-matter of all of them relating to a contract by which the former undertook to furnish the labor, machinery, and material (barring certain exceptions) to construct the foundations and ground floors for the latter's mill and reduction works near Flat river. In the first count judgment was asked for $11,882.29 (on a quantum meruit), by the second, for $1,011.45 (additional labor and work), by the third $9,300 (loss of profits).

For its first defense in that cause, Lead Company relied on a general denial. For its second, by way of affirmative allegations of matter constituting a counterclaim, and further by way of specific denials and admissions, its answer worked out the result that plaintiff had earned under the contract a surplus over payments in the sum of $3,768.54, but that there was due from plaintiff to defendant (by reason of averments of fact made in the answer) a much larger sum than that. As to the second count, the amount claimed thereon by plaintiff stood confessed, but it was averred that plaintiff owed defendant, by reason of certain facts, a much larger sum. The answer then goes on to set up counterclaims arising out of the contract and transaction pleaded as the foundation of plaintiff's claim; one counterclaim aggregating $15,688.26 and another $788.70. A reply coming into this answer (and defendant also replying to the new matter set up in plaintiff's replication) on motion of plaintiff the cause was ordered referred to Julian Paul Cayce, Esq., as referee, who qualified and assumed the burden. After a year and four months spent in taking a great volume of testimony, the referee reported the amount due defendant on the counterclaims to be $17,209.83, and the amount due plaintiff on the causes of action stated in its petition to be $14,553.15, leaving due defendant, on striking a balance, the sum of $2,656.68. For that balance the referee recommended a judgment in favor of defendant.

(Note.—While the matter was in fieri, plaintiff became a bankrupt and Mr. Folks, its trustee in bankruptcy, was allowed to appear as a party and carry on the suit.)

At the proper stage, plaintiff filed exceptions to the report of the referee, but defendant was content, and filed none. Presently plaintiff's exceptions were sustained, all defendant's counterclaims were disallowed, and judgment went in plaintiff's favor on the first and second counts in the aggregate sum of $6,817.48. From that judgment defendant alone appealed, having in apt form and due time preserved alive its exceptions to the court's action in sustaining plaintiff's exceptions to the referee's report, in disallowing its counterclaims, and in giving judgment for plaintiff. The appeal was allowed to the St. Louis Court of Appeals. There defendant filed a motion to transfer the cause here, grounding its motion on the theory that the amount in dispute on appeal exceeded the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals. That court having overruled that motion, defendant came here with its suggestions for prohibition, with the result stated at the outset. Having summarized enough of the record for our purposes, we are of opinion that on such summary an absolute rule should be entered and a writ go.

[1] This, because:

(a) While the original action was at law, yet the reference in hand was not by "the written consent of parties." R. S. 1909, § 1995. The long and intricate accounts involved, together with a multiplicity of refined details arising on charges and counter charges at issue for alleged breaches of the contract, all set forth in the pleadings and exhibits in 50 pages of solid print, made the cause eminently one for compulsory reference within the purview of our statute. R. S. 1909, § 1996. Indeed, defendant seems to have acquiesced in the order of reference, and, we take it, thereby impliedly admitted that the case belonged to a class subject to compulsory reference, and in which defendant had no constitutional right to a jury.

[2] (b) Whatever be the rule in cases that could only be sent to a referee by agreement of parties, yet, where a cause in equity is sent to a referee or where a case at law (subject to a compulsory reference) is sent to a referee, the settled rule is that trial courts may not only sustain exceptions to the referee's report and set aside his findings, but may go on and make findings of its own and render judgment contrary to that recommended by the referee, and (which is closer home) all of such rulings and acts nisi are subject to review by an appellate court and to its revising judgment when (as here) exceptions are properly preserved below and brought up for disposition above. Caruth-Brynes Co. v. Walter, 91 Mo. loc. cit. 488, 3 S. W. 865; State ex rel. v. Hurlstone, 92 Mo. loc. cit. 332 et seq., 5 S. W. 38; Wentzville Tobacco Co. v. Walker, 123 Mo. loc. cit. 671, 27 S. W. 639; Small v. Hatch, 151 Mo. loc. cit. 306, 52 S. W. 190; Williams v. Railway Co., 153 Mo. loc. cit. 495, 54 S. W. 689; Smith v. Baer, 166 Mo. 392, 66 S. W. 166. Vide State ex rel. v. Woods, 234 Mo. loc. cit. 26, 136 S. W. 337, and Star Bottling Co. v. Exposition Co., 240 Mo. loc. cit. 639 et seq., 144 S. W. 776, arguendo, on the scope and character of the issue below on exceptions filed to a referee's report.

[3] (c) The question in judgment being the amount in dispute on appeal, not only propositions ruled in paragraphs "a" and "b" are of help in marking the road the court must travel in reaching the amount in dispute, but there is another proposition of kin thereto, to wit: The amount in dispute by which the jurisdiction of the appellate court is fixed (in some cases maybe, but) in all cases is not necessarily determined by the amount of the judgment appealed from, nor by the amount claimed in the petition or counterclaims, but is determined by the amount that actually remains in dispute between the parties on the appeal, and subject to the determination by the appellate court of the legal question raised by the record. State ex rel. v. Lewis, 96 Mo. loc. cit. 148, 8 S. W. 770; Douglas v. Kansas City, 147 Mo. loc. cit. 432, 48 S. W. 851; Bridge Co. v. Transit Co., 205 Mo. loc. cit. 179 et seq., 103 S. W. 546; Vanderberg v. Gas Co., 199 Mo. loc. cit. 458 et seq., 97 S. W. 908.

(d) Accordingly, it is accepted doctrine that, to get at the amount in dispute for appellate purposes and preserve the constitutional integrity of this court on the matter of its jurisdiction, we may look within the mere shell of the judgment and far enough into the record to see that our proper jurisdiction is not cut away, or that jurisdiction is not foisted upon us by design, inadvertence, or by mere colorable amounts. So we may eliminate amounts set at rest by the pleadings, or determined below and not appealed from by the losing party, or consider counterclaims (where the case cries out for it on appeal). Conrad v. De Montcourt, 138 Mo. loc. cit. 321, 39 S. W. 805; Wilson v. Russler, 162 Mo. 565, 63 S. W. 370; State ex rel. v. Lewis, supra; In re Burke's Estate, 169 Mo. 212, 69 S. W. 277; and cases cited supra in paragraph "c."

(e) The premises all considered, it seems plain this court has jurisdiction of the case of Folks, Trustee of Abbot-Gamble, v. Federal Lead Co.; for at bottom the issue on appeal is: Did the court err in setting aside the findings of the referee whereby by balancing claims and accounts a net balance is found in favor of defendant on its counterclaims in the sum of $2,656.68, and commit further error by rendering judgment in favor of plaintiff, after disallowing all such counterclaims, in the sum of $6,817.48? That the amount in dispute, subject to the judgment of the appellate court on review, is the sum of those two items, seems clear. Take an a, b, c, case to illustrate: If Roe claim $1 of Doe, and the court not only takes that dollar from him, but $2 more, and gives them to Doe, evidently he is out of pocket and injured in the sum of $3, and, on Roe's appeal, the amount in dispute would be those $3. In this case defendant was content to abide the finding of the referee awarding it $2,656.68; but the trial court not only took away its right to the sum so found, but mulcted it in the further sum of $6,817.48. Defendant appealed to correct that situation, and the amount in dispute, as said, is the sum of the two items. Under the authorities cited, supra, the appellate court has power, if the justice of the case demands it, to give judgment (or direct a judgment) that shall cut away plaintiff's recovery in whole or part, or re-establish the finding of the referee in whole or part—that is, it can undo what was done below, and do rightly what was done wrongly.

(f) There are cases where, on defendant's appeal, we have used general language to the effect that the amount of the judgment appealed from determines appellate jurisdiction. Jackson v. Binnicker, 179 Mo. 139, 77 S. W. 740, McGregor v. Pollard, 130 Mo. 332, 32 S. W. 640, and Hensler v. Stix, 185 Mo. 238, 84 S. W. 894, are samples of such cases. When applied to record facts held in judgment in those cases, the general language in which the rule is put is well enough, for that is the general rule. But that general language must be understood as referable to the facts and issues of those cases, and not as an unvarying legal pronouncement or formula to be mechanically and always applied to a different state of facts and different issues. The court, having an eye to the case in hand, was not called on to state all the qualifications and limitations of the rule and deliver a charge on the whole body of the law. The writing of opinions would be an intolerable task and the reading of them even worse if that were good doctrine. A court can write sound law without writing all there is of it at one time. State ex rel. Bixby v. St. Louis, 145 S. W. 801. The rule in prohibition is therefore made absolute, and the St. Louis Court of Appeals is ordered to transfer the cause to this court.

[4] Let the writ go—at relator's costs, however. Judges should not be mulcted in costs or other damages for errors of judgment in judicial matters. All concur.

WADDLE et al. v. FRAZIER.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2.
Nov. 13, 1912.)

1. CURTESY (§ 1*)—NATURE OF ESTATE—"HEIRS."

Rev. St. 1909, § 350, providing that when a wife dies without any child or other descendants in being capable of inheriting, her widower shall be entitled to one-half of the property belonging to her at her death, absolutely, subject to payment of her debts, does not make the husband the wife's "heir" with respect to any of her property, but gives him an estate in the nature of dower; the word "heirs" meaning kindred who take an interest in real estate by the law of descent.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3241-3265; vol. 8, pp. 7677-7678.]

2. PARTITION (§ 83*)—ADVERSE CLAIM.

The rule that partition cannot be had, where one claims adversely to those seeking partition, without first determining the right of possession in ejectment does not apply where the adverse claimant voluntarily comes into the partition suit and sets up an equitable claim to the land.

3. EQUIT (§ 39*)—JURISDICTION.

As a rule, a court of equity, upon acquiring jurisdiction for one purpose, will do complete justice between the parties, even though required to adjudicate matters of law in order to do so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. §§ 104-114; Dec. Dig. § 89.*]

4. LIFE ESTATES (§ 8*)—ADVERSE POSSESSION—PERSONS CLAIMING.

Neither a life tenant nor her grantee could claim adversely to the remainderman, so that limitations would not begin to run in favor of one holding adversely through the life tenant until the death of the life tenant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Life Estates, Cent. Dig. §§ 24-28; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

5. TRUSTS (§ 89*)—PURCHASE-MONEY TRUSTS—EVIDENCE.

A purchase-money trust can only be established by clear, strong, and unequivocal parol evidence.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1009*)—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS—EQUITY CASES.

While the Supreme Court is not bound by the chancellor's findings, it may properly defer in some degree thereto, in view of his superior opportunities for weighing the evidence.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Sullivan County; Jno. P. Butler, Judge.

Action by Mollie Waddle and others against William Frazier. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This is a suit to partition 40 acres of land. The original parties are the collateral heirs of Malinda Frazier, who died in 1907. This 40 acres was conveyed to said Malinda by her father in 1860—to her “and to the heirs of her body.” She died without issue. The record shows that in April, 1860, James Lee and wife, by general warranty deed, conveyed to William Frazier, the appellant, the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 20, township 62, range 19, in Sullivan county, for a recited consideration of \$300. In May, 1860, the said James Lee and wife, by general warranty deed, conveyed the adjoining 40, namely, the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the said N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$, the same being the land in controversy, to their daughter, Malinda Frazier, wife of said William, “and to the heirs of her body,” for a recited consideration of \$400. In February, 1862, William Frazier and wife, by general warranty deed, conveyed the above-described two tracts, 80 acres in all, to James M. Frazier, brother of said William. In July, 1866, said William Frazier purchased the aforesaid 80 acres from the estate and widow of said James M. Frazier, and received proper conveyance thereof. William Frazier went into possession of this 80 acres in 1866, and occupied same as a home for himself and wife until her death in 1907. After her death William Frazier continued in the possession of the land, and held such possession until this present suit for partition of the 40 acres conveyed by James Lee to Malinda was instituted by the brothers and sisters of Malinda Frazier, in February, 1908; the said Malinda having died without issue.

The petition in this case is based upon the theory that the deed from James Lee to Malinda Frazier and the heirs of her body, made in 1860, gave her, under the statute then in force, a life estate, with remainder to her heirs, in default of bodily issue; that the persons seeking partition were her heirs; that the sale of the land by William and Malinda Frazier, in 1862, to James M. Frazier, and the subsequent conveyance from his estate to William Frazier, carried only the life estate of Malinda; and that consequently, upon her death in 1907, the title passed to her heirs. William Frazier, upon his request, was made a party defendant in this partition suit. He filed an answer, in which he claims to be the owner of the land; that he bought and paid for it with his own money; and that his wife held the title as his trustee. He also pleads adverse possession, under the deeds from the estate of James M. Frazier, since July, 1866. He further says in his answer that if the said Malinda had any right or interest in the land he, as her husband, would, under the statute, be entitled to “one-half of all real estate which her heirs would inherit.” He prays that all rights which the parties seeking partition may seem to have, “if any they have,” be divested out of them and vested in him, that he be declared the absolute owner, that plaintiffs’ petition be dismissed, and for “such other and further orders, judgments, and decrees herein as to the court may seem right and proper.” A reply was filed, alleging that William Frazier took the deeds from James M. Frazier’s estate with full knowledge of the condition of the title.

When the case came to trial, plaintiffs proved the conveyances as alleged, the death of Malinda Frazier without issue, and the relationship of the parties asking partition. Several witnesses were examined orally upon the issue raised by the defendant as to his having bought the land with his own money, and as to his having claimed it as his.

The court rendered judgment, which, in part, is as follows: “Now, to wit, on this 9th day of January, 1909, this cause, having been heretofore heard by the court, comes on for final determination; and the court, having been fully advised in the premises, and as to the evidence adduced on the part of the defendants, as well as on the part of plaintiffs, being duly advised as to such evidence and the facts, finds that the impleading dependant, William Frazier, has no right, title, claim, or interest in and to the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section twenty (20), township sixty-two (62), of range nineteen (19), Sullivan county, Missouri, sought to be partitioned herein; and the court finds that said land was conveyed to Malinda Frazier, wife of said William Frazier, and her bodily heirs, and, although subsequently conveyed to one James M. Frazier by warranty deed, the effect thereof was to vest in the grantee a life estate only in the land in controversy; that, although the defendant, William Frazier, subsequently purchased said land from the administratrix of the estate of James M. Frazier, deceased, he made such purchase with full knowledge and notice of the condition of the title, that a life estate only could be sold or purchased; and that, although he remained in the rightful possession of such land, as a purchaser of his wife's life estate, until the time of her death, to wit, on the 15th day of September, 1907, he is not now entitled to the possession and control thereof, but, on the contrary, the said Malinda Frazier having died without issue of her body, the plaintiffs and defendants, other than said William Frazier, as her collateral heirs, are the owners of the legal title, and entitled to the possession of said land, which is hereby declared to be vested in them."

The judgment further finds that the original parties to the partition suit own the land in fee, finds their respective interests, that the land is not susceptible of division in kind, and orders it sold for cash, and the proceeds divided among the parties entitled thereto. William Frazier appeals.

D. M. Wilson and J. W. Clapp, both of Milan, for appellant. Jno. W. Bingham and W. H. Childers, both of Milan, for respondents.

FERRISS, J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. It is conceded by appellant that, by its terms, the deed from James Lee to Malinda Frazier and the heirs of her body gave her a life estate, with remainder to her heirs in the event she should die without issue, and this by virtue of section 5, c. 32, R. S. 1855, which reads as follows: "Sec. 5. That from and after the passage of this act, where any conveyance or devise shall be made whereby the grantee or devisee shall become seised, in law or equity, of such estate, in any lands or tenements as, under the statute of the thirteenth Edward the First, (called the Statute of Entails,) would have been held an estate in fee tail, every such conveyance or devise shall vest an estate for life only in such grantee or devisee, who shall possess and have the same power over, and right in, such premises, and no other, as a tenant for life thereof would have by law; and, upon the death of such grantee or devisee, the said lands and tenements shall go, and be vested in the children of such grantee or devisee, equally to be divided between them as tenants in common, in fee; and if there be only one child, then to that one, in fee; and if any child be dead, the part which would have come to him or her, shall go to his or her issue; and if there be no issue, then to his or her heirs."

[1] It is further conceded in the answer of the appellant that Malinda died without issue of her body, and that the parties seeking partition are her heirs. Appellant contends, however, that as her husband he is entitled, as heir of his wife, to one-half of the land, under section 350, R. S. 1900, which reads thus: "Sec. 350. When a wife shall die without any child or other descendants in being capable of inheriting, her widower shall be entitled to one-half of the real and personal estate belonging to the wife at the time of her death, absolutely, subject to the payment of the wife's debts."

Obviously the husband could take no interest directly, under this section, in land in which his wife owned a life estate only. Nor could he claim heirship under the law of descent (section 332, R. S. 1909); his wife having left brothers and sisters surviving her. The claim of heirship on the part of appellant must therefore rest on the proposition that section 350, supra, constitutes him an heir of his wife, so as to bring him within the final clause of the law in force in 1855, and quoted above. We think this proposition unsound. Section 350, giving the husband an interest in his wife's real estate, was enacted to equalize the rights of widows and widowers. That which the husband takes under this section is in the nature of dower. His claims are limited to property belonging to her at her death. It does not make him his wife's heir in the full sense of that term. The term "heirs," in its accepted legal signification, means kindred who, by the law of descent, are entitled to an interest in real estate (Ruggles v. Randall, 70 Conn. 44, 38 Atl. 885; Dodge's Appeal, 106 Pa. 216, 51 Am. Rep. 519; Jarboe v. Hey, 122 Mo. loc. cit. 354, 26 S. W. 968), and, under the authorities, excludes the husband or wife, where there is nothing in the connection in which it is used to indicate otherwise. Dodge's Appeal, supra; Fabens v. Fabens, 141 Mass. 395, 5 N. E. 650; Jarboe v. Hey, supra; Clarkson v. Clarkson, 125 Mo. 381, 28 S. W. 446; Am. and Eng. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) vol. 15, p. 329. The word "heir" has been construed in many cases to include the wife or husband, where personal property was involved and the intent was manifest, particularly in provisions in benefit certificates; but with regard to real estate the rule stated above is uniform. There is certainly nothing in the law quoted above from the Revision of 1855 to indicate that this rule does not apply; and there is nothing in section 350, R. S. 1909, to extend the rights of the husband beyond the plain limitations and purposes of that section.

2. Appellant asserts this proposition in his brief: "To maintain partition, the parties seeking it must have either actual or constructive possession. Partition is not a suit to try the title, or to settle the right to a disputed possession. If the defendant, Wm. Frazier, was in the actual possession, claiming the land sought to be partitioned adversely to plaintiffs and his codefendants, partition cannot be maintained."

[2] Appellant cites several cases to the effect that partition cannot be rendered in a cause where a party claims adversely to all those seeking partition, and that in such case the right to possession must be first determined by an action in ejectment. Chamberlain v. Waples, 193 Mo. 96, 91 S. W. 934, and cases cited. The above rule is based upon the proposition that in partition the court does not try title and right to possession, and, further, upon the practical difficulty in enforcing a decree of partition against one in adverse, exclusive possession. Does this rule apply when the adverse outside claimant voluntarily comes into the partition suit as a party, sets up an equitable title to the land, and prays an adjudication thereon, and prays for such other and further orders and decrees as to the court may seem proper? In this case the appellant asserted equitable ownership of the land, and asked a court of equity to decide between his rights and those of the parties asking partition. The court tried the issue thus presented, and decided it against appellant, and adjudged the title and right to possession to be in the claimants seeking partition. The court, as a court of equity, took jurisdiction, as requested by appellant, of the issue presented by him.

[3] The general rule applicable to such a situation is this: When a court of equity has acquired jurisdiction of a cause for one purpose, it will proceed to do complete justice between the parties, and determine all matters in issue, even if this involves adjudicating matters of law. Dameron v. Jameson, 71 Mo. 97; Real Estate Savings Inst. v. Collonious, 63 Mo. 290; Paris v. Haley, 61 Mo. loc. cit. 462; Hagan v. Bank, 182 Mo. loc. cit. 342, 81 S. W. 171. This doctrine has been applied by this court in modification of the rule, above stated, applicable to partition. In Rozler v. Griffith, 31 Mo. 171, this court said: "The fact that the defendant is in possession of the premises, claiming to hold them adversely to the plaintiff, is, in general, a sufficient ground for denying a partition in a court of law; but when the question arises upon an equitable title set up by either of the parties the reason of the rule fails. When the questions are such as belong to a court of equity, there can be no reason for suspending the proceedings short of complete justice between the parties. Cox v. Smith, 4 [Johns.] Ch. [N. Y.] 275; Hosford v. Merwin, 5 Barb. [N. Y.] 62."

In Dameron v. Jameson, supra, this court says: "It is urged by defendant that partition will not lie when defendant is in adverse possession of the premises of which partition is asked. This doctrine, in cases to which it is applicable, is well settled; but no case can be found in our reports where the principle was applied in a proceeding to establish an equitable title, and also for partition. When the plaintiff asks for partition, and the defendant is in the adverse possession of the property, the courts refuse to partition the land between them until plaintiff establishes his title, and a suit in ejectment is the proper proceeding for that purpose; but where, as here, the plaintiff has an equitable title, and asks the aid of the court of equity to establish it, if the court ascertain that he has an interest, and what that interest is, the doctrine that partition cannot be had when the defendant is in the adverse possession of the premises does not apply. The decree establishes plaintiff's title, and under it the court may put him in possession, and a suit in ejectment becomes necessary [unnecessary]. The court, having acquired jurisdiction of the cause, may proceed to determine the whole controversy by decreeing a partition of the premises. Rozler v. Griffith, 31 Mo. 171." To the same effect is Holloway v. Holloway, 97 Mo. loc. cit. 643, 644, 11 S. W. 233, 10 Am. St. Rep. 339.

Appellant invoked the judgment of the court upon his claim to equitable ownership of the land. The judgment decreed the title to be in the other parties, and that they were entitled to possession.

[4] It is obvious that appellant's claim of title by adverse possession is without foundation. The deed to him from the administratrix of James M. Frazier conveyed only the life estate of Malinda Frazier, as that was the only estate conveyed to James M. Frazier by the deed from Malinda and William Frazier. Neither Malinda, nor any grantee of her life estate, could claim adversely to the remaindermen; hence the statute could not begin to run in favor of appellant until the death of Malinda, in 1907. It follows that appellant, at the time of the institution of this suit, had neither title nor the right to possession. Charles v. Pickens, 214 Mo. loc. cit. 215, 112 S. W. 551, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1054, 127 Am. St. Rep. 687; Dugan v. Follett, 100 Ill. 589; Colvin v. Hauenstein, 110 Mo. 575, 19 S. W. 948; Scott v. Colson, 156 Ala. 450, 47 South. 60. The court below, having acquired jurisdiction of all the issues in the cause, rendered judgment on this issue of adverse possession, and decreed the title and right to possession to be in the collateral heirs of Malinda Frazier, parties to the partition suit. It thus became unnecessary to resort to ejectment to try the question of title by adverse possession. Coberly v. Coberly, 189 Mo. 1, 87 S. W. 957.

[5] 3. Appellant, in his answer, alleged that he bought and paid for the land conveyed to his wife, Malinda, and that she held the title in trust for him. Evidence was introduced upon this issue by both sides. Upon the testimony the court found against appellant. James Lee, the father of Malinda, conveyed 40 acres to William Frazier, April 13, 1860. In May following James Lee conveyed the 40 acres in controversy to Malinda Frazier. The two tracts are adjoining, and together make the 80 acres which William Frazier and his wife occupied as a home, except during the interval from 1862 to 1866, when the 80 acres was in possession of James M. Frazier under deed from William and wife. Appellant claims that he bought the 80 acres at one time from James Lee. No explanation is given for the conveyance of one 40 to his wife. One witness stated that he understood that the 40 was given to her by her father for a home. The language of the deed to her "and to the heirs of her body" is consistent with this, and tends to negative the claim to a resulting trust. We deem it unnecessary to detail the oral testimony. It came from friends and neighbors, who testified, pro and con, to fragments of conversations, and to remarks by James Lee, Malinda and William Frazier, some of them as far back as 50 years. One witness, 59 years old, testified to a conversation heard by him in 1859, before he was 10 years old. The evidence at best is vague and fragmentary. It fails to measure up to the rule declared by this court in King v. Isley, 116 Mo. 155, 22 S. W. 634, where, speaking of the quantum of evidence essential to establish a resulting trust, we say: "The rule in this court is settled by a uniform line of decisions that parol testimony, in order to accomplish such an object and secure such an end, must be clear, strong, and unequivocal; so definite and positive as to leave no room for doubt in the mind of the chancellor as to the existence of such a trust." Allen v. Logan, 96 Mo. 591 [10 S. W. 149]. "These resulting trusts must not be declared upon doubtful evidence, or even upon a mere preponderance of evidence. * * * There should be no room for a reasonable doubt as to the facts relied upon to establish the trust." Adams v. Burns, 96 Mo. 361 [10 S. W. 261]."

[6] We are not bound by the finding of the chancellor; but we properly may defer in some degree to his superior opportunity to weigh the testimony. Our views upon testimony of this character in such a case as this are expressed at length in Williams v. Keef, 145 S. W. 425, and need not be further extended here.

We think the judgment is sustained by the record. We find no reversible error. The judgment, therefore, is affirmed.

BROWN, P. J., and KENNISH, J., concur.

BENJAMIN v. METROPOLITAN ST. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Missouri. Nov. 14, 1912.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 320*)—ACTION FOR INJURIES—QUESTION FOR JURY—"SUDDEN" STARTING OF CAR.

On evidence in an action against a street railroad for injuries from negligently and suddenly starting a car, as plaintiff was entering, construing the word "sudden" to mean happening without notice, coming unexpectedly, held, that the question whether the car was negligently started was for the jury.

2. CARRIERS (§ 247*)—CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS—WHO ARE PASSENGERS—PERSON ENTERING CAR.

A person in the act of getting upon a street car is a passenger.

3. CARRIERS (§ 280*)—CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS—CARE REQUIRED.

A carrier owes to a passenger the exercise of the highest degree of care that a prudent person experienced in that business can practically exercise.

4. CARRIERS (§ 320*)—CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS—QUESTION FOR JURY—CARE TOWARD PERSON ENTERING.

The mere fact of starting a street car before a passenger has taken his seat is not negligence per se, and whether it is negligence to do so in a particular case is a question for the jury.

5. CARRIERS (§ 320*)—ACTION FOR INJURIES—QUESTION FOR JURY.

On evidence in an action against a street railroad for personal injuries, held, that the question whether the plaintiff, a woman of 57 years, weighing nearly 200 pounds, facing forward while entering the car from the platform, could have been thrown forward by its start, was for the jury.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 854*)—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—GROUND.

Where a motion for a new trial is sustained, and the court states in its order a ground on which it bases its ruling, the appellate court, if it concludes that on the ground stated the new trial should not have been granted, will reverse the order, unless its attention is called to some other ruling of the trial court which justified the order, as it is not bound to search the record to find grounds other than those assigned by the trial court, but, if respondent brings to its notice any other point sustaining the ruling, it will be considered.

7. CARRIERS (§ 320*)—ACTION FOR INJURIES—QUESTION FOR JURY—NEGLIGENCE IN STARTING CAR.

On evidence in an action against a street railroad for personal injuries, the question whether defendant was negligent in starting the car and throwing and injuring plaintiff, a woman of 57, weighing nearly 200 pounds, as she was entering and making her way toward a seat, was for the jury.

8. CARRIERS (§ 287*)—CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS—CARE REQUIRED—TAKING UP PASSENGER.

Where the conductor of a street car took up a woman of 57 years, weighing nearly 200 pounds, and while she was exercising due care in entering the car from the platform, in the exercise of the high degree of care devolving on the carrier would have seen her position and realized her peril, he was negligent in starting the car in such way as to throw her down and injure her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1154-1159, 1161-1166; Dec. Dig. § 287.*]

9. CARRIERS (§ 320*)—CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS—CARE REQUIRED—TAKING UP PASSENGERS.

It is not negligence per se to start a street car while passengers are standing up in it, nor is it negligence per se to start it while passengers are standing on the platform, or in the vestibule.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1118, 1126, 1149, 1153, 1160, 1167, 1179, 1190, 1217, 1233, 1244, 1248, 1315-1325; Dec. Dig. § 320.*]

10. CARRIERS (§ 314*)—PLEADING (§ 367*)—ACTION FOR INJURIES—PLEADING—ALLEGATIONS AS TO NEGLIGENCE—MOTION TO MAKE DEFINITE.

Facts constituting a carrier's negligence towards a passenger must be pleaded. The pleader may charge specific negligence, or general negligence which will be sufficient in the absence of a motion to make more definite and certain, and such a motion may be denied when the facts are of a character beyond the knowledge of the pleader or particularly within the knowledge of the carrier, as when a train is derailed. In the pleading of general negligence, the facts must be stated with sufficient certainty to point the adversary to the event or the occurrence in the happening of which negligence is charged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1260, 1270, 1273-1280; Dec. Dig. § 314.* Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1173-1193; Dec. Dig. § 367.*]

11. NEGLIGENCE (§ 117*)—PLEADING (§ 8*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE AS GROUND OF DEFENSE.

Contributory negligence is an affirmative defense and must be pleaded to be available, and, to be sufficient, the facts constituting contributory negligence must be pleaded; but, where the plaintiff in making out his own case shows that he was guilty of negligence that contributed to his injuries, no plea of contributory negligence is necessary, and a plea that, if the plaintiff received any injuries at the time mentioned in his petition, they were caused by his own fault and negligence, is insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 195-197; Dec. Dig. § 117.* Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 12-28½; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

12. NEGLIGENCE (§ 141*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction that, if the plaintiff was guilty of negligence of any character which directly contributed to her injuries, she could not recover, was erroneous, in that it did not specify the facts constituting such negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 382-399; Dec. Dig. § 141.*]

13. CARRIERS (§ 321*)—CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS—ACTION FOR INJURIES—INSTRUCTIONS—DEGREE OF CARE "PRACTICABLE."

An instruction in an action against a street railroad for personal injuries that, if defendant exercised all the care and prudence that were reasonably practicable, it was not negligent, was erroneous, in that the word "practicable" means "capable of being done or accomplished with available means or resources," and includes the element of reasonableness, what is unreasonable not being practicable, and the qualifying word "reasonably" renders the construction confusing and liable to misconception.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1247, 1326-1336, 1343; Dec. Dig. § 321.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5483, 5484.]

14. TRIAL (§ 236*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES.

An instruction that, while the plaintiff was a competent witness in her action for personal injuries, yet, in determining the weight to be given her testimony, her interest in the result of the trial and the fact that she was testifying on her own behalf should be considered, that whatever she said against her own interest was presumed to be true because against her interest, but that what she said in her own behalf might be regarded as true or false when considered with all the evidence in the case—was bad, in that it pointed out plaintiff, and especially called attention to the fact of her interest as an inducement to swearing falsely, and in that it declared all her testimony against interest to be true, and required all said in her interest to be scrutinized with care.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 531-533; Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

15. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 978*)—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—MISCONDUCT OF PARTY.

The trial judge while taking dinner at the same tavern saw three jurors and two of defendant's claim agents at the same table, and on reopening court called the attention of attorneys thereto, and said to plaintiff's attorney that he would discharge the jury, and was assured by defendant's counsel that he would caution the agent, and on the following day the three jurors asked the claim agent to join them in a game of pool which they lost, and for which they paid, and then accepted cigars from the claim agent. Their meeting at dinner was accidental, and nothing was there said about the trial, nor did the agent pay for their dinners. Held, that the granting of a new trial for the misconduct of defendant's claim agent was not an abuse of the trial court's discretion.

Graves, J., dissenting, and Ferris, J., dissenting in part.

In Banc. Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; Walter B. Powell, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth A. Benjamin against the Metropolitan Street Railway Company. From an order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial after verdict for defendant, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John H. Lucas and Chas. N. Sadler, both of Kansas City, for appellant. A. F. Smith, Boyle & Howell and Guthrie, Gamble & Street, all of Kansas City, for respondent.

VALLIANT, C. J. Plaintiff sues for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by her through the negligence of the defendant while she as a passenger was attempting to board one of defendant's street cars. The amount of damages claimed is $10,000. The negligence charged in the petition is: "While the plaintiff was in the act of getting upon said car, and while she was in a position of peril, all of which was known, or by the exercise of due care should have been known, to the defendant, it negligently started said car and negligently suddenly started said car, and the plaintiff, by reason of the said negligent acts of the defendant, was thrown and caused to fall against parts of said car." The answer was a general denial and what was probably intended as a plea of contributory negligence. It was in these words: "And, for further answer, defendant says that, if plaintiff received any injuries at the time mentioned in said petition, the same was caused by plaintiff's own fault and negligence." The trial resulted in a verdict for the defendant, but the court sustained the plaintiff's motion for a new trial, and from that order the defendant appealed.

The testimony on the part of the plaintiff tended to prove as follows: Plaintiff is a woman 57 years of age, and at the time of the accident weighed about 190 pounds. She and a woman companion stood at a crossing, waiting for the street car. When the car reached the crossing, it stopped as to receive passengers, and while it was standing still plaintiff proceeded to go aboard of it. She got on the step, and, with one foot on the step and the other on the platform, she was in the act of getting on the platform with both feet, when the car started to move, and she fell on her knee, striking it on the step that leads from the platform (or vestibule) into the car. She arose, and went into the car and sat down, not realizing at the time any severe injury, but such injury developed afterwards. Plaintiff's companion followed her, stepping on the step just after plaintiff, and just as plaintiff stepped on the platform. She did not see plaintiff fall, but saw her rise, and the two went into the car and sat down together, and when the car reached their destination, the two walked out of the car, and walked home. On the part of the defendant the evidence tended to show that, when the car stopped at the crossing where the two women got on, they were both standing near the curb, talking, and gave no indication of intention to get on the car; therefore the conductor gave the signal to start. He was at the time inside the car. When the bell rang and the car started, the two women ran and jumped on the car, and neither of them fell. They said something to the conductor about running off and leaving them, and, when they were getting off the car at the point of their destination, the plaintiff said something to the conductor about her knee hurting her. There was evidence for and against the plaintiff's claim of injury and the degree thereof. There was no evidence as to the manner of the starting of the car as the plaintiff was getting on; that is, whether it was sudden or fast or slow. Her testimony was that it started to move after she got on the step. The testimony of defendant was that she ran and got on the step after the car was in motion. That was the main issue of fact in the case. At the close of plaintiff's evidence, the defendant asked an instruction in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence, which was overruled and exception taken. The cause was submitted to the jury on instructions for plaintiff and for defendant, some of which will be discussed in the course of this opinion.

[1] 1. Appellant insists that its instruction in the nature of demurrer to the evidence should have been given because there was no evidence that the car was "suddenly started," and also because the starting of the car could not have had the effect to throw the plaintiff forward to fall on her knee.

(a) The charge in the petition is that the defendant "negligently started said car, and negligently suddenly started said car." The word "sudden" is sometimes used to signify quick or rapid, and, if that is the sense in which it is used in the petition, there was no evidence to sustain the allegation. But the idea ordinarily conveyed by the word "sudden" is a happening without notice, a coming unexpectedly (Webster), and that is doubtless the sense in which the pleader used it in this instance, and, if so, the determination of whether or not the movement was sudden—that is, unexpected, unlooked for—is a conclusion to be drawn from the facts, rather than the opinion of a witness. When an occurrence is expected, one who may be affected by it will ordinarily take care to meet it; but, if it is not to be expected, no such care will be taken. For the jury to decide whether or not this car, in respect of the plaintiff, was suddenly started, it was only necessary for them to know whether or not under the circumstances the plaintiff had reason to expect it would start as and when it did; that would be a conclusion for the jury to draw from the circumstances, although no witness said the start was sudden. The question then is, supposing the woman's story to be true, and the conductor saw her, as it was his duty to do, could reasonable men say that under the circumstances she should have expected the car to start as it did and have guarded against the consequence? We do not attach a great deal of importance to the word "suddenly" as there used and in its connection. The petition states that the defendant negligently started the car to move while she was in the attitude of passing from the step to the platform or to the door of the car. The charges are that it was negligently started, and that it was negligently suddenly started. Whether or not the act of starting the car as and when it was started was negligence depends on the circumstances, and whether or not the start was sudden in the sense that it came without warning and unexpected also depends on the circumstances.

[2, 3] When the plaintiff was in the act of getting on the car, she was a passenger, and the defendant owed her the exercise of the highest degree of care practicable that a prudent person experienced in that business could exercise to secure her safety. When the conductor saw the plaintiff, a woman 57 years old, weighing nearly 200 pounds, with her one foot on the step and her other on the platform, or raised to get on the platform, and he started the car to move, even though it moved in the usual way, can it be said that his act was so clearly within the scope of his duty that the court should as a matter of law have so declared and have taken the case from the jury?

[4] The mere fact of starting a car before a passenger has taken his seat is not negligence per se. Common experience shows that it is the general custom to start street cars before passengers are seated, and the progress of a car in a great city would be slow, indeed, if the law absolutely forbade that practice. But, whilst it is not positively unlawful to do so under any circumstances, yet it is not lawful to do so under all circumstances, and whether or not it is negligence to do so in a particular case is a question of fact in the light of the circumstances. If for example a passenger attempting to get on a car in the position the plaintiff says she was were a cripple on crutches, could any one say that the conductor would be justified in starting the car until the passenger had reached a place of reasonable safety? The condition of the man on crutches, and that of an old woman of unwieldy size as calling on the conductor for caution, may differ in degree, but not in kind. If the plaintiff's story is true, the question of whether the conductor in starting the car, as and when he did, exercised that high degree of care that devolved on him to secure the safety of his passenger, was one which should have been submitted to the jury under proper instructions.

[5] (b) It is argued that, if the car was started as the plaintiff says it was, it would be a physical impossibility for the motion to have thrown the body of the plaintiff forward to fall on her knee. The argument invokes the physical fact that when a person is standing erect on a moveable platform, facing in the direction the movement is to be made, when the movement comes, it will carry the feet forward quicker than the rest of the body, and cause the body to incline backward. That is so, but to draw the conclusion that the learned counsel draw from that law of physics they do not take into account the natural or involuntary resistance the person whose equilibrium is disturbed offers to the motion, especially if it is a sudden movement. In resisting the force that would throw the body backward, and in the struggle to recover an upright position, the result would depend upon the force exerted either way, and on which would be the greater. The court in this case could not as a matter of law decide what the result would be. The action of the trial court in refusing to take the case from the jury was not error.

[6] 2. When a motion for a new trial is sustained, and the court states in the order the ground on which it bases its ruling, if the appellate court should conclude that for the ground stated the new trial should not have been granted, it will reverse the order granting the new trial, unless its attention is called to some other ruling of the trial court which justified the order. In an appeal from an order granting a new trial the appellate court is not bound to search the record to find some other point than that assigned by the trial court, but respondent has the right to bring to the notice of the court any other point in the record that will sustain the ruling, and, when the point is so brought to the notice of the appellate court, it will be considered. Millar v. Madison Car Co., 130 Mo. 517, 31 S. W. 574; Emmons v. Quade, 176 Mo. 22, 76 S. W. 103. In the case at bar, the trial court specified in its order granting a new trial the ground on which the order was based. The respondent, although contending that the ground specified was sufficient to justify the order, nevertheless contends that, even if that ground should be adjudged insufficient, there were other grounds that justified it, and has proceeded in her brief to point out those grounds, and those we will now consider before taking up the ground specified in the order. They relate to certain instructions given at the request of the defendant.

[7] (a) The third instruction so given was: "The court instructs the jury that if you find and believe from the evidence that the plaintiff got upon the car while the same was standing still, and that the car was not started until after the plaintiff got upon the platform of said car, then your verdict will be for the defendant." Under that instruction, if the car was standing still when the plaintiff started to get on it, and it so stood until she had got on the platform on her way into the car, then although the car was then given a motion by which she was thrown forward and fell on her knee and injured, the defendant was not liable. That instruction absolved the defendant from all liability for failure to care for the safety of the plaintiff in her further progress towards a seat in the car after she got on the platform, and, although she may have been thrown down and hurt by the motion of the car, still, if the motion did not come until after she had reached the platform, the defendant is not liable, no matter what circumstances or whose fault. Defendant says that there was no evidence of any unusual starting of the car, and that is so, but there was evidence that that starting, whether usual or unusual, caused the plaintiff to fall. If, therefore, a start in the usual way results in the throwing down and injuring of a passenger who happens to be an unusually large woman 57 years old, while she is on the platform, without fault herself trying to make her way into the car, the court would have no right to tell the jury as a conclusion of law that the defendant had exercised that high degree of care for the safety of its passengers which the law requires. On the contrary, it should be left to the jury under proper instructions to say whether under the circumstances due care was exercised. Common sense dictates the difference in the care that is demanded of a carrier of passengers in reference to a woman 57 years old of nearly 200 pounds weight and that required in reference to a man or woman young and lithe. That instruction was erroneous.

(b) "(4) The court instructs the jury that there is no evidence that the car was started with any unusual jerk or motion, and on that issue your finding will be for the defendant." There was no such issue as that in the case. The plaintiff's testimony did not tend to show that the car started with an unusual jerk, and the defendant's testimony was to the effect that it started in the usual way. The only charge of negligence which the plaintiff's testimony tended to prove was the starting of the car before the plaintiff had time to safely enter.

[8] It makes no difference whether the motion was usual or unusual, if it came in such a way as to throw the plaintiff down when she was exercising the care for her own safety that a person of ordinary prudence in her condition and position would have exercised, and, if the conductor by the exercise of the high degree of care that devolves on the carrier could have seen her condition and position and realized her peril, he was negligent in starting the car as and when he did. Therefore that instruction should not have been given.

[9] (c) "(5) The court instructs the jury that it is not negligence to start a street car when passengers are standing up in the car, and if you find that plaintiff was in the vestibule of said car, standing up in a reasonably safe position, when the car started, and that the car was not started in a negligent manner, but was started without any unusual jerk or jar, then defendant was not guilty of any negligence, and plaintiff cannot recover." What we have above said in commenting on instruction 3 applies to this instruction. It cannot be declared negligence per se to start a car while passengers are standing up in the car, nor can it be said that it is negligence per se to start the car while passengers are standing on the platform or in the vestibule; but, under some circumstances, it would be negligence, and, when those circumstances are present, the question of negligence is one of fact. It was error to have given that instruction.

[10] (d) "(6) The court instructs the jury that, if you find and believe from the evidence that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence of any character which directly contributed to the injuries complained of, then there can be no recovery in this case, and your verdict will be for the defendant." That instruction was as inappropriate to the charge of the plaintiff's negligence contributing to the injuries complained of as a like instruction would have been to the charge of defendant's negligence causing the injuries. Facts constituting the negligence must be pleaded and specified in the instructions. It has been held that the pleader may charge general negligence or special negligence, and the former will be sufficient in the absence of a motion to make more definite and certain. And it is not always that such a motion will be sustained, because the facts may be of a character beyond the knowledge of the party pleading and peculiarly within the knowledge of the other party, as, for example, when a train is derailed. But even in the pleading of general negligence the facts must be stated with sufficient certainty to point the adversary to the event or the occurrence in the happening of which, or in the suffering of which to happen, negligence is charged. For example, if a street car in which a plaintiff is riding is suffered to come in violent collision with some object which causes the car to be turned over and the passenger injured, it will be sufficient to charge that the defendant negligently suffered the collision to occur. In such case the passenger is not presumed to know just what the cause of the collision was, and therefore he is not bound to state it in his pleading. But even in such case it would not be sufficient for the passenger to say in his petition that on a certain day he was injured through the negligence of the defendant, nor would the court be justified in giving the jury an instruction that, if they should find from the evidence that the defendant was guilty of negligence of any character that resulted in injury to the plaintiff, the verdict should be for the plaintiff. The pleadings should state the issue to the court. The instructions should state the issue to the jury.

[11] Contributory negligence is an affirmative defense, and must be pleaded to be available. Donovan v. Railroad, 89 Mo. 147, 1 S. W. 232; Stone v. Hunt, 94 Mo. 475, 7 S. W. 431. And the facts constituting the contributory negligence must be pleaded. Harrison v. Ry. Co., 74 Mo. 364, loc. cit. 369, 41 Am. Rep. 318. If, however, the plaintiff in his effort to make out his own case shows that he was guilty of negligence that contributed to his injuries, he cannot recover, even if there was no plea of contributory negligence. But there is no such fact in this case.

In the case at bar the attempted plea of contributory negligence is: "If the plaintiff received any injuries at the time mentioned in said petition, the same were caused by the plaintiff's own fault and negligence." That was not sufficient.

[12] But the instruction was even more general than the plea. It called for a verdict for the defendant if the jury should find that the "plaintiff was guilty of negligence of any character which directly contributed," etc. Suppose the court had given an instruction for the plaintiff authorizing a verdict for her if the jury should find that the defendant had been guilty of negligence of any character whatever which caused the injuries complained of; what would be thought of such an instruction? The giving of that instruction was error.

[13] (e) In defendant's instruction 8 the jury were told that, "if defendant's servants in charge of the car in controversy exercised all the care and prudence that were reasonably practicable, then there was no negligence." The complaint of that instruction is the employment of the word "reasonably." The court in an instruction at the request of plaintiff had already told the jury that it was "the duty of a carrier of passengers to exercise the highest degree of care that can be reasonably expected of prudent men engaged in that line of business to carry its passengers safely, and a failure of such carrier to use such care is negligence on its part. And in the same instruction the degree of care devolving on the passenger was defined to be ordinary. The adverb "reasonably" used in the instruction to qualify the adjective "practicable" introduces an element of uncertainty into the sentence. The duty of the carrier is to exercise the highest degree of care practicable. The word "practicable" means "capable of being done or accomplished with available means or resources." Webster. The element of reasonableness is in that definition. What is unreasonable is not practicable. But, when the word "reasonably" is used to qualify the word "practicable," it is confusing, and is liable to misconstruction. The law is always reasonable, and it considers it reasonable to require of the carriers a high degree of care, but that fact would not justify an instruction to the jury that the law requires the carrier to exercise a reasonably high degree of care. In that connection the word "reasonably" would so qualify the word "high" as to reduce the phrase to "reasonable care." We do not approve the word "reasonably" as used in this instruction, but, if that were the only error in the case, we would not say the error was sufficient to justify the granting of a new trial.

[14] (f) Defendant's instruction 10 is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that, while the plaintiff is a competent witness in this case, yet in determining what weight and credit you will give to her testimony you should consider her interest in the result of the trial, and that she is the plaintiff testifying in her own behalf. Whatever she may have said against her own interest, the law presumes to be true, because against her interest; but what she may have said in her own behalf you are not bound to believe, but you may treat the same as true or false, just as you may believe the same to be true or false, when considered in connection with all the evidence in the case." That instruction is bad for two reasons: First, it points out the plaintiff especially, calls attention to the fact of her interest as an inducement to her to swear falsely; and, second, in effect, it says that every word that she may have uttered that militates against her interest, whether deliberately or thoughtlessly, is to be set down as truth, while everything she may have said in her own interest is to be scrutinized with care. For those reasons, an instruction to the like effect and in nearly the same words was condemned in Stetzler v. Railway, 210 Mo. 704, loc. cit. 713, 714, 109 S. W. 666. To the same effect also, are the following cases: Conner v. Railroad, 181 Mo. loc. cit. 415, 81 S. W. 145; Montgomery v. Railroad, 181 Mo. 477, 79 S. W. 930; Shepard v. Railroad, 189 Mo. 362, 87 S. W. 1007; Zander v. Railroad, 206 Mo. 445, 103 S. W. 1006. For the errors in those instructions the court would have been justified in granting a new trial, even if the cause assigned in the order was not sufficient.

[15] 3. We come now to a consideration of the cause assigned by the court for sustaining the motion for a new trial, the alleged misconduct of one of the men connected with the claim department of the defendant corporation. The trial occurred in Independence, which is not a very large city, and which contains but one principal tavern, where, during the sessions of the circuit court, it is usual for persons attending, judge, lawyers, litigants, jurors, etc., to go for their midday meal. During the second day of the trial of this cause, the judge, having gone to that tavern for his dinner, noticed at another table five men sitting, three of whom he recognized as jurors in the case on trial, and the two others were attending court in the interest of the defendant, and were connected with the defendant's claim department. The attendance of those two men on the court was in the regular and legitimate course of their duties. At the time these five men were eating dinner at the same table the dining room contained other tables, and all of them were occupied. When the judge saw the men at the table, he immediately arose from the table at which he was sitting, and went to another table at which one of the attorneys for the defendant was seated taking his meal, and called the attorney's attention to the fact that those two men were taking dinner at the same table with the three jurors, and told him it was not proper. The attorney soon after left the dining room, and beckoned to one of the two men, the claim agent, who came out, and asked him if he had invited those jurors to take dinner with him, or if he was to pay for their meal, to which he replied in substance that he had not invited the jurors, was not at all responsible for their action in taking seats at that table, and was not to pay for their meal, that their sitting down at the public table was a matter that he had no control of, and nothing to do with. Before going on the bench in the afternoon, the judge called the defendant's attorney and one of the plaintiff's attorneys into his chambers, and mentioned the circumstances to them, and said to the attorney for the plaintiff that, if he so desired, the court would discharge the jury and continue the case. The attorney said that he did not so desire, but suggested that the judge have the claim agent called and caution him against intercourse with the jurors. To that suggestion the attorney for defendant objected, and said that he himself would caution him. The next day, the trial still in progress, at the noon recess, after dinner, the claim agent was standing at the door of the tavern. The three jurors above mentioned passed, and one of them said to the claim agent that they were just going to play a game of pool, and asked him to join them in the game, to which he consented, accompanying them to the poolroom. The four played several games of pool together, in which the claim agent, not being the loser, did not pay for the games, but they were paid for by the others. There were other pool tables in the room at which a number of men were playing. The game being over, the claim agent invited the three men with whom he had been playing to take cigars. They accepted, each took a cigar and the claim agent paid for them, total 20 cents. Neither during the dinner the day before nor during the games of pool was anything said about the case on trial. The three jurors were reputable business men, and the claim agent was a reputable young attorney of the bar. The evidence shows that there was nothing criminal in word or deed committed. Whether the social intercourse between the claim agent and the three jurors had any influence on their minds to warp their judgment is left alone to conjecture. The court sustained the motion for a new trial for this conduct of the claim agent and the three jurors.

The meeting of the men at the public dinner table is shown to have been entirely accidental and innocent. We gather from the testimony that the claim agent and his assistant were already seated at the table when two of the jurors came in, and, the other tables in that part of the dining room being occupied, they, seeing seats at this table vacant, took them, and soon the third juror came in and joined the two others. The judge came in afterwards, and passed down to the other end of the dining room, and took a seat at a table there, and after he was seated, seeing the five men at the other table, probably thought they had come in together by invitation or design and he thought it looked badly, so he brought it to the notice of defendant's attorney. If the social intercourse between these men had ceased there, it is probable the judge would have taken no further notice of it. But, after the conversation between the judge and the two attorneys in his chambers, he had a right to presume that the attorney for the defendant had cautioned the claim agent to cease holding social intercourse with the jurors, and therefore when on the next day he was informed that they were playing pool together he had cause to think that his admonition had been disregarded, and that the claim agent was acting in disobedience to the order given. For that reason he granted the new trial. The trial judge has more power to direct the course of justice in the trial of a cause than any tribunal that may have charge of the case after him. Not everything that occurs during the trial with its full influence as discerned by the trial judge can be shown in the record that is sent to the appellate court. He not only hears and sees what is said and done, but he discerns its influence, and is far better able to judge whether the trial has been fair than is the court that reviews the record. For that reason, great deference should be given to his judgment when he grants a new trial. In the trial of a cause in a court of justice not only should influences that actually work evil be guarded against, but also acts that have the appearance of evil, and these the trial judge has authority to forbid. Not only should courts rightly decide causes, but the trials should be conducted in such a manner that suspicion of wrong will not arise. Confidence in the integrity of the courts is absolutely essential to the maintaining of the state government.

Although in this case no wrong was done by the social intercourse of the claim agent with the jurors, yet the judge had a right to forbid it, and, if he had cause to believe that his order was being disobeyed, we cannot say that he abused his discretion in granting a new trial on that account. The judgment is affirmed.

LAMM, WOODSON, KENNISH, and BROWN, JJ., concur. FERRIS, J., concurs in paragraphs 1 and 2, and in the result, dissents from paragraph 3.

GRAVES, J. (dissenting). Paragraph 3 of this opinion is wrong. Grant it that the trial courts should protect the good names of the courts in all ways possible, yet there is nothing in the facts of this case to call for the action taken by this trial court. Whilst courts should protect their dignity and even see that the parties to a cause shun the appearance of evil, yet the good names of jurors and other parties should not be ruthlessly reflected upon by hasty action of an oversuspicious judge. The facts of this case did not warrant the aspersions cast upon the jurors and this claim agent by the trial court, and the reason assigned by the trial court for setting aside the verdict should not be sustained, as it is in our opinion. This was the matter I had more fully in mind when the case was up in division.

2. The part of the opinion which discusses the instructions given by the court upon the part of the defendant does not meet with my entire approval. Upon re-reading the record and the opinion by Judge VALLIANT, I am inclined to the view that there was error in the giving of some of those instructions, but perhaps not to the full extent in the opinion stated. I do not concur in some of the reasoning under this branch of the opinion. However, there is enough error in instructions to justify a new trial, and for that reason the order granting it should not be disturbed.

3. I suggest, further, that it is an extremely close question, under the pleadings, whether the evidence for plaintiff justified the submission of the case to the jury at all. It is quite evident, when all facts are considered, that were it a case between man and man, and not a case of an old lady against a railway company, the verdict of any average jury would have been just as this verdict was—for the defendant. It may be that plaintiff's evidence spells a case for a jury, but, as the case must be tried, I reserve my further views for such time as it may be necessary to more closely scrutinize the record. Her case may be strengthened upon a retrial, or on the other hand it may be weakened. I dissent from the present opinion for the reason aforesaid.

WINN v. KANSAS CITY BELT RY. CO.
(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2.
Nov. 13, 1912.)

1. PLEADING (§ 433*)—PETITION—SUFFICIENCY AFTER VERDICT.

Under Rev. St. 1909, § 2119, forbidding the reversal of a judgment for want of any allegation on account of which omission a demurrer could have been maintained, a petition alleging that defendant operated a train, that, while plaintiff was standing in a position of safety on the train, defendant caused his removal therefrom and permitted him to fall under the train, is sufficient after verdict in the absence of any demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1451-1477; Dec. Dig. § 433.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 239*)—JOINT TORT—RECOVERY—ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE.

A plaintiff suing two or more persons as joint tort-feasors may recover against one alone, and this rule is not modified by Rev. St. 1909, § 1734, relating to actions in which a joint liability exists.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 417; Dec. Dig. § 239.*]

3. RAILROADS (§ 282*)—INJURIES TO PERSONS ON TRAINS—NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where a flagman at a crossing, required to prevent boys from getting on trains at his crossing, forcibly jerked a boy from a car ladder supporting him, and permitted him to fall on the track, causing injury, the question of his guilt of actionable negligence was for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 910-923; Dec. Dig. § 282.*]

4. RAILROADS (§ 281*)—INJURY TO THIRD PERSONS—NEGLIGENCE OF SERVANT—LIABILITY OF MASTER.

Where a flagman, who was required to prevent boys from getting on trains at his crossing, saw a boy get on a car ladder and almost immediately seized him, pulled him from the car, and caused him to fall on the track under the train, his act was within the scope of his employment, and the railroad company was liable for the resulting injuries.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; Walter A. Powell, Judge.

Action by Rupert Winn, by Clara M. Lamont, his next friend, against the Kansas City Belt Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Sebree, Conrad & Wendorff, of Kansas City, M. A. Low and Paul B. Walker, both of Topeka, Kan., W. F. Evans, of St. Louis, and Lathrop, Morrow, Fox & Moore, of Kansas City, for appellant. A. F. Smith, Boyle & Howell, Jos. S. Brooks, and Guthrie, Gamble & Street, all of Kansas City, for respondent.

BLAIR, C. This action was instituted in the circuit court of Jackson county by Rupert Winn, by next friend, against the Kansas City Belt Railway Company and the Kansas City Terminal Railway Company to recover damages for the loss of an arm and other injuries alleged to have resulted from defendants' negligence. At the close of his evidence, plaintiff dismissed as to the Kansas City Terminal Railway Company, and subsequent proceedings resulted in a judgment against the Kansas City Belt Railway Company, from which judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

The count of the petition on which recovery was had charges, among other things, that "defendants and some other railway company were operating a moving train on the tracks and road of the defendants under and by virtue of a license, permit, lease, or running arrangement, with or from said defendants," and "while plaintiff was riding on said moving train, which was running on the tracks and road of the defendants, * * * and, while he was standing in a position of safety on said train, the defendants and said lessee railway company caused the plaintiff to be removed therefrom in such a manner that plaintiff fell or was thrown under said moving train and his right arm, etc. * * * Plaintiff says that the conduct of the defendants and said lessee railway company in removing and causing to be removed the plaintiff from said train under the circumstances was negligent. Wherefore," etc. Appellant's answer was a general denial.

The injury occurred at Twentieth and Campbell streets in Kansas City, at which point appellant's road crosses Campbell street, where a flagman or watchman was and long had been stationed. A freight train was proceeding westward along appellant's tracks and across Campbell street when respondent, a 13 year old boy, in the flagman's presence, got upon the ladder at the side and near the end of one of the cars, and took a position with his feet in the stirrup and his hands grasping one of the rounds of the ladder. As this car passed over the crossing, the evidence tends to show the flagman stepped up behind respondent, seized hold of the belt of his trousers at the back, and pulled him from the car. At this juncture the flagman released his hold on respondent and the latter fell between the cars and upon or beside the rail, and his right arm was caught and crushed beneath the wheels. The evidence tends to show the flagman was old and weak. The evidence showed it was the flagman's duty to keep boys from getting on trains at his crossing, and that for years and in many instances he had exercised this authority. His own testimony is to this effect and is clearly susceptible of the further interpretation that his instructions were to see to it, generally, that no accidents happened at the crossing, and that he did whatever in his judgment would "protect the situation better." Appellant's superintendent testified it was the flagman's duty to "warn and prevent boys getting on trains, if he could," and that the same instructions were given all flagmen. For respondent one of appellant's former flagmen, in service in 1906, had testified the instructions were not to permit persons to get on trains at crossings.

[1] 1. It is said no negligence is charged. In view of the failure to demur and the statutory provision (section 2119, R. S. 1906) that after verdict the judgment thereon shall not be reversed "for the want of any allegation or averment on account of which omission a demurrer could have been maintained," nor "for omitting any allegation or averment without proving which the triers of the issue ought not to have given such a verdict," the objection comes too late. In the circumstances, appellant cannot now complain of a defective statement of the cause of action.

[2] 2. The petition charges joint negligence, but the evidence has no tendency to connect any save appellant with the injury, and appellant's counsel earnestly insist this constitutes a total failure of proof. The argument is, in substance, that, under a petition charging a joint tort, proof of a tort committed by one alone is insufficient to authorize judgment against even the guilty defendant.

In Winslow et al. v. Newlan et al., 45 Ill. loc. cit. 148, it was said that in actions of tort "it is a rule of practice, coeval with our system of jurisprudence, that a plaintiff may recover against as many, and only such, defendants as he proves to be guilty," and in Railway v. Laird, 164 U. S. loc. cit. 400, 17 Sup. Ct. 123, 41 L. Ed. 485, it was said that, since "in an action against joint tort-feasors recovery may be had against one, it follows that allegations alleging a joint relationship and the doing of negligent acts jointly are divisible, and that a recovery may be had where the proof establishes the connection of but one defendant with the acts averred." At common law, "in actions ex delicto a joint liability need not be proved, and consequently a misjoinder of defendants will not defeat a recovery." Volume 15, Ency. Pl. & Prac. p. 583, and cases cited. To these authorities may be added: Tompkins v. Railway, 66 Cal. 163, 4 Pac. 1165; Rome R. R. v. Thompson, 101 Ga. 26, 28 S. E. 429; Railway v. Duvall, 40 Ind. 246; Matthews v. Railway, 56 N. J. Law, 34, 27 Atl. 919, 22 L. R. A. 261; Railway v. Treadway, 143 Ind. loc. cit. 703, 40 N. E. 807, 41 N. E. 794; *Krebs Hop Co. v. Firor v. Taylor, 116 Md. 69, 81 Atl. 389; Railway v. Laird, 58 Fed. 760, 7 C. C. A. 789; Black on Judgments, § 207; Dacey on Parties to Actions, pp. 431, 432; Cooley on Torts, 227 (156); Pomeroy's Code Remedies, p. 278 (section 192, p. 291). That this rule has always been accepted in this state is evidenced by many decisions. Noble v. Kansas City, 95 Mo. App. loc. cit. 172, 68 S. W. 969; Hunt v. Railway, 89 Mo. 607, 1 S. W. 127; Killeber v. Railway et al., 107 Mo. 240, 17 S. W. 946, 14 L. R. A. 613; Wahl v. Transit Co., 203 Mo. 261, 101 S. W. 1; Wiggin v. St. Louis, 135 Mo. 558, 37 S. W. 528; Moudy v. Provision Co., 149 Mo. App. 413, 130 S. W. 476; Wills v. Railway et al., 133 Mo. App. 625, 113 S. W. 713; Stotler v. Railway, 200 Mo. loc. cit. 149, 150, 98 S. W. 509. Certainly the statutes have not affected the principle, and section 1734, R. S. 1909, which is relied upon, relates to actions in which a joint liability exists, not to actions in which joint liability is merely charged and does not exist. Besides, its provisions are enabling and not restrictive. The cases announcing the rule in actions on joint contracts are not in point; the common law in such cases being wholly different from that applicable in actions of torts. Further those cases have been overruled. Bagnell Tie & Timber Co. v. Railway, 145 S. W. 469. In the other Missouri cases cited (Otrich v. Railways, 154 Mo. App. 420, 134 S. W. 685, and Barton v. Barton, 119 Mo. App. 507, 94 S. W. 574) there had been a joint recovery, and the courts merely held that proof of a joint wrong was necessary to uphold the joint judgment.

It has been pointed out (Cooley on Torts, supra) that the rule in Pennsylvania is or was in some respects somewhat different from that commonly accepted, and it may be added that a like observation would seem to apply to certain decisions of the courts of Illinois. It appears now to be held, however, that if two or more are joined, and the proof shows but one to be guilty, a dismissal as to those not involved, ipso facto, no point being made at the trial, ordinarily amounts to an amendment eliminating all allegations save as to the remaining defendant, and a judgment against him alone will be sustained. Sturzebecker v. Inland Co., 211 Pa. 156, 60 Atl. 583; Lingvist v. Hodges, 248 Ill. 491, 94 N. E. 94. It is true there might arise a case in which the admission of evidence against a defendant not liable on the facts might be harmful to the defendant found guilty, but no such question is in this case. The sole question is whether, under a general charge of the common negligence of three, recovery may be had against the one defendant guilty. The decisions in cases in which separate concurring acts, all necessary to constitute a cause of action, were charged, and those merely holding that a joint recovery cannot be had under allegations of joint wrong, on proof of separate unconnected torts by the several defendants, as well as those in cases in which concert of action is necessary to the existence of any cause of action, are not applicable. The authorities are practically unanimous, and the point is ruled against appellant.

[3] 3. In the case of Brill v. Eddy, 115 Mo. 596, 22 S. W. 488, this court had before it, so far as concerns the negligence involved, facts strikingly like those in the present case. It is unnecessary to say more than that, under the rule then announced the question of negligence was for the jury. The cases cited in support of the contrary contention (Lillis v. Railway, 64 Mo. 464, 27 Am. Rep. 255; Randolph v. Railroad, 129 Mo. App. 1, 107 S. W. 1029; Bolin, Adm'r, v. Railway, 108 Wla. 333, 84 N. W. 446, 81 Am. St. Rep. 911) are beside the question. The first two were actions to recover for injuries alleged to have been inflicted by the use of excessive force in ejecting from passenger trains persons who refused to pay fare, and the last discusses the rule applicable when a trespasser is ordered off a slowly moving train and, while in the possession of all his faculties and in control of his own movements, is injured by his own negligence.

In the case at bar the flagman forcibly jerked respondent from the ladder which supported him. He did not order respondent off the car and permit him to exercise his judgment and control his own movements in dismounting, but took the matter into his own hands. Having undertaken this and deprived respondent of the power of protecting himself, he permitted him to fall, dropped him upon or near the rail, and the injury followed. What was said in Brill v. Eddy, supra, as to the resistance offered by the boy when grasped is applicable here and is supported by authority elsewhere. In that case it appeared the boy had no warning; in this it cannot, as a matter of law, be said the boy knew he was suddenly to be grasped and pulled from the car. The difference, if any, can no more than affect the weight, not the legal effect, of the circumstance. It may be added there was no plea of contributory negligence, but the jury was instructed that, if respondent's resistance, if any, to the flagman, materially contributed to the injury, the verdict should be for defendant.

[4] 4. The flagman or watchman's act was clearly one for the results of which appellant is liable. His authority to prevent boys from getting on trains at his crossing was established by the superintendent, whose duty it was to promulgate instructions to flagmen. It is an established fact on this record. He was at his appointed station on the crossing engaged in the performance of his duty when respondent got upon the car ladder in his very presence and almost immediately was seized by him and pulled from the car. There is no hint in the evidence that the flagman was actuated by any possible motive other than the performance of his duty as the servant of appellant. In this state of things the fact that the instructions on this phase of the case are not so clear as they might have been is not sufficient ground for reversal. Haehl v. Railway, 119 Mo. 325, 24 S. W. 737; Railway v. Hunter, 74 Miss. 444, 21 South. 304.

The judgment is affirmed.

ROY, C., concurs.

PER CURIAM. The foregoing opinion of BLAIR, C., is adopted as the opinion of the court. All the Judges concur.

STATE ex rel. KIMBRELL, Pros. Atty., v. PEOPLE'S ICE, STORAGE & FUEL CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1. June 29, 1912. Rehearing Denied Nov. 30, 1912.)

1. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 88*)—TIME FOR MAKING AND FILING—TERM OF COURT.

The referability of a proceeding was not open to review on appeal, where no bill of exceptions was filed at the term at which the referee was appointed, nor leave taken at that term to file such bill; the point not being saved by recital in a bill filed by leave given at a later term.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Cent. Dig. §§ 49-53; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

2. REFERENCE (§ 34*)—ORDER OF REFERENCE—OBJECTIONS—EXCEPTIONS.

Objections to the reference of a proceeding should be made at the time the referee is appointed, and to the court itself; and hence objections on this point before the referee, and motions to set aside the appointment and strike out the testimony because the case was not referable, filed after the report was made, were properly overruled.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Reference, Cent. Dig. §§ 61, 62; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

3. REFERENCE (§ 41*)—AUTHORITY OF REFEREE.

A referee has no power to set aside his own appointment, on the ground that the cause is not referable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Reference, Cent. Dig. § 67; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

4. JURY (§ 25*)—TRIAL BY JURY—DEMAND—TIME FOR MAKING.

A motion for a trial by jury after a referee has filed his report is too late.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 154-173; Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

5. VENUE (§ 77*)—CHANGE—TIME FOR APPLICATION.

Where, after an application for a change of venue was verified, the moving party filed several other motions and gave no notice of the intended presentation of the application for the change until such other motions were overruled, the change of venue was properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. §§ 59, 134, 188; Dec. Dig. § 77.*]

6. QUO WARRANTO (§ 1*)—FORM OF REMEDY.

Proceedings in the nature of quo warranto, not instituted under the statute, are of common-law origin; and, as a general rule, equitable rules are not applicable to them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quo Warranto, Cent. Dig. §§ 1, 8, 23, 28; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

7. ELECTION OF REMEDIES (§ 3*)—EXCLUSIVENESS OF REMEDY.

If any remedy by injunction to restrain unlawful combinations in restraint of trade by corporations exists, it is wholly inconsistent with the remedy by quo warranto; and the two cannot be prosecuted at the same time, even separately, since quo warranto goes to the life of the corporation informed against, while the injunction proceeding is necessarily predicated upon the continuance of its existence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Election of Remedies, Cent. Dig. §§ 3, 4; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 171*)—REVIEW—SCOPE AND THEORY OF CASE.

Where a proceeding was tried below and heard in the Supreme Court on the theory that it was a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto, it will be decided by the Supreme Court on the same theory.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1053-1063, 1066, 1067, 1161-1165; Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

9. REFERENCE (§ 102*)—REPORT—OPERATION AND EFFECT.

Rev. St. 1909, § 2013, giving a referee's report, when confirmed by the court, the same effect as a special verdict, does not apply where the court does not confirm the report, but sustains exceptions thereto and makes independent findings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Reference, Cent. Dig. §§ 181-187; Dec. Dig. § 102.*]

10. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 924*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS OF FACT.

In determining the conclusiveness of the trial court's findings, made after sustaining exceptions to those of the referee, the case will be treated as one compulsorily referable, where no exception to the reference was properly saved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2899, 3728, 3727; Dec. Dig. § 924.*]

11. REFERENCE (§ 99*)—REPORT—SETTING ASIDE.

In case of a compulsory reference, the trial court may act upon the referee's report and find therefrom different conclusions from those reported by the referee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Reference, Cent. Dig. §§ 148-156; Dec. Dig. § 99.*]

12. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1013*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS OF FACT.

A finding of fact, based on a mere mathematical computation, is reviewable on appeal, since any incorrect finding is without evidence to support it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3993-3995; Dec. Dig. § 1013.*]

13. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1008*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS OF FACT.

The rule as to the conclusiveness of the trial court's findings is not inapplicable because the testimony was wholly by deposition, or because one judge heard the evidence and another decided the case on the transcript thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3955-3960, 3963-3969; Dec. Dig. § 1008.*]

14. REFERENCE (§ 99*)—REPORT—OPERATION AND EFFECT.

In the case of a compulsory reference, the referee's power is limited to recommending judgment; and the reference can aid, but not bind, the trial judge, upon whom rests the duty and responsibility as to the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Reference, Cent. Dig. §§ 148-156; Dec. Dig. § 99.*]

15. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1022*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS OF FACT.

The findings of the trial court, after setting aside those made by the referee, are no more open for review on the mere weight of the evidence than any other findings, since the referee's findings are not judicially made until approved; and where they are set aside the only findings which are judicially made are those of the court.

16. QUO WARRANTO (§ 48*)—PLEADING—INFORMATION.

An information in the nature of quo warranto, alleging that prior to a certain date certain companies and copartnerships were engaged in the manufacture and sale of ice in competition, and that on that date a new corporation was organized by them for the purpose of restricting competition, should not be construed after judgment as alleging that competitive conditions existed at all times prior to the specified date, so as to overthrow findings based in part on evidence of unlawful acts prior to such date.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quo Warranto, Cent. Dig. §§ 49-52, 59, 60; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

17. MONOPOLIES (§ 24*) — PROCEEDINGS TO PREVENT UNLAWFUL COMBINATIONS — EVIDENCE.

In a proceeding against persons claimed to have formed an unlawful combination in restraint of trade, evidence of the preliminary steps in the formation of such combination, prior to the date on which the combination is alleged to exist, is admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other case, see Monopolies, Cent. Dig. § 17; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

18. MONOPOLIES (§ 20*) — PROCEEDINGS TO PREVENT UNLAWFUL COMBINATIONS — DEFENSES.

Competitors in the business of manufacturing and selling ice combined to restrict competition and, to carry out this purpose, organized a distributing company, with which they all contracted to sell their output of ice. Subsequently the distributing company was reorganized for the purpose of increasing its powers, and the reorganized company succeeded to the property, contracts, assets, and liabilities of the old company, and to its identity in the unlawful combination. Held, that the existence of the unlawful combination prior to the incorporation of such new company was not available to it as a defense against a charge of violating the anti-trust act.

[Ed. Note.—For other case, see Monopolies, Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

19. CONSPIRACY (§ 13*)—PERSONS LIABLE—ACTS OF CO-CONSPIRATORS.

As a general rule, if a conspiracy exists and another joins with the conspirators, he is deemed a party to all acts done by any of the conspirators, before or afterwards, in furtherance of the common design.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Conspiracy, Cent. Dig. § 14; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

20. MONOPOLIES (§ 24*) — PROCEEDINGS TO PREVENT UNLAWFUL COMBINATIONS — EVIDENCE.

Certain corporations and copartnerships formed an unlawful combination to restrict competition and organized the P. Company to carry out the purposes of the combination. The assets of the H. Company, one of the parties to the combination, and whose president participated in the organization and knew the purposes of the P. Company, were purchased by the K. Brewery Company thereafter organized, and the president of the H. Company became the president of the K. Company. Held, that it could not be said, as a matter of law, that the K. Company did not have knowledge of the unlawful character of the P. Company; and hence a judgment against defendant for violating the anti-trust act would not be disturbed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Monopolies, Cent. Dig. § 17; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

21. EVIDENCE (§ 253*)—ACTS AND DECLARATIONS OF CO-CONSPIRATORS.

Where there was other evidence that a corporation entered into an agreement with another company to fix prices, the declarations of its president and active manager in furtherance of the purpose of the combination were admissible as declarations of a co-conspirator.

22. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 422*)—EVIDENCE—ACTS AND DECLARATIONS OF CO-CONSPIRATORS.

It is not necessary that co-conspirators be indicted and tried together, in order to render the acts and declarations of one admissible against the others.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 984-988; Dec. Dig. § 422.*]

23. MONOPOLIES (§ 17*)—EVIDENCE—WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY.

The fact that parties charged with effecting an unlawful combination to restrict competition in the sale of ice, by forming a corporation to handle their output, sold small quantities of ice to others than such corporation during the spring and summer months, when the demand for ice was small, did not refute the charge, especially where such ice was sold in such quarters as to have no tendency to affect the rate made by such corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other case, see Monopolies, Cent. Dig. § 13; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

24. MONOPOLIES (§ 12*)—COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE—COMBINATIONS PROHIBITED.

The anti-trust law, in plain and unambiguous language, condemns every direct restraint of trade, great or small, without regard to what the courts may think as to the extent of the effect of the combination.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Monopolies, Cent. Dig. § 10; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

25. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 70*)—JUDICIAL POWERS—ENCROACHMENT ON LEGISLATURE.

The judgment of the Legislature, within its constitutional powers, is final; and the wisdom of its enactments cannot be questioned by the courts.

26. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 843*)—REVIEW—MOT QUESTIONS.

The question whether the court, in a proceeding to dissolve an unlawful combination in restraint of trade, erred in ordering the cancellation of certain contracts will not be determined where, by the expiration of the contracts by their own terms, the question has become a moot one.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3331-3341; Dec. Dig. § 843.*]

27. MONOPOLIES (§ 24*)—PROCEEDINGS TO PREVENT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a proceeding against persons charged with effecting an unlawful combination to restrict competition, evidence held to support the trial court's findings that certain of the defendants had effected such an unlawful combination.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; Walter B. Powell, Judge.

Information in the nature of quo warranto by the State, on the relation of I. B. Kimbrell, Prosecuting Attorney, against the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company and others. From the judgment, the defendant named and others appeal. Affirmed.

Cowherd, Ingraham, Durham & Morse, of Kansas City, for Kansas City Breweries Co. Warner, Dean, McLeoud & Timmonds, of Kansas City, for People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Co., Vanderslice-Lynds Mercantile Co., and Central Coal Co. Clinton A. Welch, of Kansas City, for Central Ice Co. I. B. Kimbrell and Clyde Taylor, both of Kansas City, for respondent.

BLAIR, C. This is a proceeding by information in the nature of quo warranto instituted by the prosecuting attorney of Jackson County, on his own relation and in his official capacity, against the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, the Vanderslice-Lynds Mercantile Company, the Central Ice Company, the Western Ice & Cold Storage Company, the Kansas City Breweries Company, the Dold Packing Company, John J. Ruddy, and Thomas P. Ruddy. The Ruddys are alleged to be partners, doing business under the firm name of Ruddy Bros., and also under the name of the Inter-State Ice & Cold Storage Company. Excepting the Jacob Dold Packing Company, the other corporate defendants are Missouri corporations. The Jacob Dold Packing Company is a corporation, but it is not alleged in what state it was organized. The circuit court found for the defendants Jacob Dold Packing Company, the Western Ice & Cold Storage Company, John J. Ruddy, and Thomas P. Ruddy, but entered judgment against the other defendants assessing a fine of $5,000 against the Central Ice Company, a fine of $4,500 against the Vanderslice-Lynds Mercantile Company, a fine of $5,000 against the Kansas City Breweries Company, a fine of $15,000 against the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, and also entered judgment forfeiting the charter of the last-named company. From that judgment, all four convicted defendants appealed.

The information alleged, in substance, that prior to July 1, 1905, the defendants, excepting the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, manufactured and sold 90 per cent. of the ice used in Kansas City, Mo., and vicinity; that the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, a corporation with capital stock of $170,000, was organized under the laws of Missouri by stockholders of the other defendants, the stock being held in trust for their respective corporations by the stockholders mentioned; that subsequently the other defendants, excepting the Central Ice Company, agreed with each other and the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company that for a period of three years each would sell to the latter for about cost the ice it manufactured, excepting such ice as it used in its own business, other than the ice business; that said contracts were in force and being complied with, together with further agreements that none of such defendants would sell to another than the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, nor produce more ice in excess of its own needs than required by contract with the last-mentioned company, though the plants of the respective defendants had sufficient capacity to produce much more; that the Central Ice Company agreed with the other defendants to conform to a scale of prices to be agreed upon from time to time. It is further alleged that defendants were and had been complying with all these contracts and agreements; that the profits of the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company have been, and hereafter will be, divided among the other defendants having the beneficial interest in the stock of the company named.

It is then alleged that defendants and other unknown persons, corporations, and copartnerships constitute an unlawful trust and combination, for the purpose and with the effect of lessening and destroying competition in the manufacture and sale of ice, and of creating a monopoly in the ice business in Kansas City and vicinity.

The People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company and the Vanderslice-Lynds Mercantile Company filed practically identical returns, denying specifically the several allegations of the information, except that each admitted the fact of its incorporation as charged, and the fact that it was engaged in the manufacture and sale of ice in Kansas City and vicinity. Each of these returns averred that there was full and free competition in the ice business in Kansas City, and each contained a paragraph challenging the authority of the prosecuting attorney to institute the proceeding.

The Kansas City Breweries Company, in its return, admitted its incorporation, but denied that it was incorporated prior to July 1, 1905, or engaged in the ice business prior to that time, and denied it was ever engaged in the ice business in Kansas City in competition with the other defendants named, or any of them; admitted its ownership of a portion of the capital stock of the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, but denied it owned such stock July 1, 1905, or that it was directly interested or participated in the formation of the last-mentioned corporation, and specifically denied all other allegations of the petition.

The Central Ice Company filed what it termed a motion to dismiss as to it, wherein it denied the allegations of the information affecting it and set forth several pages of correspondence and other evidence of its efforts to furnish ice for the Kansas City market, coupling with this a protest that the pendency of this proceeding will injure its credit. To this were added the affidavits of several officers and employees of the Central Ice Company as to the truth of the facts set up in the motion, and as to the company's having manufactured all the ice it could. This conglomeration was treated by the trial court as a return, and, shorn of its objectionable features, it will be so treated here.

The returns of the other defendants do not appear in the abstract, and are not important in view of the judgment entered.

The cause was referred to a commissioner, who heard evidence for several weeks, and in his report recommended judgment for all the defendants. On exception filed by the prosecuting attorney, the court set aside the referee's findings, and, on the evidence reported by the referee, rendered judgment as before indicated, and also requiring the cancellation of certain contracts, to which reference will be made hereafter. Motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment were filed and overruled, and the four defendants found guilty appealed.

The findings of the referee were based on that part of the evidence which remained after the exclusion of all evidence relating to transactions occurring prior to July 1, 1905, the date of the organization of the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company. The trial court, in making its findings, took this excluded evidence into consideration.

The evidence disclosed that the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, capital stock $170,000, was organized about July 1, 1905, and that it took over the assets and assumed the liabilities of the People's Ice & Fuel Company. This last-named company was incorporated in 1898. At that time (1898) the Armour Packing Company, the Ferd Helm Brewing Company, the Vanderslice-Lynds Mercantile Company, the Kansas City Ice & Cold Storage Company, the Grand Avenue Ice Company, the Woods Ice Company, the Yates Ice Company, the Fowler Packing Company, the Jacob Dold Packing Company, and the Standard Ice & Coal Company were in the ice business in Kansas City. The Woods Ice Company and the Yates Ice Company stored and sold natural ice. These seem to have been merely names under which R. W. Woods and James Yates, respectively, carried on the ice business. The Standard Ice & Coal Company was in the ice-distributing business. The others were manufacturers of ice; some of them also distributing ice with their own wagons and teams, or selling to peddlers (persons operating one or more ice wagons of their own), who were engaged solely in the distributing or retail branch of the business. There may have been other manufacturers of ice and dealers in natural ice in the city at that time; but, if so, their output was insignificant compared with the total output of the companies named. At the time mentioned (1898) the competition in Kansas City in the ice business was so great that the wholesale price to peddlers had been cut to $1 per ton—a sum scarcely sufficient to pay the expense of production of manufactured ice, which constituted the bulk of the supply on the Kansas City market. This, the evidence indicates, was due to competition among the packing and other companies, such as the brewing company and the Armour Packing Company, each of which consumed large quantities of ice in its own business, and ordinarily produced quantities much in excess of its daily needs by reason of the fact that its plant was equipped with ice-making machines of greater daily capacity than the needs of the company made necessary, in order to guard against the loss which would follow in its principal business in case its ice plant became temporarily or partially disabled. For this reason these companies, or some of them, maintained double plants and operated both, since to allow either part of the plant to lie idle was more expensive, on account of deterioration and loss of interest, than to operate the two and put the excess ice, thus produced, on the market.

In 1898 the Standard Ice & Coal Company, which produced no ice, but had contracted for the output of a plant on Grand avenue, and owned some natural ice, was, as stated, in the business of selling ice solely, operating about 30 wagons. N. H. Trask, Thomas Manville, George Manville, Hugo Clossen, or Claussen, and Kenneth Hudson owned all the stock of the Standard Ice & Coal Company. This company, having no other business during the warm months than the sale of ice, was among the first to feel the effects of the low prices which the competitive conditions mentioned produced. The gentlemen named conceived the idea of relieving (from their point of view) these conditions by the organization of a distributing company, the stock to be divided among the principal ice producing and selling companies in the city in proportion to the sales made by the respective companies during the preceding year. To accomplish this end, Trask "interviewed different ice men." Kirk Armour, of the Armour Packing Company, was the first man approached. W. D. Miles, then the manager of the Armour plant, was also present at a conversation with Trask and Thomas Manville in Mr. Armour's private office, and the statistics of the ice business the previous year were put before him. According to Trask, and the fact was not denied by Miles, the latter was "invited into the room where we were and told to help form the organization and do all he could." Having proceeded thus far, the learned commissioner excluded the details of the conversations with Armour and Miles, because Armour was dead and Miles (the commissioner held) not in a position to bind any defendant in this case. It may be noted here that the Armour Packing Company is not a party to this proceeding. Joseph J. Helm, then of the Ferd Helm Brewing Company, and at the time of trial president of the Kansas City Breweries Company, was the next man before whom the plan was laid, and he, while doubting the feasibility of the plan, agreed to "enter that kind of a deal if the rest would do it." Trask next talked about the matter with O. W. Butt and A. Menny of the Kansas City Ice & Cold Storage Company; the commissioner excluding the details of the conversation. Mr. Vanderslice, of Vanderslice-Lynds Mercantile Company, was next interviewed and the plan presented to him.

The plan was to organize a central distributing company which should contract to buy the ice of the companies entering into the scheme at a price to be determined by subsequent agreement, an amount of stock to be taken by each participating company equal to the proportion the ice sold by such company the preceding year bore to the whole amount sold during that year by all the companies participating in the organization. The capital stock was to be $20,000. The purposes were to stop the cutting of prices and lessen the expense of delivering ice, and "to eliminate unreasonable competition." Mr. Vanderslice said that the purpose of his company was to "get out of the distribution of ice," because it had proved unprofitable. Several meetings were held. One was attended by R. W. Woods, of the Woods Ice Company, James Yates, of the Yates Ice Company, Mr. Butt, of the Kansas City Ice & Cold Storage Company, W. D. Miles, representing the Armours, and Trask, Clossen, and Thomas Manville, of the Standard Ice & Coal Company. The witness also thought Mr. Helm was present. At other meetings Mr. Rittick, or Reddick, represented the Grand Avenue Ice Company, Vanderslice represented the Vanderslice-Lynds Mercantile Company, Yates, Woods, and Joseph Helm represented their respective companies, W. D. Miles represented Armours, and Mr. Butt and Mr. Menny represented the Kansas City Ice & Cold Storage Company. At the meetings mentioned there was a general discussion of the proposed plan and its purposes. It was finally agreed that a distributing company be organized for the purposes of putting an end to "unreasonable competition," stopping price cutting, and lessening the expense of distribution. The Vanderslice-Lynds Mercantile Company, the Ferd Helm Brewing Company, the Armour Packing Company, the Kansas City Ice & Cold Storage Company, the Grand Avenue Ice Company, the Yates Ice Company, and the Woods Ice Company united in the formation of the new company. Whether others participated is not quite clear. The stock was not issued directly to the corporations entering into the arrangement, but to individuals, who held it for the several corporations. Joseph Helm, H. Vanderslice, A. Menny, O. W. Butt, W. D. Miles and J. S. Thayer, Mr. Rittick, or Reddick, Captain Woods, and James Yates were the principal stockholders and incorporators of the People's Ice & Fuel Company in 1898. Four or five of the companies participating in the organization distributed as well as manufactured and imported ice, and the wagons, teams, and other equipment used by these companies in distributing ice were turned over to the new company; about 75 per cent. of the stock being paid for in this fashion, according to Mr. Helm. By this means the companies engaged therein were taken out of the retail business, and the routes which had known them theretofore as competitors knew them no more. The company thus formed entered into contracts with the several companies which held its capital stock (owned the beneficial interest therein), whereby it agreed to take large quantities of ice from these companies. The price to be paid by the company to all was, after some discussion, fixed, by agreement of the representatives of the stockholders, at $2 per ton. The name decided upon for the company was the People's Ice & Fuel Company. Other contracts were made with other persons and outside companies for ice, as it seemed to be needed and was obtainable.

There were some changes in the stockholdings as time progressed. The first one of importance was the sale of some stock to J. C. Dold, immediately followed by a contract for the most of the output of the Dold Packing Company ice plant at $2 per ton, the price paid companies which originally took part in the organization. Yates sold part of his stock to A. Menny, then manager of the People's Company, a part, probably, to W. S. Pontius, connected with the same company, and part to O. W. Butt, and the stock of the Kansas City Ice & Cold Storage Company passed subsequently into the hands of the National Bank of Commerce and then to the Western Ice & Storage Company, organized by the bank mentioned to take over the Kansas City Ice & Cold Storage Company plant and its stock in the People's Ice & Fuel Company. The stock which had been held for the Armour Packing Company by J. S. Thayer was sold or transferred to W. D. Miles, who held, or had held, other shares for the same company.

In June, 1905, and for some time prior thereto, the stock of the People's Ice & Fuel Company stood in the names of H. Vander-slice; of Vanderslice-Lynds Mercantile Company, J. J. Helm, of the Ferd Helm Brewing Company, W. H. Winants, of the Western Ice & Storage Company, R. W. Woods, of the Woods Ice Company, W. D. Miles, and A. Menny, manager of the People's Ice & Fuel Company. Some time previously these same gentlemen had acquired what was known as the Grand avenue plant, having purchased this plant for about $30,000. Considerable improvements were made on that plant prior to July 1, 1905.

In June, 1905, the People's Ice & Fuel Company had in force several ice contracts of the kind already mentioned. Its contract of February 6, 1903, with the Vanderslice-Lynds Mercantile Company was for 29,700 tons of artificial ice at $2 per ton, deliverable at the Mercantile Company's plant on board wagons or cars, 9,900 tons deliverable in 1903, 1904, and 1905, each. Of this annual quantity 600 tons were to be delivered in April, 750 tons in May, 1,500 tons in June, 1,800 tons in July and August, each, 1,500 tons in September, 1,050 tons in October, and 900 tons in November in each of the three years. The Armour Packing Company contract, dated February 6, 1903, covering three years, called for the delivery to the People's Ice & Fuel Company of 50,100 tons, one-third in each year for three years. The deliveries for each year by months to be as follows: January, 1,400 tons; February, 1,300 tons; March, 1,000 tons; April, 500 tons; May, 500 tons; June, 2,000 tons; July and August, 3,500 tons each; September, 2,000 tons; October, 1,000 tons. The February, 1903, contract between the Jacob Dold Packing Company and the People's Ice & Fuel Company called for the delivery in each of the three years of 14,000 tons, or a total during the three years of 42,000 tons, as follows: May, 1,750 tons; June, 3,000 tons; July, 3,250 tons; August, 3,500 tons; September, 2,500 tons. Contracts of like character, and covering about the same period, between the People's Ice & Fuel Company and other companies represented on its directorate were also entered into. Like contracts had covered the whole period from the organization of the People's Ice & Fuel Company. Among other things, these 1903 contracts provided that the failure of the People's Ice & Fuel Company to take the full annual amount contracted for subjected that company to a forfeiture of 50 cents per ton on the deficiency; and, in case that company bought ice from any company with "which it has not a contract at this date," the obligation to take the full amount contracted for became absolute, and the deficiency clause did not apply. Another clause provided that, in case the People's Ice & Fuel Company made "a contract with any one to buy artificial ice at a higher price than two dollars a ton during the life of this contract, then such additional price shall be paid by said second party to said first party for all ice delivered or to be delivered under this contract." These provisions did not appear in the 1906 contracts hereafter mentioned.

As stated, prior to June, 1905, the stockholders of the People's Ice & Fuel Company, which was purely a selling company, had purchased and owned the stock of the Grand Avenue Ice Company, and July 1, 1905, the defendant People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company was organized with a capital of $170,000. The new company took over the plant and equipment of the People's Ice & Fuel Company and the plant of the Grand Avenue Ice Company; the stock in the new company being issued to the stockholders in the old company (People's Ice & Fuel Company) in proportion to the sum of the stock held by each in the old company and the Grand Avenue Ice Company. The only important change in the charter was the addition of authority to do a storage business; the change being made necessary by the fact that Mr. Winants, of the National Bank of Commerce, a stockholder in the old company representing the bank mentioned, required that change before his bank would make loans on warehouse or storage certificates issued by the company. The new company took over all the assets, including leases on plants of other companies, and assumed all the liabilities of the old, including the ice contracts theretofore entered into by the old company, most of which had until the following February to run. There was no change in the officers or management, the same books were used, and the methods of business were identical with those theretofore employed. The employees and equipment were the same. The stockholders, organizers, and directors of the new company were those who had just previously been the nominal stockholders of the old company, except that one share each was issued to Burk, the secretary of the old and new companies, one to Marlon L. Dean, and one to A. J. Menny to qualify them for the directorate, and except that J. C. Dold, president of the J. C. Dold Packing Company, of Buffalo, N. Y., who was a stockholder in the old company, did not appear in the articles of incorporation as one of the original incorporators of the new, though he was in fact so. H. Vanderslice held 245 shares, J. J. Helm 266 shares, W. H. Winants 250 shares, R. W. Woods 259 shares, W. D. Miles 281 shares, and A. Menny 396 shares; total, 1,697 shares, which, with the 3 shares previously mentioned, totaled 1,700 shares, representing the capital stock of $170,000. Helm held his shares for the Kansas City Breweries Company, Winants for the Bank of Commerce, Vanderslice (and subsequently Lynds) for the Vanderslice-Lynds Company. The assets of the People's Ice & Fuel Company were taken over at a valuation of $100,000 and the Grand Avenue plant at a valuation of $70,000. Immediately after the incorporation of the new company, Winants transferred 240 shares to the National Bank of Commerce; A. Menny transferred all of his shares, except 164; Vanderslice transferred 128 shares to J. H. Lynds, of the Vanderslice-Lynds Mercantile Company; 227 shares were transferred to J. C. Dold; H. L. Burk, manager of the company, some time prior to July, 1906, acquired 7 more shares. Dean disappeared as a stockholder, and Wood and Miles retained their original holdings. In February, 1906, at the expiration of the several 1903 contracts of the People's Ice & Fuel Company (the old company), which had been assumed and carried out by the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company (the new company), new contracts were entered into.

The Kansas City Breweries Company, which, in the fall of 1905, had succeeded and carried out the contract of the Ferd Heim Brewing Company, as well as purchased the stock the latter had held (in the name of Mr. Heim), first in the People's Ice & Fuel Company, and then in the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, entered into a contract with the last-named company, dated February 26, 1906, whereby it agreed to furnish that company 11,330 tons per annum for three years at $2 per ton, 500 tons in February, March, and April, each, 680 tons in May, 1,150 tons in June, 2,250 tons in each of the months of July and August, 1,500 tons in September, and 1,000 tons in October and November, each, amounting to 11,330 tons each year of the three years, or a total of 33,990 tons, all artificial ice. The Vanderslice-Lynds Mercantile Company entered into a like three-year contract, dated February 16, 1906, whereby it obligated itself to furnish a total of 83,000 tons, 11,000 tons per annum, 500 tons in March, 600 tons in April, 850 tons in May, 1,500 tons in June, 1,800 tons in each of the months of July and August, 1,500 tons in September, 1,050 tons in October, 900 tons in November, and 500 tons in December, of each year. The Jacob Dold Packing Company entered into a like contract, dated February 9, 1906, contracting to deliver 16,300 tons in 1906 and 15,000 tons in 1907 and 1908, each, 2,500 tons in May, 1906, and 2,000 tons in May, 1907 and 1908, 3,300 tons in June, 1906, and 3,000 tons in June, 1907, and June, 1908, 3,500 tons in each of the months of July and August in all three years, 3,500 tons in September, 1906, and 3,000 tons in September, 1907 and 1908; total, 46,300 tons.

The Consolidated Light, Power & Ice Company of Joplin also entered into a contract, dated March 20, 1906, to deliver to the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, between the date of the contract and September 1, 1906, time of delivery at the option of the latter, 2,500 tons of ice at $4 per ton f. o. b. Kansas City.

The Interstate Ice & Cold Storage Company, of which Thomas P. Ruddy was president, contracted, under date of February 28, 1906, to deliver f. o. b. wagon or cars at its plant in Kansas City, Kan., 5,520 tons of ice at $3.25 per ton, 900 tons in the last half of June, 1,860 tons in July and a like amount in August, and 900 tons in the first half of September, all to be delivered in 1906. The deliveries under this contract had not commenced July 15, 1906, the plant of the Interstate Company having been undergoing enlargement which the contract contemplated, and which had not been completed.

The Santa Fé Car Icing Company was also under contract, dated June 29, 1906, to deliver 7,000 tons of ice f. o. b. cars at its plant in Argentine, Kan., at $3.50 per ton, the whole amount to be delivered by September 15, 1906, not more than 3,500 tons in any one month.

The People's Ice & Fuel Company had, in 1905, acquired a 10-year lease on the plant of the Western Ice & Cold Storage Company plant, which lease was, July 3, 1905, assigned by it to the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company. The latter, in January, 1906, secured a lease for five years on the plant of the Westport Crystal Ice Company, of Kansas City.

In 1905, and at the time of the trial, the capacity of the Ferd Heim Brewing Company's ice plant was about 110 tons per day, when run at full capacity, and the brewing company itself on some days, as early as 1898, required as much as 50 tons, and on others practically none; Mr. Heim stating that there was no method by which he could arrive at the average daily requirements of the brewery company.

The capacity of the Vanderslice-Lynds Mercantile Company's ice plant at the same times was somewhat less than 75 tons per day in hot weather. The amount of this output required for that company's own needs, if any, does not appear.

The capacity of the Jacob Dold Packing Company's plant was nearly 125 tons per day, when in running order. The entire actual output during May, June, and in July to the time of the hearing (except 28 tons sold to the National Packing Company) was sold and delivered to the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company; the deliveries in May exceeding the requirements of the contract by more than 100 tons.

The Grand Avenue plant, owned by the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, had a capacity of 60 or 65 tons per day. The plant of the Western Ice & Storage Company, leased to the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, had a capacity of 100 tons per day, and new machinery, about ready for use at the time of the hearing, increased that to 175 tons per day. Taking into consideration all the ice sold by the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, the average per day for the entire year was about 197 tons, the daily average from June 15th to September 15th was about 578 tons, and the daily average during July and August some what more than that figure. Of the total the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company owned or leased plants with sufficient capacity to produce about 180 tons per day, exclusive of the 100-ton addition to the plant of the Western Ice & Storage Company.

Excepting the original respondents in this case, the companies making ice in Kansas City and vicinity were the Crystal Springs Ice Company, Kansas City, Kan., capacity 50 tons per day; the Leeds Ice plant, capacity 30 tons per day; the Armour Packing Company, 150 tons per day; the Santa Fe Car Icing Company, 140 tons per day, located at Argentine, Kan., the Independence plant, Independence, Mo., capacity 50 tons. The first-named company also handled about two cars (40 tons) of ice from Galena, Kan.; and the Leeds Company handled a car per day from Paola, Kan. The Swift Packing Company was installing a 200-ton plant, and the Morris Packing Company made about 100 tons per day; but neither was selling ice on the Kansas City market at the time of the hearing.

The evidence also disclosed that what was called "the ice season" extended from about June 15th to September 15th of each year, during which time the demand for ice was enormous. The natural ice crop in the vicinity of Kansas City in the winter of 1905 and 1906 was a failure. The Armour Packing Company, which usually stored 80,000 tons or more of natural ice, was unable to store any, and, consequently, for use in its own business, was relying upon the artificial ice from its plant. Neither that company nor R. W. Woods, one of the stockholders of the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, and a dealer in natural ice, entered into any contract with the People's Company in 1906. As Mr. Woods testified, he "had nothing to sell." None of the respondents, save the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company and the Central Ice Company, delivered ice by wagons on regular routes, though Vander-slice-Lynds sold ice to three or four peddlers, who operated their own wagons, and who had bought from that company from the time it began the manufacture of ice. The only other companies operating wagons on the streets were the Crystal Springs Company of Argentine, Kan., which appears to have operated wagons in Kansas City, Kan., the Standard Ice Company, under which name the Leeds plant, some three to five miles out of the city, was operated, and possibly the Interstate Ice & Cold Storage Company had operated some wagons a while. Some other companies sold ice to peddlers at times; but it is not made clear what amount of ice reached the daily market by this channel.

The Central Ice Company, one of the defendants, was shown to have a capacity of 350 tons per day at the time of the hearing, and it also shipped in ice from outside sources. It operated wagons of its own, and also sold to peddlers, who ran their own wagons.

In March, 1906, the price of ice in Kansas City to peddlers and distributors, uniformly made by all producers and importers, was $3 per ton. On the 1st day of April this price was raised by all to $4 per ton, and on May 1st it was again uniformly raised by all to $5 per ton. On the 23d of June this proceeding was instituted. The retail prices were raised to conform to the increase in the price made the peddlers. Notices of uniform increases on April 1st and May 1st were mailed out some days in advance by the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company and the Central Ice Company to their respective customers; the peddlers or drivers for each company getting their notice of the increase in the wholesale and retail prices from the company direct, or from the weighmaster at the plant at which they obtained ice, and the peddlers operating their own wagons getting their information, often, when the increased price was exacted of them. These last conformed their retail prices to those of the People's and Central Companies, which were identical and conformed to the notices sent out. There had been no scarcity of ice in 1906 to explain the increase in prices; and some of the plants of the companies named had not been, prior to the hearing in July, run at their full capacity all the time. The officers of defendants explained the increase as due to the failure of the natural ice crop and the consequent change in the ratio of the demand to the supply of artificial ice.

The Central Ice Company and the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company furnished about 75 to 90 per cent. of the ice used in the Kansas City market, excepting that consumed by large plants, which, in the main, made their own ice.

The Central Ice Company was organized about 1902 or 1903 by W. F. Lyons, who became its president, principal owner, and, it seems, manager. He had full control and charge of the company's business, as his own testimony clearly indicates. This company furnished no ice to the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, but had 27 or 28 wagons of its own, which it used in delivering ice. It also sold ice to about 30 or 35 peddlers, who used their own wagons in delivering. The People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company operated 57 or 58 ice wagons of its own, and also sold to about 65 or 70 peddlers, who delivered in their own wagons. Some of these peddlers operated more than one wagon. Most of them—nearly all of them—procured their ice supply from the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company or the Central Ice Company. All of them conformed to the retail prices made by the People's and the Central Companies, except in a few isolated sales. O. W. Butt, formerly of the Kansas City Ice & Cold Storage Company and one of the organizers of the first distributing company, the old People's Ice & Fuel Company in 1898, testified that the People's Ice & Fuel Company and the Central Ice Company, after it was organized, entered into "a gentlemen's agreement to be good to each other." The representatives of the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, "had several talks with Mr. Lyons, representing his company, and it was agreed" that "each should respect the others customers;" and it was also agreed that "a usual and uniform price" should be maintained and the two sell at the same price. Butt further testified that in the fall of 1905 or spring of 1906 he contemplated buying into the Central Ice Company, and that Lyons, its president, during the pendency of their negotiations, made a general statement of the financial condition of the company. During the discussion Butt asked Lyons how he "was going to conduct the general business now," and whether he was still "maintaining those prices." The witness testified "he said 'Yes,' they were still working along under the same arrangement."

O. P. Street was engaged in the ice business in Kansas City in 1905, dealing principally in natural ice. A. J. Morris and H. R. Clauss were associated with him, and the business was done under the name of the Consumers' Ice Company. This company procured a small supply of artificial ice from Galena, Kan. (Street being interested in an ice company there), and Pittsburg, Kan. The principal part of their ice was natural ice from Moline, Ill. The Consumers' Ice Company began their 1905 business in May, 1905, and made a price to peddlers of $3 per ton. At this time the People's Ice & Fuel Company (the old distributing company), the Central Ice Company, and practically all, if not all, other ice companies, except the Imperial Brewing Company, were maintaining a price of $3.50 per ton to peddlers. In the early part of May, 1905, Street had a conversation with A. Menny, the manager of the People's Ice & Fuel Company, at his office, concerning the price of ice in Kansas City for 1905; but the details of this conversation were excluded by the learned commissioner. Street testified that in June Lyons, president of the Central Ice Company, visited the office of the Consumers' Ice Company and took up the question of the prices of ice. He made inquiries of Street, Clauss, and Morris as to whether it "would be agreeable to" them to advance prices to $3.50 for natural ice and $4 for artificial ice. Lyons stated that he had been in consultation with the People's Company. Street's company deferred giving a definite answer, and Lyons visited them again, and was told the Consumers' Ice Company had decided not to advance prices. Later, about June 20th, or 25th, Lyons again approached the members of the Consumers' Ice Company and told them they "had one more opportunity to advance prices." He was very anxious to secure an agreement to make the advance, but was told that the Consumers' Company did not look upon the proposal with favor; but a final conclusion would be reached in a few days. That answer was a refusal to enter into the agreement for the advance. Lyons took the matter up with Street thereafter, deploring the fact that prices were not higher, and finally stated that if the Consumers' Ice Company did not agree to the advance "there certainly would be lower prices for ice." A few days thereafter, and about June 25th or 28th, the Central Ice Company and the People's Ice & Fuel Company did cut the price to $2 per ton for natural ice and to $2.85 per ton for artificial ice, and these prices were maintained until the Consumers' Ice Company failed, about 60 days later. The evidence showed that the Consumers' Ice Company's natural ice cost it $2.25 to $2.50 per ton f. o. b. Kansas City, and that the artificial ice it handled was almost a negligible quantity. These facts were testified to by Street, and Lyons, recalled, admitted having frequent conversations with Street and his associates, admitted stating that they were selling ice too low, denied endeavoring to arrange any advance on the part of the Central, the People's, and the Consumers' Companies, but did not deny cutting the prices as Street testified.

Dr. Henry Croskey testified to a conversation with W. F. Lyons, president of the Central Ice Company, in April, 1906, in which he asked Lyons what effect the hot weather would have on ice. In the language of the witness: "He says: 'Well, it is going to raise the price.' I says: 'Why, you can manufacture it for 90 cents or $1.25.' 'Yes,' he says, 'but there is no money in that.' He says: 'You can't buy any natural ice, and you have to depend on artificial ice. Of course, we are going to make something out of it.' I said: 'Well, it will not affect me much. I have been buying my ice from Murphy for eight years. I have only been paying him 30 cents a hundred, and, of course, Murphy will not raise it on me.' He says: 'Yes, indeed, he will, because I have already raised it on him—the price of ice. We will raise it again, and we will have to charge him more for it.' I says: 'If Murphy is going to charge me more than that, I am going to look around for somebody to buy ice from.' He says: 'That will not do you any good either, because we all intend to raise the price of ice, and you cannot get it any cheaper.'"

Lyons admitted having a conversation with Dr. Croskey at the place Croskey named, but said it occurred in May of 1906. Lyons detailed the conversation as follows: "He called across the corner to me, and said, 'Have you raised the price of ice, too?' I said: 'Yes; I have.' 'Well,' he says, 'what is your reason for raising the price of ice?" I told him on account of the hot winter and scarcity of the product. He says: 'I don't believe Murphy will raise on me. I have been buying from him a great many years,' or a 'good long time.' I don't remember that he stated eight years or any definite period. He told me he had been buying from him for some time, and that he didn't believe Murphy would raise his price. He said his price was 30 cents a hundred. I said to him: 'Neither he nor any one else can furnish you that ice at that price this year, if we should have a hot season—if we get a warm season. On account of the conditions of the ice market to-day, men who are now manufacturing ice will be glad to get it at 30 cents a hundred in car load lots. I have already raised my price on Mr. Murphy, and expect to have to do it again.' He commenced talking to me about everybody going in and raising the price, and I just finished my dinner and got up and left."

Mr. Joseph Helm testified that the Kansas City Breweries Company had no agreement with any one as to the amount of ice it should make, nor any agreement as to the price at which it should sell. Mr. Vanderslice gave like testimony as to the Vanderslice-Lynds Mercantile Company. Neither of these gentlemen, nor any other, however, though both of them and Mr. Miles seem to have been present at the time, denied the testimony as to the original purposes of the formation of the People's Ice & Fuel Company as detailed by Butt and Trask. There was evidence that the Breweries Company and the Vanderslice Company sold ice to others than the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, but not to peddlers, except as already stated. The quantity of ice sold at retail and to retailers by these companies was practically negligible. H. L. Burk was the secretary of the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, and, according to his own uncontradicted testimony, the whole power to fix prices of ice was in his hands. He consulted no one, in or out of the company, but made prices as he pleased. He originally (July 1, 1905) had one share of stock, but before the hearing had acquired seven more, he testified. The testimony of the officers and directors of the company tended to corroborate Burk as to his control of prices. Lyons testified he generally conformed his (Central Ice Company's) prices to those made by the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company; that he watched their prices, and when they advanced the price he did likewise. He said that on one occasion he made price "downtown $7 a ton and collected the money for the ice"; that he "thought was going to be the regular price," but found it was not, but that "it was $6 instead of $7," and had to refund the difference. It also appeared that as the price to peddlers was advanced the prices to consumers were also advanced; these prices being graduated on a scale depending upon the daily requirements of the customer. The price (after May 1, 1906), delivered in wagon load lots (5,000 pounds), was $5.50 per ton; less than 5,000 pounds, and a cake (300 pounds) or more, $6 per ton; less than a cake, to business houses, at the rate of $7 per ton; to families, $10 per ton. These prices, prior to May 1, 1906, had been, respectively, at the rate of $4.50, $5, $6, and $8, per ton. The prices of the People's and the Central Companies were identical in point of time and amount.

[1-3] 1. The action of the circuit court in referring the case is assigned for error. It is not necessary for us to follow counsel through the authorities cited upon the question of the referability of this proceeding, for the reason that the referee was appointed at the June, 1906, term of court, and no term bill of exceptions was filed; nor was leave taken at that term to file such a bill for the purpose of preserving exceptions to the court's action. The recital in the bill filed by leave given at a later term cannot avail to save the point. Smith v. Baer, 166 Mo. loc. cit. 401, 66 S. W. 166; Dean v. Railroad Co., 229 Mo. loc. cit. 439, 440, 129 S. W. 953; State v. Bonner, 5 Mo. App. loc. cit. 16. Neither do the objections made before the referee at the beginning of the taking of testimony before him furnish any support for this assignment. Objections on this head must be made at the time of the appointment, and made to the court itself. The referee, or commissioner, as he was dubbed in this case (Peabody v. Munson, 211 Ill. loc. cit. 326, 71 N. E. 1006), has no more power to set aside his appointment, on the ground that the cause he is about to hear is not referable, than he has to appoint himself referee in the first place.

It may also be observed here that the action of the trial court in overruling the motion to set aside the appointing order and the motion to strike out the testimony, on the ground that the case was not referable and consent had not been given, all of which motions were filed after the report was in, is in full harmony with principles heretofore laid down. Young v. Powell, 87 Mo. loc. cit. 130; Conley et al. v. Horner et al., 10 Okl. loc. cit. 278, 62 Pac. 307.

[4] 2. An exception not properly preserved is no exception at all. Consequently this record presents a case in which the trial court referred the issues, at the relator's instance, without exception being taken. It was too late after the report was filed to move for trial by jury (Smith v. Baer, supra, 166 Mo. loc. cit. 402, 66 S. W. 166; Grant v. Hughes, 96 N. C. loc. cit. 189, 2 S. E. 339); and consequently the right to such trial in a case of this kind is not presented by this record.

[5] 3. After the report of the referee and relator's exceptions thereto had been on file some six months, and the exceptions had been argued, submitted, taken under advisement, and sustained, and partial findings of fact and conclusions of law, so the record recites, had been filed by the court below, appellants, on May 14, 1907, the day the order sustaining the exceptions was finally made, filed seven separate motions to strike out all or certain parts of the evidence taken by the referee. Two of these motions were filed by the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, one to strike out all the evidence, and one to strike out merely that part of the evidence relative to the organization of the People's Ice & Fuel Company, and to the objects and purposes of such organization. These motions were overruled and exceptions taken. Thereafter, and at "11 o'clock a. m." on the same day, the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company filed its application for change of venue, on the grounds of the bias and prejudice of the judge against it. The application was signed by the applicant's counsel, and was sworn to by its secretary, H. L. Burk, on May 13, 1907, the day before the application was presented, and before the several motions mentioned were filed and disposed of. No notice of the intended presentation of the application was given the prosecuting attorney until immediately at the time the application was filed. Under such circumstances the trial court's ruling refusing a change of venue could not be disturbed (St. L. C. G. & Ft. S. Ry. Co. v. Holaday, 131 Mo. loc. cit. 452, 453, 33 S. W. 49), even if it could be conceded (which it is not) that the general rule that a case cannot be cut in two by a change of venue after the filing of a referee's report (Woodrow v. Younger, 61 Mo. 395) is inapplicable, in view of the peculiar facts of this case.

4. Despite the fact that the circuit judge set aside the referee's report and made findings of fact of his own, it is insisted that the judgment, based on the court's findings, must be reversed if there is any substantial evidence in the record supporting the findings of the referee.

(1) This is not a reference by consent; and consequently the rule in such references with regard to the finality of the referee's findings of fact (Caruth-Byrnes Hardware Co. v. Wolter, 91 Mo. 484, 3 S. W. 865; State ex rel. Walker v. Hurlstone, 92 Mo. loc. cit. 332, 5 S. W. 38) is not applicable to this case.

[6] (2) Nor is the rule applicable in references in suits in equity applicable here. Proceedings by information in the nature of quo warranto, not instituted under the statute, owe their origin to the common law (High on Extr. Legal Remedies, § 593; State ex inf. v. Standard Oil Co., 218 Mo. loc. cit. 345, 116 S. W. 902; State ex rel. v. Rose, 84 Mo. loc. cit. 202; State ex rel. v. Miller, 1 Mo. App. 57, 67, 68); and equitable rules, generally speaking, are not applicable to them. The information, rule issued thereon, and relief granted are not consistent with any contention that this proceeding is other than an ordinary proceeding by information in the nature of quo warranto. The case was tried below on that theory, and in their briefs and arguments here appellant's counsel adhere to the trial theory. There is no contention that the proceeding is one in equity, but the contrary.

[7] We agree with the view of the trial court and counsel on both sides that this is a proceeding by information in the nature of quo warranto, despite the presence in the information of a prayer for an injunction. The remedy by injunction, if any exist, to restrain corporations from continuing unlawful combinations and that by quo warranto are wholly inconsistent and cannot be prosecuted to judgment at the same time, even separately (Attorney General v. Railroad Companies, 35 Wis. loc. cit. 595, 596) for obvious reasons. Quo warranto goes to the life of the corporation informed against; while a proceeding to enjoin is necessarily predicated upon an anticipation of the continuance of the defendant's corporate existence.

There are reasons, also, to question the right of a prosecuting attorney, in 1906, to institute injunction proceedings under the statute then in force (section 8979, R. S. 1899), except by direction of the Attorney General (of which there is no pretense in this case); and certainly he could not proceed outside the statute, in a case of this kind, by injunction against corporations whose business was not affected with a public interest. (McCarter v. Insurance Co., 74 N. J. Eq. 372, 73 Atl. 80, 414, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1194, 135 Am. St. Rep. 708, 18 Ann. Cas. 1048; Cook on Corporations, § 635.

[8] It is not necessary to elaborate these suggestions, however, since the case was tried below and heard here upon the theory that it was purely a proceeding by information in the nature of quo warranto, and on that theory it must be decided by us. The rule in equity, therefore, with respect to weighing evidence, is inapplicable.

[9] (3) Nor can we apply the rule laid down by the statute (section 2013, R. S. 1909) for the government of those cases in which the report of the referee was approved by the trial court, for the obvious reason that the report in this case was not approved, but exceptions thereto sustained and independent findings made by the court.

[10, 11] (4) The question which confronts us in this case really is as to what presumptions support the findings of the trial judge, made on the evidence after the referee's report has been set aside in the exercise of the court's unquestionable discretion so to do (Utley v. Hill, 155 Mo. loc. cit. 276, 55 S. W. 1091, 49 L. R. A. 323, 78 Am. St. Rep. 569) in a case referred by compulsion. For the purpose of determining this question, we must, since no exception to the reference was saved, so that it can be considered here (Smith v. Baer, 166 Mo. loc. cit. 401, 66 S. W. 166; Tinsley v. Kemery, 170 Mo. loc. cit. 318, 70 S. W. 691), treat the case as one compulsorily referable. In such cases it is the settled law of this state that the trial court "may act upon the report of the referee and find therefrom different conclusions of fact from those reported by the referee." Utley v. Hill, 155 Mo. loc. cit. 276, 55 S. W. 1104, 49 L. R. A. 323, 78 Am. St. Rep. 569.

Once, at least, this division has expressed itself directly upon the point. In the case of Utley v. Hill, 155 Mo. loc. cit. 258, 55 S. W. 1097, 49 L. R. A. 323, 78 Am. St. Rep. 569, it was said that the finding of the trial judge in sustaining exceptions on conflicting evidence, when assailed in this court as against the weight of the evidence, would not be reviewed, "because it is the settled practice of this court not to review conflicting evidence, nor to review the rulings or findings of the trial courts on such evidence."

It is true that the evidence was not before the court, and the point need not have been discussed. The fact that the remark quoted was obiter does not, however, deprive it of all its value.

In the case of Williams v. Railway Co., 153 Mo. loc. cit. 511, 54 S. W. 697, it was held by Division No. 2 of this court that in case of a conflict between the findings of the circuit court and the referee the presumption in this court was "in favor of the judicial action of the circuit court, whose duty and prerogative it was, in a case like this, to examine the report of the referee in the light of the evidence and affirm or reverse his action." The court declared that rule to be "in harmony with our practice in reviewing the granting or refusing of new trials," and held that "the presumption is in favor of the action of the trial court; and it is only where we find it has abused its discretion do we interfere with its judgment."

In the case of Smith v. Baer, 166 Mo. loc. cit. 406, 407, 66 S. W. 170, it was said that, "under the Constitution, this court has a right to review the facts, as well as the law, in any case, however it may have been tried; but it has not been its practice to do so, except in extreme cases, in actions at law, for the reason that experience has shown that it was not necessary to do so to insure a proper administration of justice. * * * This court always looks into the record, when requested, and the point properly made in the lower court, far enough to see whether there is any substantial evidence to support a finding of fact, by whosoever that finding is made; and this is as far as experience shows that it is necessary, ordinarily, to go."

[12] In Caruth-Byrnes Hardware Co. v. Wolter, 91 Mo. 484, 3 S. W. 866, the reference was by consent, and the question presented there was wholly different from that appearing for solution here. Nevertheless the court in that case, in discussing the finality of the referee's findings of facts, said: "Under the present statute, the constant practice in a large class of cases is for the courts to review the findings of the referee upon the evidence reported by him, and to correct the findings when erroneous. When the evidence is preserved, these findings may be reviewed and corrected on appeal to this court." The question presented in that case was as to the power of the circuit court to revise the referee's findings in a case referred by consent; and what is said with respect to findings in other classes of cases is not so authoritative as what is said on the point actually before the court for decision. The cases cited in support of the holding quoted do not support it, if it is to be interpreted as laying down a rule that this court will set aside the findings of the trial court in this sort of a case merely on the weight of the evidence. Two of the cases cited were equitable in their nature, and in the other the trial court had merely referred the report of a receiver, and the questions reviewed in this court in this last were rather of arithmetic and law than of fact in the ordinary sense. Certainly a finding of fact, based on a mere mathematical computation, is reviewable, since any other finding than a correct one has no evidence to support it.

But the question before the court in Caruth-Byrnes Hardware Co. v. Wolter was the right of the circuit court, in a case referred by consent, to make findings contrary to those of the referee and render judgment thereon. Nor did the court in that case lay down any rule that it would examine and pass upon conflicting evidence in a case like that now at bar and make its own findings in accordance with its own views of the weight of the evidence. It was merely held that findings of the trial court, contrary to those of the referee, might be "reviewed and corrected on appeal."

It is to be noted that the remark there made seems as applicable to the review of the findings of the referee, which have not been "corrected" by the trial court, as to those which have. The premises considered, we conclude that the Wolter Case is not an authority for the proposition that this court will weigh conflicting evidence in a case of this kind. That the language used in that case is not out of harmony with the rule laid down in Williams v. Santa Fé Ry. Co., supra, is shown by the fact that in the latter case the Wolter Case is cited in support of this court's power to review the court's findings of facts. 153 Mo. loc. cit. 495, 511, 54 S. W. 689.

In West v. Bank, 110 Mo. App. 496, 85 S. W. 603, the St. Louis Court of Appeals had before it the question whether the findings of fact by the trial court, after sustaining exceptions to the referee's findings, ought to be upheld, and Judge Goode, in concluding an opinion in which the Court of Appeals gave its reasons for refusing to interfere, said (speaking of a contested item): "The evidence in regard to this item leaves a doubt in our minds as to what the truth is; hence we do not feel justified in interfering with the finding below."

[13, 14] In an action at law tried before the court, the rule which affirms the finality of the trial court's findings of facts is no less applicable to cases in which the testimony is wholly by deposition than to any other. Nor does the fact that one judge hears the evidence and another decides the case on the transcript thereof affect the rule. Handlan v. McManus, 100 Mo. loc. cit. 128, 129, 13 S. W. 207, 18 Am. St. Rep. 533. In case of a reference of the kind before us, "the referee's power is limited to recommending judgment. The duty and responsibility as to the judgment rest upon the court. The reference can aid, but not blind, the judge." Utley v. Hill, 155 Mo. loc. cit. 277, 55 S. W. 1104, 49 L. R. A. 323, 78 Am. St. Rep. 569. If this court is to weigh the evidence in a case of this kind merely because the trial court acted on written evidence alone, then, also, must we, to be consistent, pass upon the evidence in all actions at law tried to the court on depositions and overrule the cases holding that we will do no such thing. By establishing such a rule we can incur our reports with the consideration of matters which can have no possible value as precedents. We do not think it wise to encourage appeals to this court on mere questions of fact in actions at law, regardless of the method pursued in determining such questions below.

In discussing a question like that here presented, and which arose under a statute somewhat similar to our own, the Supreme Court of Oregon, in Liebe v. Nicolai, 30 Or. loc. cit. 372, 373, 48 Pac. 174, 175, said: "From this it would appear that the power of the court to set aside the findings of a referee is not limited to a question as to the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the conclusion reached by him, but, in our judgment, extends to all the causes prescribed by the statute for setting a verdict aside; and, if the referee's findings were, by statute, made special verdicts upon the issue, instead of being deemed and considered as such, the power of the court to set them aside could not be reviewed on appeal, except for an abuse of discretion; and hence the question is narrowed to a consideration of the legal effect of the court's modification of a referee's finding. If the court, upon setting aside such a report, took the evidence anew, and found therefrom the facts, and determined the law itself, a judgment given thereon, supported by any evidence, ought not, on principle, to be subject to review on the facts; but when the court, from a mere examination of the evidence taken and reported by the referee, reaches a conclusion different from that officer, it may be conceded that the variance is not the result of superior advantages possessed by the court, for it does not possess the opportunity afforded the referee of seeing the witnesses as they appeared upon the stand, or of observing their tone, manner, and bearing while giving their testimony. It might appear to us, from the examination of a bill of exceptions, that the findings of fact made by the trial court were opposed by the great weight of evidence, yet by reason of its intimate knowledge of the parties, and its ability to note the peculiarities of the witnesses, which can never by any means be made a part of the record, its conclusions of fact must necessarily be presumed to have been carefully reached. It is the application of this rule that prompts the trial court to affirm the report of a referee, although it might have reached a different conclusion from an examination of the evidence reported; but to say that the findings of fact made by a referee are entitled to greater consideration than the conclusions reached by the trial court, after an examination of the evidence, is to concede that, while the court possesses power to set aside such report, its action in that respect is nugatory on appeal, unless its findings are supported by a preponderance of the evidence. Such seems to have been the rule adopted in Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Pope, 19 Or. 35, 26 Pac. 622, for the learned Chief Justice, in commenting upon the facts, says: 'I have examined the evidence as to the amount of commissions which the said firm was to receive upon the shipment and sales of the oil and fish, and am of the opinion that the circuit court very properly made the reduction in the amount found to be due by the referee.' The effect of such a rule, if applied to an appeal from a judgment in an action at law in which the court had set aside the findings of a referee and reached conclusions of its own from a mere inspection of the evidence reported, would be to deprive the findings of the court of all presumptions of regularity which may be invoked in their favor, and the cause would come here for trial de novo, as in equity cases."

And the court further said in the same case: "The trial court not only possesses the power to set aside the report of a referee, but upon doing so its findings of fact, although derived from an inspection of the evidence so reported by the referee, is, in our judgment, a new trial by the court, and, as such, the findings so made are entitled to every intendment and presumption that could be invoked in their favor, if made upon an original trial by the court. To reach a different conclusion would be equivalent to a holding that the trial court, on setting aside the findings of a referee, must hear the testimony, and take the evidence anew, before it could reach a finding of fact of its own; and, as the statute has not prescribed such a mode, we cannot think a procedure of this kind necessary, in order to give to the findings and judgment that presumption of regularity to which it is entitled, and must therefore hold that the duty of the referee is to advise the court, when so ordered, but that the power appointing him may disregard his counsels, and make its own conclusions from the evidence submitted. Having reached this conclusion, it only remains to be said that, while the evidence is conflicting upon this subject, there is, nevertheless, some testimony that tends to support the court's findings."

This ruling was made on a statute which provided that the referee's report, when made, should, in the consideration of exceptions thereto, stand as the verdict of a jury; whereas, in this state, the statute gives the effect of a verdict to the report only when it has been approved by the trial court.

Judge Brewer, in the case of Owen v. Owen, 9 Kan. 91, took occasion to compare the positions of the trial and appellate courts, with respect to the matter of passing upon the report of a referee, as follows: "Counsel claims that, inasmuch as the judge of that court does not see the witnesses who appear before the referee, does not hear them testify, nor know in what manner their testimony is elicited, his judgment can be based only upon the record of that testimony. Hence the report of the referee should stand, unless a great preponderance of the evidence is against it. He further claims that this court has the same opportunity as the district court of weighing correctly the evidence; and that therefore, unless the great preponderance of the testimony seems to us against the report, we should reverse the order of the district court setting aside the report, and direct its confirmation. These rules, applied strictly, would make the approval or disapproval of the report of the referee by the district court a mere matter of form, purely a work of supererogation. We do not so understand the effect of the action of the district court. We think the district court should not set aside the report of a referee as against the evidence, unless it clearly appears to him that the referee has failed to give due consideration to some of the testimony, and that a strong preponderance of the testimony is against the report. He will presume that the referee has given due weight to all the evidence, and that his conclusions therefrom are correct. He will be slow to interfere with those conclusions. But if he is convinced of the error of that report, and orders it set aside, such judgment of the district judge should and will carry great weight with this court; for he is in a better position than we are to determine as to the correctness of the referee's conclusions. The parties to the suit he may know; the witnesses may have been before him in other trials; or he may have heard their testimony on motions in this case. He may understand peculiarities in the mind of the referee which would cause certain kinds of testimony to have undue weight with him. He may be cognizant of personal friendships or antipathies between the referee and the parties, or counsel. He will probably be aware of any difference between counsel in the manner of eliciting testimony, in their adroitness in presenting and withholding evidence. In short, being nearer to the parties and the proceedings, he is more apt to know whether the report of the referee expresses the absolute truth. And when he has acted upon the report we shall not ignore that action, and consider the report as though made originally to this court."

These remarks were made in considering a question somewhat different from that under consideration here, but are valuable as indicating the views of a great jurist upon the reasoning which lies at the foundation of appellant's contention on the point being discussed.

In South Carolina it is held (Gregory v. Cohen, 50 S. C. loc. cit. 511, 27 S. E. 920) that the Supreme Court will not weigh the evidence in passing upon the correctness of the findings of the circuit court, made after exceptions to a referee's report have been sustained. The Constitution of that state, however, limits the Supreme Court to the correction of errors of law in appeals in actions at law.

In the case of Merchants', etc., Nat. Bk. v. Kern, 193 Pa. 67, 88, 44 Atl. 335, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania held that the findings of the common pleas court, after setting aside the report of a referee, could be overturned by "nothing but a clear conviction that the court had erred." The findings of the referee in that case were out of accord with the verdict of a jury on a previous trial.

In North Carolina it is held, unhesitatingly, that the findings of the circuit court "reversing the findings of the referee" cannot be disturbed if there is any evidence to support them. Baggett v. Wilson, 152 N. C. 182, 67 S. E. 479.

Certain decisions under statutory provisions differing materially from ours, as in Wisconsin, New York, Iowa, and, in some instances, Pennsylvania, are not in point on either side of the question, and need not be discussed.

The rule laid down in Utley v. Hill, supra, is thus found to have the support of authority in and out of the state; and a careful investigation fails to disclose a well-considered decision in point which holds the contrary.

[15] Were there not express authority given the circuit court to hear, as a court, cases in which juries have been waived, its findings of law and fact, and judgments, could not, on appeal, be reviewed at all, since the judge would in that case act rather as an arbitrator. Boogher v. Insurance Co., 103 U. S. loc. cit. 96, 97, 28 L. Ed. 310. Under the laws of Missouri the referee's findings of fact cannot be said to have been judicially made until approved by the trial court (103 U. S. 97, 28 L. Ed. 310; section 2013, R. S. 1909); and the findings of the court in cases in which the referee's findings have been set aside are the only findings in the case which have been judicially made. We are therefore of the opinion that they support a judgment to the same extent and in the same way, and are not more open to review on the mere weight of the evidence, than any other judgment at law, based on findings of the trial court.

At any rate, the contention of appellants' counsel that the trial court had no right to set aside the findings of the referee, if those findings were supported by any substantial evidence, cannot, in view of the authorities cited and the reasons given, be upheld. Whether there is a discernible difference between the rule laid down by this court that a trial court's action in setting aside a referee's report and making new findings of its own on the evidence reported by the referee is supported by the usual favorable presumption, and is not to be overturned, unless it appears that the court has abused its discretion (Williams v. Railway, 153 Mo. loc. cit. 511, 54 S. W. 689), and the rule announced by Judge Marshall (Utley v. Hill, supra) and in the cases cited, to the effect that the trial court's findings in such circumstances will not be reviewed at all on the weight of the evidence, need not be decided. In this case the conclusion, under both rules, must be the same.

(5) It may be added that the rule contended for, even if sound, could not be applied to this case, since the referee, after admitting evidence of all transactions from the beginning (1898), reached the conclusion, before making his report, that evidence of happenings prior to the formation of the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company was inadmissible, and excluded all such evidence from his consideration in reaching his conclusions of fact. The trial court, on the other hand, took this evidence into consideration, and based its findings of facts on the whole of the evidence reported. The bases of the two findings are entirely different, therefore, and that is an important fact in considering any apparent conflict between the findings of the referee and those of the court. It changes the situation to such an extent that it cannot be said that the record shows that the court and referee differed at all in their conclusions as to the effect of evidence considered. The real difference is as to the admissibility of certain evidence, and that is a question of law.

5. It is insisted that the evidence as to the purposes of the organization of the People's Ice & Fuel Company in 1898, and as to the relation between it and others prior to 1905, was not competent, should not have been considered by the court in making up its findings, and must be disregarded by us in determining whether the evidence supports those findings. It is contended that the allegations in the information that the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company was "organized under the laws of Missouri on July 1, 1905," and that "prior to the 1st day of July, 1905, all of the above-named companies and copartnerships, except the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, were engaged in the manufacture and sale of ice in this [Kansas City] vicinity in competition with each other," precluded any investigation reaching back of July 1, 1905. It is also asserted that the same result follows from the fact that (so it is said) there is no direct charge of the existence of a combination prior to said date.

[16] With respect to the effect of the allegation that competitive conditions existed prior to 1905, it is unnecessary, at this stage of the proceedings, to say more than that the allegation is not that such conditions existed in the ice business in Kansas City at all times prior to July 1, 1905; and that we cannot, rightfully, give it such a construction after judgment, to overthrow findings based upon a construction which its language fully warrants.

[17, 18] The ultimate question in this case is whether or not such an illegal combination existed at any time covered by the charge in the information; and to prove this we may go back to the very first step in its concoction, and trace the mingling and manipulation of the ingredients which together produce the noxious result. It was held by the Supreme Court of the United States, in the late case of the Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. loc. cit. 46, 47, 31 Sup. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, that the testimony going to acts done, even before the passage of the act which made the result to be attained unlawful, was admissible, in so far as it tended to throw light upon the acts done after the passage of the act, the results of which, it was charged, were being participated in and enjoyed by the alleged combination at the time of the filing of the bill. Such a combination may be changed in its ingredients by the elimination of some and the absorption of others which take their place; but we must follow it through these changes to ascertain its nature as it stood upon the day when it is charged to have been unlawful. It may have been renamed and relabeled, like the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company; but it is competent to show by the testimony that upon its organization it immediately succeeded to the place formerly occupied by a corporation whose properties, contracts, assets, liabilities, and tendencies it took over, and whose identity it continued in the combination.

The reincorporation was, according to the testimony of W. H. Winants, the vice president of the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, effected solely in order to add to the purposes of the old company—not to subtract therefrom. The new company took over and carried out the contracts of the old; contracts which tend, on their face, to show a purpose to restrict competition. The People's Ice & Fuel Company had been organized and employed as a mere agency by and through which the purposes of the original agreement among the several ice companies in business in Kansas City in 1898 might be carried out. It was not, nor could it have been, authorized by its charter to directly or indirectly monopolize the ice business; and, in so far as it proceeded to effectuate the plans of other corporations and individuals to do so, it was acting outside its charter powers and in defiance of law. The People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company was not, nor could it have been, chartered to purchase from the People's Ice & Fuel Company any conspiracy to restrict competition in which the latter was engaged; but its subsequent participation in any such agreement cannot be defended on the ground that the agreement or conspiracy was in existence before the corporation was. To hold otherwise is to say that individuals and corporations may conspire to restrain trade and lessen competition, in violation of the statute, and then, by subsequently forming a corporation to carry out that conspiracy, put themselves and the corporation thus formed beyond the reach of the statute. That the statute can be thus evaded we decline to hold. The People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company carried out the contracts of its predecessor, making no changes whatever in the methods employed by it, even maintaining, until the failure of the Consumers' Ice Company, the cut price put in force by the old company three or four days before July 1, 1905. Neither is charged with having purchased plants of other companies in order to restrain trade and lessen competition. The storage company is charged with having entered into certain contracts and agreements for those purposes, and it does not matter through what gate it entered.

In State ex rel. v. Continental Tobacco Co., 177 Mo. 1, 75 S. W. 737, this court said: "The laws of this state are broad enough to reach individuals who undertake to organize a corporation that would create a trust in itself; but, where the corporation is alleged to be duly organized, then the condemnation of the statute as applicable to it is not in the method of its organization, but by its express terms it denounces and prohibits the unlawful acts as a legal and existing corporation."

In this case both these elements of illegality are present in the person of the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company. It was organized with the intent that it should become the instrument by which the unlawful purpose of its promoters should be carried out, and its profits received and distributed to the conspirators. Such an instrument is, in itself, as is well said by this court in the language above quoted, a trust. Having been organized, its charter powers could, no doubt, have been devoted to honest enterprise; but instead it took up the work to which it had been devoted by its promoters, and became an active member, as well as agent and instrument, of the conspiracy to eliminate competition in the ice business.

In the case last cited the grounds on which the court rested its decision are stated in the opinion (177 Mo. loc. cit. 37, 75 S. W. 747) as follows: "It was a legitimate inquiry by the commissioner as to the integrity and good faith of the transfer by the American Tobacco Company of all its assets to the Continental Tobacco Company; and we have no hesitation in saying, considering the amount involved, the extent and far-reaching scope of the transaction, it was sufficient, in itself, to arouse in the mind of the Attorney General a strong suspicion—yes, even a strong probability—that a trust was being created, and warranted his prompt action in the interest of the public by filing the information herein. However, it must be remembered that this proceeding partakes of the nature of a criminal prosecution, and severe penalties are imposed; hence it is not sufficient to warrant a finding adverse to respondents that we may entertain strong suspicions, or even strong probabilities, of their guilt. Such conclusions should only be reached upon a clear showing by the testimony, fully satisfying the minds of the court that they were guilty of the violation of the law as charged in the information. The case of Distilling Co. v. People, 156 Ill. 448 [41 N. E. 188, 47 Am. St. Rep. 200], is distinguished from this case by reason of the facts. In that case there was a trust formed by a number of unincorporated associations, and, as was shown by the testimony, to evade the condemnation of the statute. This same trust of unincorporated associations incorporated and conducted the business along the same lines, and with a similar purpose. The court said: 'That corporation thus succeeds to the trust, and its operations are to be carried on in the same way, for the same purposes, and by the same agencies, as before.' The commissioner, in the case before us, finds the facts just the reverse of the Illinois Distilling Case. The commissioner, who is one of the circuit judges of this state, has heard the testimony, had the witnesses before him, and reports that from the evidence adduced there was nothing unlawful in the sale and purchase of the assets of the corporations, as detailed in the report. We will not disturb the finding of the commissioner in that respect."

[19] That there was in existence July 1, 1905, a conspiracy to lessen competition the evidence tends strongly to show; and that there is much evidence that the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, on that date, stepped into the shoes of one of the participants therein cannot be successfully denied. Under the general rule, if a conspiracy exist and another join with the conspirators, he "would be deemed a party to all acts done by any one of the conspirators, before or afterwards, in furtherance of the common design" (State v. Walker, 98 Mo. loc. cit. 105, 106, 9 S. W. 646, 11 S. W. 1133); and no reason appears why this rule is not applicable in this case.

It was held, in State ex inf. v. Standard Oil Co., 218 Mo. loc. cit. 458, 459, 116 S. W. 902, that it made no difference where an unlawful pool, trust, or conspiracy in restraint of trade was formed, if it was carried out in this state the participants were punishable under our laws. It is also true that it makes no difference when such conspiracy is formed, those who engage in it and are found in this state participating in it cannot exculpate themselves by asserting that the plan was not constructed by them in the first instance, and that they merely adopted it and joined in its execution. If this be true, and it is, there can be no reason justifying the exclusion of proof of the facts, circumstances, and agreements out of which the conspiracy thus entered into took its origin.

[20] 6. It is also insisted that the Kansas City Breweries Company, having been organized after the incorporation of the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, cannot be held responsible in this proceeding. That company purchased the assets of the Ferd Heim Brewing Company, which company was one of the participants in the formation of the People's Ice & Fuel Company in 1898 and owned for years its quota of stock in the People's Ice & Fuel Company, and, after July 1, 1905, in the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company; that stock belonging to it, but being held for it by its president, Joseph J. Heim. Joseph J. Heim also became the president of the Kansas City Breweries Company, and then held the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company stock for the Kansas City Breweries Company; that company having purchased that stock from the Ferd Heim Brewing Company, and having assumed the contract the last-named company had entered into with the People's Ice & Fuel Company. At the expiration of that contract, which it carried out, the Kansas City Breweries Company, by its president, Joseph J. Heim (who held the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company stock for the Kansas City Breweries Company), entered into another contract with the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company for a term of three years from February, 1906. That Mr. Heim knew the purposes of the People's Ice & Fuel Company and of the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, and knew that they were formed and conducted to lessen competition, is a fact involved in the findings of the trial court, and one there was sufficient evidence to support. In these circumstances, in view of all the evidence, whether the Kansas City Breweries Company had knowledge of the unlawful character of the operation of the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company may have been a question of fact (Cook on Corporations, § 727), and, if so, there was sufficient evidence to warrant the finding that it had such knowledge. At any rate, it cannot, on the evidence, be said, as a matter of law, that it did not have such knowledge while it was carrying out the Ferd Heim Brewing Company's contract, and when it, by its president, Joseph J. Heim, who held for it its stock in the People's Company, executed the contract of 1906. It is therefore unnecessary to decide in this case whether Joseph J. Heim's knowledge was, as a matter of law, attributable to the Kansas City Breweries Company, though there would seem to be little doubt of that. State ex inf. v. Insurance Co., 152 Mo. loc. cit. 37, 52 S. W. 595, 45 L. R. A. 363, et seq.

[21] 7. On behalf of the Central Ice Company it is contended, among other things, that there is no evidence to connect it with the operations of any of the other companies, whether they were or were not acting in violation of law. The chief argument made under this head is that the statements of Lyons, president of the Central Ice Company, were not made as the agent of the company, and consequently were not admissible in evidence. Reliance is placed upon the familiar rule that the declarations of the agent of a corporation do not bind it, unless made "during the continuance of the agency in regard to the transaction then depending." The offense with which the defendants were charged was a continuing one. That the purpose in the formation of the People's Ice & Fuel Company in 1898 was violative of the anti-trust law of the state the evidence leaves no doubt, and that there was convincing evidence, circumstantial and direct, that the Central Ice Company was acting in accord with the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, a reference to the statement of facts makes sufficiently clear; and that in a case of this kind circumstantial evidence must usually be the state's chief reliance is apparent. The existence of a conspiracy being sufficiently proved, and the Central Ice Company being charged with being a party thereto, together with other corporate and individual defendants, the declarations of Lyons were undoubtedly admissible to connect him individually with that conspiracy; and, under the rule usually applied, his declarations during the existence of the conspiracy (as one of the conspirators), in furtherance of its objects, were admissible against those engaged with him in the common enterprise in the ice business in Kansas City.

[22] It is not necessary, even in a criminal case (State v. Kennedy, 177 Mo. loc. cit. 118, 75 S. W. 979; State v. Sykes, 191 Mo. loc. cit. 78, 89 S. W. 851; State v. Boatright, 182 Mo. loc. cit. 48, 81 S. W. 450), that coconspirators be indicted and tried together, in order to render the acts and declarations of one admissible against the other. The fact that the Central Ice Company entered into an agreement with the People's Ice & Fuel Company to fix prices was directly testified to by O. W. Butt, who was one of the organizers of the former company, and his testimony was not directly denied by any witness. Mr. Helm and Mr. Vanderslice denied that the companies of which they were, respectively, presidents (the Kansas City Breweries Company and the Vanderslice-Lynds Mercantile Company) had any agreement with any company to lessen competition or restrict output; but this was short of a denial that the People's Ice & Fuel Company and its successor, the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, were organized for those purposes. In these circumstances, there being ample proof of a conspiracy such as the statute condemns, and ample proof, in addition, that the Central Ice Company, after its organization, became a party thereto, the declaration of Lyons, who was the last-mentioned company's president and active manager, in furtherance of the object of the combination were admissible and competent evidence in this case. 2 Wigmore on Ev. § 1079; Hart v. Hicks, 129 Mo. loc. cit. 105, 31 S. W. 351.

[23] 8. It is insisted that the several Kansas City companies which contracted to sell ice to the People's Ice & Fuel Company, and subsequently to the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company, did not contract their entire output, but, on the contrary, sold quantities of ice to others than the companies mentioned. An examination of the evidence discloses that these companies did sell ice to others; but such examination also discloses that these sales were chiefly made during the spring and fall months; the contracts practically calling for all their output, not required for their own uses, during what is called the ice season—June 15th to September 15th of each year. A monopoly in the ice business during the cold and cooler months is, from the nature of things, not very practicable, as the defendants in this case had sufficient sagacity to know. The control of the business during the warm season was that at which they seem to have aimed. The nature of the commodity is such that surplus artificial ice was not stored to any considerable extent; and there is no evidence that any of the defendants attempted to store their surplus to meet the community's requirements during the summer. There being an insufficient demand in the local retail market during the cool weather, the defendants naturally attempted to dispose of the surplus from their plants to others than the People's Companies. They did not, however, go into the distributing business; nor did they sell to peddlers to any greater extent than indicated in the statement. The ice they sold was sold in such quarters that it had no tendency to affect the increased rate made by the People's Ice, Storage & Fuel Company April 1, 1905, and May 1, 1905, for instance. The facts upon which the argument under this head is based are not, in the circumstances, very impressive when relied upon as a refutation of the charge in the information.

9. It is urged that we should give the statute "a reasonable construction," and that it should not be construed to preclude appellants from contracting with each other for the purchase and sale of ice. It is, in effect, insisted that if it is held that the statute applies to this case practically no transactions between corporations in the same business can escape condemnation. The argument grows out of the separation by counsel of the arrangements and contracts in evidence, and a consideration of each independently of the others, without reference to the evidence indicating that these transactions were mere parts of a whole, which constituted a combination to control the manufacture and sale of ice and the price of it in Kansas City. The assumption that each contract was an independent transaction contradicts the allegations of the information, the weight of the evidence, and the findings of the court.

[24,25] The statute of this state leaves scant room for construction. We are not concerned in this case with any question as to a contract, otherwise lawful, which incidentally restrains trade. The rule applicable in such a case is not applicable in this. Nor is it within our province to give the statute any other meaning than its language imports. Our duty to apply the statute as it is written is as plain as the language of that statute, and in that language there is no ambiguity. The statute condemns every direct restraint of trade, great or small. It closes the only door through which doubts as to its construction could enter by positively prohibiting defined combinations, without regard to what the courts may think as to the extent of their effect. The Legislature saw fit to ordain "that competition and not combination" should obtain in business in the state. As long as it moves in its constitutional orbit, the judgment of the Legislature is final; and the wisdom of its enactments is not open to question in the courts.

The case of Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 31 Sup. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, cannot be relied upon to elicit a different answer to the contention now being considered. In that case it was said, in effect, that the act of July 2, 1890 (the federal anti-trust act [Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200)]), was inapplicable to combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade which did not have the effect of restraining trade unreasonably. A considerable portion of the opinion is devoted to the discussion of the question. The court did, however, hold that the Standard Oil Company unreasonably monopolized and restrained trade; and consequently the reason for its discussion of the question as to what rule might apply when some defendant or combination which but reasonably restrained trade might appear at its bar is not apparent. Such discussions, under ordinary circumstances, are usually termed obiter dicta, and not regarded as authoritative beyond their intrinsic value as arguments. We need not enter into a discussion of the decision in that case, however, since the rule first stated is established in this state, and since our statute precludes all question on the subject.

[26] 10. It is not necessary to discuss the complaint that the action of the trial court in ordering the cancellation of certain specified contracts was erroneous. These contracts have expired by their own limitations. The question has become a moot one, and will not be considered.

[27] 11. It is unnecessary to indulge in an argument on the facts in this case. They are set forth in the statement with sufficient fullness to show the character of the proof made. Of the facts stated there was abundant evidence to warrant the findings made by the trial court; and it in no wise abused its discretion in finding as it did. Those findings support the judgment rendered, and that judgment ought to be affirmed.

BROWN, C., concurs.

HONEA v. ST. LOUIS, I. M. & S. RY. CO.
(Supreme Court of Missouri. Nov. 14, 1912.
On Motion for Rehearing.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§§ 278, 281*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In an action against a railroad company for the death of a servant, evidence held to establish the company's negligence and to show the deceased's freedom from contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 954-972, 977, 987-996; Dec. Dig. §§ 278, 281.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 216*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

Where a section hand riding on a hand car under the direction of a railway company's foreman, who was given a schedule of regular trains and required to keep a timepiece so that he might ditch the hand car 10 minutes before any train was due, was killed by a passenger train which, while on its regular schedule, ran down the hand car, there was no assumption of the risk of injury; a servant assuming only those risks incident to his employment after the master has exercised ordinary care.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 567-573; Dec. Dig. § 216.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 291*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT — INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO PLEADING.

In an action against a railroad company for the wrongful death of a section hand, the petition alleged that the passenger train which collided with the hand car on which deceased was riding, was on time; that it was the duty of the foreman to have caused deceased and his associates to take the hand car from the track before traintime, but failed to observe the time of the passenger train and negligently required deceased to remain on the hand car until too late to prevent a collision. This issue was presented in an instruction that the defendant was liable if it was the duty of its foreman to cause deceased and his associates to leave the track before the train could collide with them, and that he negligently caused deceased to remain on the car and track too long to prevent the collision. Held, that the instruction was not inapplicable to the pleading, though not submitting the question of whether the foreman negligently failed to observe the time of the train; the ultimate negligence being the failure of the foreman to cause deceased to leave the track in time to avoid the collision.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1066*) — REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

In view of Rev. St. 1909, §§ 1850, 2082, providing that the court shall at every stage of the action disregard any error not affecting the substantial rights of the parties, and that the Supreme Court or Courts of Appeal shall not reverse the judgment of any court unless it shall believe that error was committed against the appellant, and materially affecting the merits of the action, the error, if any, in the above instruction was harmless where the evidence clearly showed that the accident was the result of the foreman's negligence in failing to note the time of the train and remove the car from the tracks in time to avoid it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4220; Dec. Dig. § 1066; Payment, Cent. Dig. § 252.]

5. DEATH (§ 99*)—DAMAGES—EXCESSIVENESS.

In an action by a wife against a railroad company for damages for the wrongful killing of her husband, who was a section hand earning only $1.25 a day, an award of $10,000 damages will not be held excessive as a matter of law, in the absence of any evidence by the railroad company showing the excess; there being no presumption that decedent's earning power would never have been increased, or that the widow's damage was not equal to $10,000.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 125-130; Dec. Dig. § 99.*]

On Motion for Rehearing.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 835*)—PRESENTATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW IN APPELLATE COURT—NECESSITY.

Under Supreme Court rule No. 15 (73 S. W. vi), providing that all briefs shall contain separate and apart from the argument and discussion of authorities a statement of the points relied on, together with the citation of authorities appropriate under each point, a railroad company whose motion for new trial in an action for wrongful death had been granted cannot, on the hearing in banc, attempt to sustain the granting of the motion on the ground of excessive award of damages, where that point was not made in its brief in its first hearing in the separate division of the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3241-3246; Dec. Dig. § 835.*]

Graves, Woodson, and Ferriss, JJ., dissenting.

In Banc. Appeal from Circuit Court, Butler County; J. C. Sheppard, Judge.

Action by Mary Honea against the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company. From an order granting defendant a new trial after verdict for plaintiff, plaintiff appeals. Order reversed.

David W. Hill, of Poplar Bluff, for appellant. N. A. Mozley, of Bloomfield, J. F. Green and R. T. Railey, both of St. Louis, for respondent.

LAMM, J. Suing in the Butler circuit court for the alleged wrongful death of her husband, John Honea, plaintiff had judgment for $10,000 on a jury's verdict. From an order granting a new trial on defendant's motion, she appealed.

The specific allegation of negligence put to the jury will be set forth in the words of the pleader in connection with a discussion of plaintiff's instruction No. 1. For the present, as a foreword, a mere outline of the petition will do, viz.: On the theory that Honea was a sectionman about his master's business on a hand car in charge of defendant's foreman and was run down and killed by a passenger train, the petition, in one specification, counted on the negligence of the operatives of the train and asked recovery under the humanity doctrine. This specification was not supported by proof, and hence, was not put to the jury. There was another which may be summed up in the charge of the petition thus: The train was on time, and it was the duty of the section foreman to clear the track by causing and permitting sectionmen to take the hand car from it in time to avoid a collision, but that the foreman, failing to observe the time of the train and its approach, negligently required and caused Honea to remain on the hand car and track too long to prevent a collision, whereby he was killed. Defendant answered as follows: It admitted its incorporation; it denied generally other allegations; and then set up two defenses—assumption of risks and contributory negligence. It may be as well said at this point as at any other that defendant, as to testimony, stood mute at the trial, making no effort to put in proof on its defenses or to cut down the damages.

In brief the case on the facts as developed by plaintiff is this: Honea was an experienced sectionman in defendant's employ in Wayne county, say 35 years of age, and earning at the time $1.25 a day. He was under a foreman named Joe Daniels, who, in turn, was in charge of the hand car presently mentioned. Defendant ran a regular south-bound passenger train, known as the "Mexican Special," on Tuesdays and Fridays of each week. Its name and days returning north are blind. Its time at Piedmont en route to the south is some after 1 o'clock p. m., but the exact schedule time is not disclosed. A bit after 1 o'clock of a winter's afternoon in 1908, John Honea and a fellow workman named Pearson were ordered on a hand car by Daniels, their foreman, in the railroad yards at Piedmont and they, including the foreman (and with him in charge), started south on the car on an inspection trip over the section. Besides the three men, the hand car was equipped with some iron and steel tools—a jack, lining bars, claw bar, shovels, spike mauls, and tamping bars—and the trip was partly because a place in the track needed fixing. At about two miles south of Piedmont, the hand car was overhauled by said Mexican Special running 50 or 60 miles an hour, and Honea was killed. In that region defendant's road runs on sharp curves in the hills, amid trees and through cuts, and the look ahead or back is not far. Under the proof, the train was on time. The men on the hand car faced south, away from the train; Honea working its rear and the foreman and Pearson its front lever. In running round a very sharp curve, Pearson got a premonition from what he thought was the echo of a whistle that a train was coming behind them. At the same instant the foreman and Pearson turned their heads and discovered the Mexican Special two telegraph poles, say 350 feet, bearing down on them from their rear. At that time the hand car was rolling about six or eight miles an hour. We have only a confused account, giving a somewhat blurred picture, of the scene; for the drama was played out in a moment. To use the vernacular of Pearson, he "hollered": "The car will kill us, Joe. My goodness!" The foreman "hollered": "She's got us, boys!" Thereat the foreman "jumped" on the brake, and witness saw Honea jump off at the rear, and the hand car then either rolled or slid seven or eight feet when the foreman and Pearson jumped off before it came to a dead stop. We gather that the first impulse of the foreman was to run, but, changing his mind in a flash and in great excitement, he and Pearson grabbed the handles of the hand car and got one end of it from the track, when the locomotive was on them, striking it a slanting blow, and tumbled it and the two men, or at least one of them, down the dump. The foreman was present at the trial as defendant's witness, but, as said, did not testify for defendant, and was not called to testify for plaintiff, so that the case stands on material points on the testimony of Pearson, and he got (what we take as) merely a glimpse of Honea. As said, he saw him jump off the car after the brake was set; he remembers seeing him about the center of the track, apparently with his right side somewhat towards the train, stooped over and in the act, as witness thought, of taking a step towards the car as if to take hold of it, but the car had rolled on, and the next he saw of Honea, a moment afterwards, his lifeless body lay at the foot of the dump and 60 feet south of where he was struck. This bit of the record tells at one stroke enough of the story on that head: "Q. What was the last you saw him doing? A. When he stepped down off of the car was the last thing I saw him doing; and I realized the danger that I was in, and I stuck my head down to keep from realizing how close I was to my death. I was in a stooping position and couldn't see what anybody else was doing. Q. Did you see him stoop to get hold? A. Yes, sir; he stepped off straight back [indicates]. The last time I saw him he was going like this [indicates], and I was in a stooping position, and in a strain and in a hurry, and that was the condition I was in. Q. Was he stooping over towards the car? A. Yes, sir; the last time I saw Honea that was where he was at, in the center of the track."

Defendant had a rule to the effect that the section foreman should clear the track of hand cars 10 minutes before train time. The instructions to the sectionmen were to assist in taking hand cars from the track in emergencies. The uncontradicted testimony clearly shows that it was made the duty of the foreman to enforce that rule. To that end he was furnished with a time card and with a watch inspected by defendant's inspector. The sectionmen had no such watches or time cards. On this occasion Pearson had no watch at all, and Honea's was described by the witness this way: "Well, he had a little old—one of these dollar clock watches. It is called a watch. There is no allowance to be made on it." Speaking of the duty of the foreman, the rule, the time card, the watch, Pearson testified further as follows: "Q. Whose duty was it to keep track of the schedule of these trains and have the hand car put in the clear for them? A. Our section foreman's duty, because he was the man they gave the time card to, kept the time card in his pocket; and also they required him to have a timepiece—a watch, you know. Q. And keep it in good repair? A. Yes, sir; for I have seen him go to the watch man in the jewelry store and have his watch examined. Q. And did he have such a timepiece on that day? A. Yes, sir; he did. Q. That watch inspector was the inspector of this company, wasn't he? A. Yes, sir. * * * By the Court: The question is, Do you know what the rule was? A. Yes, sir. Q. Now tell the jury. A. Supposed to be in the clear as much as 10 minutes. Q. Whose duty was it to get you in the clear? A. Our foreman's. Q. Did the foreman do it in that case? A. No, sir." Referring to the necessity of getting the hand car and tools out of the way of the train, the witness testified: "Q. Why were you getting this car off? A. In order to save the car; and also save having that there collision; them track tools—my intention was—on that sharp curve, there had been wrecks on that same curve, a little trouble, some; and my intention was to put them in the clear if I could." Further as to the duty of getting hand cars out of the way of trains, the witness made answer to questions as follows: "Q. I'll ask you if it was a part of your duties as sectionman, when a train was approaching, to get your hand car off? A. Yes, sir. Q. That is the only way you had getting the car off—was lifting it off? A. Yes, sir; drag it off; any way to get it off. Q. Those were your instructions from the company? A. From the foreman." Further along appears this: "Q. On whom did you and Honea rely to keep you posted on these trains, when they were due, and when to get in the clear for them? A. Well, on the foreman, I did. Q. And Honea did, too; didn't he? A. Yes, sir. By Judge Green: How do you know he did? A. Well, I know about one collision. We had been in a pretty tolerable close place before; and we kept pulling until he demanded us to take the car off; that's what I am going by. And we got in the clear that load of poles. Q. Was this that same foreman? A. Yes, sir." The court sustained the motion for a new trial on the ground of error in plaintiff's instruction No. 1—of which presently.

[1] It is argued at our bar in support of the order granting a new trial that there can be no recovery because of two bars put up by the law, to wit, contributory negligence and assumption of risks. On this record and on those contentions we make the following observations: Honea was in the line of his duty as a servant of defendant and was killed while about his master's business, and not his own, and in the unsafe field provided by the master for him to labor in. The master key unlocking the heart of the matter is that, without a particle of fault on his own part, he lost his life because the master negligently undertook to run a train and hand car on the same track, at the same time, in the same direction, at a speed as sure to result in the train's overtaking the hand car (if not taken off) as that ebb tide follows flood tide, or day follows night in nature. There could be no two ways about it that the thing that happened was bound to happen, namely, that the hand car would be caught. There are three things said by the answer to stand between the master and liability, viz., assumption of risks, the contributory negligence of Honea, and the general denial. The general denial is brushed away by the proof. No contributory negligence was shown. This because: It is no overstatement to say there was no evidence of any probative force tending to show it in Pearson's narrative. The fact is that Honea and the hand car were under the supervision of the section foreman, who, pro hac vice, was the master's alter ego. The fact is that, when the alarm was given, the hand car, which could not run away from danger, was slowed down so that Honea jumped off at the rear. That he did jump off and was seen, in the mere flash of time that followed between his getting off and his death, partly turned, partly stooping, maybe, and partly taking a step towards the hand car that had moved on (if that be so), is to be utterly repudiated as evidence tending to show the contributory negligence of Honea. A man, in almost the twinkling of an eye, brought face to face with deadly peril, menacing, imminent, and about to fall, is not (by just men) after the event to have his acts weighed as by the scales of a goldsmith, or viewed through a microscope, or dissected as by a surgeon's knife, or analyzed by metaphysical splitting of hairs as by the subtle rules of a logician, or tested, as chemists do matter, by acid. The rule to go by in that plight is: Put yourself in his place. To my mind, in getting at defendant's liability, it matters not a whit whether Honea had, at the instant, an impulse to follow the hand car like a soldier to aid his comrades in removing it from the track to save the lives of the people on the train, or whether he was momentarily confused by excitement and had no definite object at all, or had not yet got his balance after leaving the moving hand car. A court of justice, moving on common sense lines, is not to quibble or niggle about his conduct and with speculative daintiness measure it by two or three pulse beats and construe it sourly and narrowly in order to relieve a defendant who negligently brought a situation about that would try the soul of any man. Nor is it worth while to speculate on whether Honea, hard beset by death, by great good luck (utterly forgetting the welfare of the train and its passengers) could have gathered his wits and muscles in the nick of time and jumped sideways out of danger. May A. wrongfully put B. in sudden peril of his life and then say to B.'s widow: "Madam, your husband was a slow coach? He was fat-witted or panicky? He lacked a chilled-steel nerve? His judgment was not cool and steady enough?" Nor do I care for the fortuitous circumstance that Honea's comrades were not killed. That some are saved, as though brands plucked from the burning, in such a flurry and riot of danger is no evidence that the one not saved died as the fool dies, to wit, by acts sounding to folly and negligence. As we have said on facts somewhat similar: "We may not be allowed to review this transaction from the standpoint of the way it looks to us glancing back. We know; he did not know. It must be judged of by the way it would look to a reasonable man before the jump. Being suddenly called upon to consider a question of life and death in the face of a danger imperiously menacing him, he acted on appearances under a natural and allowable impulse of self-preservation, and the law will not concern itself overclosely in scrutinizing and gauging his judgment, because men facing confusing perils sprung on them quickly are not called on to act with coolness and precision. The impelling question is whether appellant's own skirts are clear of blame for the fire, rather than whether respondent acted with good judgment in escaping its flames; and, in our view, the contributory negligence of respondent may be considered out of the case under the facts presented for adjudication." Root v. Railroad, 195 Mo. loc. cit. 357, 92 S. W. 624, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 212. So we say here, under the facts, there was no contributory negligence on Honea's part. The domineering fact here is the negligence of defendant and that alone. Boyd v. Railroad, 236 Mo. 54, 139 S. W. 561, is in point, arguendo.

[2] Nor is the doctrine of assumption of risks in the case. Deceased could make no valid contract (and the law implies none) to assume the risk of his master's negligence. Running hand cars and trains on the same track and same time at the same point is not an ordinary risk incident to railroading. A risk raised by such combination of things (when the master is in charge of the hand car) is one springing from the master's want of care. Here there was a rule. But, rule or no rule, no master could run hand cars and trains that way without violating a duty to its servants. As put in Charlton v. Railroad, 200 Mo. loc. cit. 433, 98 S. W. 535: "So, too, in the assumption of risks by a servant it is well to consider a certain assumption by the master, and that is that the master impliedly contracts with the servant that he will exercise ordinary care to protect such servant from injury by providing a reasonably safe place for him to work. When these two assumptions are considered as proceeding hand in hand, it will be perceived that the risks assumed by the servant are those risks alone which remain after the master has exercised ordinary care." In Curtis v. McNair, 173 Mo. 270, 73 S. W. 167, the right doctrine is expounded in the light of our repeated adjudications. (q. v.)

At this point it is a little worth while to see what obstacles were planted in the way of the widow's suit for her to overleap. Although the questions of contributory negligence and assumption of risks had not a foot to stand on, and were wholly beside the case-made, yet her case was made to run the gauntlet of them both in a set of argumentative instructions. Not only so, but although plaintiff abandoned the averment of her petition, based on the negligence of the train crew, put in no proof thereon, and did not in her instructions seek recovery under the humanity doctrine, yet by inadvertence those abandoned theories (with others not within the pleadings at all) were also formally instructed on, thereby confusing and littering up the minds of the jury with extraneous issues and notions to the detriment and hazard of her meritorious case. Witness six instructions given for defendant, to wit: "(4) The jury are instructed that, when John Honea accepted employment as a section laborer on defendant's line of railroad, it was a part of his duty to go to and from his work upon a hand car, and that, in so riding on said hand car, he assumed and took upon himself all of the risks incident to such employment, among which was the risk of being overtaken by trains on defendant's road. It was not the duty of defendant's section foreman to warn said Honea of the approach of such train, and you cannot find a verdict for the plaintiff in this case on account of the failure of defendant's section foreman to notify Honea of the approach of the train which struck deceased. (5) The court further instructs the jury that defendant's employes in charge of the train had the right to presume that Honea and the other section employes would look out for themselves and keep out of danger. It was not negligence on the part of said train employes to run the train at a high rate of speed, and you cannot find a verdict for plaintiff on account of the manner in which the passenger train was handled by defendant's employes. (6) The court further instructs the jury that it was not an act of negligence on the part of defendant's employes to run its passenger train over the portion of the road on which the hand car was being operated, and the plaintiff cannot complain of the character of the road at that place, nor of the conduct of the employes in the management of the passenger train, as defendant's employes had the right to run the train at such a rate of speed as they deemed proper; due regard being had to the safety of the passengers on said train. And you cannot find a verdict for plaintiff, unless you find from the evidence that defendant's employes in charge of the engine saw the deceased John Honea on the track in the act of removing the hand car in time to have prevented injury to him, and that they failed to exercise due care to avoid striking him after discovering his peril and danger. And you are further instructed that said train employes were not required to stop the train, after discovering the peril of said Honea, if the attempt to stop the train would have been attended with danger to the passengers riding thereon. (7) The court further instructs the jury that, if you find from the evidence that other section employes on the hand car got off the track in safety, and that

John Honea, by the exercise of due care and caution for his own safety, could also have gotten off of the hand car, or did get off the hand car in time to avoid being struck by the train, and that he was thereafter struck in consequence of his remaining on the track, then in that event the plaintiff is not entitled to recover in this case. (8) The court instructs the jury that, if you find from the evidence that the death of John Honea was the result of an accident in consequence of his being struck by a train, if you find that his death was caused in part by the negligence of the train employes as well as partly by his own negligence or want of care, then and in that event the plaintiff is not entitled to recover." (9) The court further instructs the jury that, although you may believe from the evidence that the foreman, Daniels, required plaintiff's husband to ride upon the hand car while said hand car was being moved upon defendant's track, yet that fact of itself does not entitle plaintiff to recover, for it was the duty of plaintiff's husband to keep a watch for his own safety; and, if you find that by listening he could have heard the train, or by looking he could have seen it, or if you find that he did see it, and got off of the hand car in time to save himself, and was struck by the train in consequence of his remaining on the track, then your verdict must be for defendant."

We shall not stop to analyze those instructions one by one. In his zeal learned counsel, by inadvertence, led the court into error. They could not well be more evenly misleading, more evenly argumentative and mischievous than they are, taken as a series or one at a time. One excuse for reproducing them is that they may serve as models of how not to instruct a jury in a case with facts like the one at bar. Every one of them was an arrow aimed at the right of the case, under the facts of this record, and on the theory on which plaintiff sought her recovery, viz., the negligence of the foreman. The master himself in the person of Daniels had charge of that hand car and of Honea. The question was: How did he acquit himself? It was error to give any of them, and, if plaintiff had lost her case, the verdict must have been set aside instanter.

[3] Thus undeservedly afflicted with troubles and tribulations, plaintiff "plucked the flower, safety, from the nettle, danger," and then lost it. This, it is said, on one of her own instructions. So her case (we borrow Moore's figure):

"That stood the storms when waves were rough,
Yet in a sunny hour fell off
Like ships that have gone down at sea
When heaven was all tranquillity."

(Nota bene, by way of a side-step: There be those who say that poetry has no place at all in jurisprudence or legal exposition. Quoad hoc, it may be said: The French have a saw: "He who excuses himself accuses himself." Not caring to fall foul of that adage, we enter no excuse, but point to the venerable dictum of the mentor and master, Sir Edward Coke [Co. Litt. 264]: "The opinions of philosophers, physicians, and poets are to be received and alleged in causes." Quod erat demonstrandum.)

It is of judicial interest to see how that thing happened. It is argued that one of her instructions did not follow her petition in essential matter. Let us look to that:

The Petition.

"* * * That the said passenger train, which collided with John Honea and the hand car as aforesaid, was on time, and that it was the duty of Honea's foreman to have caused and permitted John Honea and his associates to take the hand car and leave the track before said train had time to collide with either of them, but that the defendant's foreman, in charge of John Honea and the other sectionmen with the hand car, carelessly and negligently failed to observe the time of said passenger train and the approaching thereof, and carelessly and negligently required, caused, and permitted the said John Honea to remain upon said hand car and railroad track too long to prevent collision with said passenger train, and as a result of said carelessness and negligence upon the part of the defendant's foreman in charge of John Honea, coupled with the carelessness and negligence of the officers, agents, servants, and employes of defendant in charge of defendant's passenger train and engine which struck and collided with John Honea and the hand car used by him, caused the death of the said John Honea. * * *

The Instruction.

"The court instructs the jury that if you believe and find from the evidence in this cause that it was the duty of defendant's foreman to have caused and permitted John Honea and his associates in the employ of the defendant to take the hand car and leave the track before train No. 11 could collide with the hand car and sectionmen, but that the defendant's foreman, in charge of Honea and other sectionmen, with the hand car, carelessly and negligently caused and permitted John Honea to remain upon the hand car and railroad track too long to prevent collision with said passenger train, and as a result of said carelessness and negligence upon the part of defendant's foreman, in charge of Honea, defendant's passenger train or engine thereof struck and killed Honea, about January 28, 1908, in Wayne county, Mo., and that the defendant's railroad runs through Butler county, Mo., and that plaintiff was Honea's lawful wife at the time of his death, and that he was killed without any negligence on his part, then your verdict will be for the plaintiff, Mary Honea."

The vice of the instruction is said to be in omitting all reference to the allegation in the petition that the foreman "carelessly and negligently failed to observe the time of said passenger train and the approaching thereof." On that omission we make some observations, viz.: That allegation is carried over in substance and necessarily implied in the allegation that followed, to wit, that the section foreman carelessly and negligently caused and permitted Honea to remain upon the hand car and track too long to prevent a collision. In legal effect the one includes the other in reasonably fair construction. The latter allegation is covered by the instruction, and, it seems to me, in final analysis it is the real, the ultimate, ground of negligence that is complained of and put to the jury. In the proof of the charge made in the petition and thus incorporated in the instruction, the rule of defendant (testified to without objection) requiring the track to be cleared of hand cars 10 minutes before the time of the passenger train, the fact that the train was on time, that the section foreman had a time card and watch regulated by defendant, that part of his duty was to make the clearance, and that he failed to do so—we say the proof on one and all of those things is after all but evidence tending to prove the ultimate and justifiable fact that defendant, through its section foreman, negligently caused Honea to remain on the hand car and track and come to his death thereby. The unfortunate word "permitted" is used loosely in both petition and instruction, but it did no harm because it was coupled by the conjunctive conjunction "and" with the word "caused." The jury had to find both and that was well enough. We look on the word "caused" as the master word. That word carried the jury back to the whole body of the proof. Unless defendant through its foreman caused deceased to remain too long in peril, plaintiff ought to be cast; otherwise, then otherwise.

[4] But it is argued that the jury would conclude from the instruction that the failure of the section foreman, after the approach of the train was discovered, to stop the hand car and get it and his men out of the way of the train was within the purview of the language. That there was no such ground of recovery possible under the facts, and therefore the verdict of the jury must be referred to that erroneous theory. But are the men in the box not men of sense? Why speculate on whether they adopted such narrow and unlikely theory when under the evidence there was a plain, broad highway leading in another and a right direction, to wit, in the foreman negligently performing his duty to inspect his watch and his time card and clear the track according to rule? That was the obvious, open, and sensible view for the jury to take of what "caused" the accident. If defendant wanted the jury fenced off from taking some other fanciful view, why did it not ask an instruction of its own on that point? If we were once to adopt the rule of reversing cases where a word or a phrase, standing alone, admits of a double meaning, one of which is mischievous and the other is not, we would affirm but few judgments. Men, under oath in a box, taking a sober and vital part in the administration of justice, are presumed by the law to be reasoning men, apt in solving the problems of life by the aid of reason; i. e., everyday sense. There ought to be no presumption indulged that, unless fenced in by the court at every single step, they will leave the obvious path pointed out by the proof, and within the fair meaning of the instructions, and wander off into a side path outside the proof.

Moreover, conceding the instruction was somewhat inartificially drawn, yet with the broad current of the case running in favor of plaintiff, with defendant putting in no proof at all, explaining nothing, denying no evidence, can we say that the "substantial rights of the adverse party were affected," or that the "merits of the action were materially affected"? The statutes hold out a steady lamp to guide appellate courts in administering justice in that particular. We read our duty in the light of those statutes, viz.: Section 1850, R. S. 1909, reads: "The court shall, in every stage of the action, disregard any error or defect in the pleadings or proceedings which shall not affect the substantial rights of the adverse party; and no judgment shall be reversed or affected by reason of such error or defect." Section 2082, R. S. 1909, reads: "The Supreme Court, or Courts of Appeals shall not reverse the judgment of any court, unless it shall believe that error was committed by such court against the appellant or plaintiff in error, and materially affecting the merits of the action." The verdict of the jury was so manifestly right, and was won by plaintiff so hobbled and handicapped by erroneous instructions given for defendant, that it ought to take more error than can be found in her instruction to upset her verdict.

It is argued the verdict is excessive, and that, as the point was made in the motion for a new trial, the order granting one may stand on that foot although the court did not put its action upon that ground. If this suit were under the penal statute, which it is not, then this contention would seek the statute, providing (R. S. 1909, § 5425) that railroad corporations causing injury to other persons, from which death ensues, "shall forfeit and pay as a penalty, for every such person, employé or passenger so dying, the sum of not less than $2,000 and not exceeding $10,000, in the discretion of the jury, which may be sued for and recovered. * * *"

[5] We think, on further deliberation, the case was not brought or tried under the penal statute, but under sections 5426 and 5427 that are not penal. It is sufficient to hold in this case that, if there were circumstances of mitigation or aggravation, the jury had the facts and all of them defendant cared to elicit, for defendant, as said, laid its hand on its mouth and put in no proof whatever. Some weight must be given that fact. The jury being entitled to deal with the statute as having compensatory features, this particular jury had all the facts this particular defendant thought necessary to submit to them on that phase of the case. It had also, on that theory, all the instructions defendant asked, and plaintiff's instruction on that score is well enough.

It seems clear on principle that the order granting a new trial cannot stand on the proposition that the verdict was excessive. Concede decedent was of humble rank, was employed humbly on a humble wage. The proof goes to that extent and means he was a poor man in pocket. Whether he had a family is left dark. Now, are we to hold, as a matter of law, that the mere humbleness of the dead man cuts down the value of his life to his widow below $10,000? However humble, may we not presume, in the absence of testimony to the contrary, as here, that he came up to full measure in every quality of worth—worth as a man, worth as a father (if he was one), and worth as a husband? I think so, and take leave to say that I feel a certain pride (if a judge may have pride) in holding, under recognized legal precepts, that odious things are never presumed without proof. So, shall we assume that his present earning capacity (if that is to be taken as the guide) would always remain at $1.25 per day? Moreover, is the law so deadly cold as to gauge the value of a life alone by the dollars and cents the dead man was earning? That is one standard, but that it is the only one known to the law I cannot agree to. Be that as it may, this defendant, who did not care to even try to whittle away decedent's value to his wife by evidence before the jury, ought not to be heard to do so by presumption or argument on appeal. It, silent below, left the jury to fix the value of the man's life on the proof adduced and the instructions given, and should abide the event. We do not mean to say that the jury's award of damages is beyond the power of the court to correct, if it should appear that the discretion given the jury under this statute has been abused. The discretion given the jury in such case is like the discretion given the trial court in other matters; it is a sound judicial discretion, and, when so exercised, is not subject to review in the appellate court, but, when it appears to have been abused, the court will give relief.

In view of the premises, the order granting a new trial was erroneous. It should be reversed, with directions to reinstate the verdict of the widow, as of its original date, and to enter judgment thereon. It is so ordered.

VALLIANT, C. J., and KENNISH and BROWN, JJ., concur. GRAVES, J., dissents in an opinion filed, in which WOODSON and FERRISS, JJ., concur.

On Motion for Rehearing.

BROWN, J. This case has been pending in this court since February 17, 1900, and much judicial energy has been expended in sundry efforts to dispose of it according to correct principles of law. It was first heard in Division 1 at our October term, 1911, and an opinion written by Commissioner Bond, recommending that the cause be remanded for a new trial. That opinion was not adopted by a majority of the judges composing Division 1, so the case was transferred to the court in banc. It was heard in banc at our April term, 1912, and in an opinion filed by LAMM, J., it was reversed and remanded, with directions to the circuit court to enter judgment for plaintiff on the verdict of the jury. The cause now stands on a motion by respondent for a rehearing, in which motion we are strongly urged to affirm the judgment of the circuit court granting a new trial on the ground that the verdict of the jury is excessive.

I am of opinion that the verdict is excessive; but not to the extent indicated in the opinion of my learned Brother GRAVES, who figures the earning capacity of plaintiff's deceased husband at only $1.25 per day. He has overlooked the evidence at pages 56 and 57 of the abstract, which shows that deceased knew how to perform other kinds of work besides that of a section hand; that he had worked as a lumber stacker, and received therefor from $1.50 to $2.40 per day. I do not understand that the earning capacity of a man can be measured exclusively by the wages he is receiving when killed. If so, there could be no recovery for killing or injuring a man who is temporarily out of employment. While the judgment may be, and I believe is, slightly excessive, I think the motion for rehearing should be overruled, for the reason that the issue of excessiveness of the verdict was not called to our attention by either of the briefs filed by learned counsel for respondent.

[6] It was certainly the duty of respondent to point out in its brief the excessiveness of the verdict and cite us to the law which designated the correct measure of damages. During the last 15 years our rule No. 15 (73 S. W. vi) has contained the following provision: "All briefs shall be printed and shall contain, separate and apart from the argument or discussion of authorities, a statement, in numerical order, of the points relied on, together with a citation of authorities appropriate under each point. And any brief failing to comply with this rule may be disregarded by the court." It seems that the Kansas City Court of Appeals has a similar rule, which it enforces. Schwald v. Brunjes, 139 Mo. App. 516, 123 S. W. 472. This rule is simple and reasonable. It is also necessary, because it compels litigants to marshal and bring forward in one brief all the points and authorities upon which they rely to secure favorable action of this court on their contentions. If we allow litigants who have urged many grounds against the validity of a verdict in the lower court to bring those grounds or issues forward one at a time, the business of this court will be needlessly congested and delayed. It is the settled policy of this court to require litigants to try their appeals on the same theory they adopted in the trial court, and new issues cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Horgan v. Brady, 155 Mo. 659, loc. cit. 668, 56 S. W. 294; Brier v. Bank, 225 Mo. 684, 125 S. W. 469.

In Horgan v. Brady, supra, we said: "The plaintiff is limited on appeal to the theory on which she tried her case in the lower court, for it would be manifestly unjust to convict that court of error in respect to matters upon which it never ruled, and upon claims or rights that were never called to its attention. This is axiomatic in appellate practice, and has been the accepted rule, certainly since 1868."

It would only be a just, reasonable, and necessary expansion of that doctrine to require litigants who secure more than one hearing of the same appeal to confine themselves to the issues they choose to present to us in the first hearing. If we are to refrain from "convicting" trial courts of errors not called to their attention, why should we not, as a court in banc, also refrain from "convicting" one division of this court of overlooking assignments of error not called to its attention in the briefs of litigants? It is a well-known fact that all lawyers incorporate in their motions for new trial and in arrest many points which upon mature reflection they abandon and do not present to the appellate courts at all. Our rule before quoted requires each litigant to present to us in his brief all the points upon which he relies; and I fail to see why that rule is not just as binding as the rule which requires a litigant by his motion for a new trial to call the lower court's attention to all the errors of which he complains.

The defendant (respondent) has had a fair trial in the circuit court and two hearings in this court. Several hundred other litigants who have never even been accorded one hearing have been patiently knocking at the door of this court for more than two years, humbly beseeching us to give them relief, therefore, as an act of justice to ourselves and other litigants, I think the motion for a rehearing in this cause should be overruled.

GRAVES, J. (dissenting). Upon the last day of our April term there was pending in this case a motion for rehearing, and upon that motion I had prepared my views, to the effect that a rehearing should be granted for the reason that the principal opinion then on file decided the case upon a theory not involved in the case at all. In other words, the opinion was written upon the theory that the case was under what is now section 5425, R. S. 1909, the penal section, when in truth and fact the case is under what are now sections 5426 and 5427, R. S. 1909, the compensatory section. Discovering his error, the writer of the principal opinion upon the last day of the term presented a revised opinion, changing the theory of the opinion as first written, and I took time in which to reformulate my views of the case, and hence the motion for rehearing passed over for that purpose. In compliance with the leave granted me, I submit the following: In the trial of the case nisi, the humanitarian theory was abandoned by the plaintiff. That left in the petition the following: "Plaintiff further states that, as a result of the carelessness and negligence and unskillfulness of * * * the foreman in charge of said hand car, as aforesaid, she has been deprived of the support, comfort, and society of her said husband, all to her damage in the sum of $10,000, for which sum defendant is liable to plaintiff by virtue of sections 2865 and 2866 of the Revised Statutes of the state of Missouri, of the revision of 1890, and by virtue of an amendment of the latter section by an act of the General Assembly in the year 1907 (Acts 1907, p. 252)."

The above sections are now sections 5426 and 5427, R. S. 1909. They authorized a recovery of compensatory damages only. They are not in any sense penal statutes, and have never been so construed. Not only did plaintiff's petition plant her cause upon the compensatory statutes, but such is the theory of her instructions. The material part of her principal instruction reads: "The court instructs the jury that, if they find for the plaintiff, they will assess her damages at such sum as in their judgment will be a fair and just compensation to her for the loss of her husband, not exceeding the sum of $10,000, having due regard to any mitigating circumstances offered in evidence, and taking into consideration the age of the deceased, his capacity to labor, and probable earnings." This instruction is under R. S. 1909, § 5427, and not under the penal section, R. S. § 5425. Section 5427 reads: "Sec. 5427. Damages—By whom Recovered—Measure of. Damages accruing under the last preceding section shall be sued for and recovered by the same party and in the same manner as provided in section 5425; and in every such action the jury may give such damages, not exceeding ten thousand dollars, as they may deem fair and just, with reference to the necessary injury resulting from such death, to the surviving parties who may be entitled to sue, and having also regard to the mitigating and aggravating circumstances attending such wrongful act, neglect or default." Under this section the plaintiff must show her damages; on the other hand, the defendant may show the mitigating circumstances, if any there be.

Further, the action being one for compensatory damages, it devolved upon plaintiff to fully show the damages sustained. She has not shown damages to the exorbitant sum of $10,000. The excessiveness of the verdict was a ground in the motion for new trial. Such ground was well taken, and the action of the trial court in granting a new trial can be sustained for this reason if for no other. We believe the instruction condemned by the trial court in its order granting a new trial was properly condemned. The instruction is awkwardly worded, and, to say the least of it, is misleading. The action of the trial court in granting a new trial stands upon a different basis from that of an appellate court. Such court has wide discretion, and such discretion should not be disturbed here, unless it has been grossly misused. Our Brother LAMM, in McCarty v. Transit Co., 192 Mo. loc. cit. 401, 402, 91 S. W. 133, has well stated the situation of the trial judge thus: "Considering the case from this point of view, it must not be lost sight of that a jury may not give any verdict it pleases. Its verdict is first subject to the trained judicial discretion of the trial judge, and his judicial discretion, so exercised upon the verdict, will not be interfered with on appeal except it be unmistakably unwisely exercised. Bank v. Armstrong, 92 Mo. loc. cit. 279 [4 S. W. 720], et seq.; Bank v. Wood, 124 Mo. loc. cit. 76, 77 [27 S. W. 554]; Kuenzel v. Stevens, 155 Mo. loc. cit. 285 [56 S. W. 1076]; McCloskey v. Pulitzer Pub. Co., 163 Mo. loc. cit. 33 [63 S. W. 99], and cases cited. The wise exercise of this judicial discretion on the part of the circuit judge has always been encouraged by this court—a discretion exemplified by Justice Grier in his celebrated dictum that 'it takes 13 men in this court to steal a man's farm; 12 in the box and 1 on the bench.' The trial judge stands peculiarly close to the fountainhead of legal justice. He is the high priest presiding at the very altar of the temple. To him is given to hear the intonation of the voice of a witness, to see his manner, his cast of countenance, the glance of his eye, the behavior of the jury, their intelligence, their attention, and the whole network of small incidents creating an atmosphere about a case and tending possibly to a perverted result or otherwise, none of which can be preserved in the bill of exceptions and sent here, and in him, therefore, should exist the courage to prevent a miscarriage of right. His viewpoint is entirely different from that of an appellate court. See the animated language of Wagner, J., in Reid v. Insurance Co., 58 Mo. loc. cit. 429 et seq."

In the earlier case of Schmidt v. Railway Co., 149 Mo. 282, 50 S. W. 924, 73 Am. St. Rep. 380, our present Chief Justice thus tersely spoke: "The trial judge holds in his hands, more than any other tribune, the power to shape the trial of cases to accomplish the ends of justice. One of the chief means at his disposal is the power to grant new trials, and he ought to exercise it whenever in his judgment unfair advantage has been obtained at the expense of justice."

So we say in this case, the trial judge was at the very seat of justice. The verdict in this case disturbed his idea of justice. He set it aside, and it should so remain. It matters not that he may have assigned a wrong reason for his action, if there be a good reason covered by the motion for a new trial. We insist that the exceedingly high verdict in this case is not sustained by the evidence for the plaintiff. Under the statute (section 5427, R. S. 1909), the damages assessed by the jury must be "with reference to the necessary injury resulting from such death, to the surviving parties who may be entitled to sue, and also having regard to the mitigating and aggravating circumstances attending such wrongful act, neglect, or default."

No aggravating circumstances were shown by the plaintiff, and hence the damages cannot be enhanced for that reason. The only thing upon which she can have damages is the earning capacity of the deceased and probable length of his life. He was earning $1.25 per day, and yet on this proof she has recovered the highest amount which can be recovered in a case under these statutes. Had her husband been earning $10 a day, she could not have recovered one whit more than she did in this case. I do not indorse the idea seemingly announced by our learned Brother that the widow of a man with an earning capacity of $1.25 per day can or should recover, under these statutes, a sum equal to that which can or should be recovered by the widow of a man whose earning capacity was $10 per day. The statute does not mean that. It has a sliding scale of damages, and was properly intended to cover all cases, but to cover them rightfully and justly under the facts of each case. The greatest recovery allowable is $10,000. This includes the aggravating cases. When the Legislature fixed this sliding scale, and when it provided for aggravating circumstances as an element to enhance the damages, and when it further fixed the highest recoverable sum at $10,000, it was never intended that the widow of a man with the limited earning capacity of $1.25 per day should recover the full limit of the statute in a case without a single aggravating circumstance. The verdict in this case outrages the very statutes under which it was recovered. To permit it to stand would be to make mockery of the law, and enter upon the records one more travesty upon justice.

As stated before, the excessiveness of this verdict was properly urged in the motion for a new trial. It is vehemently urged here. The trial court has granted a new trial, and excessiveness of this verdict is a good ground for that action of the trial court. What reason the learned trial judge assigned for his ruling is immaterial here, so long as there is one good ground in the motion for a new trial.

The motion for rehearing in this court should be sustained to the end that we may, upon another hearing, enter up a judgment sustaining the trial court in granting a new trial, nisi, and to the further end that, upon such new trial below, a right verdict in the case may be obtained, and not one bearing upon its face the evidence of poison and prejudice in the minds of the jury.

WOODSON and FERRISS, JJ., concur in these views.

SPRINGFIELD S. W. RY. CO. v. SCHWEITZER et al.

(Supreme Court of Missouri. Division No. 1.
Nov. 30, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 23*)—JURISDICTION OF SUBJECT-MATTER—OBJECTION UNNECESSARY.

The Supreme Court will determine its jurisdiction of the subject-matter in condemnation proceedings, though no question thereon is raised by counsel.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Polk County; Argus Cox, Judge.

Action by the Springfield Southwestern Railway Company against Jacob C. Schweitzer and the New Phoenix Foundry & Machine Company. From a judgment for the Machine Company, plaintiff appeals. Cause ordered transferred to the Springfield Court of Appeals.

Robert T. Ralley, of St. Louis, and Barbour & McDavid, of Springfield, for appellant. John Schmook and T. J. Murray, both of Springfield, for respondents.

LAMM, J. Defendant Schweitzer was the same time owner of four parcels of real estate in the city of Springfield, for convenience numbered tracts 1, 2, 3, and 4, severally. Tract 3 alone concerns us. Defendant Machine Company was in possession of tract 3 as a tenant of Schweitzer. In the exercise of its delegated right of exercising the power of eminent domain, plaintiff Railway Company brought a condemnation proceeding in the Greene circuit court against Schweitzer, as owner, to condemn all four tracts for railway purposes, and made the Machine Company a party defendant. Such steps were ultimately taken in that case that, from a judgment in favor of Machine Company, plaintiff Railway Company appeals.

Schweitzer does not appeal from the final judgment; nor does the Machine Company appeal therefrom; nor does the Railway Company appeal from that part of the judgment relating to Schweitzer. The controversy therefore narrows itself, on appeal, to one between the Railway Company and the Machine Company.

On December 31, 1904, Schweitzer let tract 3 to the Machine Company for a one-year term. This lease was in writing, duly recorded, and gave an option to lessee for an extended term of three years, to begin, at the end of that reserved. On the day before the term ended, the Machine Company exercised its option to extend the term for the three additional years. A writing to that effect was signed up and put of record. There was testimony to the effect (and the court so found) that the Railway Company had notified all the parties concerned, on the day this new lease was signed, that it proposed taking all four tracts by condemnation proceedings. There was testimony from which the fact might be inferred that the extending of the lease was taking time by the forelock by putting Machine Company on a better footing to claim damages; but none of that testimony seems material to the question we have in mind.

The Machine Company was put in possession under its original lease, and was running a foundry and machine shop in some ramshackle buildings on tract 3. This possession was continued into the new term, and, while so in possession, on January 22, 1906, plaintiff sued to condemn all four tracts. The petition is of no consequence on the question we have in mind. It appears the Machine Company lays no claim to any other tract, except No. 3; and as to that its only claim was as tenant for the unexpired part of the additional three-year term. Both defendants, on service of process, filed separate answers. Schweitzer admitted he owned all four tracts in fee simple, and went on to point out that his codefendant, the Machine Company, was in possession of tract 3 (describing it) as his tenant for a term of three years, beginning January 1, 1906. The case rode off below on that theory. To that end the Machine Company filed its answer, setting up its possession of tract 3 under the same lease, and, among other things, claiming damages in the sum of $5,000, on the theory that "the breaking up, interference with, and interruption of, the business" it was conducting on the leased premises, including the injury to its business and loss of profits, amounted to that sum. On the day these answers were filed, the court made the conventional finding of facts, spreading of record conditions precedent to the right to condemn property for railway purposes, etc., and then went on to appoint and instruct three commissioners to assess damages. Presently they reported, assessing damages to the four tracts separately. When they came to tract 3, they reported an award of compensation in the sum of $4,200 (quoting) "to Jacob C. Schweitzer, the owner of said tract, and the New Phoenix Foundry & Machine Company, lessee thereof, as set forth in said petition, and as their interests may appear. * * *". Presently, on notice given of this award and report, Schweitzer and the Machine Company excepted thereto, severally, through separate counsel. Following these exceptions, Schweitzer took down the whole award of $18,200. Subsequently, on the Machine Company's motion, the court ordered him to return to the clerk the $4,200 allowed as compensation and damages for tract 3. It appears he obeyed this order, in part, by returning $2,000. Taken by a change of venue to the Polk circuit court, the cause was reached for trial in 1909. At that time, on the motion of the Railway Company, the Machine Company was ordered to make its claim for damages more specific. This it did in the form of written amendments to its exceptions to the commissioners' report. Thereby it claimed damages, summarized as follows: For removing its business, foundry, and machine shops, comprising sand, iron, patterns, machinery, tools, stock and material, engines and implements, etc., $634.31; damages consequent to said removal in breakage and destruction of articles and machinery so moved, $850; in breaking up, interference with, and injury to, its business, loss of patronage and custom by change of location, $1,000; loss of earnings during the time of removal, $1,000; deprivation of the use and benefits of its leasehold interest during the unexpired term of its lease, $900; loss of its established trade, patronage, and good will at its old stand, $500.

On the filing of these amended exceptions by the Machine Company, Schweitzer formally withdrew his own exceptions by a pleading filed, and thereby he inferentially submitted to judgment in favor of plaintiff and directly asked the court to determine the respective interests of himself and the Machine Company in the award on tract 3, and to make an order distributing the same in accordance therewith. Thereupon the cause came on for trial on said motion of Schweitzer and the remaining live exceptions of the Machine Company.

The trial was to the court, without the aid of a jury, and exceptions were taken by appellant to the refusal to strike out the exceptions, to the introduction of certain testimony by the Machine Company, to the scope of the inquiry, to the giving and refusing of instructions, and to the findings and judgment; but none of them are material until such time as the question in mind is at rest.

Attending to the finding and judgment on tract 3, among other things, the court found that the lease was of no more value than the monthly rent reserved. Further, that the Machine Company, to continue its business during the unexpired term of its lease and preserve its machinery and material from loss and destruction, was obliged to remove said machinery and material to another building, thereby necessarily incurring expense in the sum of $634.31, and suffered loss of fire brick to the amount of $86, "and that" (quoting) "by reason of the fact that said lessee had its machinery so installed and in operation, as aforesaid, the leasehold was of special value to defendant company, in excess of the ordinary rental value of the premises, to the amount of $720.31." Further, that Schweitzer had withdrawn his exceptions to the report of the commissioners, etc. It was adjudged, inter alia, that he take nothing; that the Machine Company take nothing from Schweitzer, "or" (quoting) "from the value of the land, independent of the special value of the leasehold"; that Schweitzer take down the $2,000 theretofore deposited with the clerk; and that the Machine Company recover said $720.31 from plaintiff.

In the foregoing we have culled from the record the facts deemed necessary to an intelligent and self-explanatory disposition of a question we have in mind, namely, our jurisdiction. We think jurisdiction is challenged on the face of this record. In that view of it, the situation seeks its determination at the outset. Thereon we make these observations:

[1, 2] (a) The question of jurisdiction is not sprung by counsel. One of the ancient prerogatives of counsel is, within the boundaries of the record, to make or not make points for the decision of judges. They are at liberty, within the confines of good sense, to have play of free will and do as they choose in that regard. On the other hand, some of the ancient prerogatives of the courts of all enlightened peoples are to decide only such points sprung by counsel as are deemed vital and necessary, and, in turn, a court may, ex mero motu, spring points of its own, at least on the subject of jurisdiction; for jurisdiction of the subject-matter can neither be waived nor conferred by consent of parties. Whether it exists or not in a concrete case springs spontaneously for inquiry at any step or stage of a suit at any time, in any case, and will be considered sua sponte. City of Tarkio v. Clark, 186 Mo. loc. cit. 294, 85 S. W. 329.

[3] (b) We are of opinion we have no jurisdiction of this appeal. This because:

(1) The Constitution gives the Supreme Court appellate jurisdiction in cases involving title to real estate. By construction we have arrived at the conclusion, announced many times, that it is not sufficient to confer jurisdiction on this court that the title to real estate should be a subject of inquiry collaterally or by way of an incident in the suit. To confer jurisdiction, in a constitutional sense, the judgment appealed from must involve title to real estate, and such title must be directly affected thereby. Jones v. Hogan, 211 Mo. loc. cit. 47, 109 S. W. 641, and cases cited; Turner v. Morris, 222 Mo. 21, 121 S. W. 9; Loewenstein v. Insurance Co., 227 Mo. loc. cit. 134 et seq., 127 S. W. 72; Kennedy v. Duncan, 224 Mo. loc. cit. 664, 123 S. W. 856; Porter v. Railroad, 175 Mo. 96, 74 S. W. 992.

[4] (2) Under the constitutional grant of power to hear and determine appeals in cases involving title to real estate, we have held that this court has jurisdiction in appeals from judgments in condemnation proceedings under the exercise of the right of eminent domain. The leading case on that head is State ex rel. v. Rombauer, 124 Mo. 598, 28 S. W. 75. In Railroad v. Wyatt, 223 Mo. loc. cit. 351, 352, 122 S. W. 688, a line of cases are cited following the Rombauer

Case. And that general doctrine may be accepted as settled.

(3) It would be loose and illogical construction, however, to hold we had jurisdiction in such cases, unless our jurisdiction be referable to the constitutional grant of power to hear causes involving title to real estate. It follows that when a judgment in a condemnation proceeding comes by appeal to the Supreme Court, and is of such sort that the amount involved does not confer jurisdiction, and the title to real estate is not involved, our jurisdiction fails. The question up for determination, therefore, is not merely whether this is a condemnation suit. It goes deeper, and is: Is the title to real estate involved as between the Railway Company and the Machine Company?

[6-7] (4) The Machine Company had a leasehold for that part of a term of three years that was unexpired when the Railway Company appropriated the premises, and no more. The question, then, can be put in a neater and more speaking form by stating it this way: Is a leasehold for a term of years real estate? If so, the title to real estate is involved; for unquestionably the term or leasehold of the Machine Company was sequestered. If not, the title to real estate is not involved in a constitutional sense.

Attending to the question thus put, it must be conceded that if a term for years is real estate it becomes such, either by force of common law, or by virtue of some statute. Now, at common law a term for years created by a lease was a chattel—a chattel real to be sure, but still a chattel. At the tenant's death such leasehold became an asset in the hands of his administrator, and did not go to his heirs. At common law the term "real estate" did not include a lease. Lenow v. Fones, 48 Ark. 557, 4 S. W. 56; Grover v. Fox, 36 Mich. loc. cit. 459; Despard v. Churchill, 53 N. Y. loc. cit. 199; Buhl v. Kenyon, 11 Mich. 249, 83 Am. Dec. 738, 2 Kent, Com. *342; Gunn v. Sinclair, 52 Mo. 331; Orchard v. Store Co., 225 Mo. loc. cit. 433 et seq., 125 S. W. 486, 20 Ann. Cas. 1072.

Turning now to our statutes, we have a group of them defining the term "real estate" in connection with some particular subject-matter, and for some particular purpose, as, for example: Judgments (R. S. 1909, § 2161); Executions (Id. §§ 2193, 2194); Conveyances (Id. § 2822); Crimes and Punishments (Id. § 4928); Dower (Id. § 345); Construction of Statutes (Id. § 8057); and Taxation and Revenue (Id. § 11519).

A reproduction here of those statutes, with an analysis and interpretation thereof, would be waste of time and mere idle and ostentatious show of labor subserving no useful purpose. It is enough to say that in Orchard v. Store Co., 225 Mo. 414, 125 S. W. 486, 20 Ann. Cas. 1072, supra, ruled in Division Two, they are exhaustively reviewed, expounded, and applied. The learning of that case is of the order that leaves no stone unturned, no source of information explored, no pains omitted. It must be held, then, that further exposition of those statutes in that regard is set at rest, and should not be put on foot and on its legs as a going concern again. We stand by that case. It was there held, as the sum of the matter, that the foregoing statutes have not changed a chattel real from personal property into real estate for the general purposes of the law. In given particulars, and for certain defined purposes, as, for instance, in the chapter on conveyances, the term "real estate" is made to include a chattel real, but not for the general purposes of the administration of the law. Following the reasoning of the Orchard Case, and on its authority, we hold that chattels real are left, for the purposes of this case, as at common law, to wit, as personal property. Indeed, even a superficial reading of the exceptions of Machine Company, of the finding of the court, and of the judgment below points to the fact that the damages Machine Company suffered, if any, related to personal property. The title to real estate not being involved in that part of the omnibus judgment appealed from, we have no jurisdiction.

The cause must be transferred to the Springfield Court of Appeals. Let it be so ordered. All concur.

MARSHALL et al. v. HILL et al.

1. JUDGMENT (§ 335*)—PETITION FOR REVIEW—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Where a verified petition states that a judgment quieting title has been entered against the petitioners without summons or appearance, and upon a petition which was untrue in some material matter, and to which the petitioners have, and then had, a good defense, setting out such defense, and closes with a prayer that the judgment quieting title be set aside, it is a petition for review, under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 777, 780, authorizing a petition for review to set aside a judgment entered without summons or appearance, and prescribing the facts which must be shown by such petition, though an additional party necessary to a complete defense was brought in, and one party was transferred to a different side from that which he occupied in the suit to quiet title.

2. JUDGMENT (§ 335*)—"PETITION FOR REVIEW."

The proceeding which is named a "petition for review" by the Legislature is highly remedial, and must necessarily accommodate itself to the needs and practices of every proceeding that comes within its scope.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 647-663; Dec. Dig. § 335.*]

3. TRUSTS (§ 94*)—DEFECTIVE PATENT—CORRECTION BY SUBSEQUENT PATENT—TITLE TO LAND.

Where the holder of a patent erroneously describing the land transferred his interests

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

by a warranty deed perpetuating the erroneous description, a subsequent patent, secured in lieu of the former one, merely conferred upon him the legal title in trust for his grantee or representatives, in whom rested the equitable title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 143; Dec. Dig. § 94.*]

4. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 7*)—COMMENCEMENT OF PERIOD—ISSUANCE OF PATENT.

Limitations did not begin to run in favor of the parties in possession of public land until the issuance of a patent correctly describing it, though a patent intended to cover such land, but not correctly describing it, had been issued prior thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 24-42; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

5. EQUITY (§ 71*)—LACHES.

Where a patentee of public land, under a patent erroneously describing it, in 1874 transferred his interest by a warranty deed perpetuating the erroneous description, and thereafter the land remained vacant until 1889, when lead was discovered, and thereupon the patentee took possession and paid the back taxes, for which he was amply reimbursed for timber sold from the land, and where in 1894 he instituted proceedings to secure a corrected patent, and did not disclose the transfer to the land office until he could no longer conceal it, and then for the first time claimed that the deed had been procured by fraud, and where, after having obtained the correct patent, he challenged the representatives of his grantee to contest his title, such representatives are not guilty of laches in the bringing of a proceeding in 1905 to establish their title to the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. §§ 204-211; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

6. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 127*)—CORRECTED PATENT—PARTY ENTITLED.

Where public land was patented under an erroneous description, and the patentee transferred same by a warranty deed perpetuating such description, and a controversy arose between the patentee and his grantee as to which was entitled to the land, the land department properly issued a corrected patent to the patentee; the matter in controversy between them being for the courts, and not for the department.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. § 343; Dec. Dig. § 127.*]

7. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 5*)—APPLICATION OF STATUTE.

The statute of limitations applies alike to all actions, whether they were before the enactment of the Code called legal or equitable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 13-15; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

8. EQUITY (§ 71*)—LACHES—TIME AS AN ELEMENT.

Notwithstanding the statute of limitations, time is an important element in the defense of laches.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. §§ 204-211; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

9. DEEDS (§ 211*)—LACHES—LOSS OF EVIDENCE.

Where a grantor in a warranty deed delayed more than 20 years before claiming that the deed was secured through fraud, his testimony alone was insufficient to establish such fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 637-647; Dec. Dig. § 211.*]

10. JUDGMENT (§ 335*)—INNOCENT PURCHASER OF LAND—TITLE ATTACKED BY PETITION FOR REVIEW.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 784, providing that no sale or conveyance of property for the satisfaction of any judgment regularly made shall be affected by the setting aside of the judgment on petition for review, if the property be in the hands of innocent purchasers, the title of innocent purchasers for a valuable consideration from the holder of a legal title cannot be set aside in proceedings for review by the holders of the equitable title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 647-663; Dec. Dig. § 335.*]

11. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 231*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE.

While a purchaser of land has constructive notice of all matters of public record in his own chain of title, including matters collateral thereto pointed out by the record, he is not chargeable with notice of proceedings to obtain a corrected patent to the land, nor of any chain of title adverse to that of the patentee, from the mere fact that the patent stated that it was made in lieu of a prior patent "in which the description of the land was erroneous, the record of which has been canceled."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 487, 513-539; Dec. Dig. § 231.*]

12. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 228*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—ACTUAL NOTICE—EFFECT.

Where one has actual notice of an equitable claim affecting the legal title he is about to purchase, he completes the transaction at his own risk.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 495-501; Dec. Dig. § 228.*]

13. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 227*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—ACTUAL NOTICE.

A purchaser has actual notice, when he knows of the existence of an adverse claim of title, or is conscious of having the means of knowledge, though he may not use them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 474; Dec. Dig. § 227.*]

14. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 228*)—PURCHASER IN GOOD FAITH—NOTICE.

Where the purchaser from the holder of the legal title before paying the purchase money had formal notice of the claim of the holders of the equitable title, he was not a purchaser in good faith for a valuable consideration without notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 495-501; Dec. Dig. § 228.*]

15. QUIETING TITLE (§ 49*)—DECREE—RELIEF TO PURCHASER OF TITLE.

Where a mining company purchased land from the holder of the legal title with notice of an outstanding equitable title, and thereafter made valuable improvements on the land, and, on being made a party to an action to quiet title between the owners of the equitable and the legal title, asserted its rights under the contract, the court, on finding in favor of the equitable owner, will enforce the contract of sale, on payment to such equitable owners of the contract price.

In Banc. Appeal from Circuit Court, St. Francois County; C. A. Killian, Judge.

Petition by Leander J. Marshall and others against Norman J. Hill and others. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed.

The following is the opinion in Division No. 1:

Statement.

BROWN, C. In February, 1905, the defendant Norman N. Hill filed his petition in the St. Francois circuit court, returnable at the next May term thereof, in words and figures as follows:

"Norman N. Hill, Plaintiff, v. Charles R. Marshall; Leander J. Marshall, John Marshall, and the Unknown Heirs, Grantees, and Devisees of John Marshall; Della Lashley and the Unknown Heirs, Grantees, and Devisees of Austin Marshall, Deceased; the Unknown Heirs, Grantees, and Devisees of Stanhope Marshall, Deceased; the Unknown Heirs, Grantees, and Devisees of James Marshall, Deceased; Adeline Boggs and the Unknown Heirs, Grantees and Devisees of Adeline Boggs; and the Unknown Heirs, Grantees and Devisees of Sarah Marshall, Deceased, Defendants.

"Plaintiff states that he claims to own and does own, in fee simple, the following described lands situate in the county of St. Francois, in the state of Missouri, to wit: All of the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section No. 1, township 36 N., range four east, containing about 40 acres. He further states that he is informed and believes that the above-named defendants claimed to have and own an interest in said lands. Plaintiff further states that defendants are nonresident of the state of Missouri and cannot be served with process in said state in the manner prescribed in article 4, chapter 8, Revised Statutes of Missouri, 1899.

"Plaintiff states that he verily believes there are persons, as hereinafter set forth, who are interested in, or who claim to be interested in, the subject-matter of this petition as heirs, grantees, and devisees of the parties named in this petition, and whose names he cannot insert, because unknown to him. He further states that Adeline Boggs, formerly Adeline Marshall, and John Marshall are children and heirs of Sarah Marshall, deceased, aforesaid; that he has no definite knowledge as to whether the aforesaid Adeline Boggs and John Marshall are still living, and hence their unknown heirs, grantees, and devisees are made parties to this action. He further states that James Marshall, deceased, Austin Marshall, deceased, and Stanhope Marshall, deceased, are also children and heirs of the aforesaid Sarah Marshall, who died more than 20 years ago; that the said unknown heirs, grantees, and devisees of Sarah Marshall, and the unknown heirs, grantees, and devisees of Adeline Boggs, John Marshall, James Marshall,

Austin Marshall, and Stanhope Marshall, claim title to the aforesaid premises, as plaintiff is informed and believes, by and through the aforesaid Sarah Marshall as the common source of title, the exact nature of which claim this petitioner is unable to state.

"Plaintiff therefore prays the court to determine the estate, title, and interest in said real estate of the parties herein respectively, and to define by its judgment or decree the title, estate, and interest of the parties severally in and to such real estate.

"Norman N. Hill, being duly sworn, upon his oath states that the matters and things contained in the foregoing petition are true to the best of his knowledge and belief, and that he verily believes there are persons, as described in said petition, claiming to own an interest in the lands described in said petition, whose names he cannot insert, because unknown to him, and their interests are set forth and described so far as his knowledge extends.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this — day of February, 1905."

Upon this an order of publication was made and published, returnable on the first day of the May term. None of the defendants appearing at that time, default was taken, and on the 23d day of August, 1905, a final decree was entered, reciting that the plaintiff was the absolute owner in fee of the land described in the petition, that he had been in possession of, exercising acts of ownership over, said land since the year 1894, and that the defendants, or either of them, had no estate, title, or interest therein, and adjudging that all title or claim of right of defendants, and each of them, in and to said lands, be vested in Hill, absolutely and in fee simple.

On October 20, 1905, the original petition in this case was filed by Leander J. Marshall, Mrs. W. S. Marshall, Adeline M. Boggs, and Adella M. Lasley, as plaintiffs, against Norman N. Hill, Jr., Charles R. Marshall, and Doe Run Lead Company. The defendants were all notified and appeared. Mrs. Boggs conveyed her interest to the plaintiff Leander J. Marshall, and died. Leander J. Marshall also died, and the action was revived and continued in the name of his daughter and sole heir, Winifred Marshall Dittmar, and an amended petition was filed in May, 1907. This petition admits the truth of the allegation in the petition of Hill against Marshall that the defendants in that petition claimed to own an interest in the lands, and denies specifically each and all other allegations thereof. It charges that these plaintiffs are the absolute owners of the land in controversy, that the suit was a fraudulent scheme to deprive them of their property, that the statements in the petition by which jurisdiction was attempted to be obtained by publication were false, that the notice by publication is void upon the face of the record, and that the judgment was obtained by false representations and upon false testimony. They set up their own title substantially as follows:

On or about May 6, 1872, Hill entered the land in question at the United States land office; that by an error the certificate of entry described it as "the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 1, township 36 north, range 4 east of the fifth principal meridian; that on August 30, 1872, a patent was issued to Hill, in which the same error was made; that on or about the 19th day of June, 1874, the said Hill sold the land so entered to plaintiff Leander J. Marshall, and executed and delivered to him a warranty deed, in which the land was erroneously described as the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, instead of the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of said section; that at the time of making this conveyance Hill delivered to Leander J. Marshall the original patent above mentioned, and afterwards on August 31, 1875, Leander J. Marshall for a valuable consideration conveyed the same land by the same erroneous description by warranty deed to Sarah S. Marshall, his mother, from whom plaintiffs deraign their title; that in all these transactions the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter was intended, but by mistake of all the parties it was described as the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter; that there is no such tract of land as the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of said section; that in March, 1898, Hill, who was formerly of Richland county, Ohio, but was then living in Washington, D. C., applied for and obtained from the United States a patent granting to him the said southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 1, township 36, range 4, on the sole ground that he had entered the said land as above stated, and that by mistake the patent therefor had described it erroneously. The said last patent states upon its face that it was made to rectify said mistake. The petition also charges that Hill procured from Charles R. Marshall, one of the heirs of Sarah S. Marshall, a quitclaim deed to the lands in controversy, dated June 23, 1890, which plaintiffs believe was procured by fraud and misrepresentation, and could convey no greater interest than the undivided one-sixth interest owned by the grantor as one of the heirs of Sarah S. Marshall; that all the acts charged in the petition constituted a fraudulent scheme, having for its object the unlawful acquisition by Hill of the land in controversy. Charles R. Marshall is made a defendant in order that his interest may be adjudicated in the suit, and the Doe Run Lead Company to adjudicate their claim on account of an option to purchase the same land from Hill. The petition concludes as follows:

"Wherefore plaintiffs pray the court to set aside the decree entered in the cause aforesaid, to permit the plaintiffs herein to controvert by proof the allegations of the petition in said cause, and to support the allegations herein, and, upon testimony being heard, to declare the title which may have been conveyed by the United States by the patent of March 21, 1898, to Norman N. Hill, Jr., of southeast quarter of southeast quarter of section 1, township 36 north, range 4 east, to be vested in the plaintiffs as herein set forth. Plaintiffs' interest herein be decreed in said lands as herein set out; that is, to Winifred Marshall Dittmar two-fifths, Mrs. W. S. Marshall one-fifth, Adella M. Lasley one-fifth, Charles R. Marshall one-thirtieth, and to Norman N. Hill, Jr., or Charles R. Marshall, as the court may determine, five-thirtieths—and for all other and further equitable relief."

Petition was duly sworn to.

Hill answers that Charles R. Marshall repaid him one-half the amount of money he had paid for the land, and that he supposed he had conveyed him one-half the land, but denies any knowledge of the deed to Leander J. Marshall, although he does not deny its execution. He also pleads adverse possession of the land for more than 10 years prior to the filing of the petition, and the 10-year statute of limitations.

The Lead Company set up its option to purchase from Hill, upon which it has paid $100, and expended in prospecting about $3,000 more, and asserts its willingness to pay the purchase price, $15,000, as soon as it can get title. It also says it has no knowledge of the truth or falsity of the matter set up in the petition, and answer of Hill, except such as it pleads, and such records and facts as the law would charge it with knowledge of.

The answer of Charles R. Marshall set up, among other things, that the quitclaim deed of June 23, 1890, was obtained by Hill through fraud and misrepresentation, and asks that it be set aside. To this answer Hill filed a motion to strike out that part referring to, and asking relief on account of, the quitclaim deed, on the ground, among others, that "in this cause Norman N. Hill can set up no title other than that which he set up, or might have set up, in his original petition in this suit, the decree in which is herein sought to be vacated."

All the matters pleaded in the several answers were properly put in issue. The facts relating to the title to the land in controversy are as follows:

On May 6, 1872, Norman N. Hill applied at the local United States land office at Ironton, Mo., to enter the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 1, township 36 north, range 4 east, in St. Francois county, Mo. His application is now on file in the local land office, and the plat book shows the entry (43,783) by its proper description. The register of cash entries and the tract books of the local office show the entry to cover the "S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ " of said section, but the letter "S" appears written in pencil over the "N," changing the description to the "S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$." The acreage of the last described tract (41.02) appears on the records throughout. The certificate was erroneously made out as the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, which was covered by the claim of one Joseph Girrard, Jr., which had been patented to him June 6, 1836. Patent was issued to Hill by the same erroneous description August 30, 1872. Hill conveyed the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter to Leander J. Marshall June 19, 1874, and the deed was, on May 18, 1875, duly recorded in St. Francois county. Leander J. Marshall conveyed the same land to Sarah S. Marshall, his mother, August 31, 1875, by warranty deed, recorded January 4, 1876. The plaintiffs in this case are the heirs of this grantee, who have acquired her interest by inheritance and transfers between themselves, in the proportions stated in the prayer of the petition.

The Flat River lead district began to develop in the '80's; the first map of it having been made, as disclosed by the record, in 1882. In 1886 and 1887 lands in the vicinity of the tract in question began to sell, and in December, 1889, Mr. Hill, who was then occupying a position in the pension office in Washington, seems to have become aroused, and paid $38 and some cents in taxes which had been assessed against the tract in controversy from 1874 to 1889, inclusive, and has since paid the taxes from year to year, both before and since the emanation of the legal title from the United States, up to the time of the trial. In 1890 the defendant Doe Run Lead Company was working on the Cofman and Hampton lands adjoining, and Judge Taylor was working his land east of it. June 23d of that year Hill sent a lawyer named Sewall, of Mansfield, Ohio, who is now dead, to Charles R. Marshall, and procured a quitclaim deed to the same land described in the second patent. This is the deed that is now being attacked by the defendants Marshall as fraudulent. He testifies that it was procured by misrepresentation, while Hill testifies that he obtained it because Charles R. Marshall had, in 1874, refunded half the cost of the land to him, and he had, or supposed he had, for that consideration, conveyed to him an undivided half of the tract described in the patent.

December 17, 1894, Hill wrote to the Commissioner of the General Land Office as follows: "I am the owner of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of Sec. 1, Tp. 36, R. 4 E., in St. Francois county, Missouri. The original patent has been lost. I desire to know what steps are necessary to secure a copy of said patent. The land was entered by me in 1872, I believe about May of that year, and

I have owned it since that time." This application proceeded, with voluminous correspondence. February 25, 1895, the Commissioner called upon Mr. Hill for an affidavit showing loss of the patent issued in case of C. E. 43,783, also conveyance to the United States of the land described in that patent, and an abstract showing that such land was free from all incumbrances, mortgages, assignments, and conveyances, to which Hill replied with an affidavit that the patent had been lost and an abstract as follows: "Abstract of title to S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ Sec. 1, Tp. 36 N., R. 4 E.: United States to Norman N. Hill, entry dated May 6, 1872, S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ Sec. 1, Tp. 36 N., R. 4 E., Chas. R. Marshall to Norman N. Hill, quitclaim deed, dated June 23, 1890, filed July 2, 1890, Rec. 39, p. 465."

Further proceedings on this application led to the disclosure of the record of the deed to Leander J. Marshall. To this Mr. Hill answered that the patent of June 6 1836, under private land grant survey No. 870 to Joseph Girrard, Jr., had divested the title from the United States, so that the patent of August 13, 1872, was void, from which it followed that the alleged transfer by him to Leander J. Marshall was void and that it was also void for the reason that it was obtained covertly and by fraud, and was intended to be and believed to be to Charles R. Marshall, who afterward conveyed to him. May 23, 1896, the department ordered notice to Leander J. Marshall, which was afterward given, and the matter proceeded until it was finally determined by the Commissioner of the General Land Office February 7, 1898, in a decision containing the following paragraph:

"It is true that there is no evidence of service of notice on the Marshalls of the motion for review now pending, as is required by rule of practice 76; but there are no adverse parties before this office. The Marshalls all claim under Hill's entry, and the conflict of interest between Hill and the Marshalls this office has no jurisdiction to determine. They may have conflicting interests; but, if so, it will be for another tribunal to decide. Nor did the Marshalls come into this case as adverse parties, under rule 102. They have asked nothing, simply objected to this office correcting its own error, when, so long as the title to the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ remains in the government, neither the Marshalls nor Hill can enforce whatever rights they may have."

Hill testified that he knew nothing of his own conveyance to Leander J. Marshall in 1874, but that he supposed the only conveyance he had executed had been an undivided one-half to Charles R. Marshall, while Charles R. Marshall testified, at the time of the date of this deed, he knew Mr. Hill personally and well. He was a justice of the peace in Richland county, Ohio, while Hill lived in Plymouth, Ohio, a part of which was in Richland county and part in Huron county; that his brother, Leander J. Marshall, made a trade with Hill to purchase the 40 acres in controversy, and gave the witness the purchase money to go over to Hill's home and pay him for the land and have the deed executed, which he did. Mr. John Rank, who had gone to Plymouth with him in a buggy, and is now dead, and Mr. Emery, a citizen of Plymouth, witnessed the deed, which was signed by Mr. Hill and his wife, both of whom went with him across the street into Richland county and acknowledged it, knowing well what it contained. Mr. Hill, besides paying the taxes, exercised various other acts of ownership over the land in question; one of them being the sale of wood cut from the land in 1895, to the value of $170.40.

The petition and cross-petition of Charles R. Marshall were dismissed, and costs adjudged in favor of Hill and Lead Company, and after the overruling of motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment, the case is here by appeal.

Opinion.

[1] I. The first question that confronts us relates to the effect of the judgment in the proceeding instituted by Mr. Hill in 1905, against the Marshall heirs, to quiet his title to the 40 acres of land in controversy. That proceeding was founded upon the provisions of section 650, Revised Statutes 1899. The only service upon any of the defendants was by publication in a newspaper. None of them appeared; so that if this petition is to be given the effect of a petition for review, under section 777 of the Revised Statutes of 1899, the judgment does not stand in the way of the trial of the issues presented by it.

No statute of our state has been subjected to more or greater vicissitudes, both legislative and judicial, than that which relates to the quieting of titles. At the time of the bringing of the Hill suit, sections 647 and 650 appeared together upon the statute book. The former had stood substantially the same for many years. It contains its own provisions for issuing and serving notice of proceedings under it, and provided, in substance, that any person in possession of real property claiming a freehold, or unexpired term of not less than 10 years, might file a petition in the circuit court, setting forth his estate, describing the premises, and averring that he was credibly informed and believed that the defendant made some claim adverse to such estate, and praying for summons to show cause why such person should not bring an action to try such title; and, if so, upon the return, duly executed, of the notice as provided, the defendant should make default, or, having appeared, should disobey the lawful order of the court to bring an action to try the title, or, having brought it, should fail to prosecute it with effect, and the court be of the opinion that such person had no valid right in law or equity, it should enter a judgment that he be forever debarred and estopped from having or claiming any right or title adverse to the petitioner. This section carefully guarded the interests of the defendant, and the bringing and effective prosecution of a suit appropriate to try the title claimed by the plaintiff, against all such parties as should be necessary to a determination of the questions involved, would be a complete return to and compliance with the order and judgment of the court. This was a fair and honest law, so far as it went. It answered all the purposes of those visibly and openly in the possession of lands who desired to compel those threatening such possession to put their words into acts and measure their rights with the possessor. It gave no countenance to those being out of possession to ripen claims which had never, by any visible act, been brought to the notice of the true owners, by judicial proceedings hidden in the folds of obscure newspapers. Even as to the cases to which it applied, the courts were admonished to take care of the interest of those who might fail to receive such notice as would enable them to take care of themselves by withholding judgment until they should be of the opinion that there was no valid right, either at law or in equity, that required protection.

In 1897 the following section, known in the Revision of 1899 as 650, was enacted: "Any person claiming any title, estate or interest in real property, whether the same be legal or equitable, certain or contingent, present or in reversion, or remainder, whether in possession or not, may institute an action against any person or persons having or claiming to have any title, estate or interest in such property, whether in possession or not, to ascertain and determine the estate, title and interest of said parties, respectively, in such real estate, and to define and adjudge by its judgment or decree the title, estate and interest of the parties severally in and to such real property." This section alone does not indicate an intention to repeal section 647, in so far as that section authorizes the trying of titles and interests in land by such proceedings and against such parties as should be necessary to a full determination of the questions legitimately involved, nor remove a single safeguard with which it protected an unconscious defendant from the careless or fraudulent use of the drastic remedies it provided. Nor does the repealing section (3), providing that "all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed" (Laws 1897, p. 74), indicate any such intention. It has, however, an "emergency clause" in the following words: "This act, being remedial in its character and taking the place of statutes which failed in their object, creates an emergency within the meaning of the Constitution; therefore this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage." Id. § 5.

In Meriwether v. Love, 167 Mo. 514, 519,

67 S. W. 250, 251, this court referring to section 5, already quoted, assumed that "the lawmakers unquestionably believed that section 2092 was inconsistent with the act of 1897, and intended to repeal section 2092, and to provide a more complete and efficient and direct statutory method of determining and quieting land titles." In this connection the court said: "In Huff v. Land Co., 157 Mo. loc. cit. 69 [57 S. W. 715], it was pointed out that the act of 1897 was probably enacted in consequence of what was said in the Northcutt Case" (Northcutt v. Eager, 132 Mo. 265, 33 S. W. 1125) "about section 2092 not being broad enough to authorize the life tenant to make the remainderman, who claims under, and not adverse to, the life tenant, bring a suit to try his title." This case was followed in Hudson v. Wright, 204 Mo. 412, 423, 103 S. W. 8, and in Powell v. Crow, 204 Mo. 481, 486, 102 S. W. 1024. The act was further construed in an opinion by Valliant, P. J., by which it was held that in proceedings brought under it the court was confined to trying the issues and affording the remedies authorized by its terms. The attention of the Legislature does not seem to have been again directed to any fault or imperfection in this law until by the act of June 1, 1909 (Laws 1909, p. 343), it not only enlarged the jurisdiction in such cases, but in express terms gave the parties the right to present to the court for adjudication such questions, germane to their respective titles, as they see fit. Whether this act was in any way influenced either by the opinion of this court in Powell v. Crow, supra, or in Richard v. Coal & Mining Co., 221 Mo. 149, 173, 119 S. W. 953, while of interest as a matter of curiosity, has no bearing upon this case, which had already been tried.

[2] The question here is whether the petition of these plaintiffs should be considered from the standpoint of a petition for review under sections 777, 780, Revised Statutes 1899. These sections require (1) that it should state the existence of the facts set forth in section 777; (2) that the petition of plaintiff, upon which the judgment complained of was obtained, is untrue in some material matter; or that the defendant has, and then had, a good defense thereto, setting such defense forth, or both. That it sets out all these matters with the utmost detail, and closes with the prayer for relief prescribed by the statute, namely, the setting aside of the judgment, cannot be denied. These sections require it to be verified, and it is verified. True, it makes an additional party; but this is necessary to a complete defense. Charles R. Marshall is transferred to the other side; but this also was probably necessary to meet the exigencies of the case. The statute does not seek to control the arrangement of the parties. It names the proceeding a "petition for review," a name created by the Legislature to avoid any combination of words incumbered with a definition from the common law or equity jurisprudence of the past. It is highly remedial, and must necessarily accommodate itself to the needs and practice of every proceeding that comes within its scope.

The act under which the suit which it is sought to reopen was brought is equally silent upon this matter of pleading. It only requires that "the institution, prosecution, trial and determination of suits under the preceding section shall conform in all respects to the provisions of the 'Code of Civil Procedure' now existing and be in force in this state concerning actions affecting real estate." R. S. 1899, § 657. Under this we have held that, although it only permits the person desiring to take advantage of its provisions to "institute an action," it may be used as a defense as well. Summet v. Realty & Brokerage Co., 208 Mo. 501, 506, 514, 106 S. W. 614; Lambert v. Railroad, 212 Mo. 692, 706, 111 S. W. 550. The remedy is distinctly given, and the Code affords the means to make it applicable in the particular case. So in this case the plaintiffs have in the form of a "petition," as the statute requires, presented a complete defense to the absolute title set up in the petition of Mr. Hill to quiet his title; they have made the parties necessary to the trial of the contest to which they have been invited; they have given the notice required by section 781 of the Revised Statutes of 1899, and have tried the issue so presented. Even if section 780 contemplates that all these things should be repeated in an answer, this petition has been treated as an answer for all the purposes of the proceeding. The arrangement of the parties plaintiff and defendant is of the same inconsequence in this case as in the Summet and Lambert Cases, supra. If, under the law and evidence, the plaintiffs have made out their title, they have the right to have the judgment decreeing Mr. Hill's title to be good and valid as against them set aside, and to have such relief as they are entitled, in law or equity, to have under their petition and evidence.

[3] II. The title of Mr. Hill depends upon a patent issued directly to him March 21, 1898, which contains the following statement: "This patent is issued in lieu of one dated August 30, 1872, in which the description of the land was erroneous, the record of which has been canceled." It is not contended that there was any other consideration for its issuance than the money that was paid upon the entry made in 1872, for which the patent was issued purporting to grant the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of the same section. All the rights that he acquired by virtue of the payment of this money, and of the patent last mentioned, were transferred by him to Leander J. Marshall by the warranty deed dated June 19, 1874, which expressed a consideration of $500, and was spread upon the deed records of St. Francois county May 18, 1875. The consideration for the later patent consisted solely of rights belonging to Marshall, so that, under the well-settled principles of law applicable to such cases, Hill received and holds the legal title so granted in trust for Marshall, who became, in the manner stated, the equitable owner. Groves' Heirs v. Fulsome, 16 Mo. 543, 57 Am. Dec. 247; James v. Groff, 157 Mo. 402, 57 S. W. 1081; Davis v. Filer, 40 Mich. 310; Sensenderfer v. Kemp, 83 Mo. 581; Widdicombe v. Childers, 84 Mo. 382.

The plaintiffs, his representatives in title, are therefore entitled to the relief asked to the extent of their present interests, unless it has been shown that they have in some way forfeited their right to such relief.

[4] III. Another question preliminary to the consideration of the real merits of the controversy relates to the application of the statute of limitations. This proceeding was, for all purposes connected with the application of that statute, begun with the filing of the petition on the 20th day of October, 1906, and there does not seem to be any doubt that during the year 1895, and again in 1896, Mr. Hill was selling timber which was being cut and taken from this land. Whether the acts done on the land in connection with this transaction constituted adverse possession as to these plaintiffs, and, if so, whether such possession was continuous up to the time this proceeding was begun, are questions which, in the view we take, are not necessary to be decided. The plaintiffs rest their claim for relief upon the theory that by the issue of the patent of March 21, 1898, the legal title to these lands, then first emanating from the government, inured in equity to them, and that the primary object of this proceeding is to ripen that equity into a legal title, and that the state statute of limitations had no bearing upon the rights of the parties until the issue of the patent which divested the title of the United States. The plaintiffs seem to be right in this contention. There is no difference between the question so stated and that involved in the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Gibson v. Chouteau, 13 Wall. 92, 20 L. Ed. 534, which has been consistently followed by this court. Smith v. McCorkle, 105 Mo. 135, 16 S. W. 602; Cummings v. Powell, 97 Mo. 524, 10 S. W. 819; Hammond v. Johnston, 93 Mo. 198, 6 S. W. 83; Buren v. Buren, 79 Mo. 538; McIlhinney v. Ficke, 61 Mo. 329. It is not necessary for us to speculate as to whether or not there may be cases in which the statute of limitations will take hold upon the right of possession emanating from the government while it retains the naked legal title. We simply say, in the language of this court, quoted from Hammond v. Johnston, supra, quoting Smith v. McCorkle, supra, that "as to the government there is no statute of limitations, and in the Gibson Case it is held that the statute leaves the right of entry upon the legal title, subsequently acquired by the patent, wholly unaffected by adverse possession; that such possession, either by the plaintiffs or defendants, will not control the legal title. This being so, we do not see how the statute can operate as a transfer of the equitable right." 105 Mo. loc. cit. 142, 16 S. W. 604. This language is peculiarly applicable to this case, in which the cause of action is dependent upon the issue of the patent.

[5] IV. Defendant Hill, proceeding upon the assumption that this is a suit to enforce the specific performance of a contract between himself and Leander J. Marshall, made in 1874, and for the reformation of the several deeds, as well as of the patent, that grew out of it, now urges that the delay of the plaintiffs in seeking a declaration of the trust resulting from the patent of 1898 is to be measured by these earlier transactions, and constitutes such laches as to preclude the relief they now seek. In this case they ignore the position of plaintiffs that their equities arise from the transfer to Leander J. Marshall, by the warranty deed of 1874, of the equities arising out of the original entry and erroneous patent. That patent needs no reformation, because it had borne its fruit—the legal title. The deed needs no reformation, because it has borne its fruit, the trust they are now seeking to enforce. If laches is to be imputed, it could find in this case no firmer foundation upon which to rest than his own failure, during the 20 years that succeeded the placing of the Marshall deed upon the records, to take notice of its existence.

[6] Even when, on February 25, 1895, the General Land Office distinctly called upon him for the abstract of title of the tract described in the first patent, he sent, instead, an abstract of the title to the land in controversy, which did not, of course, show that deed. So far as the record shows, he succeeded in keeping from the land department the fact of its execution until January 29, 1896, when one John P. Clark disclosed it. Mr. Hill then stepped from cover, and on April 29, 1896, filed a paper in which he claimed that "it was obtained covertly and by fraud." The department then ordered Mr. Marshall to be notified, and from that time on Mr. Hill fought openly for his patent, contending that the equities between himself and Marshall were for the courts to determine, and the Commissioner finally agreed with him, as we do now, and issued the patent upon that theory, stating the consideration on its face. He also found that, "so long as the title to the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ remains in the government, neither the Marshalls nor Hill can enforce whatever right they may have."

[7, 8] Our Code of Civil Procedure permits but one form of action for the enforcement or protection of private rights and the redress and prevention of private wrongs, and our statute of limitations applies alike to all, whether they were before the enactment of the Code called legal or equitable. These statutes establish the only limitation, founded upon time alone, of the right to bring an action of either variety. In the words of Judge Norton in Blackford v. Construction Co., 132 Mo. App. 157, 164, 112 S. W. 287, 290: "It is certain that mere lapse of time alone is entirely without influence in those cases, where the statute of limitations does not obtain." It is, however, an element, and an important one, in the defense of laches, which still remains a creation of equity designed to meet those cases in which the duty to move promptly in the assertion of a right arises out of the corresponding right of the adverse party to be protected from some injury that would result from delay. These respective rights growing out of the adverse interests of the parties, are often carefully weighed, and the administration of the doctrine of laches thus often becomes one of the most difficult and delicate branches of equity jurisprudence. All definitions of the doctrine adapted to our system of practice contain, in some form, statements of this general idea. In Spurlock v. Sproule, 72 Mo. 503, 511, this court said: "In cases where the relief asked may or may not be granted in the discretion of the chancellor and where a remedy exists at law, the aid of the court may be refused, and the party remitted to his action at law, on the sole ground of laches. But in cases where a party comes before the court with a clear right entitling him to the relief, there being no remedy at law, something more than mere delay must be shown before the relief asked can be refused, such as that the party has slept upon his rights till the property sought to be regained has been enhanced in value by improvements made, or that some other matter has intervened which would give to the party who had thus lain idle an unconscientious advantage over the other party, if the relief asked were granted him."

There is nothing in this that tends to support the claim that the increase in value of real property which arises from the development of its surroundings, the discovery of natural resources, or from any other cause unconnected with the labor or expenditure of others, is not, in equity as well as at law, the legitimate property of the true owner. He may let it lie idle, if he so chooses, without subjecting it to appropriation by a wrongdoer. He is only required to act when he sees another expending his own labor or means in the enhancement of its value, under such circumstances that it would be inequitable that he should remain silent and claim the result. The other party may, however, and sometimes does, stand solely upon the strength of his own claim. Asking no terms, and showing no disposition to grant any, he throws down his gauntlet and proposes to move to victory in his own way. "In such case no consideration of good faith requires that the plaintiff should open the legal warfare at the very earliest opportunity. When a hostile attitude is thus taken, the challenged party may justly be expected, and reasonably be allowed, to be wary and deliberate in choosing his time and opportunity for attack. The law does not demand the utmost exertion of diligence in repelling a hostile invasion of one's rights, deliberately undertaken with full knowledge of all the facts." Potter v. Schaffer, 209 Mo. 586, 589, 108 S. W. 60, 63, quoting from 18 A. & E. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 105.

All the parties to this transaction are, and have been, during the entire period of the growth of the controversy, nonresidents of this state. For 17 years from the time of Hill's entry they all seemed oblivious to the fact that they had any interest in the locality in question until lead was discovered in the Flat River district. Then Mr. Hill sat up and took notice. In 1872 Mr. Hill was acquainted with Mr. Austin Marshall, a brother of Leander J. Marshall and son of Sarah S. Marshall, through whom these plaintiffs claim, and he says that Austin Marshall was with him at the Ironton land office when he made this entry No. 43,783. He died June 10, 1874, and on the 19th of the same month the warranty deed was made by Hill and wife to Leander J. Marshall, who conveyed it in the following year to Mrs. Marshall. In the absence of anything in the nature of a full and frank statement explaining these transactions otherwise, it is but fair to assume that they honestly and fairly attempted to consummate the intention of the parties by putting the legal title in the person for whom the entry was made. Had the land been properly described in the first patent, the legal title would have been vested in Mrs. Marshall. That mistake having been made, the equitable title resulting from the entry was vested in her, and attached itself to the legal title when, by the correction of the mistake, it emanated from the government.

Mr. Hill seems to have moved promptly following the discovery of lead. On December 20, 1889, he paid $38.87, taxes for the 16 preceding years. He continued afterwards to pay them, much more than reimbursing himself by wood sold from the land. It is fair to assume that on June 23, 1890, he had forgotten to which Marshall he had conveyed the land in 1874, and sent his lawyer for a quitclaim deed to Charles R., who had never, up to that time, had any connection with the title. In 1894 he began proceedings to procure a correct patent. When this could no longer be concealed from the Marshalls, he inaugurated the open fight by charging that their deed had been obtained from him by fraud. Having obtained the patent, he challenged these plaintiffs to a legal contest to try the title, and, having obtained judgment, he was able to negotiate the option under which the Lead Company claims. We have gone so fully into these facts merely for the suggestion they contain that, from the time Mr. Hill became aware of the desirable quality of these lands, he assumed a hostile attitude toward those who claim under his deed of 1874, and when he had strengthened his position challenged them to the contest they are now maintaining against him. We fail to see in his conduct any evidence of confidence in or dependence upon them that would make it inequitable for them to choose their own time and opportunity to assert their rights. For having done this they cannot now be charged with laches.

[9] V. We do not impute to Mr. Hill any willful misstatement, in holding that the evidence of fraud or mistake in the procurement of the deed from himself to Leander J. Marshall is not of that clear and cogent character which would justify us in setting it aside, or in holding that it is not the deliberate, fair, and intelligent act of the parties to it. We have arrived at the same result with reference to the deed from Charles R. Marshall to Mr. Hill, dated June 23, 1890. Although we have no doubt of the truth of the statement that he has been an invalid for 28 years, and has been physically and mentally unfit during that time to transact any business as "an occupation," as he states in his testimony, the reading of that testimony has given us a high opinion of his mental accuracy, and we do not think the record discloses any reason why he should not be responsible for what seems to have been his deliberate act. Even were his testimony admissible under the circumstances, and that is a question we find it unnecessary to decide, we do not think he should be permitted upon that testimony alone to overthrow his own solemn deed, upon a statement showing nothing more than carelessness in making it. He does not claim that it was made as an accommodation, but acknowledges that he received a cash consideration. We are therefore of the opinion that this deed should stand as a release of the interest that was then vested in him as one of the heirs of Sarah S. Marshall.

[10] VI. The statute under which this review is had provides (R. S. § 779) that, "if such petition for review be not filed within three years after such final judgment is rendered, the same shall stand absolute," and (Id. § 784) that "no sale or conveyance of property for the satisfaction of any judgment, regularly made, shall be affected or prejudiced by the setting aside of any judgment on the appearance of a defendant, as hereinbefore provided, if the property shall be in the hands of innocent purchasers." In this case Mr. Hill is seised of the legal title to the lands involved in the proceeding, and his conveyance to an innocent purchaser, for value paid, would carry the title discharged of the trust these plaintiffs are trying to enforce. The judgment of Mr. Hill in his proceeding to quiet the title works no change in this situation. The provisions of section 784, quoted above, evidently intended to give stability to sales made in the execution of legal process, and thereby prevent the sacrifice of the property of litigants, are not appropriate to this proceeding, which leaves the property intact, merely declaring the ownership provisionally, by a judgment admitting further judicial inquiry before it becomes absolute.

[11] The Lead Company had constructive notice of all matters of public record in its own chain of title, including such collateral matters as these records pointed out. In this case the chain of title consists solely of the patent of 1898 and their own option. It is true the patent points out that it is made "in lieu of one dated August 30, 1872, in which the description of the land was erroneous, the record of which has been canceled." This notation does not tend to direct attention to the fact that any chain adverse to the patentee existed. Nor do we think that a purchaser from the patentee, or those claiming under him, who has had no connection with the proceedings by which the patent was obtained, is, by his purchase alone, chargeable with notice of such proceedings.

[12, 13] One may, however, have actual notice of an equitable claim affecting the legal title he is about to purchase, and in such case he completes the transaction at his own risk. He has actual notice when he knows of the existence of the adverse claim of title, or is conscious of having the means of knowledge, though he may not use them. Sensenderfer v. Kemp, 83 Mo. 581, 588, 589. In this case the vendor of the Lead Company stated in his petition to quiet his title that he was informed and believed that the Marshalls claimed to have and own an interest in the lands. This information should have attracted the attention of a prudent person, and it would have been the most natural thing in the world to have inquired of Hill what it meant, an obvious means of knowledge of which the Lead Company was conscious. Instead of doing this, it took the precaution to make the payment of the purchase price under its option depend upon a perfect title.

[14, 15] Whatever may be said of the question of notice at the time of its purchase, the fact that the purchase money was unpaid at the time formal notice of their claim was given it by the Marshalls is conclusive against its character as a purchaser in good faith for a valuable consideration without notice. Arnholz v. Hartwig, 73 Mo. 485. It has, however, done valuable work upon the land in the way of prospecting for minerals, having drilled between 9,000 and 10,000 feet for that purpose. It pleads, also, that it elected, within the time provided in its contract for that purpose, to exercise its option to purchase the land by paying $5,000 in cash, and the balance in two equal payments in one and two years, evidenced and secured as provided in the contract.

Under the circumstances we do not think it will be inequitable to permit the Lead Company to settle with the true owners of the land upon the terms of their contract with Hill. It will only be applying the same equitable principle, to a less marked extent, that was applied by us in Bucher v. Hohl, 199 Mo. 320, 97 S. W. 922, 116 Am. St. Rep. 492.

The judgment of the circuit court for St. Francois county is reversed, and the cause remanded to that court, with directions to enter its judgment in accordance with the principles herein stated, so that the legal title to the land in controversy will be vested in the parties hereto as tenants in common in the following proportions, that is to say: to plaintiff Winifred Marshall Dittmar two-fifths, to plaintiff Mrs. W. S. Marshall one-fifth, to plaintiff Adella M. Lasley one-fifth, to defendant Norman N. Hill, Jr., one-sixth, and to defendant Charles R. Marshall one-thirtieth, subject, however, to the right of the defendant Doe Run Lead Company, at any time within 30 days from the date of said decree, to purchase said land for the sum, and upon the terms, stated in the contract or option executed by defendant Hill and wife February 21, 1906, by depositing the cash and securities representing the purchase price provided in said contract with the clerk of said circuit court, to be delivered to the parties to whom said title is so adjudged, and upon such payment and deposit, within the time so specified, the legal title shall pass to and vest in said Doe Run Lead Company. The costs of this suit to be adjudged against the defendants Hill and Doe Run Lead Company.

BLAIR, C., concurs.

W. D. Isenberg, H. J. Cantwell, and Andrew C. Ketring, all of St. Louis, for appellants. William Henry White, of Washington, D. C., for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Since the transfer of this cause to the court in banc, and after submission, the parties, both appellants and respondents, have filed a stipulation as follows:

"It is stipulated and agreed between counsel for appellants and counsel for respondents that whereas, all of the interest of the parties plaintiff and Charles R. Marshall, defendant, have prior to the decree in Division No. 1 of this court been transferred by deed to Winifred Marshall Jackson (formerly Winifred Marshall Dittmar, she having married Jackson since the trial below), the decree may be amended so as to vest the interest to the land in controversy herein in Winifred Marshall Jackson, five-sixths, and Norman N. Hill, Jr., one-sixth, and that all of said interests shall vest in the Doe Run Lead

Company upon the payment by said Doe Run Lead Company of fifteen thousand dollars ($15,000.00), twenty-five hundred dollars ($2,500.00) of which to be paid to Norman N. Hill, Jr., and twelve thousand five hundred dollars ($12,500.00) to Winifred Marshall Jackson, or to their respective attorneys of record; and

"Whereas, the Doe Run Lead Company has already deposited with the clerk of the circuit court of St. Francois county the sum of fifteen thousand dollars ($15,000.00) in cash:

"It is stipulated and agreed between counsel that a decree may be entered for the payment of the same to the attorneys of record for Winifred Marshall Jackson and Norman N. Hill, Jr., respectively, in above proportions, and that all the title and interest of the parties to this suit in the land in controversy shall, upon said payment, be vested in the Doe Run Lead Company. The costs of the suit to be adjudged against the Doe Run Lead Company."

Whereupon it is ordered and adjudged by the court, sitting in banc as aforesaid, that the decree heretofore made and entered in Division No. 1 be so changed and modified that the said cause be and it is remanded to the circuit court for St. Francois county, with directions to enter a final decree therein in all respects in accordance with the terms of said stipulation, and that the mandate of this court in accordance herewith issue immediately.

The opinion of BROWN, C., in Division No. 1 is adopted as the opinion of the court in banc, with the modification suggested by WOODSON, J., in a concurring opinion filed; but our direction as to the entry of the decree in the circuit court is founded upon the stipulation.

WOODSON, J. I concur fully to everything contained in this opinion, except what is said in regard to the right of the Doe Run Lead Company to purchase the land in controversy from the appellants for the sum and upon the conditions stated in the optional contract to purchase the same by it from respondent, without the appellants' wish voluntarily to so do, and as to that I dissent.

STATE v. LOVAN.

(Supreme Court of Missouri. Division No. 2.
Nov. 13, 1912.)

1. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 34*)—INFORMATION—FORM—RELiance ON PRETENSE.

Rev. St. 1909, § 4765, provides that every person who, with intent to cheat and defraud, shall obtain or attempt to obtain from any other person or persons any money, property, or other valuable thing whatever, by means or by use of any trick or deception, or false and fraudulent representation, or statement or pretense, etc., shall be deemed guilty of a felony. An information charged a person with making false and fraudulent statements in regard to the ownership of real estate, and that another relying thereon and being deceived thereby transferred certain shares of stock to the maker of the representation, setting forth all the facts of the transaction, but only in its last paragraph charged the obtaining of the stock by means or by use of the false pretense. Held that, while such charge should appear in the body of the information, as the information as a whole clearly advises the defendant of the offense with which he is charged, and clearly sets forth the facts upon which the charge is based, it is sufficient in spite of the technical objection.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 761*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—INVADING PROVINCE OF JURY.

In a prosecution for obtaining property by false pretenses by inducing an exchange of shares of stock for a half interest in an investment company, to which the defendant represented that he would convey unincumbered realty, when such realty as described was in reality incumbered, the court's instruction required the jury to find that the defendant made the representations aforesaid with intent to cheat and defraud, and concluded, "and if the jury further find that, whereas in truth and in fact," the representations made were not true, and they should find that the defendant made them with knowledge that they were not, and with the intent to defraud, they should find him guilty as charged. Held that, while the word "whereas" in the negative part of the instruction is awkward and meaningless, the use of the words "if the jury shall further find that," before it, is sufficient to remove from the instruction the objection of invasion of the jury's province.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1731, 1738, 1754-1764, 1771; Dec. Dig. § 761.*]

3. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 38*)—EVIDENCE—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY—DEEDS—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, in a prosecution for obtaining shares of stock by false pretenses as to the condition of the title to certain property, the information described certain land in a particular county in two parcels, containing in all 280 acres, which was shown in the contract simply as "280 acres," two deeds, which were testified to have been handed the prosecuting witness upon his request for a description of the 280 acres mentioned in the contract, were properly admitted with such testimony to establish the identity of the 280 acres in question.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Cent. Dig. §§ 50-53; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

4. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 49*)—EVIDENCE—FAILURE OF PROOF.

And where the descriptions in such deeds, taken together, corresponded to the description of the entire 280 acres in the information, there was no failure of proof of the subject-matter of the representation in regard thereto, alleged in the information.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Cent. Dig. § 62; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

5. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 42*)—EVIDENCE—INTENT.

Where, in a prosecution for fraudulent representations as to the ownership of property inducing a transfer of shares of stock to the defendant, the state's testimony developed the fact that at the time of the making of such alleged representations land represented to be unincumbered was incumbered by two deeds of trust, testimony of the defendant which would tend to show that he had an arrangement with the person who held the deeds of trust as collateral for a loan, whereby he could obtain a surrender of such deeds at any time, was improperly refused, as, if the defendant had pledged the mortgages, it must be assumed that he owned them; and if he could recover them at any time the fact would be material on the question of intent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Cent. Dig. § 56; Dec. Dig. § 42.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—EVIDENCE OF OTHER TRANSACTIONS—EFFECT OF WITHDRAWAL.

In a prosecution for obtaining property by false pretenses, the court improperly permitted the prosecutor to include in his statement matter in regard to another transaction involving the defendant, and of a fraudulent character, and the admission of evidence in respect thereto, over the defendant's objection, even though it afterward ruled the evidence incompetent and withdrew it from the jury's consideration, as its prejudicial effect could not be removed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3088, 3137-3143; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

7. EVIDENCE (§ 434*)—WRITTEN INSTRUMENT—PAROL PROOF AS TO FRAUD.

The rule applied in civil actions upon written contracts, that prior conversations and oral agreements are merged in the writing, is inapplicable in a prosecution for fraudulent representations inducing the contract, as the fraud is not merged in the writing, and may be proved by parol.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2005-2020; Dec. Dig. § 434.*]

Appeal from Criminal Court, Jackson County; E. E. Porterfield, Judge. |

Ernest Lovan was convicted of obtaining property by false pretenses, and appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Defendant was convicted in the criminal court of Jackson county on an information charging him with the crime of obtaining property by false pretenses, and sentenced to two years in the penitentiary. The information charges that defendant, with intent to defraud one George F. Hannay, did falsely, etc., represent to said Hannay that he (the defendant) and the Ernest Lovan Investment Company, owned in fee simple, and free and clear of all incumbrances, several parcels of real estate, described in detail in the information, and that said Hannay was the owner of certain capital in certain corporations, set out in detail. The information then proceeds as follows:

"That said Lovan then and there offered and proposed to him, the said Geo. F. Hannay, that he, the said Lovan, would then and there trade, transfer, and convey to him, the said George F. Hannay, one-half of the capital stock of said Ernest Lovan Investment Company, a corporation as aforesaid, and would then and there trade, transfer, and by good and sufficient warranty deed convey to the said Ernest Lovan Investment Company, one-half of the real estate above described, in exchange for the said shares of stock of Palace Stable Company, a corporation as aforesaid, and said shares of stock in Fashion Stable Company, a corporation as aforesaid, owned by said Hannay, as aforesaid:

that said Hannay, believing the said Ernest Lovan and the Ernest Lovan Investment Company to be the owners of said real estate, described as aforesaid, and believing the said false and fraudulent statements of said Lovan in that behalf, made as aforesaid, to be true, and relying thereon and being deceived thereby, was induced by reason thereof to assign, convey, transfer, and deliver, and did then and there assign, convey, transfer, and deliver, to the said Lovan all of said shares of stock in said Palace Stable Company and the said Fashion Stable Company as above set forth and described, by him, the said Hannay, owned as aforesaid, in exchange for one-half of the capital stock of said Ernest Lovan Investment Company, and one-half of interest in the real estate above mentioned and described, which he, the said Ernest Lovan, did then and there pretend to assign and convey to him, the said George F. Hannay; whereas, in truth and in fact, neither the said Ernest Lovan nor the Ernest Lovan Investment Company was then and there the owner of, nor had they, or either of them, any title or claim whatsoever to the said real estate, or any part thereof, as hereinbefore described and referred to as tracts 1, 2, 3, 4, and 6, except that said Ernest Lovan was lessee in a lease, for a period of ninety-nine (99) years, covering the land mentioned and described in tract 1; and whereas, in truth and in fact, the said Ernest Lovan and the said Ernest Lovan Investment Company, or either of them, was not then and there the owners of the lands in Morgan county, Missouri, hereinbefore mentioned and described, referred to and designated as tract No. 5, free and clear of all incumbrances whatsoever, but the said land and every part thereof was then and there incumbered with a valid and subsisting mortgage lien of fourteen hundred ($1,400) dollars, by virtue of two deeds of trust, both dated July 3, 1909, executed by J. E. Snodgrass to S. E. Berry, to secure the payment of two promissory notes of even date for six hundred ($600) dollars and eight hundred ($800) dollars, respectively, the former due nine months after its date, the latter due one year after its date, both notes drawing interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, said mortgages being of record in the office of the recorder of deeds in Morgan county, Missouri, in Book 21, page 396, all of which he, the said Ernest Lovan then and there well knew. And so the prosecuting attorney says, upon his oath aforesaid, that he, the said Ernest Lovan, by means of the said deception and false and fraudulent statements and pretenses, so made as aforesaid, then and there unlawfully, knowingly, and fraudulently and feloniously did obtain of and from him, the said George F. Hannay, the shares of the capital stock of the Palace Stable Company and the said shares of the capital stock of Fashion Stable Company, as above described, and of the aggregate value of $17,714.28, against the peace and dignity of the state."

The state introduced in evidence the following written contract:

"This contract and agreement entered into this 9th day of April, 1910, by and between Ernest Lovan, of Kansas City, Missouri, hereinafter called party of the first part and G. F. Hannay, of Kansas City, Missouri, hereinafter called the party of the second part, witnesseth:

"That whereas, the party of the first part is now engaged in the general real estate and brokerage business, having offices at 517-521 Finance Building, Kansas City, Missouri; and whereas it is his intention to enlarge his business, giving more attention to the handling of farms and lands, and desiring to associate with him the party of the second part, and with this end and purpose in view, the party of the first part binds himself and guarantees to do as follows:

"First. That he will transfer to party of the second part one-half ($\frac{1}{2}$) of the stock of the Ernest Lovan Investment Company, an incorporation under the laws of Missouri.

"Second. That party of the first part will convey to said investment company for the use and benefit of said company the real estate and personal property hereinafter described, guaranteeing that each and every tract of land specified is free and clear of all incumbrances, save and except such incumbrances as may be noted at this time, and that the valuation placed by the party of the first part against each separate tract, piece or parcel of land is a fair and just cash valuation, and that it will and must net the company at least a profit of five thousand dollars ($5,000) within a reasonable time.

"Third. The real estate above described is subject to change by agreement of the parties hereto; that is to say, that if the party of the second part desires other real estate owned by the party of the first part substituted for any property listed herein, then the same is to become an asset of the Ernest Lovan Investment Company, and such substitution will be made by the party of the first part. One of the main features and points to this agreement on the part of the party of the first part is that the property shown and described belonging at this time to the Ernest Lovan Investment Company must and shall net to said company within a reasonable time at least twenty-five thousand dollars ($25,000) which will be a profit of (25) per cent. on twenty thousand dollars ($20,000).

"Fourth. The party of the first part agrees to accept from the party of the second part, for the interest as herein stipulated, the sum of ten thousand dollars ($10,000), and that he will accept for the ten thousand dollars ($10,000) the interest of said party of the second part in the Palace Stable Company and the Fashion Stable Company. The transfer of the interest of the party of the second part in this company is distinctly understood to be without any guaranty on his part as to the value of such interests.

"Fifth. The party of the first part agrees to loan the Ernest Lovan Investment Company immediately one thousand dollars ($1,000), same to be placed in the bank to the credit of the company. He further agrees to loan them an additional one thousand dollars ($1,000) if needed at any time within the next six months (6), to insure the party of the second part his salary of two hundred dollars ($200) per month. Conveyances of any kind for property belonging to said investment company, whether real or personal, and all checks drawn on the bank, are to be signed by the president and secretary in their official capacity. Ernest Lovan, party of the first part, is to be president, and C. F. Hannay, party of the second part, is to be secretary and treasurer.

"Sixth. The party of the second part is to give particular attention to land and farm sales, and it is understood that he will devote such time as may be necessary to the examination of such property.

"Seventh. In the event of the dissatisfaction on the part of either party, it is understood that the party of the first part is to buy for cash the interest of the party of the second part, and pay him therefor within three months from written notice the actual value at the time of sale, which shall not be less than the amount of the original investment, ten thousand dollars ($10,000). It is understood that if withdrawals have been made from the business in excess of salaries that the same is to be taken into consideration and applied against the original investment and profits.

"Eighth. Both parties hereto are to receive a salary of two hundred dollars ($200) per month. This may be changed at any time by mutual consent.

"Ninth. It is understood and agreed that the property of the Ernest Lovan Investment Company, real and personal, is to secure the carrying out of this contract according to the legal tenor and effect, and further understood that the party of the second part may if he so elect, sell and assign his stock either with or without this contract and agreement, provided he has first given notice to the party of the first part that he wishes to sell in accordance with section seven (7) of this contract.

"To all of which we bind ourselves, our heirs, executors and administrators forever Ernest Lovan.
"G. F. Hannay."

All of the parcels of real estate were eliminated from the case, save the 280 acre in Morgan county, Mo. The case went to the jury upon the representations concerning this one parcel. Testimony was given to the state tending to sustain the allegation in the information. The evidence for the state showed that at the time when the alleged representations were made the Morgan county land was incumbered by two deeds of trust. The defendant testified that he told Hannay about these incumbrances and told him, further, that he had arranged to clear them from the land. Hannay testified that defendant specifically told him, before the trade was made, and before the contract above set forth was signed, that this land was clear and free from incumbrances. Further facts necessary to an understanding of the questions discussed herein will be found in the opinion.

Cooper & Wilson, Wofford & Kimbrell, and Moore & Creel, all of Kansas City, for appellant. Elliott W. Major, Atty. Gen., and John M. Atkinson, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

FERRISS, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] 1. It is claimed that the information is bad, under section 4565, R. S. 1909, because of the absence of the word "designedly," which is an essential element of the offense defined by the statute. This court has held that an information omitting the word "designedly" is bad under said section. State v. Pickett, 174 Mo. 663, 74 S. W. 844. This holding is somewhat doubtfully recognized in State v. Martin, 226 Mo. loc. cit. 547, 126 S. W. 442. We need not re-examine the question, as we consider the information good, under section 4765, R. S. 1909.

Defendant contends that the information is bad under section 4765, and sets out his contentions thus in his brief:

"(3) The information is bad, under section 4765, Revised Statutes of Missouri 1909, for the reason that it does not charge that Hannay, "by means or by use of" the alleged misrepresentations, trick, or deception, was induced to assign, convey, transfer, and deliver, and did then and there assign, convey, transfer, and deliver, to Lovan all of said shares of stock.

"(4) The information is bad, under section 4765, Revised statutes of Missouri 1909, for the reason that the alleged trick, deception, or false and fraudulent representations are not set forth in the information with particularity, so that the accused might be informed sufficiently of the cause and nature of the accusation.

"(5) The information is bad, for the reason that it does not charge that said Lovan falsely, fraudulently, and feloniously offered and proposed to him, the said Hannay, that he, the said Lovan, would then and there trade, transfer, and convey to him, the said Hannay, one-half of the capital stock of the Lovan Investment Company, and falsely, fraudulently, and feloniously offered and proposed that said Lovan would then and there trade, transfer, and convey to Hannay one-half of the real estate described."

There is, we think, no merit in the contentions embraced in the above fourth and fifth assignments. The other assignment, No. 3, raises a serious question of pleading. There is authority for the position taken that the information is technically defective, according to approved precedents, because in the charging part there is no charge that the defendant obtained the stock from Hannay by means or by use of the false pretense; in other words, it does not charge the specific offense defined by the statute. This charge is found only in the last paragraph of the information. Upon precedent, it should appear in the body of the information, immediately after the allegation that Hannay, believing said representations, etc., was induced thereby, and did, convey, etc. Approved forms in this regard may be found in State v. Martin, supra; State v. Donaldson, 148 S. W. 79; Wharton, Prec. of Indict. vol. 1, form No. 529 et seq. In Commonwealth v. Dean, 110 Mass. 64, an indictment similar in form to the one under discussion was held bad. The court, speaking of the concluding statement, says: "It is a statement of a legal conclusion from the facts charged. The conclusion does not follow the premises. The only allegation of intent to defraud is made argumentatively and as a legal inference from facts stated, and the inference is unsound." The contention of defendant also finds support in State v. Pickett, supra. The point, however, was not controlling in the latter case. The main objection was the failure to describe the false pretense, and it was upon that ground that the information was held defective.

We are not disposed to encourage purely technical objections, based upon ancient forms and precedents. With due respect for precedent and rule, we think that when an information, taken as a whole, clearly advises the defendant that he is charged with an offense as defined by the statute, and clearly sets forth the facts on which the charge is based, it is sufficient. Measured by this rule, the information is good. We do not agree with the reasoning of the Massachusetts court, above set forth. A charge of felonious intent is necessarily a deduction or inference from the alleged facts. The charge in the final paragraph of the information sufficiently charges the intent, and appropriately refers to the previous allegations of fact upon which the inference naturally arises.

[2] 2. The defendant makes the following objection to instruction No. 1, given by the court: "Instruction No. 1 is erroneous, for the reason that it assumes and directs the jury that Ernest Lovan and the Ernest Lovan Investment Company were not the owners of the real estate described, assumes and directs the jury that said real estate was not free and clear of incumbrances, assumes and directs the jury that Ernest Lovan knew that said real estate was not free and clear, and assumes and directs the jury that Lovan knew it was mortgaged."

Said instruction is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that if they find and believe from the evidence that at the county of Jackson and state of Missouri, at any time within three years next before the 29th day of October, 1910, the date of the filing of the information in this case, that the defendant, Ernest Lovan, with intent unlawfully and feloniously to cheat and defraud one George F. Hannay, did falsely, fraudulently, and feloniously represent and pretend to the said George F. Hannay that he, the said Ernest Lovan and the Ernest Lovan Investment Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of Missouri, were then and there the owners in fee simple, free and clear of all incumbrances whatsoever, of the real estate set out and described in the information as lying and being in Morgan county, Missouri, and that the said George F. Hannay was then and there the lawful owner of one hundred and twenty-seven and two-sevenths ($127\frac{2}{7}$) shares of the capital stock of the Palace Stable Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of Missouri, and engaged in Kansas City, in said state, and that said shares of stock were at said time of the value of \$30 or more, and of one hundred and sixty (160) shares of the capital stock of the Fashion Stable Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Missouri, and engaged in Kansas City, in said state, which said shares of stock were at said time of the value of \$30 or more, and that the said Ernest Lovan then and there offered and proposed to him, the said George F. Hannay, that he, the said Ernest Lovan, would then and there trade, transfer, and convey to him, the said George F. Hannay, one-half of the capital stock of the said Ernest Lovan Investment Company, a corporation as aforesaid, and would then and there trade, transfer, and, by good and sufficient warranty deed, convey to the said Ernest Lovan Investment Company one-half of the real estate above described in exchange for the said shares of stock of Palace Stable Company, a corporation as aforesaid, and the said shares of stock of the Fashion Stable Company, owned by said Hannay as aforesaid, and that the said George F. Hannay, believing the said Ernest Lovan and the Ernest Lovan Investment Company to be the owners of said real estate described as aforesaid, and believing the said statements of said Lovan in that behalf, made as aforesaid, to be true, and relying thereon and being deceived thereby, was induced by reason thereof to assign, convey, transfer, and deliver to the said Ernest Lovan all of the said shares of stock in the said Palace Stable Company and the said Fashion Stable Company, as above set forth and described, by him, the said George F. Hannay, owned as aforesaid, in exchange for one-half of the capital stock of the said Ernest Lovan Investment Company, which he, the said Ernest Lovan, did then and there pretend to assign and convey to him, the said George F. Hannay; and if the jury further find that whereas, in truth and in fact, neither the said Ernest Lovan nor the said Ernest Lovan Investment Company was then and there the owner of the said real estate, as hereinbefore described, free and clear of incumbrances; and if the jury shall further find that whereas, in truth and in fact, the said Ernest Lovan and the Ernest Lovan Investment Company, or either of them, was not then and there the owner of the lands in Morgan county, Missouri, hereinbefore mentioned and described, free and clear of all incumbrances whatsoever, but that the said land, and every part thereof, was then and there incumbered with a valid and subsisting mortgage lien of fourteen hundred (\$1,400.00) dollars, by virtue of two deeds of trust, both dated July 3, 1909, executed by J. E. Snodgrass to J. E. Berry to secure the payment of two promissory notes of even date for six hundred (\$600.00) dollars and eight hundred (\$800.00) dollars, respectively, the former due in nine months after its date, the latter due one year after its date, both notes drawing interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, said mortgages being of record in the office of the recorder of deeds of Morgan county, Missouri, in Book 21, page 396, all of which he, the said Ernest Lovan, then and there well knew; and if the jury further find and believe from the evidence that the said Ernest Lovan, by means of the said deception and false and fraudulent statements and pretenses, if any, so made as aforesaid, then and there unlawfully, knowingly, and fraudulently and feloniously did obtain of and from him, the said George F. Hannay, the said shares of the capital stock of the Palace Stable Company and the said shares of the capital stock of the Fashion Stable Company, as above described, and the said property was of the value of \$30 or more—then you will find the defendant guilty as shown in the information, and assess his punishment at imprisonment in the state penitentiary for a term of not less than two years, and not more than five years."

The use of the word "whereas" in the negative part of this instruction is awkward and meaningless. Still, by using before it the words "if the jury shall further find that," the defect pointed out by this court in State v. Steele, 226 Mo. 583, 126 S. W. 406, cited by defendant, is cured.

[3,4] Defendant offered, and was refused, an instruction directing the jury to acquit, on the theory that there was a failure of proof. The information describes the land in Morgan county as follows: "The west half of southeast quarter and southeast quarter of northeast quarter and the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter, all in section 10, township 40, range 19, containing 160 acres; and the east one-half of the northeast quarter of section 15, and the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 10, township 40, range 19, containing 120 acres, all in Morgan county, Missouri"—making in all 280 acres.

Hannay testified that defendant told him that he owned 280 acres in Morgan county, Mo., free and clear of incumbrances, and gave him a list of the lands owned by him, all of which lands he said were clear and free of incumbrances, except those designated otherwise in the list; and that he copied this list into the contract read in evidence. In that contract appears this item in the list of lands: "280 acres, Morgan county, Missouri, $3,500." Hannay further produced and put in evidence two deeds, one for 160 acres and one for 120 acres, in Morgan county, Mo. The description in the two deeds, taken together, corresponds to the description in the information. Hannay testified that defendant handed him these two deeds, in response to his request for a description of the 280 acres mentioned in the list in the aforesaid contract, and told him that they covered that property. All this testimony was strenuously objected to as not sustaining the description of the property in the information, and also because these deeds were handed to Hannay by defendant after the transaction complained of was completed. The deeds were admitted for the sole purpose of establishing a description of the 280 acres. We think the court committed no error in overruling the objections, and consequently no error in refusing the instruction offered by defendant. The introduction in evidence of the two deeds and the testimony therewith tended to establish the identity of the 280 acres mentioned in the contract, and the subject of the alleged rep-representations, with the land described in the information.

[5] 3. The testimony for the state developed the fact that at the time when the alleged representations were made by defendant concerning the Morgan county land, the same was incumbered by two deeds of trust of several hundred dollars each. Defendant testified that he told Hannay of the existence of these two incumbrances, and told him, further, that he had an arrangement with the holder of them, Mr. J. J. Swofford, by which he could get them at any time and clear them. Mr. Swofford testified that he held the two deeds of trust on this Morgan county land, and that they had been put up with him by defendant as collateral for a loan. Defendant's counsel asked Swofford, in substance, whether he had a conversation with defendant with reference to surrendering these notes. Objection by the state was sustained. Defendant urges that this ruling was error materially affecting his rights. The state contends that defendant has no standing to urge this assignment, because he made no formal offer to show such arrangement to take up the notes as defendant claimed; and, further, that, even if there had been such an arrangement, it would be immaterial. The defendant's counsel sufficiently indicated their purpose, and the court so understood it. The ruling of the court was put upon the ground that such arrangement was immaterial, inasmuch as it had not been carried out. We think the objection to this line of inquiry should have been overruled. If an arrangement existed by which defendant could at any time clear the lien of these deeds of trust, that fact would be material upon the question of intent. Defendant had testified, without objection by the state, that he had told Hannay that he had an arrangement with Swofford by which he could at any time get these notes and deeds of trust. We think testimony upon this point from Swofford would be competent in corroboration of the testimony of defendant. If defendant pledged these mortgages to Swofford, it is fair to assume that he owned them. Suppose he had not pledged them, but was holding them as owner—it is conceded that he had title to the land—and had said, under such conditions, that the land was clear of incumbrances, it would hardly be claimed that such facts could not be shown upon the question of criminal intent. Yet, if he had an agreement by which he could certainly clear the land of these mortgages, although they were hypothecated, and intended so to do, the effect would be practically the same, so far as the facts related to a criminal intent. The ruling of the court was prejudicial error, and must result in a reversal of the judgment.

[6] 4. In his opening statement the prosecutor detailed to the jury certain facts which he proposed to prove, concerning another transaction involving defendant, and of a fraudulent nature. Objections by defendant were overruled. A witness was permitted to testify to the facts of this transaction, against defendant's objection. After the testimony was in, the court ruled it incompetent, and withdrew it, by verbal direction, from the jury. The unfairness to defendant of such proceeding is obvious. The evidence was damaging to the character of the defendant. The court, by this ruling and direction, withdrew it from the jury in form; but was it within the court's power to withdraw it from their consideration in fact? It is easy to believe that a man who has done wrong once will do wrong again. The converse of this is recognized by the law, when it permits proof of good character to be given in evidence in favor of a defendant. Out of consideration for the defendant, our law, whether wisely or not, refuses to permit the state, in making out its case, to give evidence of bad character, or of former crimes committed by the defendant; yet knowledge of bad character and former offenses is exceedingly persuasive to believe in the truth of the present charge. It is practically impossible for a man sitting in judgment to exclude from the final make-up of his mind facts which have lodged there, even if the court gravely tells him that such facts should not have been disclosed, and tells him, further, not to consider them. The court does not tell him that such statements are not true. The objections by counsel for defendant probably convince him that they are true. He may believe that the witness has testified truthfully to facts which the court tells him he should not consider. So that to the juror it must appear that he is directed to exclude from consideration the truth, and a truth of a most convincing character. He is unable to obey this direction if he would. Hence, so long as this rule of exclusion is the law, it is incumbent upon the court to see to it that such evidence does not get before the jury. We have suggested what we regard as the proper course in such case in State v. Hyde, 234 Mo. 200, 136 S. W. 316. In the case at bar it would have been a simple matter, when the objection was first made to the opening statement, to send the jury out, get a full statement from the prosecutor, and rule on the question. Whether a case should be reversed where this is the only error committed, we need not decide, as the ruling finally made by the trial court will, no doubt, control the matter if it comes up on a retrial.

[7] 5. It is finally urged that the contract read in evidence does not sustain the charge in the information. It was argued that the written contract does no more than bind the defendant to a guaranty of title, and does not amount to an assertion of present clear title. If the case depended solely upon the written contract, this point might be worthy of serious consideration; but the prosecuting witness swears that the defendant assured him verbally, before the written contract was drawn, that the land was unincumbered. The rule applied in civil cases in actions upon written contracts, namely, that prior conversations and oral agreements are merged in the writing, can have no application here. Fraud is not merged in a written contract. Gooch v. Conner, 8 Mo. 391. There is no question here as to the contract between the parties, or that the writing does not truly state it. Where the written contract itself was brought about by fraud, proof of that fraud may be in parol. When the parol testimony was offered, defendant did not object, presumably because counsel saw no grounds for objection. In our judgment, none existed.

Because of the error committed in ruling out the testimony of witness Swofford, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded.

STATE ex rel. COLEMAN, County Treasurer,
v. BLAIR et al.

(Supreme Court of Missouri. July 2, 1912.
Rehearing Denied Nov. 14, 1912.)

1. DRAINS (§ 14*)—ORGANIZATION OF DISTRICTS—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

The legality of the organization of a drainage district cannot be collaterally attacked in an action to collect drainage taxes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. §§ 5, 6; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

2. DRAINS (§ 14*)—INCORPORATION OF DISTRICT—NOTICE TO OWNERS.

Rev. St. 1909, § 5587, providing a notice to landowners of the application to incorporate a drainage district shall be published in four issues of some weekly paper, the last insertion to be before the day set for hearing, does not require the last publication of a notice to be on the last day before the day set for hearing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. §§ 5, 6; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 290*)—DRAINS (§ 76*)—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—HEARING IN DRAINAGE PROCEEDINGS—TIME.

Rev. St. 1909, § 5587, requires notice to landowners of an application to incorporate a drainage district to be published in four issues of a weekly paper; the last insertion to be before the day set for hearing. The hearing of objections by landowners of assessment of benefits was set for March 20, 1906, and notice of hearing was published on February 16th, March 2d, 9th, and 16th. A certain landowner resided in the state of New Jersey, and the time required to travel from New Jersey to Bates county, Mo., where the land is situated, was 36 hours. The clerk or judge of the county court knew where such defendant lived. Held, that it could not be said that the notice required was not notice at all until its publication the fourth time, or that the publication of the notice was for so short a time as to constitute the taking of the property without due process of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 871-875; Dec. Dig. § 290;* Drains, Cent. Dig. §§ 76-81; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

4. NOTICE (§ 11*)—SUFFICIENCY OF PUBLICATION.

As a rule, when the law requires a notice to be published for a certain number of days before legal proceedings are had, it is sufficient if the last publication occur before such proceedings are had.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Notice, Cent. Dig. §§ 25-29; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

5. COURTS (§ 93*)—RULE OF DECISION.

The Supreme Court is not bound to follow its prior decisions if they be erroneous, though it usually follows them when to do otherwise would disturb a large number of titles.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 336-339; Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

6. DRAINS (§ 76*)—ESTABLISHMENT—NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNERS.

Rev. St. 1909, § 5584, provides for the appointment of a surveyor and three viewers to survey and estimate the expense of draining lands and assess the benefits, and that the viewers shall state in their report the name of the owners of each tract "so far as they are by diligent effort able to ascertain the same," and section 5587 provides that the clerk shall fix a time for hearing objections to the assessment of benefits, and thereupon issue a notice directed by name to every person returned by the engineer and viewers as the owner of every lot affected, and issue like notice by name to all persons "whom it may in any manner be ascertained" own any interest in the land, as well as notice generally to all persons owning such lands, without mentioning their names. Held, that the statutes do not require the viewers to go to the record of deeds to ascertain who owns the lands against which they have assessed benefits.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. §§ 76-81; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

7. DRAINS (§ 76*)—COLLECTION OF ASSESSMENTS—SUFFICIENCY OF NOTICE.

Since the drainage law does not require the same kind of notice as in ordinary suits to collect back taxes, the sufficiency of the notice of hearing of objections to the assessment of benefits in drainage proceedings must be governed by the provisions of the drainage law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. §§ 76-81; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

8. STATUTES (§ 227*)—CONSTRUCTION—MANDATORY STATUTES—"MAY."

The word "may," when used in a statute, is sometimes construed as mandatory, but more frequently as directory.

9. DRAINS (§ 76*)—ESTABLISHMENT OF DISTRICT—PUBLICATION OF NOTICE.

The fact that an order of the county court, directing notice of the assessment of drainage benefits, directed the clerk to insert the notice in the "Western Enterprise," when it was in fact inserted in the "Rich Hill Enterprise," was not a fatal variance so as to invalidate the notice, where the evidence showed that there was only one paper in the city, which was sometimes designated by the one name and sometimes by the other.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. §§ 76-81; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

10. DRAINS (§ 76*)—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 290*)—NOTICE—PERSONS ENTITLED.

A notice of drainage proceedings addressed to "the estate of B., B.'s heirs," etc., was not objectionable as not being due process of law because B.'s will investing his heirs with title to the land sought to be assessed was on record showing the name of the heir taking the estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. §§ 76-81; Dec. Dig. § 76;* Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 871-875; Dec. Dig. § 290.*]

11. DRAINS (§ 76*)—OBJECTIONS TO ASSESSMENT—TIME OF HEARING—"REGULAR SESSION"—"REGULAR MEETING"—"REGULAR TERM."

Under Rev. St. 1909, § 5615, providing that the terms "regular session" and "regular meeting" of the county court, as used in the article, shall include the regular sessions of such court commencing on the first Monday in February, etc., as well as any adjourned term provided for by the court when in session, fixing the date of hearing objections to an assessment of benefits at an adjourned session of the county court was sufficient within Rev. St. 1909, § 5587, contained in the same chapter and article, requiring such date to be fixed at "the next regular term" of the county court.

12. STATUTES (§ 185*)—CONSTRUCTION.

Whatever is implied is as much a part of a statute as though expressly inserted therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 264; Dec. Dig. § 185.*]

13. NOTICE (§ 9*)—TIME RETURNABLE.

If the law fixes a definite date on which a notice is returnable, it cannot be returned on a different date.

in Banc. Appeal from Circuit Court, Vernon County; B. G. Thurman, Judge.

Suit by the State, on the relation of S. L. Coleman, Treasurer and ex officio Collector of Revenue of Bates County, against De Witt C. Blair and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Civil action in the circuit court of Bates county to collect drainage taxes in the sum of $2,659.20. Plaintiff had judgment below, and defendants appeal.

Plaintiff's petition alleges the organization of drainage district No. 1 in Bates county, Mo., by the county court of that county on February 7, 1906, under the provisions of article 4, chapter 122, R. S. 1899 (now article 4, chapter 41, R. S. 1909). The taxes sued for were levied by the county court in the year 1907, to pay bonds issued and sold to raise money to drain overflowed lands of defendants and other persons situated within said drainage district. These taxes remained unpaid on November 1, 1908, and this suit is to enforce the lien of said taxes against the lands of defendants. Defendant De Witt C. Blair filed a separate answer asserting ownership in himself of the lands described in plaintiff's petition, and denying generally all other allegations therein. The other defendants filed no pleadings and made no defense. For the purpose of this opinion, Blair will be hereafter treated as the sole defendant. The delinquent drainage tax bills upon which plaintiff's suit is based were introduced in evidence. Whereupon, to overcome the prima facie case thus made by plaintiff, defendant assailed the incorporation of the drainage district, and attempted to prove the invalidity of the tax bills by introducing the records of the county court and the petition, reports, notices, and other proceedings which resulted in the organization of said drainage district and the assessment of benefits against his lands.

John H. Lucas, of Kansas City, and Harvey Clark, of Nevada, Mo., for appellants. T. J. Smith and J. F. Smith, both of Butler, for respondent.

BROWN, J. (after stating the facts as above). I. The defendant contends that the judgment of the county court organizing and incorporating the drainage district is void because: (1) Only two of the three viewers, appointed by the court to examine the lands sought to be drained, reported in favor of the necessity, utility, and practicability of the proposition, while the third viewer made an adverse report on said proposition; and, (2) section 5581, R. S. 1909, is unconstitutional, in that the notice therein prescribed is not due process of law. Defendant also asserts that the notice issued under said last-named section was irregular and insufficient in both form and substance.

[1] Neither of the issues thus tendered can avail defendant in this action, because a drainage district is a public corporation, and the legality of its organization and the sufficiency of its corporate existence cannot be inquired into in this collateral action. State v. Fuller, 96 Mo. 165, 9 S. W. 583; Catholic Church v. Tobbein, 82 Mo. 418; Burnham v. Rogers, 167 Mo. 17, 66 S. W. 970; School District v. Hodgin, 180 Mo. 70, 79 S. W. 148.

[2, 3] II. It is further contended that the length of time prescribed by section 5587, R. S. 1909, for the publication of notice to landowners of the date when they may be heard on the question of benefits assessed against their lands for the drainage of same, is so short as to constitute the taking of property without due process of law, as prohibited by section 30, article 2, Constitution of Missouri, and section 1, fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Section 5587, supra, provides that notice to landowners of the application to incorporate a drainage district "shall be published in four issues of some weekly newspaper published in the county, the last insertion to be before the day set for hearing." From the phraseology of the statute quoted, it is evident that the last publication of the notice need not be on the last day before the day set for the hearing. Statutes of practically the same purport have been construed by this court to be complied with when the last insertion of the notice occurred 10 days before the cause was set for hearing. Robbins v. Boulware, 190 Mo. 33, 88 S. W. 674, 109 Am. St. Rep. 746; Ratliff v. Magee, 165 Mo. 461, 65 S. W. 713. Thus it will be seen that the issue presented here is not alone whether section 5587, supra, is unconstitutional, but whether the notice as published and the judgment based thereon amounted to taking defendant's property without due process of law.

The hearing of objections by the landowners to the assessment of benefits against their lands was set for March 20, 1906, and the notice of said hearing was published in the Rich Hill Enterprise on February 16 and March 2, 9, and 16, 1906. Defendant Blair resided in the state of New Jersey, and the time required to make the trip from New Jersey to Bates county, Mo., is 36 hours.

What constitutes due process of law is in a large measure governed by the particular facts of each case. No general rule can be laid down that will cover all cases.

The defendant cites and mainly relies upon Roller v. Holly, 176 U. S. 398, 20 Sup. Ct. 410, 44 L. Ed. 520, which was an action to enforce a vendor's lien against real estate in Texas owned by a party residing in the state of New Jersey. The statute of Texas prescribed five days' notice; and the process in that case was delivered personally to the defendant five days before the action was set for trial. The distance between the place of trial and the place of service was so great that it would have required four days' continuous travel for defendant to have been present at the trial. The process so served was adjudged insufficient because not allowing the defendant a reasonable time to employ counsel and attend the trial, and therefore was held not to be due process of law. It will be readily seen that the facts in this case are entirely unlike the facts in Roller v. Holly, supra. There, the clerk of the court issuing the process must have known that the defendant was so far away from the place of trial that he would need more than five days' time after service of process to go to Texas, employ counsel, and prepare for his defense. The clerk knew where defendant lived, otherwise, he could not have forwarded the process to be served on him in New Jersey; while in the case at bar it does not appear that the clerk of the county court or the judges thereof had any knowledge of the whereabouts of defendant. It would certainly be a dangerous doctrine to announce that constructive service by publication in a newspaper might be rendered invalid because the defendant or other parties to be notified were so far away from the place where the court is sitting that the notice could not reach them in time to be effective.

In Wade on the Law of Notice (2d Ed.) § 1029, it is said: "Publication is a means authorized by statute in most, if not all, the states of the Union, for obtaining constructive service of process, when from the non-residence, absence from the state, or absconding of the defendant, a more direct mode of service becomes impracticable. Service of summons in this manner is called 'constructive,' not because the publication in the manner prescribed by statute raises any reasonable presumption that thereby the defendant is advised of the pendency of the suit, for its authorization is not confined to cases where there is even a possibility of its ever coming to the knowledge of the party to be affected. The defendant may have removed so far beyond the confines of civilization that it would be impossible in the nature of things for the paper containing the first insertion of the notice to reach him before the return day, and it will still be as effective as though the paper came regularly to his hands."

Defendant proceeds on the theory that the notice which he complains of was no notice at all until it was inserted in the newspaper the fourth time. We do not think this proposition can be sustained upon authority or sound reason. Undoubtedly the first, second, and third publications of the notice performed some office. It is well known that no one person reads all the newspapers, and that whether or not a defendant will actually see a notice to him when published in a newspaper is a mere matter of chance. He would certainly be as likely to see the notice when published the first time as any subsequent publication.

[4] The usual rule is that, when the law requires a notice to be published for a certain number of weeks or days before legal proceedings are had, it is sufficient if the last insertion of the notice shall occur before such proceedings are had. German Bank v. Stumpf, 73 Mo. 311; Drainage District v. Campbell, 154 Mo. 159, 55 S. W. 276; Harper v. Ely, 56 Ill. 179; Fry v. Bidwell, 74 Ill. 381.

Defendant's resourceful counsel has called our attention to many statutes of Missouri prescribing how service may be had by publication; but he omits section 152, R. S. 1909, providing for publication of notice to creditors and others interested in proceedings to sell real estate of deceased persons to pay debts. That statute calls for a notice very much like the notice prescribed in the drainage law now in judgment. To sell real estate through the probate court to pay debts it has never been deemed necessary to insert the notice of the proceeding in a newspaper more than 28 days before the cause is set for hearing. If we were to adopt the rule for which the defendant contends, it would probably invalidate a large number of the probate sales which have heretofore taken place in Missouri. Young v. Downey, 145 Mo. 250, 46 S. W. 1066, 68 Am. St. Rep. 568.

[5] We are not bound to follow prior decisions of this court if the law as announced therein be erroneous, but we usually follow our precedents when to do otherwise would disturb a large number of titles. Cruzen v. Stephens, 123 Mo. 337, loc. cit. 346, 27 S. W. 557, 45 Am. St. Rep. 549. Upon the authorities hereinbefore cited and for the reasons noted in paragraph 5 of this opinion, we overrule defendant's contention on this point.

[6] III. Defendant contends that the notice as published fails to comply with sections 1770 and 1776 of our general Code of Civil Procedure, citing Davis v. Montgomery, 205 Mo. 271, 103 S. W. 979, and many other cases defining the requirements of orders of publication under the foregoing sections.

It is manifest that the notice in judgment does not conform to the requirements of sections 1770 and 1776, supra; and this requires us to determine what kind of a notice is contemplated by section 5587, R. S. 1909. If article 4, chapter 41, R. S. 1909, relating to the organization of drainage districts, had simply required the notice under section 5587, supra, to be directed to the owner of the land, then said section would have to be construed in the same manner as orders of publication intended to notify nonresident owners in ordinary suits to collect delinquent taxes. Section 11,498, R. S. 1909. In other words, it would be necessary in organizing a drainage district to notify either the real or the record owners of lands situated in the district by their true names; or, if their names were unknown, then it would be necessary to describe their interests or claims to such lands and how such claims or interests were derived.

[7] However, we find that the drainage law does not require the same kind of notice as in ordinary suits to collect back taxes, and the sufficiency of the notice now under consideration must be tested by the provisions of the drainage law. Ratliff v. Magee, 165 Mo. 465, 65 S. W. 713. Section 5584, which provides for the appointment of a surveyor and three viewers to survey and estimate the expense of draining overflowed lands and to assess benefits against same, provides that said viewers shall in their report give "the name of the owner or owners of each tract of land and any interest therein, so far as they are by diligent effort able to ascertain the same." Section 5587, supra, provides that the clerk shall fix the time for hearing objections to the assessment of benefits assessed against the lands within the drainage district, and "shall thereupon issue in the name of the state a notice directed by name to every person returned by the engineer and viewers as the owner of every lot or parcel of land affected by the proposed improvement or any interest therein;" and also like notice by name to all other persons "whom it may in any manner be ascertained" own such land or any part thereof, or any interest therein; and also notify generally "all other persons, without mentioning their names who may own such lands or any part thereof, or any interest therein, of the general object and nature of the petition and report of the engineer and viewers, and that on the day so fixed, the county court will hear said petition, and report and any evidence that may be adduced concerning the same."

In construing this section, we must determine what is meant by requiring the notice to designate by name "all persons whom it may in any manner be ascertained own such land." Do these words require the viewers to go to the deed records and there ascertain who owns the lands against which they have assessed benefits? We think not. It is evident that the framers of this drainage law thought it would seldom or rarely be applied in draining lands which were unimproved or which were owned by nonresidents. By requiring the viewers and engineer to ascertain and return the names of the owners, it was contemplated that said viewers and engineer should find out who were the owners of the land by inquiry of the persons in possession thereof or other persons within the drainage district. Section 5583, R. S. 1909, provides that, after the first notice is given of the intention to organize the district, persons opposed to such organization may file their remonstrances with the court, and, where such remonstrances are filed, it would, under this law, become the duty of the clerk to notify the remonstrators of the date fixed for hearing objections to the assessment of benefits. The provision in section 5587, supra, that all other persons shall be notified of the petition and assessment of benefits, "without mentioning their names," indicates that it was not the intention of the framers of this law to have the land records examined in order to ascertain who should be notified.

[8] The word "may" is sometimes construed as mandatory, but more frequently otherwise. As used in the words of the statute last quoted, it does not impose upon the clerk of the county court, the viewers, engineer, or any other persons connected with the proceeding, the duty of examining the land records to ascertain the names of persons who own the lands against which benefits have been assessed. This point is ruled against defendant.

The sufficiency of the notice of the hearing on the assessment of benefits is also attacked on three other grounds: (1) That the notice was not published in the newspaper designated by the county court; (2) that the defendant was not named in said notice as published, therefore, as to him, it was not due process of law; and (3) that the notice was not returnable to the next regular term of court after its issue.

[8] IV. The order of the county court of Bates county, directing the publication of notice of the assessment of benefits, directed the clerk to insert said notice in the "Western Enterprise"; but it was in fact published in the "Rich Hill Enterprise." Oral evidence introduced by the plaintiff proves that there was only one newspaper published in the city of Rich Hill, Mo., using the word "Enterprise" as a part of its name, and that it was sometimes designated by the public as the "Western Enterprise," and sometimes as the "Rich Hill Enterprise." This variance in the name of the paper is not sufficient to invalidate the notice.

Wade, in his treatise on the Law of Notice (2d Ed.) § 1067, correctly announces the law on this point as follows: "A slight variance in the title of the paper in which the notice is directed to be published, from that by which it is really known, will not vitiate the process, where it satisfactorily appears that the publication was in the one intended by the order. As where the order designated the 'Evening Day Book,' and the notice was published in the 'New York Day Book,' there being no evidence offered that there was any other paper of the same or a similar name, to which the order could apply, this was held sufficient."

[10] V. The notice as published is directed to the estate of John I. Blair, John I. Blair's heirs, and numerous other persons owning land in the drainage district, and further purports to notify "all other persons who own or have any interest in or to the following described real estate lying and being in the county of Bates and state of Missouri, followed by a description of all lands in the district, including those involved in this action." Defendant earnestly insists that, although the notice as published may have been in conformity with the drainage laws, nevertheless, it was not due process of law under the federal Constitution, because the will of his father, John I. Blair, whereby defendant became invested with title to the lands sought to be subjected to the lien of the tax bills, was on record in Bates county before any steps were taken to organize the drainage district; and therefore the notice should have been directed to defendant by name instead of to the estate of heirs of his father.

This contention is entirely unsound. When a statute has required notice to be given in a certain form to absent landowners, such statute has almost universally been held to constitute due process of law. Huling v. Kaw Valley Railroad & Improvement Co., 130 U. S. 559, 9 Sup. Ct. 603, 32 L. Ed. 1045, was a suit under a statute of Kansas governing the condemnation and appropriation of lands for railroad purposes. That statute did not provide that the notice to absent landowners should designate them by name, but only required that such notice should give the numbers of the sections, townships, and ranges through which the railroad would be constructed. The Supreme Court of the United States, in upholding the constitutionality of the above-mentioned statute, said: "The owner of real estate who is a non-resident of the state within which the property lies cannot evade the duties and obligations which the law imposes upon him in regard to such property by his absence from the state. Because he cannot be reached by some process of the courts of the state, which, of course, have no efficacy beyond their own borders, he cannot therefore hold his property exempt from the liabilities, duties, and obligations which the state has a right to impose upon such property; and in such cases some substituted form of notice has always been held to be a sufficient warning to the owner of the proceedings which are being taken under the authority of the state to subject his property to those demands and obligations. Otherwise, the burdens of taxation, and the liability of such property to be taken under the power of eminent domain, would be useless in regard to a very large amount of property in every state of the Union. It is therefore the duty of the owner of real estate who is a non-resident to take measures that in some way he shall be represented when his property is called into requisition; and, if he fails to do this, and fails to get notice by the ordinary publications which have usually been required in such cases, it is his misfortune, and he must abide the consequences. Such publication is 'due process of law' as applied to this class of cases." See, also, Leigh v. Green, 193 U. S. 79, 24 Sup. Ct. 390, 48 L. Ed. 623, and Johnson et al. v. Hunter (C. C.) 127 Fed. 219.

[11, 12] VI. This brings us to the further contention of defendant that the assessment of benefits against his land is invalid because the clerk of the county court fixed the date of hearing objections to said assessment of benefits at an adjourned sitting of said court instead of during "the next regular term" thereof, as required by section 5587, R. S. 1909.

[13] It is undoubtedly true that, where the law fixes a definite date on which a notice or other process shall be returnable, it cannot be made returnable at a different date. Holliday v. Cooper, 3 Mo. 286. Section

5615, art. 4, c. 41, R. S. 1909, in which said section 5587, supra, is found, provides that: "The terms 'regular session' and 'regular meeting' of the county court, as used in this article, shall be held to include the regular sessions of such court commencing on the first Monday in February, May, August and November of each year, as well as any adjourned term provided for by the court when in session." It will be observed that said section 5615, supra, does not in express language declare that whenever the words "next regular term" are used in said article 4, supra, said words shall include adjourned or special sittings of the county court. However, the language quoted clearly implies that such was the legislative intent; and "whatever the law will imply is as much a part and parcel of the legislative enactment as though in terms inserted therein." State ex rel. v. Mason, 155 Mo. 500, 55 S. W. 640; Sutherland on Statutory Construction, § 334. The county court acquired jurisdiction over the matter of assessing benefits against defendant's lands by filing a date for the hearing and giving notice accordingly. Whether such hearing was at a regular or adjourned term did not affect the court's jurisdiction.

[14] We are fully aware of the rule that statutes which permit courts to acquire jurisdiction by constructive service must be strictly construed. That is indeed a valuable rule, but should not be followed to a point which would force the courts to disregard their reason and common sense.

The notice met every requirement of the law under which it was issued and published.

VII. Defendant also complains of the action of the trial court in allowing an attorney's fee in the sum of $1,000 in favor of plaintiff and taxing same as costs in the case, as permitted by section 5599, R. S. 1909.

The suit involved, directly and indirectly, the validity of taxes aggregating $16,000, and, considering the number of issues tendered to defeat the plaintiff's action, we think not only the evidence introduced but the facts disclosed by the record warranted the court in allowing the sum of $1,000 and taxing the same as an attorney's fee.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

STATE ex rel. DEEMS et al. v. HOLTCAMP,
Judge, et al.

(Supreme Court of Missouri. Nov. 14, 1912.)

1. PROHIBITION (§ 10*)—SCOPE OF REMEDY—POWER OF SUPREME COURT.

The Supreme Court has power to prevent all inferior courts from exceeding their jurisdiction by a writ of prohibition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. §§ 37-56; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

2. COURTS (§ 2*)—JURISDICTION—GROUNDS—IN GENERAL.

To acquire jurisdiction, a court must possess the power to determine the general class of cases to which the one it is attempting to adjudicate belongs; and, in a case where its judgment will affect the title to particular property, it is generally necessary that such property be situated within its territorial jurisdiction, and it must, by its process or by voluntary appearance, acquire jurisdiction over the persons whose rights will be affected by its decree.

3. COURTS (§ 198*)—PROBATE JURISDICTION—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

Under the express provision of Const. art. 6, § 34, a probate court has jurisdiction over the sale of land by administrators within its territorial jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 469, 471-475, 478; Dec. Dig. § 198.*]

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 337*)—SALE BY ADMINISTRATOR—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—NOTICE.

An administrator selling incumbered real estate to pay his own unprobated claim or the debts due to incumbrancers must proceed under Rev. St. 1909, §§ 150, 151, by petition accompanied by his account and inventory of the estate and a list of debts remaining unpaid, and must give the notice required by section 152.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1397-1409; Dec. Dig. § 337.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§ 5*)—JUDICIAL NOTICE—INCUMBRANCES UPON PROPERTY.

Courts take judicial notice that a very large percentage of the lands of this commonwealth, and some of the most valuable thereof, are incumbered for some amount, either great or small.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 4; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

6. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 326*)—SALE BY ORDER OF COURT—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Under Rev. St. 1909, §§ 147, 148, which authorize the sale of incumbered real estate in administration, even though there be no general creditors, it is only necessary that the probate court find that such sale will promote the interest of the estate—that is, of the parties entitled to it as heirs or devisees—and that it will not be prejudicial to creditors, the sale not being for the benefit of incumbrancers; and where there is no personal estate to redeem the incumbrances, or to be promoted, and the incumbered realty belongs to the heirs, unless necessary to sell it to pay an alleged debt to the administrator, and there is no showing that the land cannot be partitioned in kind among the heirs, but the administrator applies for a sale to prevent such partition and to consume in fees and commissions all the equities existing in favor of the heirs, the probate court is not justified in making an order of sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 1843; Dec. Dig. § 326.*]

7. PROHIBITION (§ 11*)—ADMINISTRATION PROCEEDINGS—SALE OF LAND.

Where a probate court possesses the power to determine for itself the propriety of making an order for the sale of incumbered realty in administration, it should not be prohibited from exercising its statutory jurisdiction, since its error can be corrected on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. § 36; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

8. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 277*)—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—"PROPERTY"—EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.

An equity in incumbered real estate is "property" within Const. art. 2, § 30, providing that no person shall be deprived of property without due process of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 762, 766, 949; Dec. Dig. § 277.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5693-5728; vol. 8, pp. 7768-7770.]

9. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 309*)—EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 337*)—"DUE PROCESS OF LAW"—ADMINISTRATORS' SALE OF INCUMBERED REALTY—NOTICE TO HEIRS.

"Due process of law," as used in Const. art. 2, § 30, is construed to be reasonable notice and opportunity to be heard in defense of one's rights; and though Rev. St. 1909, §§ 147, 148, providing for a sale by order of court of incumbered real estate in administration, do not require any notice to the heirs, the law will imply that notice was intended, and require that notice be given; and hence the court's order for the sale of such estate, without notice to heirs having an equity therein—regarded as property—is a deprivation of property without due process of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 929, 930; Dec. Dig. § 309.* Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1397-1409; Dec. Dig. § 337.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2227-2256; vol. 8, p. 7644.]

10. APPEARANCE (§ 9*)—SALE OF LAND BY ORDER OF PROBATE COURT—SPECIAL APPEARANCE BY HEIRS.

Where heirs to incumbered real estate in administration appeared specially in the probate court for the sole purpose of objecting to its jurisdiction to order a sale on the administrator's application, and took no part in the proceedings resulting in the court's order of a sale, the court acquired no jurisdiction over them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appearance, Cent. Dig. §§ 42-52; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

Ferriss and Kennish, JJ., dissenting.

In Banc. Prohibition by the State on the relation of Harry W. Deems and another against Charles W. Holtcamp, Judge of the Probate Court in and for the City of St. Louis, and Augustus Ross, administrator of the estate of Anna Deems Ross, deceased. Preliminary writ of prohibition made absolute.

Relators' petition for a writ of prohibition against the respondents on the ground that the probate court is proceeding without jurisdiction in the matter related below. The following facts appear from the petition and return thereto: Anna Deems Ross died intestate, without issue, in the city of St. Louis in April, 1909. At the time of her death she owned five parcels of real estate in that city, each one of which was incumbered by a deed of trust to secure certain promissory notes executed by her jointly with her husband. In April, 1909, letters of administration on her estate were granted to Augustus Ross, her husband. She left as collateral heirs the relators, Harry W. Deems and Laura V. Deems. Subsequently Augustus Ross presented a claim for about $3,000 against the estate which, after due hearing, was disallowed in October, 1911, and an appeal taken to the circuit court, where it is now pending. No other claims are shown to have existed against the estate. On June 30, 1911, the respondent judge, on a petition filed by the administrator, entered an order of record directing the administrator to take possession and manage said real estate, which order was made under the provisions of the act of 1911, known as section 139a, Laws of 1911, p. 80, the same being an amendment to article 6 of chapter 2, R. S. 1909, and which reads as follows: "Whenever letters of administration or testamentary shall have been granted on an estate, and it shall appear to the court or judge in vacation that the decedent died possessed of real estate in the state, and his heirs or legatees have failed to take charge of same, or the identity or whereabouts of such heirs or legatees are unknown, then the court or judge in vacation may on its or his own motion, or that of any party interested, direct the administrator or executor in charge of said estate, to take charge and manage the real estate, until such time as such heirs or legatees shall appear and petition the court to turn the management of said real estate over to them, or until the same shall escheat to the state, as is provided by the 'escheat act.'"

The administrator is in charge of the real estate under said order. On the 10th day of July, 1911, said administrator, while his claim for allowance was pending in the probate court, filed in said court a petition in which he alleged that all of said real estate was incumbered with deeds of trust as aforesaid, and also with liens for taxes, and that the holders of the deeds of trust were threatening to sell under same; that, if the equities should be sold under favorable conditions, they would bring an amount considerably larger than could be realized at a sale under the deeds of trust; that his claim for $3,004.28 was pending in said probate court; and that the personal assets were practically valueless—the petition concluding with the following prayer: "Inasmuch as there are no assets to redeem such real estate, the petitioner prays that the court shall make an order that all the right, title and interest of the decedent and her estate to such property, or so much thereof as the court shall determine, be sold at private or public sale, as the court in its judgment may determine." This petition was not accompanied by an account of the administration, nor by a list of debts due to and owing by deceased and remaining unpaid, nor was notice given to the heirs, relators herein, as required by section 152, R. S. 1909.

Thereafter, on July 11, 1911, these relators appeared specially in the probate court and filed the following motion verified by affidavit: "Now at this day come Harry W. Deems and Mrs. Laura V. Deems, and, appearing for the purpose of this motion only, give the court to be informed and understand that they are heirs at law of Anna Deems Ross, deceased, and as such heirs are entitled to distributive shares of the estate of said Anna Deems Ross. That on Monday, January 10, 1911, one Augustus Ross, administrator of the estate of Anna Deems Ross, deceased, applied to this honorable court for an order to sell certain real estate in his petition described, and that such petition was not accompanied by a true account of said Augustus Ross' administration nor accompanied by a list of debts due to and by the deceased and remaining unpaid, or an inventory of the remaining personal property, together with its appraised value, or of any other assets in his hands. That no notice has been given to the persons interested in said estate, and particularly this petitioner, of the filing of such petition, nor have they been given until the first day of the next term of this court to show cause why such an order should not be made, nor has any such notice been published for four weeks in any newspaper in the city of St. Louis, nor has such notice been published by 10 handbills placed in 10 public places in said city. Wherefore petitioners say that this court is without jurisdiction to hear and determine the petition of said Augustus Ross, filed as aforesaid, and pray that the same may be dismissed." This motion was continued by the court to the next September term, at which term the court stated to counsel for relators that evidence would be heard, if offered, as to the imminent danger of a sale under the deeds of trust; but no such evidence was offered, relators electing to stand on their plea to the jurisdiction.

In October, 1911, the probate court, being of the opinion that the application was under sections 147 and 148, R. S. 1909, entered the following order: "Now at this day, the court being fully advised of and concerning the petition of Augustus Ross, administrator of the estate of Anna D. Ross, deceased, for an order of sale of all the right, title, and interest of said deceased of, in, and to certain real estate in said petition described heretofore, to wit, on the 15th day of September, 1911, submitted and taken under advisement, and it appearing that said real estate is incumbered by certain deeds of trust and liens in said petition described, that said deceased died without having devised said real estate or providing for the redemption thereof by will or otherwise, and that there would not be sufficient assets in the hands of said administrator to redeem said real estate after payment of the debts due by said estate, it is therefore ordered that the said administrator do, on such day as he may select, at the eastern front door of the courthouse of the city of St. Louis, and during the session of the circuit or probate court of said city, between the hours of 10 o'clock in the forenoon and 5 o'clock in the afternoon of that day, expose to sale at public vendue or outcry, all the right, title, and interest of said deceased of, in, and to the following described real estate, to wit (describing the same), and sell the same for the purpose in said petition mentioned, for cash, with leave to sell the same at private sale, for cash, first having the same appraised, and, if sold at public sale, notice of the time, terms, and place of said sale published for four weeks prior thereto in some newspaper in the city of St. Louis, as directed by law, and that he make a full report of his proceedings within ten (10) days after such sale." It further appears that there are no debts proven against the estate, and no creditors except said administrator, whose claim has since the filing of his petition for an order of sale been disallowed by the probate court and, as stated above, is now pending on appeal in the circuit court. It also appears that, since the institution of this proceeding, one of the parcels of real estate has been sold under foreclosure of the deed of trust thereon.

On July 13, 1911, the relators filed a suit in the circuit court to partition the real estate involved herein, which suit is now pending. The respondent Ross charges that this partition suit was filed in order to oust the probate court of jurisdiction, and to defeat him in the collection of his claim for $3,004, if it should be allowed in the pending appeal in the circuit court. Respondents Holtcamp, Judge, and Ross, administrator, each filed a return, conceding the facts substantially as stated above, both alleging that the order of sale is based on sections 147 and 148 of the Revised Statutes 1909.

There is no important dispute about the facts. The relators claim that, if it is intended as a proceeding to pay debts, it is invalid, because there are no debts, and no notice was given as required by the statute, and because none of the provisions of the statute in that regard were complied with. Relators further contend that the proceedings cannot be justified under the provisions of section 147, which provides for the redemption of mortgaged real estate out of the personal assets or by the sale of other real estate. They further contend that the order to sell cannot be justified under the provisions of section 148, supra, and urge as reasons that, under our system, real estate descends directly to the heirs, and the administrator has nothing to do with it except that, first, he may take charge of and preserve it until the heirs apply to the court for permission to do so; second, that, if there are debts, he may sell for the purpose of paying them.

Hiram N. Moore and Richard F. Ralph, both of St. Louis, for relators. Christian F. Schneider, of St. Louis, for respondents.

BROWN, J. (after stating the facts as above). Upon the foregoing facts, has the probate court of St. Louis city power to cause the real estate of Anna Deems Ross to be sold by the administrator of her estate?

[1] The power of this court to prevent all inferior courts from exceeding their jurisdiction by the writ of prohibition is not denied; but it is contended that the respondent court is not exceeding its jurisdiction in the proceedings set out in relator's petition.

[2] To acquire jurisdiction, a court must (1) possess the power to determine the general class of cases to which the one belongs which it is attempting to adjudicate; (2) when its judgment, as in this case, will affect the title to particular property, it is generally necessary that such property be situated within the territorial jurisdiction of the court; and (3) the court must, by its process or by voluntary appearance, acquire jurisdiction over the persons whose rights will be affected by its decree.

[3] It cannot be denied that probate courts are by section 34, art. 6, of our Constitution, given express jurisdiction over "the sale of lands by administrators."

1. It is admitted that the land sought to be sold is in St. Louis city. This leaves for our determination only the first and third propositions above noted. In other words, has the General Assembly authorized probate courts to order the sale of real estate upon the facts presented in this case?

[4-6] 2. It is not necessary to consider the alleged indebtedness of the estate of Anna Deems Ross to the administrator (which indebtedness had not been finally established when this proceeding was instituted), for the reason that sections 147 and 148, R. S. 1909 (under which the probate court is proceeding), authorize a sale of incumbered real estate even though there be no general creditors. To direct such a sale as the probate court of St. Louis city has ordered, it seems to be only necessary for it to find that such sale will "promote the interest of the estate and not be prejudicial to creditors." If there are no creditors, then, of course, the sale could not prejudice them.

The phraseology of the statute (sections 147 and 148, supra) clearly indicates that the sale to be made thereunder is not for the benefit of the party holding a mortgage or other incumbrance, but to "promote the interest of the estate"—that is, the parties entitled to the estate as heirs, legatees, or devisees—so that in a proper case, after acquiring jurisdiction of the parties entitled to be heard, or whose interests will be affected by the intended sale, probate courts may order the sale of incumbered real estate of deceased persons. Such sales, however, are not intended as a substitute for the action of partition, nor to afford an excuse for making fees or commissions for administrators.

In the case before us there is no personal estate to be "promoted," and the incumbered lands belong to the heirs unless it be found necessary to sell them to pay the alleged debt of the administrator. If the sale is being made to pay the unprobated claim of the administrator or the debts due the incumbrancers, then clearly the administrator must proceed under sections 150, 151, and 152, R. S. 1909, and give the notice required by the latter section.

Under the facts in the case before us, it is apparent that the administrator is proceeding with the sale of the real estate of deceased, not to "promote the interest of the estate," nor of the relators as heirs thereto, but to prevent mutual or judicial partition among the heirs and as nearly as possible to eat up in fees and commissions all the equities that may exist in favor of the heirs. Estates are not supposed to be administered for the sole benefit of administrators; but, on the contrary, they must be so administered as to promote in the highest possible degree the welfare of the heirs, legatees, devisees, and creditors.

Courts take judicial notice that a very large per cent. of the lands of this commonwealth and some of the most valuable thereof are incumbered for some amount, either great or small, and if such property is to be sold by administrators without giving the heirs an opportunity to partition the same among themselves, and then pay off or assume the incumbrances (as may suit their convenience) many hardships and losses are likely to be sustained by persons who inherit incumbered property. The right of persons who have inherited real estate to partition the same among themselves is a very valuable privilege, and it cannot be successfully contended that a sale by the administrator, which would destroy that right, would in any manner "promote the welfare" of the heirs.

In the instant case, the administrator seems to be an heir of his wife, but in many cases administrators have no interest in the real estate of the person whose estate they are administering, and the fact that they are ordinarily not entitled to commissions on the real estate unless they sell same would be a strong incentive to them to sell the real estate in order to increase their fees. Section 229, R. S. 1909. There is nothing in sections 147 and 148, R. S. 1909, indicating a legislative intent to repeal or modify the partition statute. There is no showing made why the lands of Anna Deems Ross cannot be partitioned in kind among her heirs; and, there being a suit now pending for that purpose, we find nothing to justify the probate court of St. Louis city in making the order of sale it did make.

[7] However, as the respondent court possessed the necessary power to determine for itself the propriety of making the order of sale, and as its error can be corrected upon appeal, it should not, on account of matters stated in this paragraph, be prohibited from exercising its statutory jurisdiction in the matter. This court will not undertake to prohibit a trial court from deciding a case incorrectly when such trial court has jurisdiction, but will review the error on appeal. What we have said in this paragraph about the invalidity of the order of sale is in a certain sense premature, but seems to be called for by the demand of the parties that the statutes under which respondents are proceeding be construed.

[8.9] 3. The assumed right of the respondent to order a sale of the real estate of Anna Deems Ross, without the service of process or notice of any kind to her heirs, raises a more serious issue. We are aware that a somewhat similar sale was upheld by this court in Garrett v. Bicknell, 64 Mo. 404, but the objection to the administrator's deed in that case was mainly on the ground that no petition was presented to the probate court asking that the sale be made, and the deed in that case was not assailed on the ground that there was no notice to the heirs. Courts usually do not pass upon issues which are not specifically called to their attention. Howard v. Brown, 197 Mo. 36, loc. cit. 45, 95 S. W. 191. The lack of notice to the heirs was not called to the court's attention in the Garrett Case, supra, and therefore the opinion in that case is not authority upon the issue now under consideration. The right of heirs to redeem the lands of their ancestors from incumbrances, the right to partition such incumbered lands among themselves, not to speak of the right to use and occupy the lands until they are actually sold under the incumbrances, are such substantial rights that it is difficult to understand how a sale can be constitutionally made without notice to those whose rights are so vitally affected. Our organic law ordains that "no person shall be deprived of * * * property without due process of law." Section 30, art. 2, Constitution of Missouri. No authority need be cited to demonstrate that an equity in incumbered real estate is property, and therefore under protection of the Constitution. Due process of law is usually construed to be reasonable notice and an opportunity to be heard in defense of one's rights.

It is true, as contended by respondents, that sections 147 and 148, R. S. 1909, do not require any notice to heirs or creditors of a proceeding to sell incumbered lands; but in the well-considered case of State ex rel. v. Walbridge, 119 Mo. 383, loc. cit. 394, 24 S. W. 457, 460 (41 Am. St. Rep. 663), we said: "The law in accordance with the principles of justice—principles which are fundamental and eternal—will require that notice be given before any person be passed upon, either in person, estate, or any other matter or thing to which he is entitled. And though the statutes do not in terms require notice, the law will imply that notice was intended." See, also, State ex rel. v. Maroney, 191 Mo. 531, 90 S. W. 141. It is needless to multiply authorities in support of a proposition, the mere statement of which demonstrates its correctness.

[10] It is contended by respondents that, as relators appeared in the probate court and objected to the proceeding whereby the respondents sought to sell their property, therefore the court acquired jurisdiction over them to make the order of sale. However, the record shows that the relators appeared specially for the sole purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction of the court, and that they took no part in the pretended trial or investigation which resulted in the order of sale complained of, therefore the court acquired no jurisdiction over them. Thomason v. Mercantile Town Mutual Ins. Co., 217 Mo. 435, 116 S. W. 1092. It is not necessary to determine whether or not the notice specified in section 152, R. S. 1909, would have been sufficient to confer jurisdiction upon the probate court of St. Louis city to proceed under sections 147 and 148, R. S. 1909, and make the order of sale it did make, for the reason that no notice of any kind was given in the instant case.

The probate court of St. Louis city exceeded its jurisdiction in making an order for the sale of property in which relators are interested, without giving them notice or acquiring jurisdiction over their persons in any other manner; therefore the preliminary writ of prohibition issued herein will be made absolute. It is so ordered.

FERRISS and KENNISH, JJ., dissent in opinion by FERRISS, J. VALLIANT, C. J., concurs. GRAVES, WOODSON, and LAMM, JJ., concur in the result, and express the further opinion that probate courts have no jurisdiction even with notice to order the sale of lands of deceased persons for purposes of partition.

FERRISS, J. (dissenting). The petition of the administrator for an order to sell all the interest of the estate in the realty is evidently based on sections 147 and 148, R. S. 1909. It was so construed by the probate court, as is apparent from the terms of the order of sale, and so stated in the return of respondent Holtcamp, judge of that court.

The relators contend that, under the facts, the probate court was without jurisdiction to make the order of sale. This contention presents the only question necessary for consideration, namely, Did the probate court act within its jurisdiction? Our writ of prohibition does not issue to restrain a court, acting within the limits of its jurisdiction, from committing error, nor to correct errors after they are committed. Such erroneous rulings, if any, can be corrected only on appeal. Under our system of practice this rule is essential, however desirable it might be in particular instances to lay it aside. This court, in a case involving an order of the probate court to sell real estate, defines jurisdictions as follows: "Jurisdiction may be defined to be the right to adjudicate concerning the subject-matter in a given case. To constitute this, there are three essentials: First, the court must have cognizance of the class of cases to which the one to be adjudged belongs; second, the proper parties must be present; and, third, the point decided must be, in substance and effect, within the issues. Munday v. Vall, 34 N. J. Law, 422." Stark v. Kirchgraber, 186 Mo. loc. cit. 645, 85 S. W. 872, 105 Am. St. Rep. 629.

I think there can be no question as to the existence here of the first and third essentials as defined above. The probate court is given authority, by statute, to order the sale of real estate in a proper case. Under sections 150 and 184, real estate may be ordered sold to pay debts. Under section 143, the interest of the estate in real estate, which has been purchased but not fully paid for, may be ordered sold. Sections 147 and 148 provide for the sale of real estate for the purpose of redeeming mortgaged land, and also (section 148) for selling the equity of redemption. In Jackson v. Magruder, 51 Mo. 55, speaking of statutes similar to the one cited, it is said: "Under our administration of law as it stood when this sale was made, and as it still exists, the county court had the power to order land to be sold for the purpose of redeeming mortgages on other lands, or the courts might make a special order to sell the equity of redemption of the mortgaged premises. But the court also had the power, on application of the administrator or a creditor of the estate, to make a general order for the sale of the real estate for the payment of debts, embracing equities of redemption and all other interests in lands." In State, to Use, v. Schleiffarth, 9 Mo. App. loc. cit. 433, this is said: "The statute provides (sections 143, 144 [R. S. 1879]) that, when any person dies owning an equity of redemption, the probate court may order the administrator to redeem the property out of the personalty, or by the sale of other real estate, or may order the equity of redemption to be sold."

Were the proper parties before the court? No notice was given to the heirs as required by the statute (section 152), and, if this were a proceeding under section 150 et seq., such failure would defeat the jurisdiction of the probate court. Hutchinson v. Shelley, 133 Mo. 400, 34 S. W. 838.

Sections 147 and 148, which must be read together, provide as follows:

"Sec. 147. If any person die leaving land incumbered by mortgage or deed of trust, or any lien whatever, or owning any equity of redemption, or leaving mortgaged or pledged any personal property, and shall not have devised the same or provided for redemption thereof by will, the court shall have power, if, in its judgment, it will promote the interests of the estate and not be prejudicial to other creditors, to order executor or administrator to redeem the same out of the personal assets of the estate, or to order the sale of other real estate to redeem such land or personal property so incumbered, and also to order the executor or administrator to mortgage or pledge any personal property of the estate in his hands for the purpose of raising and providing money with which to redeem said premises so incumbered.

"Sec. 148. If such redemption would injure the estate or creditors, or if there would not be assets to redeem such estate after payment of debts, the court shall order all the right, title and interest of the estate to such property to be sold at public or private sale."

No provision is made for any notice to heirs in a proceeding under these sections. We have been cited to no case involving the construction of said sections, and, after diligent search, I have found none. Sections 142 and 143 are closely related to sections 147 and 148, and involve the same proceedings under substantially similar conditions. They are as follows:

"Sec. 142. If any person die, having purchased real estate, and shall not have completed the payment, nor devised such real estate, nor provided for the payment by will, and the completion of such payment would be beneficial to the estate and not injurious to creditors, the executor or administrator, by order of the court, may complete such payment out of the assets in his hands, and such estate shall be disposed of as other real estate.

"Sec. 143. If the court believe that, after the payment of debts, there will not be sufficient assets to pay for such real estate, the court may order the executor or administrator to sell all the right, title and interest of the deceased therein."

This court decided in Garrett v. Bicknell, 64 Mo. 404, that no petition was necessary under these sections, and in that connection said: "It will be perceived, upon an examination of the law regulating the disposition which shall be made of a decedent's interest in land bought by him in his lifetime and not paid for by him, that the Legislature intended to invest the county and probate courts with powers freed from many of the restrictions imposed by those sections regulating sales of land on petition of the administrator, executor, or creditor for the sale of real estate to pay debts." The case of Valle v. Fleming, 19 Mo. 454, 61 Am. Dec. 566, inferentially holds that no notice would be necessary under these sections.

The statutes providing for the sale of the right, title, and interest only of the deceased in incumbered property, whether such incumbrance is by deed of trust or vendor's lien, make no provision for petition or notice. It is only when we come to the provisions for the sale of real property to pay debts that we find particular directions as to notice, publication, filing accounts, etc. I therefore conclude that in this proceeding, under sections 147 and 148, the provisions of sections 151, 152, 153, providing for the filing of lists of debts, notice, publication, etc., do not apply, and that there is no want of proper parties before the court, nor failure of other jurisdictional facts.

The Legislature, no doubt, regarded proceedings to sell real estate to pay debts as essentially different, in relation to the interests of the heirs, from proceedings to protect incumbered property and dispose of equities, and hence the minute restrictions as to the former which are wanting in the latter cases. However that may be, the statute plainly makes a distinction in the matter of jurisdiction of the court. The probate court has jurisdiction to pass judgment on the points presented, namely, whether, under the facts, it was proper to order the sale of the equities in the real estate. The propriety of the ruling can be tested on appeal from any order it may make confirming a sale. Wilson v. Brown, 21 Mo. 410; McVey v. McVey, 51 Mo. 420; Desloge v. Tucker, 196 Mo. 587, 94 S. W. 283; section 289, R. S. 1909.

For the foregoing reasons, I respectfully dissent from the opinion of the court.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; W. B. Homer, Judge.

Action by Franceska Warner and another against Frank H. Michel and others, partners under the firm name of Hammell & Karleskind. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Louis Mayer and L. P. Crigler, both of St. Louis, for appellants. J. L. Hornsby, of St. Louis, for respondents.

REYNOLDS, P. J. This is the second appeal in this case. It was here under the same title and will be found reported 143 Mo. App. 133, 122 S. W. 338. The petition contained two counts, the first asking for the cancellation of the record of a certain deed of trust, it being averred that the debt secured by it had been paid off in full and that plaintiffs had tendered the legal fee to entitle them to have satisfaction of the deed of trust; the second count averring the payment in full of the debt secured by the deed of trust and tender of the legal fee for the release thereof on the margin of the record, along with the demand that the release be indorsed, and averring the refusal of defendants to release the deed of trust of record, demands the statutory penalty of 10 per cent. of the debt as damages for failure so to do.

At the former trial the cause was tried before the court as to the first count and before the jury as to the second, the testimony as to both counts being heard together. At the conclusion of that trial the court found for defendants on the first count, but the jury before whom the second count for the statutory penalty was tried, returned a verdict in favor of plaintiffs. Plaintiffs filed a motion for new trial as to the first count, and defendants filed one as to the second count. The court sustained the motion of defendants for new trial on the second count but overruled the motion of the plaintiffs for a new trial on the first count. Plaintiffs appealed from this to our court and we affirmed that action, remanding the case for further proceedings. Thereupon the cause coming on for trial before the circuit court, defendants objected to the introduction of any evidence in the case on the ground that the judgment of the court on the first count in favor of defendants was a bar to the action on the second count, and claiming that that judgment is conclusive on the issues in the case as set out in the second count or cause of action of the petition and that there is nothing remaining for trial or submission to the court. The court sustained that objection, whereupon plaintiffs took a nonsuit with leave to move to set it aside and that being overruled and exceptions saved have perfected their appeal from that action of the trial court.

[1, 2] The abstract of the record is in such shape before us that it is almost impossible to handle the case intelligently. We are not able to determine whether the cause went to this second trial on both counts of the petition or on the second count. Nor can we tell what judgment is referred to in the objection made by counsel. No judgment of any kind is in this record. The abstract is barren of any recitals on this. The only judgment before us is the one of nonsuit, which is on file with us, this case coming to us on what is known as the "short form," appellant filing a copy of the judgment appealed from and the order allowing the appeal. In this condition of the record, the presumption always being in favor of the regularity of the action of the trial court, we would have no other course than to affirm the judgment of that court. But not resting on that, if we are to assume, as counsel for appellants seem to concede was the fact, that the finding and judgment on the first count, was as set out when the cause was previously before us, and which we then affirmed, then the action of the trial court, in holding that the judgment on this first count is a bar to an action of the second count, is manifestly correct. That judgment was conclusive of the fact that the plaintiffs were not entitled to have the deed of trust released. It necessarily followed that plaintiffs could not recover damages for failure to release it.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

PARTIES (§ 19*)—PLAINTIFF—JOINT CONTRACT FOR JOINT SERVICES.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Hugo Muench, Judge.

Action by A. M. Frumberg against Joseph Haderlein. From a judgment for defendant on appeal from a justice, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. F. Merryman and William H. Killoren, both of St. Louis, for appellant. Karl M. Vetsburg and Chas. H. Franck, both of St. Louis, for respondent.

REYNOLDS, P. J. Plaintiff, appellant here, instituted this action before a justice of the peace, against the respondent Haderlein and one Charles H. Franck, filing a statement with the justice, to recover $250 alleged to be due him under a contract hereafter referred to. Plaintiff dismissed as to defendant Franck before the justice and judgment was rendered against Haderlein, from which the latter appealed to the circuit court where the cause was tried before the court, a jury being waived, on an agreed statement of facts.

It appears by this statement that the basis of the action was the following writing:

"Received of Joseph Haderlein, five hundred ($500) dollars, retaining fee in his injunction suit against W. Schneider Wholesale Wine & Liquor Company et al. It is understood that if a perpetual injunction is procured for Mr. Haderlein, then he is to pay an additional attorneys' fee to Chas. H. Franck and A. M. Frumberg of five hundred ($500) dollars; and in the event the injunction is not procured, then there is to be no further attorneys' fee to said attorneya.

"In duplicate.

"[Signed] Chas. H. Franck.

"[Signed] A. M. Frumberg.

"Dated November 18th, 1909.

"Accepted:

"[Signed] Jos. Haderlein."

It was further stipulated that appellant and Charles H. Franck prepared and filed a petition for the injunction referred to in this agreement, "and prosecuted said suit until on discharge of said Frumberg without cause by defendant Haderlein from further service in said cause," and that plaintiff and Frumberg received $500 from Haderlein, the retaining fee mentioned in the agreement; that after the discharge of plaintiff in the cause Franck and George W. Lubke, Jr., have prosecuted and are still prosecuting the suit, which suit is still pending and in which no perpetual injunction has been procured, as mentioned in the agreement. It is further stipulated that plaintiff at the times mentioned was a licensed and practicing attorney of the St. Louis bar.

No other evidence appears to have been introduced outside of this stipulation, the cause being submitted to the court upon it. Thereupon the court made this declaration of law: "It appearing that the contract of employment, for the breach of which plaintiff prosecutes this suit, was made by defendant with plaintiff and Charles H. Franck jointly, the court declares the law to be that plaintiff cannot at law prosecute a several action upon the same, and the judgment herein must therefore be in favor of defendant." Plaintiff excepted to the giving of this declaration, filed his motion for a new trial, and saving exception to that being overruled, duly perfected his appeal from the judgment rendered in favor of defendant.

The only error assigned by counsel for appellant is to the action of the court in giving the declaration of law above set out, it being urged that Franck was not a proper or necessary party either plaintiff or defendant.

While other authorities are cited in the brief of counsel for appellant, in the argument accompanying the brief the authorities relied on are 15 Ency. Plead. & Prac. 735; State ex rel. Glass et al. v. Beasley, 57 Mo. App. 570, loc. cit. 574; and State ex rel. Jackson v. Bradley, 193 Mo. 33, 91 S. W. 483. The quotation from the Encyclopedia of Pleading and Practice is that the test of unity of interest intended by the statute is such joint connection with the subject-matter as would preclude a separate action. However true this proposition may be, to apply it to the case at bar, as contended for by learned counsel for appellant, is the assumption of the very point in controversy. The question here for determination is whether this contract shows such joint connection with the subject-matter as will preclude a separate action by either Mr. Frumberg or Mr. Franck. The holding of the learned trial judge, as evidenced by the declaration of law, is that it will not.

In the Bradley Case, supra, it is distinctly said (193 Mo. loc. cit. 45, 91 S. W. 486) that the employment of the two attorneys there named, one of whom had sued for compensation claimed to be due him, "although for a contingent fee was wholly independent of each other." That is not the case here. The contract is for services which were to be jointly performed by appellant and Mr. Franck; it is a joint contract for the joint services of the two in the conduct of a certain cause which the respondent here was desirous of having brought and prosecuted.

The Beasley Case, supra, was an action for trespass where several persons, alleged to have been damaged in their several interests, undertook to sue jointly. The Kansas City Court of Appeals very properly held that this could not be done.

In very many cases and from an early day, our Supreme Court has held that where the cause of action is on a joint contract the suit must be brought in the names of the joint obligees. Welles, to Use, etc., v. Gaty et al., 9 Mo. 565, was the earliest of these and the rule there announced has never been departed from, nor has it been changed by statute. A later case that collates many authorities and announces the same rule is that of Slaughter v. Davenport, 151 Mo. 26, 51 S. W. 471. There it appeared that the action had been begun before a justice of the peace in the name of three parties plaintiff who recovered a judgment. The defendant appealed from that to the circuit court. There plaintiff amended his petition by leave of court, striking out the names of two of the plaintiffs, leaving Slaughter as the sole plaintiff and a verdict and judgment was returned in his favor. From this an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court. It appeared that the contract involved was to pay Brooking, Slaughter and Green a certain sum of money and that the only condition therein was that the necessary funds subscribed should be equal to one-fourth the cost of macadamizing a public road. Our Supreme Court (151 Mo. loc. cit. 32, 51 S. W. 472) there held that the cause of action being a joint contract, the suit was properly brought in the names of the joint obligees; that the amendment changed it to an action on a several contract; that if the contract was several there was no reason why this might not be done, for if a party plaintiff to a suit is an unnecessary party, the dismissal as to him would not in any way change the cause of action. "But," says Judge Burgess, "It is not so when the suit is (on) joint contract, and the amendment changes it to an action on a several contract, for in that case there is an entire change in the cause of action, from a joint to a several cause of action upon a joint contract which is not permissible." Further along (151 Mo. 33, 51 S. W. 472) it is said, referring to the action as originally instituted, "In the contract which formed the basis of that action the obligees were joint promisees, one of whom could not have maintained a separate suit upon the contract." In the light of these adjudicated cases, as well as of many more cited by counsel for respondent, we think that the learned trial court correctly applied the law as announced by him in the declaration of law complained of. That is the only error assigned and it is not tenable.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Warren County; Jas. D. Barnett, Judge.

Action by Thomas P. Gillfillan against George F. Schmidt. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Emil Roehrig, of Warrenton, for appellant. T. W. Hukriede and J. W. Delventhal, both of Warrenton, and E. Rosenberger & Son, of Montgomery City, for respondent.

REYNOLDS, P. J. This action, instituted before a justice of the peace to recover commissions on the sale of land, being determined there against plaintiff, was appealed to the circuit court, where on a trial de novo before the court and a jury, a verdict was again returned in favor of defendant, judgment following, from which plaintiff, filing his motion for a new trial and saving exception to that being overruled, has duly perfected appeal to this court.

[1] The verdict is challenged by the learned counsel for appellant, as unsupported by the evidence and further that the evidence introduced at the trial did not support the instructions given at the instance of defendant. As is usual in transactions, the proof of which rests wholly in parol, the evidence was somewhat conflicting but not irreconcilable. We cannot say, on reading it, that there was no evidence to support the verdict. Even admitting that it was seriously conflicting, it is clear that the jury believed that offered and introduced by defendant in the case. To do that was entirely within their province.

Nor can we agree that the instructions given at the instance of defendant were unsupported by the evidence.

[2] The most serious complaint is leveled against an instruction given at the instance of defendant, to the effect that the burthen of proof in the case is upon plaintiff to show by the greater weight of the evidence that he procured a purchaser for defendant's farm; that that person was ready, financially able, and willing to purchase defendant's farm on the exact terms fixed by defendant, and unless plaintiff had shown these facts by the greater weight of the evidence, their finding should be for defendant. It is complained of this instruction and of the following ones, which embody in different form this same direction, that they are in direct conflict with what is said by this court in Dalton v. Redemeyer, 154 Mo. App. 190, 133 S. W. 133. If these instructions stood alone in referring to the contract, they might be subject to this criticism. But the analogy between this case and the Dalton Case fails when the instruction given at the instance of plaintiff is considered. In that instruction the court told the jury, at the instance of plaintiff himself, exactly what the terms of the sale of the farm were to be. Hence it cannot be said, as was said in the Dalton Case, that the jury were left to grope in the dark to determine what the contract between the parties was.

[3] It is further assigned as error that the court told the jury that plaintiff to recover should have procured a purchaser ready, willing and able to purchase the farm, "on the exact terms fixed by defendant." That might be error if it were not for the fact that by plaintiff's own testimony and that of his customer, it appears that that customer and the plaintiff proposed to conclude the purchase on terms which were not only not exactly as authorized by defendant, but were very materially different. With this in evidence, we do not think the error is, in this case, reversible error.

[4] Criticism is leveled at one of the instructions which told the jury that if they believed that plaintiff brought a person named as prospective purchaser, who was a customer of plaintiff, on Sunday, then defendant was not bound to accept him as a purchaser or enter into negotiations on that day, but if they found that anything was said or done by defendant on that occasion, the fact that the day was Sunday "becomes immaterial and will not be considered by the jury." We see no cause for complaint by plaintiff as to this. It is urged, however, that it is an undue comment on a single fact. We do not think so.

Finding no error to the prejudice of plaintiff in the record in the case or in the instructions given, nor in the action of the court in overruling the motion for new trial, the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

MYERS-GOLDBERG NECKWEAR CO. v.
GROSSMAN.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 12, 1912.)

DAMAGES (§ 80*)—CONTRACT—PROVISION FOR LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

A provision of an employment contract that, if the employé should quit before the expiration of the term of one year, he should forfeit $250 to his employer as liquidated damages, was an enforceable provision for liquidated damages, and not for a penalty, where the contract was made to secure the personal services of the employé on account of his peculiar skill and special qualifications for the work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 170-175; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Geo. H. Williams, Judge.

Action by the Myers-Goldberg Neckwear Company, a corporation, against Morris Grossman. From a judgment for plaintiff on appeal from a justice of the peace, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. S. Paxson, of St. Louis, for appellant.
Thos. E. Mulvihill, of St. Louis, for respondent.

REYNOLDS, P. J. Plaintiff instituted this action before a justice of the peace, filing a statement of its cause of action, in which statement the contract between it and defendant, appellant here, is set out in full. Summarizing, plaintiff, designated as the party of the first part, and defendant, designated as the party of the second part, premise that the party of the first part, for and in consideration of the promises and obligations of the party of the second part, employs the party of the second part for a period of one year from January 7, 1910, and ending January 7, 1911. In consideration of the employment, the party of the second part obligated and bound himself to devote all his time and best endeavors to the interest of the party of the first part, the party of the second part to work under the direction and to the satisfaction of the party of the first part and to perform such work as the party of the first part should direct, such work including the duty of machine operation and such work as the party of the first part should deem proper. As compensation to the party of the second part for the services to be performed by him the party of the first part agreed to pay him a weekly salary of $27, commencing the 7th of January, 1910. Then follows this provision: "In case said second party shall fail or refuse to comply with the duties here undertaken by him or shall sever his connections with said party of the first part, without its consent, before the expiration of said year, then said second party shall forfeit to said first party as liquidated damages the sum of $250, to be paid in cash to the party of the first part."

The contract further provides for the working hours and days in different months, for the payment of overtime, for the allowance of holidays and supper money, and "in the event of serious illness or death in the family of said second party, the party of the first part agrees to permit said party of the second part to absent himself for a period of two weeks." This contract was signed by the several parties. The statement, alleging performance on its part by plaintiff of all the terms of the contract, avers that after the making of it defendant, without just cause and in direct violation of the contract, withdrew from the services and quit the employment of plaintiff against its consent before the 7th of January, 1911, thereby committing a breach of his contract by reason whereof plaintiff claims defendant is indebted to it in the penalty of the contract, $250, to be paid by defendant to plaintiff as liquidated damages as stipulated in the contract. Judgment is demanded for this sum.

We are not directly advised by the abstract as to the result of the trial before the justice of the peace but apparently plaintiff recovered there and defendant appealed, executing an appeal bond in due form which was approved. The case coming on for trial before the circuit court, a jury being waived, the court at the conclusion of the trial refusing certain declarations of law asked by defendant, found for plaintiff and rendered judgment against defendant and his surety in the sum of $250 and costs. Filing his motion for a new trial and saving exception to that being overruled, defendant has duly perfected his appeal to this court.

Learned counsel for appellant makes four points for a reversal. First, whether the justice of the peace or the circuit court obtained jurisdiction because the written instrument, which is the basis of the action, was never filed with either court as required by the statute, referring to section 7412, R. S. 1909. As neither counsel make any very serious argument over this proposition, it is not necessary to determine it and we pass it sub silentio.

The second point, and which learned counsel for appellant says is the main point, is whether the stipulation in the contract for a forfeiture in case of a breach shall be construed as liquidated damages or as a penalty.

Arguing that it is a penalty and not liquidated damages, the third assignment is, that the amount of the damages claimed is out of proportion to the breach alleged.

In the view which we take of the case, it is not necessary to go into a discussion of this third proposition, for it falls to the ground if it is held that the second proposition in the case must be decided against appellant.

It is argued as the main point in the case that the court below erred in construing the contested clause in the contract to be as for liquidated damages and not as a penalty. That the court did so construe it is evident by the refusal of the declarations of law asked by defendant, to the effect that that was the meaning of the contract.

Learned counsel for appellant as well as for respondent, in support of their several contentions, rely on the decision of our Supreme Court in Thompson v. St. Charles County, 227 Mo. 220, 126 S. W. 1044. Other authorities are cited by the several counsel in support of their contentions, but we agree with counsel for appellant, that the decision in Thompson v. St. Charles County covers the law so thoroughly and so completely that it is idle to go outside of that and the authorities therein cited for light on this question as to whether, when damages are provided for and are stated to be liquidated, in point of fact they are to be considered by the court as liquidated damages or a mere penalty. As said by Judge Lamm in the Thompson Case, supra, his discussion of this proposition commencing at page 235 of 227 Mo., at page 1049 of 126 S. W., it is "a much vexed question upon which courts have been unable to hold a voice even and harmonious, viz., that of 'penalty' as over against 'liquidated damages.'" In the Thompson Case the court, considering the testimony in it, and on that arriving at the intention of the parties, concludes that the amount stated in that contract as a per diem deduction for each day of default in completing the building for the county, was to be construed as liquidated damages.

Examining the testimony in this case as set out in the abstract, we have come to the same conclusion. It is evident from that testimony that the employment of defendant under this contract by plaintiff, was not the mere employment of a day laborer or of any one that could be found competent to do the work, but that the underlying thought of plaintiff in making this bargain with defendant was to secure defendant's individual, personal services. The defendant at one time had been a stockholder in the plaintiff corporation, which was a small concern composed of Messrs. Myers and Goldberg, their wives and of this defendant. The defendant had $400 in stock in the concern. He became uneasy about the investment and the probable success of the concern and sold his stock to two of the members of the concern, was paid par for it and thereupon the corporation entered into this contract set out with defendant. It further appears that defendant was a skilled operator in the making of the articles, in the manufacture of which the company was engaged, and furthermore was possessed of the requisite mechanical skill to be able to keep the machines used in the process of the work in order. In other words, he was a person thoroughly skilled in the practical details of this particular line of work. While it is plain from the evidence that plaintiff could have gone out and hired other men or hands to work for it, it nowhere appears that the person so hired would have met the particular requirements thought to be possessed by defendant in this employment. In short, this contract provided for the personal skill, the personal services of this defendant: the corporation desired him, employed him, on account of his peculiar skill; not merely because he could run a machine, but because he was specially qualified for the work. It wanted him, not some one else. The penalty for the breach of the contract was put in with the full knowledge and consent of this defendant. He knew that if he threw up the employment he incurred the penalty. There was no compulsion used to secure his consent, no fraud practiced in procuring the contract. Under the contract plaintiff was entitled to the services of defendant for the term specified and for failure to give which defendant had lawfully contracted that he would forfeit to plaintiff as liquidated damages the sum of $250. Entering into this contract on the 7th of January, 1910, defendant quit the employment of plaintiff on the 26th day of the following February, without any excuse whatever, without any pretense of any violation or non-performance of the contract on the part of plaintiff, and apparently for the sole reason that he was offered employment at a higher rate by another concern. This is the substance of the testimony in the case and it was on this testimony that the learned trial court refused the declarations of law asked by defendant, to the effect that this was a penalty and not liquidated damages. We think that his action in the premises was correct. The judgment of the circuit court should be, and it is hereby affirmed.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Geo. H. Shields, Judge.

Action by the Blackmer & Post Pipe Company against the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company. From an order granting a new trial, on defendant's motion, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed and remanded, with directions.

Dawson & Garvin, of St. Louis, for appellant. R. P. & C. B. Williams, of St. Louis, for respondent.

REYNOLDS, P. J. This is the second appeal in this case, the first appeal by defendant. It was reversed and remanded, the opinion being reported under the title of Blackmer & Post Pipe Co. v. Mobile & Ohio Railroad Co., 137 Mo. App. 479, 119 S. W. 1. At the same time the companion case of the same plaintiff against this defendant and other railroad companies was also reversed and remanded, the latter case being reported under the title of Blackmer & Post Pipe Co. v. Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company et al., 137 Mo. App. 479, 119 S. W. 1. This present case reaching the circuit court under our order of remander, plaintiff "dismissed without prejudice," it is stated, as to all of the defendants except the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, and filed an amended petition against that company alone, founded on losses said to have been sustained on the same shipments involved in the former case. This amended petition contains four counts, the pleader evidently following the suggestion made by this court in reversing and remanding, that as before presented the petition was confusing in that it appeared to charge, in one and the same count, the carrier on its common law liability and for breach of contract. In and by the first count of the amended petition, plaintiff avers common law liability on the part of the common carrier for sewer pipe damaged in transit, damage being claimed in the aggregate sum of $285.77, the shipment contained in four cars. The second count is on the same shipment in the same four cars, the same amount of damage being alleged to have been sustained for negligence in the carriage of the freight in those same cars. The third count is for damages under the common law liability of the carrier in the transportation of one car load of sewer pipe, damages laid at $59.40, inclusive of interest and costs; the fourth count claiming the same amount of damages, interest and costs for negligence in the transportation of the same car of sewer pipe.

The answer admitting the incorporation of defendant, pleads that the carriage of the sewer pipe was at a reduced rate of freight, on which consideration plaintiff agreed with defendant that the pipe should be carried at the risk of plaintiff. Various other stipulations in the bill of lading are set out which are not now material to notice, except that it is averred that it was provided among other things in the bills of lading, that claims for loss or damage must be made in writing to the agent at the point of delivery promptly after the arrival of the property, and if delayed more than thirty days after delivery of the property, or after due time of delivery thereof, no carrier of the property should be liable in any event, the answer claiming that this had not been complied with. As a further defense to each of the counts, the five-year statute of limitations is set up. These matters were put in issue by the reply.

The reply set out that the notice of the breakage had been duly given defendant, its connecting carriers and agents and that plaintiff's claim for damages was received by defendant as duly presented and was considered by defendant in the same manner as if it had been entered in thirty days, and all requirements regarding the time or manner of presentation of said claim had been waived by the defendant, payment of the claim being refused on other grounds.

There was a trial of the cause before the court and a jury, at the conclusion of which, the jury, having been instructed by the court, returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff on the first count in the aggregate sum of $284. On the third count the jury found for plaintiff and assessed its damage at the aggregate sum of $43.21. There was also a verdict for plaintiff on the second count in the aggregate sum of $207.84, and on the fourth count in the aggregate sum of $43.21. Judgment followed in the sum of $502.10, "being the aggregate damages as assessed by the jury as aforesaid upon the four counts of the petition." In due time defendant filed its motion for a new trial and in arrest. Among other grounds stated in the motion for new trial were that the verdict was excessive; that the jury had rendered two verdicts in the same case; that the verdict is void and will not support a judgment.

The motion in arrest need not be noticed as it does not appear to have been acted on one way or the other by the court.

[1] The court sustained the motion for new trial, as stated in the record, "because the plaintiff sued on two causes of action in four counts and the jury found for the plaintiff on all four counts, assessing double damages and because the verdict is excessive." In a memorandum handed down by the court and in the record, it is stated that the motion for new trial was sustained "because the plaintiff sued on two causes of action in four counts and the jury found for the plaintiff on all four counts, assessing double damages, and because the verdict is excessive," and the court did not think the evil could be cured by remittitur. Thereupon counsel for plaintiff filed a written offer to remit such part of the damages theretofore assessed as the court considered excessive. The court declined to enter an order of remittitur, whereupon plaintiff, duly saving exception, perfected its appeal to this court.

We confine ourselves to the one proposition that is decisive of the appeal; that is, whether the court committed error in granting a new trial for the reasons assigned, and in overruling the application of plaintiff to the court to remit, and in disregarding and declining the offer of plaintiff to remit.

It is to be noted that learned counsel for plaintiff did not indicate in their motion before the trial court how much should be remitted or on what counts a remittitur should be made, but threw upon the court the burden of determining what the proper amount of the verdict should be and how much should be remitted. That is a burden the court is not bound to assume. When a remittitur is offered it should be stated in so definite a manner that the court may intelligibly act on it.

[2, 3] It is argued in our court with great earnestness by counsel for appellant that even taking the sum total of the verdict, it is not in excess of the amount of damages which were proved up in the case. We, as a court, are not authorized to determine that. This error of the jury in assessing damages on each one of the counts was probably brought about by the form of verdict submitted to them and by the somewhat confused instruction of the court in that respect, that instruction not clearly telling the jury, as it should, that if they found damages as on common law liability, they should return a verdict for that, in which event plaintiff was not entitled to any damages or at most mere nominal damages on the counts sounding in actual damages, and vice versa as to breach of contract. Lancaster v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 92 Mo. 460, loc. cit. 467, 5 S. W. 23, 1 Am. St. Rep. 739.

We think the learned trial court committed no error in granting a new trial. Its action in that behalf is affirmed and the cause remanded with directions to proceed in due course of law.

3. DAMAGES (§ 62*)—BREACH OF CONTRACT—NEGLECT OF PLAINTIFF.

In an action for breach of a contract to float logs, where the defendant kept putting off performance, saying there was not sufficient water, until the logs had rotted, plaintiff could not be limited to nominal damages on the ground that the damages were due to his own failure to float the logs himself, since he had no notice of defendant's abandonment of the contract.

In an action for breach of a contract to float logs, based on the theory of mere failure to perform, thereby causing total loss of the logs, plaintiff could not recover on the theory that there had been an abandonment of the contract by defendant to plaintiff's knowledge, thereby casting on him the duty to float himself to minimize damages, and, not having done so, that his damages were the cost of so floating.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Dunklin County; J. L. Fort, Judge.

Action by J. H. Cronan against L. E. Stutsman and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Ward & Collins, of Caruthersville, for appellants. C. G. Shepard, of Caruthersville, for respondent.

REYNOLDS, P. J. Plaintiff and defendants, the latter under the name of Southeast Missouri Cypress Company, were engaged in the business of cutting logs and piles from lands in Pemiscot county and placing them along the railroad at different points for shipment, the principal shipping point of defendants being at Clay Root, a station on what is known as the St. Louis & Gulf Railroad.

Prior to February 27, 1908, having had numerous dealings together growing out of this business according to the averments of the petition, a dispute arose between the parties over them and defendants instituted one and threatened other actions against plaintiff. These actions pending or threatened, on February 27, 1908, as is averred and admitted, the parties compromised and settled all the matters in dispute between them up to that date and entered into a written contract, the execution of which is admitted. In and by that contract defendants agreed, among other things, to float to Clay Root all the oak piles in controversy, these piles to be found in water sufficient to float them to the bayou at the west end of the land on which the timber was cut; defendants to float, skid and load these piles on cars at Clay Root without cost to plaintiff. Defendants agreed that "from the total amount of indebtedness determined by the inspecting of all accounts and notes now at hand John H. Cronan is to be allowed a reduction of $550.00; the Southeast Missouri Cypress Company is to assist John H. Cronan in borrowing $500.00, which shall be added to the said John H. Cronan's indebtedness." Summarizing the remainder of the petition, plaintiff alleges that after the making of this contract the water was sufficient to float the piles to the bayou and remained so long enough to float all of these piles; that in order to handle oak piles of the nature and kind covered by the contract between plaintiff and defendants, it takes large and strong machinery and equipment to haul them out of the water and load them on cars; that defendants at that time had such equipment at Clay Root which they were using in loading piles of like nature; that plaintiff had no such equipment, and was wholly unprepared to handle the piles himself, and was therefore bound to rely solely upon the contract entered into with defendants to handle them and have them placed on cars; that the reasonable market value of the piles was $4,411.68; that defendants failed and refused to float the piles except 88 pieces of the value of $512.96, and that the remainder, of the value of $3,899.02, was wholly lost, to plaintiff's damage in that sum.

The answer, as summarized by counsel for defendants, is an "admission of contract and general denial; plea of insufficiency of water, and that plaintiff, knowing of the insufficiency of water over the piling where they lay, refused to put them in water sufficient to float them; permitted them to lay and rot, and the damage, if any, was occasioned by plaintiff's own negligence."

By way of counterclaim the answer further set out that plaintiff is indebted to defendants in the sum of $314.75 on account accruing after making the contract and judgment is prayed for this amount. No issue on the correctness of this counterclaim is now presented.

At the close of the testimony in the case the jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $1,000, and in favor of defendants on the counterclaim in the sum of $314.74, a balance in favor of plaintiff of $685.25, for which amount judgment went in favor of plaintiff. Filing a motion for new trial as well as one in arrest and these being overruled and exceptions duly saved, defendants have perfected their appeal to this court.

Defendants here make four assignments of error. First, that the verdict is against the evidence and against the law under the evidence and could only have been for nominal damages; second, that the court erred in giving certain instructions for plaintiff; third, the court erred in refusing to give certain instructions asked by defendants, and fourth, that it erred in the admission of testimony.

The making of the contract and its terms are admitted. So also it is practically conceded that plaintiff had paid to defendants the $550 of old indebtedness and the $500 raised for him by defendants, in all $1,050, for the work which defendants were to do in dragging out and loading the piles.

[1] As conceded by learned counsel for appellants, many witnesses swore that on one or more rises the water was deep enough to float the oak piles, and as many or more witnesses swore that at no time from the making of the contract until the piles spoiled, which was about a year after this contract had been entered into, did the water get high enough to float these piles. It was agreed by all the witnesses that green oak piles with the sap in them would not float and that to float them required "floaters," that is sticks of light weight timber, such as ash or cypress, to be placed on each side of the oak pile and fastened so as to buoy them. When properly buoyed, the oak piles, said one of the witnesses, could be floated and when floated it would take, say twenty-two inches of water to float an eighteen-inch oak pile. It seems that it was also the custom, in floating this timber, to cut through the swamps and sandy ridges or higher ground to the deeper water, what is called a "float road," that is, as we understand it, a ditch from which stumps and undergrowth were cleared for the requisite depth, and by means of these "float roads," the piles were carried through the swamps and ridges that might intervene between the starting point and the deep bayou down which they were to be floated. It was in evidence that by means of "float roads," the piles could easily have been floated out at different times between the making of the contract and the time when it is alleged that by allowing them to remain they had rotted and become valueless. In their statement before us, counsel for appellants themselves admit that "whether or not the oak piling was ever found in sufficient water to float it, was the question for the jury, and by their verdict they evidently found that it was. Hence we are bound on this appeal by that verdict that there was a breach of the contract." Counsel then argue that "a breach of this contract without any other or further showing would only entitle plaintiff to a verdict for nominal damages." Herein lies the crux of this appeal and on it are based practically all the assignments of error except the fourth.

[2, 3] It may be conceded, as claimed by counsel, that where a plaintiff sues for damages and proves that he has been damaged, but fails to give any evidence tending to prove the amount of his damage, he can recover only nominal damages. Furthermore it is beyond doubt, as also urged by counsel that it is the duty of the party injured by a breach of contract to make reasonable effort to render the injury as light as possible. If he knows of the failure or neglect of the one with whom he has contracted to perform that contract within ample time to do it himself, and fails to do so, he cannot hold the other for a loss by such neglect. Lawson on Contracts (2d Ed.) § 484. See, also, City of St. Louis v. Brown, 155 Mo. 545, loc. cit. 564, 56 S. W. 298. We do not think that the facts in evidence bring defendants within the protection of these rules.

Counsel for appellants contend, in substance, that plaintiff, when defendants failed to do so, was bound to go in and attempt to float these piles out himself; that he did not undertake to show any excuse why he did not get them out himself and why he "sat around and let it rot"; that it was for him to have shown by proof what it would have cost him to take out and load these piles; that this amount was the measure of damage, and that while plaintiff had shown a breach of the contract entitling him to nominal damages, by reason of his failure to prove the cost of doing the work himself, he was not entitled to more than nominal damage.

[4] We are compelled to differ with learned counsel as to the statement that plaintiff had failed to introduce any evidence tending to show any excuse why he did not get out this timber. Plaintiff, testifying in his own behalf, has given his reason for not doing so. After stating that this timber in the woods was entirely ruined, he testified that neither defendants nor their foreman said they would not take it out before it was ruined; that he (plaintiff) had talked with Mr. Stutsman, one of the defendants, frequently about it; that Stutsman told him there was not sufficient water and that it was so reported by his men. "He said he would bring them down when there was water enough; kept promising he would load these piling when there was sufficient water." On cross-examination plaintiff further testified that Stutsman had told him all the time that there was not sufficient water; that was his claim. "It was according to the report of his men, so he said. I wanted him to go with me and see and he set a day or two to go with me and something came up and he couldn't go, and I got Hammond to go with me. I wanted him to go with me so we could view it together; so we would know it ourselves. I believe if he had gone up there with me he would have put them out; I found sufficient water when I got there."

[5] This was evidence from which the jury had a right to conclude that plaintiff, for almost a year or until the piling had rotted, had been led into the belief that defendants intended to carry out this contract. In short, according to plaintiff, defendants never abandoned the contract, so far as plaintiff knew, until the piles had rotted; had never before then thrown it up, but put off performance from time to time until, by the action of the weather and of the water, the piling had become valueless. If there was no abandonment of the contract on the part of the defendants of which plaintiff was notified, he was under no obligation to go in himself, treat the contract as abandoned and attempt to get out this piling and save it from rot and decay. If he had done that, and brought his action for the expense thereby incurred, he would probably have been met with the defense that he was a mere volunteer in going into the work and had himself prevented defendants from performance. It is true that if he found defendants had thrown up their contract, he could have gone in and saved this timber or any of it, it was his duty to do so; but he would not, in this action, have been entitled, as these refused instructions said, to the value of his work in doing so, and his failure to prove what that work would have cost, did not limit him to nominal damages in this action. Plaintiff did not bring this action on any such theory; that is not his cause of action. It is for breach of contract and seeks the recovery of damages for the entire loss of the timber.

It is beyond question that plaintiff introduced testimony tending to prove that by the default of defendants, the timber was a total loss, so far as its market value as piles was concerned, and that its value was as alleged in the petition. This was evidence of actual damage. That the jury did not accept his valuation is immaterial, and to the loss of plaintiff, but he has not appealed.

Defendants, however, sought at the trial and now seek before us, to put this case on another basis, claiming that plaintiff can only recover for what it would have cost him to float out and load these piles himself. It was on this theory that the refused instructions were predicated.

The instruction marked A, which defendants asked and which the court refused to give, was to the effect that even if the jury found and believed from the evidence that defendants broke the contract sued upon and failed and refused to carry out the provision to be performed by them, yet under the pleadings and evidence in the case, the verdict for plaintiff can only be for nominal damages and by nominal damages is meant a sum not exceeding one dollar. This instruction and the others refused proceeded upon the theory that it was the duty of the plaintiff to have gone in and attempted to save this timber himself, and that the measure of his recovery would be the cost of doing this, and that as he had not given any evidence of that cost, he could recover nominal damages only.

If plaintiff allowed this timber to rot when he could have saved it after knowledge of abandonment of the contract by defendants, he was bound to do so and in that event would be entitled to the cost of effecting salvage and, if not paid, could have brought his action for that cost. But that was not this case. To have instructed that plaintiff could recover the cost of saving this timber, would have allowed action on one cause and recovered on another. This it has been held in case after case, cannot be allowed.

We discover no reversible error in the instructions given at the instance of plaintiff. They were substantially correct on the theory upon which plaintiff brought his action.

Nor do we find any error to the injury of defendants in the action of the trial court in the admission of evidence.

Upon the whole record we find no error to the prejudice of defendants. In point of fact, considering the amount of the verdict in connection with the evidence in the case, we see no reason for complaint by defendants.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Moses N. Sale, Judge.

Action by Louis Bettman and others against the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Henry H. Furth, of St. Louis, for appellants. R. P. & C. B. Williams, of St. Louis, for respondent.

REYNOLDS, P. J. This is an action by plaintiff to recover damage to merchandise said to have been delivered in good order to defendant as a common carrier, it being averred that in violation of its undertaking defendant had failed and neglected to deliver it in good order to the consignees at its destination and suffered the same to become greatly damaged in transportation. It is stated in the petition that the original consignees had assigned and conveyed to plaintiffs all their claim and right of action against defendant for the loss and damage to the merchandise aforesaid, whereupon plaintiffs demand judgment for the amount with interest and costs.

The answer, admitting the co-partnership of plaintiffs and that defendant is a corporation and common carrier, operating its line of railroad between East St. Louis, Ill., and Jackson, Tenn., defendant denies all the other allegations in the petition.

The cause was tried before the court, a jury being waived. No declarations of law were asked or given.

At the conclusion of the trial the court found for defendant and rendered judgment accordingly. From this plaintiffs have duly perfected their appeal.

From a stipulation filed in the case, and which was introduced in evidence at the trial, it appears that on the 19th of September, 1904, plaintiffs delivered to defendant at its freight depot in East St. Louis, Ill., three packages of merchandise containing clothing and ladies wrappers, consigned to parties at Jackson, Tenn. Defendant, on receipt of the merchandise, executed a receipt on a dray ticket, which dray ticket, dated September 17, 1904, recites: "Received in good order from Bettman, Kleinbauser & Co., Wholesale Clothiers, 709, 711 Washington Ave. By M. & O. To be delivered to Rosenbloom Brothers, at Jackson, Tennessee, * * * 3 cases clothing." Here follow the number of packages, their weight and various initials and figures not necessary to set out. It also appears that later defendant issued and delivered to plaintiffs a regular bill of lading in exchange for the dray ticket. This bill of lading does not appear in the abstract of appellant but in a supplemental abstract filed by respondent and not controverted, it is set out that it was in usual form and shows on the receipt part of it the following: "St. Louis, Missouri, September 19,—04. Received by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company (hereinafter called the company) from Bettman-Kleinhauser & Co. (hereinafter called the shipper), and who makes this contract as owner or agent for the owner, the following described property (contents and value unknown), and in apparent good order, except as noted; signed and marked as indicated, to be transported by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company to Jackson, Tenn.," to the consignees before named. The merchandise was transported by the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company from East St. Louis to Jackson, Tenn., and there delivered to the consignees on the 20th day of September, 1904. Upon being examined by the consignees immediately after delivery thereof the merchandise was found to be wet and damaged, whereupon the consignees returned it to the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Co., at Jackson. After the consignees had returned the merchandise to the railroad company it offered it to plaintiffs, but plaintiffs refusing to receive it, defendant sold it and tendered the amount realized at the sale to plaintiffs, which they refused to receive "in full satisfaction and discharge of the claim" against the railroad company. It appears that the parties have arranged among themselves about this money and that feature is out of the case. It is further set out in the stipulation that these three cases of merchandise were delivered by plaintiffs to a drayman in St. Louis, to be delivered by him to the railroad company and they were so delivered by him to that company at its freight depot in East St. Louis. It is further stipulated that the condition of the weather in St. Louis on the 18th and 19th of September, as shown from the reports of the weather bureau, was as follows: "Maximum temperature 73 degrees, minimum temperature 53 degrees. Rain occurred from 10:30 p. m. of the 18th, to 7:35 a. m. of the 19th. The amount of rainfall 1.7 inches." It is further agreed that there was no perceptible rainfall in East St. Louis on the 19th of September after 7:35 a. m., and no perceptible rainfall on the 19th or 20th of September from East St. Louis to Jackson, Tenn. The value of the articles was stipulated, and it was also stipulated that the car in which the merchandise was loaded contained other goods beside this shipment and that none of these other goods were damaged, and that the car itself was in good condition. It is further stipulated that certain depositions or parts of depositions might be read which had been used in another case, and it was admitted that plaintiffs are the assignees of the consignees of this cause of action. Finally, it was stipulated that either party at the trial of the cause might introduce any other proper evidence desired.

Following the introduction and reading of this stipulation, a large volume of oral testimony was introduced on the issue as to whether the damage which had occurred to the merchandise in these three cases had occurred while in the hands of the defendant railroad company or whether that damage had occurred prior to the delivery of the goods to it. It appears that plaintiffs delivered the cases of goods to the drayman between 9 and 10 o'clock of the morning of the 19th, although they had been packed on the 17th, remaining in the custody of plaintiffs in St. Louis over Sunday, the 18th, and that they were delivered to defendant at East St. Louis about noon of the 19th. When the cases reached Jackson they appeared to be in good condition, although they were wet, and when opened the contents were found to have been damaged by water; that no rain fell after delivery of the goods to the carrier at East St. Louis, or while the car was in transit and the goods delivered to the consignee, nor was there any evidence tending to show that the cases became wet while in the hands of the carrier, although when they arrived at destination they appeared as if they had lain in water.

The trial court handed down a memorandum in connection with his finding in the case, which, while not in the bill of exceptions, is brought before us by appellants.

The case is before us on a general finding—or verdict—by the court; as one coming before us and presented upon a general verdict.

[1] The sole question in the case is one of fact; that is, whether the merchandise was damaged before it came into the hands of defendant. The court, in his written memorandum, sets out his reason for finding that the goods were not damaged while in the custody of defendant or in transit, and concludes that plaintiffs cannot recover. This finding for defendant on the facts is conclusive on us; the weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses giving it was for the sole determination of the trial court.

Counsel for appellants contend that this is not an action for negligence but one founded on the common law liability of defendant as a common carrier. We think it clear from the petition that plaintiffs founded their right of action on the common law liability of the carrier. But inasmuch as the learned trial court found that the damage to the shipment did not occur while the goods were in the charge of the carrier, it is here immaterial whether the case pleaded is on the common law liability or on the negligence of the carrier. The contention of learned counsel for appellants seems to be, either that this re-cial in the bill of lading constitutes an estoppel or that the dray ticket and the bill of lading made a prima facie case that the merchandise was in good order when received by respondent, and that this prima facie case had not been overcome by any substantial testimony. It will be noted that the receipt on the dray ticket does state that the articles were received in good order, but that same receipt further sets out that the articles were in cases. By the stipulation of facts it was also agreed that the bill of lading was later issued for the merchandise by defendant in exchange for the dray ticket. It is distinctly set out in this bill of lading that the contents and value of the merchandise in the cases were unknown and that the shipment was "in apparent good order."

[2] It is stated by an accepted writer on the law of carriers, treating of recitals in bills of lading, that "It has likewise been determined that the usual recital in such instruments that the goods are in good order has reference only to the external appearance, either of the goods themselves or of the packages into which they are put. Hence, it is always competent for the carrier to show, notwithstanding such an admission, that the loss or damage was caused by the spoiling of the goods from natural decay before they could be delivered, or that they had wasted from defects in the vessels in which they were contained, or that it arose from the unskillful or improper manner in which they were packed, or that they had deteriorated or were damaged at the time they were delivered to him. He is not presumed to know the quality of the goods, nor can he refuse to carry them, whatever it may be, if they are fit to carry and are of the kind he usually carries, nor can he, ordinarily, know the condition of the contents of the packages or vessels brought to him for transportation. It cannot be supposed, therefore, that he intends by such a recital to admit more than that the goods are in an apparently fit condition for shipment."

1 Hutchinson on Carriers (3d Ed.) § 163. Many authorities are cited in support of this proposition and while the author cites no Missouri cases, and we are referred to none on the proposition, this rule seems to be so reasonable that we have no hesitation in accepting it as a proper rule to be applied in cases of this character, and to hold that this recital in the bill of lading, or even in the dray ticket, does not amount to an estoppel against defendant as to the condition of the cases. Whether, therefore, as contended by the learned counsel for plaintiffs, the bill of lading made out a prima facie case and the burthen was on defendant to prove that the damage had occurred prior to the receipt by it of the cases of merchandise, the court found that this prima facie case had been overcome and that the damage had occurred to the goods before delivery of the cases to defendant. Reading the testimony in the case we hold that there is substantial evidence warranting the court in arriving at this conclusion. It was for that court, not the appellate court, to pass on the weight and sufficiency of the evidence, and if it finds, as here it did, that the evidence before him establishes the fact found, we cannot disturb that finding. In this view of the case, it is unnecessary to consider other propositions advanced by learned counsel for the appellant.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 84*)—APPEAL—APPEARANCE.

A defendant, appealing from a justice of the peace, and appearing on appeal for the sole purpose of quashing the return of the summons and dismissing the case, on the ground that the court had obtained no jurisdiction, does not thereby waive the defective service and confer jurisdiction over his person, but the court is without jurisdiction for want of proper service.

Appeal from Cape Girardeau Court of Common Pleas; R. G. Ranney, Judge.

Action by the Handlan-Buck Manufacturing Company against the Chester, Perryville & Ste. Genevieve Railroad Company. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. H. Doris, of Cape Girardeau, for appellant. Davis & Hardesty, of Cape Girardeau, for respondent.

NORTONI, J. This is a suit on an account, which originated before a justice of the peace. Defendant is a railroad company incorporated under the Missouri statutes.

Plaintiff instituted the present suit on an account for indebtedness against defendant before a justice of the peace, and the constable served the summons upon Ralph Schultz, defendant's auditor. The return on the summons is as follows: "I hereby certify that I served the within writ by delivering a copy to Ralph Schultz, agent and auditor of the within-named corporation, in charge of an office and place of business of said corporation in Cape Girardeau county, Mo., the 7th day of October, 1909, in Cape Girardeau township, Cape Girardeau county, Mo. Mileage, _____ miles. Fees, $0.60. [Signed] Geo. Rodenmayer, Constable."

[1] The statute requires service of the summons in such cases to be made upon the president or other chief officer of the company, or, in his absence, by leaving a copy thereof at any business office of the company with the person having charge thereof. See section 1766, R. S. 1909. And section 1767, R. S. 1909, requires the officer serving the process to express in his return upon whom, how, and when the same has been executed. The return above set forth is insufficient under the statute, for it does not recite affirmatively on its face that the president or other chief officer of the company was absent when the service was made upon the agent or auditor. Such is the established rule of decision in this state. See Rixke v. Western Union Tel. Co., 96 Mo. App. 406, 70 S. W. 265; Land & Mining Co. v. Land & Cattle Co., 187 Mo. 420, 86 S. W. 145.

[2] The defendant did not appear to the action before the justice of the peace, and the justice entered a judgment by default against it, as though a valid service of summons was had. Afterwards, within due time, defendant perfected an appeal from the judgment of the justice to the court of common pleas of Cape Girardeau county, and appeared in that court for the purpose only of quashing the return on the summons and dismissing the cause, for the reason that the court had obtained no jurisdiction over the person of defendant, as appeared from the return. The court sustained defendant's motion to this effect, quashed the return, dismissed plaintiff's cause, and vacated the alleged judgment of the justice. From this ruling, plaintiff prosecutes an appeal to this court.

It seems to be conceded here on the part of plaintiff that the service was defectively made on defendant, and that it at no time ever entered its appearance in the cause, unless it did so by perfecting an appeal to the court of common pleas. The only argument advanced in this court on the part of appellant is that, through perfecting an appeal from the judgment of the justice to the court of common pleas, the defendant thereby waived the defective service and voluntarily entered its appearance in the cause.

There can be no doubt that such was the prior course of decision in this state. It was held in Rice v. Railroad, 30 Mo. App. 110, "that the taking of an appeal by a defendant from the judgment of a justice of the peace waives all errors or imperfections in the service of process and is equivalent to a general appearance to the merits in the circuit court." To the same effect is Fitzpatrick v. Railway, 34 Mo. App. 280; Witting v. Railroad Co., 28 Mo. App. 103. But the Kansas City Court of Appeals held in Trimble v. Elkin, 88 Mo. App. 229, that an appeal from the judgment of the justice did not waive the matter of defective service and confer jurisdiction over the person of the defendant. This court took the opposite view, and expounded it in Meyer v. Insurance Co., 92 Mo. App. 392, and certified that case to the Supreme Court for final determination, on the ground that it was in conflict with Trimble v. Elkin, supra. The Supreme Court overruled the line of decisions above referred to, accepted the view of the Kansas City Court of Appeals, and declared that the mere act of perfecting an appeal from a judgment of the justice did not operate to waive the matter of defective service and confer jurisdiction over the person. See Meyer v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 184 Mo. 481, 83 S. W. 479. Since that decision, the identical proposition has been determined in other cases, as will appear by reference to Bente v. Remington Typewriter Co., 116 Mo. App. 77, 91 S. W. 397; State ex rel. v. Ayers, 116 Mo. App. 90, 91 S. W. 398.

From what has been said, it appears that the justice acquired no jurisdiction over the person of defendant, and that under the more recent rule of decision the matter of defective service was not waived and jurisdiction conferred by perfecting an appeal from the justice court. This being true, the court of common pleas very properly quashed the service and dismissed the cause.

The judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

Appeal from Circuit Court, New Madrid County; Henry C. Riley, Judge.

Action by J. W. Lewis and another against A. B. Fisher. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Brown & Gallivan, of New Madrid, for appellant. Henry C. Riley, of New Madrid, for respondents.

NORTONI, J. This is a suit for the purchase price of certain saw timber sold by plaintiffs to defendant. The finding and judgment were for plaintiffs, and defendant prosecutes the appeal. Though the sufficiency of the petition is challenged, the point may be dismissed without comment, except to say that it is obviously good after verdict.

Plaintiffs are partners, and the testimony tends to prove that they sold and delivered to defendant 204 sawlogs, under an agreement whereby they were to receive $9 per thousand feet for cypress and ash, and $6 per thousand feet for other timber. Eighty-six of the logs delivered were of ash and cypress, and contained about 200 feet per log; that is to say, about $154.80 worth of timber. One hundred and eighteen logs, averaging about 200 feet each, consisted of timber other than cypress and ash, and under the contract were valued at $6 per thousand, or a total of $141. The value of the entire lot of timber delivered to defendant, according to plaintiffs' evidence, appears to have been $296.40. On this defendant paid $150, and the suit proceeds for the balance due; however, the recovery allowed was for $109.35 only.

[1] There is no controversy in the case concerning the fact that plaintiffs delivered the logs, and were to receive compensation therefor, as above stated; but defendant contends that he is not personally liable therefor, because the purchase was made by him as the agent of the New Madrid Cooperage Company, and of this fact the plaintiffs were fully advised at the time. Touching this matter, the evidence for plaintiffs tends to prove that the sale was made directly to defendant as though he were dealing for himself, and that no mention whatever was made of the New Madrid Cooperage Company. It is true defendant testified that he stated to plaintiffs he was purchasing the timber for the New Madrid Cooperage Company; but plaintiffs insist to the contrary. Lewis, one of the plaintiffs who negotiated the sale with defendant, testified in direct terms, in speaking of defendant at the time the contract was made, "He didn't say anything to me about the cooperage company." It is urged the judgment should be reversed, for the reason it appears defendant acted as agent only, and disclosed his principal at the time the purchase was made. Obviously this argument is without merit; for, as said, the evidence on the part of plaintiffs is plain and direct to the contrary. The question was one of fact for the court who tried the issue; and in view of the controversy about it, and the evidence pro and con thereon, it is precluded here from review.

[2] If there were instructions given in the case, they are not contained in the abstract before us, and no question is raised as to the rules of law stated therein. No one can doubt that an agent who conceals the fact of his agency and contracts as the ostensible principal is liable to respond on the contract in the same manner and to the same extent as though he were the real principal in interest. See Mechem, Agency, § 554. As the court found the issue for plaintiffs on contradictory testimony, the matter in judgment must be viewed here as if defendant purchased the logs as the ostensible principal, and without disclosing his agency, in which event liability may, of course, be enforced against him personally on the contract.

[3] However, defendant is liable, according to his own testimony, on another principle of law which the facts invoke. Defendant testified that the New Madrid Cooperage Company, a corporation for which he claimed to act as agent, was not yet organized or incorporated at the time the contract of purchase was made. He said the preliminary arrangements had been made for incorporating the company, and that he purchased the logs from plaintiffs for the corporation to be thereafter chartered. He says, too, that he was one of the persons engaged in promoting and organizing the cooperage company, and it appears that he owned a majority of the stock of the concern when it finally came into existence. The law is abundantly settled that, where persons associate together with the purpose of forming a corporation, and one or more of them contracts for the corporation with a third person in advance of the formation of the corporation, such person or persons may be held liable to respond on the contract as if they were partners. This alone is sufficient to sustain the judgment. See Furniture, etc., Co. v. Crawford, 127 Mo. 356, 30 S. W. 163. On defendant's testimony, he may be held liable for the balance due on the contract of purchase, as it appears he, as one of the incorporators, contracted for and in the interests of a corporation not yet formed.

We find nothing further in the record worthy of discussion in the opinion, and the judgment should therefore be affirmed. It is so ordered.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; George H. Williams, Judge.

Action by Harry R. Emery and another against the G. H. Boehmer Shoe Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

D. D. Holmes, of St. Louis, for appellant. Claud D. Hall, of St. Louis, for respondents.

NORTONI, J. This is a suit on an account for goods sold and delivered, amounting in all to $1,406.15, with interest thereon. At the conclusion of all of the evidence, the court peremptorily instructed a verdict for plaintiffs, and defendant prosecutes the appeal.

[1, 2] Plaintiffs are copartners, and as such engaged in the business of manufacturing shoes in Massachusetts. Defendant is a retail shoe merchant in St. Louis. It appears that defendant purchased the shoes involved, by sample, through plaintiffs' salesman, and they were manufactured by plaintiffs and shipped accordingly. The shoes were shipped in two consignments. The first consignment was received by defendant at its store in St. Louis on April 29, 1908, and the second consignment on May 11th of the same year. Immediately upon the receipt of the shoes, April 29th and May 11th, defendant unpacked and placed them in stock for sale. 'Upon unpacking the shoes defendant marked each pair with a lead pencil, indicating the size, width, stock, make, pair, price, etc., and commenced selling therefrom to the trade. After having sold a number of pairs of shoes and kept them in stock for about two weeks, defendant, on May 25, 1908, wrote plaintiffs to the effect that lot Nos. 231 and 232 were checked, and the buckles on pumps were tarnished, and therefore they did not deem it advisable to keep them, and asked shipping instructions from plaintiffs. In due course plaintiffs replied that they expected defendant to keep the shoes, as they were manufactured for them, and no complaint had been made within a reasonable time. Finally, on June 12th defendant returned the shoes to plaintiffs, but they refused to receive them. Upon this showing the court instructed a verdict for plaintiffs, on the theory that defendant had waived its right to rescind the contract of purchase through not acting promptly with respect to the matter.

It is urged the court erred in this ruling; but we are not so persuaded. Defendant had sold some of the shoes, and made no effort to return all of them to plaintiffs. Indeed, it tendered only such as remained unsold in its store at the time. The law not only requires a disaffirmance of a contract of sale at the earliest practical moment after discovery of the defect, but a return of all that has been received under it, and a restoration of the vendor to the condition in which he stood before the contract was made. See Tower v. Pauly, 51 Mo. App. 75; Cobb v. Hatfield, 46 N. Y. 533, 537. Indeed, it stands upon the most obvious justice and equity that the seller should be apprised promptly if there is any objection, and the vendee intends to reject the goods, so that he may retake possession or resell the goods and save himself, as far as practical, from loss. See Pierson v. Crooks, 115 N. Y. 539, 22 N. E. 349, 12 Am. St. Rep. 831. Especially are these principles pertinent to the sale of goods, like shoes, which are known to be manufactured in accordance with changing styles. As to such goods, rescission should be made with promptness, for the reason that delay may entail considerable loss upon the seller. Frequently the value of goods depends in a large measure upon quick sales; and therefore, unless the contract is immediately rescinded, it is impossible to place the seller in statu quo.

But it is said the question as to whether rescission was made within a reasonable time was one for the jury, and the court erred in peremptorily directing a verdict for plaintiffs. There can be no doubt that ordinarily the question of reasonable time is one of fact to be determined by the jury, yet, when the facts are admitted, and the lapse of time is such that fair-minded men with a knowledge of the circumstances of the case would not hesitate to hold the delay unreasonable, it becomes the duty of the court to declare it such as a matter of law. This court has frequently so declared, and the rule of decision is now well established, as will appear by reference to the following cases in point: Metropolitan Rubber Co. v. Monarch Rubber Co., 74 Mo. App. 266; Tower v. Pauly, 51 Mo. App. 75; Long v. International, etc., Machine Co., 158 Mo. App. 662, 139 S. W. 819; Manley v. Crescent Novelty Mfg. Co., 103 Mo. App. 135, 77 S. W. 489. According to the prior course of decision, the court very properly directed a verdict for plaintiffs on the admitted facts above stated; for it appears that plaintiffs must have been possessed of full knowledge concerning the shoes, as they unpacked, marked, and placed the first lot in stock on April 29th, and the second lot in stock on May 11th, and made no complaint touching the same until May 25th, or about two weeks after handling by pairs the second shipment. In Metropolitan Rubber Co. v. Monarch Rubber Co., 74 Mo. App. 266, a lot of rubber coats, which had been purchased by plaintiff from defendant by sample, were received by plaintiff on July 6th and held in stock for seven days, or until July 13th, when they were rejected and a rescission declared by the purchaser. Upon these facts this court ruled that it was proper for the trial court to declare, as a matter of law, that the right of rescission had been waived through the omission of the purchaser to act promptly; or, in other words, that the delay in rejecting the coats was an unreasonable one.

[3] But it is argued, as the evidence reveals that the shoes were not according to sample, defendant was, by the peremptory instruction, denied its right to have the diminution in value determined by the jury. Defendant's answer is a general denial, and contains no plea whatever of a failure or partial failure of consideration. However, the argument is that it was competent for defendant to show a partial failure of consideration under the general denial, and have the amount of recovery mitigated through the diminished value of the shoes because of their defective condition. There is nothing whatever in the record suggesting that any such theory was advanced at the trial, and the proposition thus asserted seems to have originated with counsel since the appeal was made. But be that as it may, we are not inclined to hold that a failure or partial failure of consideration may be shown in this state under the general denial; for the Supreme Court has heretofore declared the contrary, as will appear by reference to Williams v. Mellon, 56 Mo. 262. See, also, Smith Co. v. Rembaugh, 21 Mo. App. 390, to the same effect. However, a remark in Voss v. McGuire, 18 Mo. App. 477, would seem to indicate that a contrary rule obtained; but, in view of the Supreme Court decision above cited, the proposition asserted by the Kansas City Court of Appeals in that case, by Judge Hall, is without authority here.

For the reasons stated, the judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Moses N. Sale, Judge.

Action by Ernest A. McConnell against Lydia McConnell. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Henry B. Davis and Charles Erd, both of St. Louis, for appellant.

NORTONI, J. This is a suit for divorce. After hearing the testimony, the court dismissed the petition, and plaintiff prosecutes the appeal from that judgment. In support of its ruling the trial court filed a written memorandum containing a concise statement of the facts and its conclusion of law thereon. This memorandum opinion prepared by the trial judge will suffice here, and we therefore set it out as follows:

"This is a suit for divorce filed by the plaintiff, who lives in New York City, in the state of New York, and who has never lived or resided in the city of St. Louis, or in the state of Missouri. He brings this suit for divorce in this jurisdiction, alleging that the defendant, his wife, committed adultery since the marriage in the city of St. Louis, and that the offenses complained of were committed in this state while the defendant resided within this state.

"This appeared to me at the time of the trial as rather an extraordinary proceeding. Neither the plaintiff nor the defendant reside in this state, or resided in the state at the time of the trial. The plaintiff himself filed an affidavit of nonresidence against the defendant, and applied for an order of publication against her, and the only service in the case is by proof of publication. Counsel for plaintiff, at the hearing, stated that he was proceeding under section 2373, R. S. 1909, which provides as follows: 'No person shall be entitled to a divorce from the bonds of matrimony who has not resided within the state one whole year next before the filing of the petition, unless the offense or injury complained of was committed within this state or whilst one or both of the parties resided within this state.' Counsel contended that under this section, if the injury complained of—that is, if the ground for divorce was committed within this state—then the question of residence is not involved or becomes altogether immaterial. If a husband and wife, residing in the state of New York, should be traveling through the state of Missouri, and the husband, while on his journey in this state, should commit adultery or should be guilty of such barbarous or cruel treatment as to endanger the life of his wife, then the suit for divorce could be brought in this state. * * * I think I am safe in saying that there is not a state in the Union that does not require as a prerequisite for the exercise of its jurisdiction in divorce cases a bona fide residence in the state of the applicant for divorce.

"Section 2373, R. S. 1909, is to be construed with other sections of the statutes on divorce. Section 2371, R. S. 1909, specially provides that the proceedings shall be had in the county where the plaintiff resides. If the offense or injury complained of was committed within this state, then the plaintiff in the divorce suit need not have resided within the state one whole year next before the filing of the petition. The plaintiff in such case may have resided here less than a year. But the statute nowhere authorizes one who is not a resident of the state to institute suit for divorce in this state under any circumstances, and I believe I am safe in saying that that is * * * the law of this state."

We concur with the trial judge in the views above expressed. Indeed, the proposition that a complainant in an action for divorce must be a resident of this state has been pointedly determined by our Supreme Court and this, too, under the identical statutes above referred to. Kruse v. Kruse, 25 Mo. 68. The section of the act concerning divorce and alimony (R. C. [Rev. St.] 1845) referred to in the opinion of the Supreme Court is identical with section 2371 of the Revised Statutes 1909, which is still the second section of the act on divorce. It is obvious the circuit court was without jurisdiction of the cause for the reason plaintiff was not a resident of the state, and the proceeding was very properly dismissed.

The judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Moses N. Sale, Judge.

Action by James N. Crouch against Ernest G. Bruckman. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Buder & Buder, of St. Louis, for appellant. McDonald & Taylor, Jacob Chasnoff, and Lynn N. Secord, all of St. Louis, for respondent.

NORTONI, J. This is a suit for commission alleged to have accrued on account of services rendered in negotiating a loan of $80,000. The finding and judgment were for defendant, and plaintiff prosecutes the appeal.

Plaintiff is a real estate and loan agent in the city of St. Louis, and defendant desired a loan on certain real property owned by him, and numbered 515 Locust street, in the same city. It appears that there was a loan of $100,000, secured by a deed of trust, on defendant's property, and that he desired to negotiate another for the purpose of liquidating that indebtedness. Defendant employed plaintiff to negotiate a loan of $100,000 on the property at 5 per cent. for three years, and agreed to pay him 1 per cent. on the amount of the loan as a commission for securing it. Plaintiff put forth efforts to that end, but was unable to secure a loan for more than $80,000. Finally the original agreement was modified between the parties, so as to contemplate a loan of $80,000 instead of $100,000.

There is no controversy in the evidence

touching the fact that defendant finally authorized plaintiff to procure a loan of $80,000 for three years at 5 per cent. interest on the property, and agreed to pay him 1 per cent. on this amount for effecting it. Defendant resided in the state of New York, and after preliminary negotiations on his own behalf committed the whole matter to his brother-in-law, Mr. Orville Groves, of St. Louis, for consummation.

According to the evidence of plaintiff, it was agreed between him and defendant that the loan should be consummated in any one of three ways which was most satisfactory to the lender. It was agreed, first, that the old, or prior, deed of trust on the property could be taken up, assigned, and transferred to the lender; or, second, that the defendant and his wife would execute a deed conveying the property to his brother-in-law, Orville Groves, in St. Louis, and that thereupon Mr. Groves should execute a deed of trust upon the property directly to the lender; or, third, that the defendant and his wife would execute a deed of trust on the property for the amount loaned directly to the lender. In either event, a certificate of good title to be furnished by defendant with the loan.

The evidence is well-nigh conclusive that plaintiff procured a party ready, able, and willing to make the loan of $80,000 for three years at 5 per cent. interest upon a deed of trust executed directly by defendant and his wife, accompanied by the certificate of title stipulated for. Indeed, Mr. Samuel C. Davis agreed to make the loan upon these terms, and the proposition was submitted to defendant's brother-in-law, Orville Groves, in due time to that effect. Mr. Groves offered to take the money and himself execute a deed of trust, payable to Mr. Davis, on the property, and exhibited a deed from defendant and his wife conveying the property to him for that purpose. It appears Mr. Davis declined to make the loan in this manner, because he was without sufficient assurance that the deed from defendant to Mr. Groves was in every respect valid, and insisted upon a deed of trust directly from the real owner of the property, defendant and his wife, instead. Because of this, Mr. Groves, defendant's agent, acting for him, rejected the proffered loan, declined further negotiations touching the matter, and procured the money through another agent.

Throughout the instructions, the court omitted to reckon with the fact that plaintiff's contract contemplated that the loan might finally be consummated in either one of the three ways above mentioned: First, through taking up of the old, or prior, deed of trust and its assignment to the lender; or, second, through the execution of a new deed of trust by Mr. Groves; or, third, through the execution of a new deed of trust by defendant and his wife directly to the lender—for it submitted the matter to the jury as though the offer of Groves, defendant's brother-in-law, to execute a deed of trust in his own name was a full compliance on the part of defendant. This was error; for the evidence reveals that the lender had a right to demand the security should be made in any one of the three ways above mentioned, and that plaintiff's obligation was fully discharged upon procuring a loan to be consummated in either one of the three ways stipulated.

Among others, plaintiff requested the following instruction as originally drafted without the words in parentheses: "The court instructs the jury that by the writings offered in evidence, which are admitted to be true and to have passed between the parties, the defendant employed the plaintiff to negotiate for a loan of $100,000 on the property located at 515 Locust street, in the city of St. Louis, Missouri, and to pay him $1,000 commission, providing the defendant had not arranged for said money prior to hearing from the plaintiff, and that thereafter said defendant directed plaintiff to consult one Orville Groves, to whom he had referred the entire matter, and that thereafter the said defendant, Bruckman, authorized and directed the said Groves to accept a loan of $80,000 for three years at 5 per cent.; and the court further instructs the jury that if you find and believe from the evidence that plaintiff, Crouch, did, on the 9th day of December, 1908, pursuant to said authority and the direction of said Groves (and on the terms mentioned by said Groves), find a person ready, willing, and able to loan $80,000 (on the terms agreed to by Groves) for three years at 5 per cent. on said property, 515 Locust street, and so notified defendant prior to defendant's arranging for the same elsewhere, then your verdict will be for the plaintiff, and against the defendant for the sum of $800 (unless, under other instructions given you, you find the facts to be that plaintiff was requested and employed to procure a loan for defendant upon a deed of trust to be executed by Orville Groves)."

The court refused the instruction as requested, and inserted the words which appear in parentheses therein. The insertion of these words limited plaintiff's right of recovery to the terms of a contract imposed by Groves, without regard to the terms of the original contract made between plaintiff and defendant, which contemplated the loan could be made in any one of three ways, in accordance with the preference of the lender. The modification of this instruction through inserting the words in parentheses was highly prejudicial, in view of the evidence that defendant agreed that he and his wife should execute a deed of trust directly to the lender, in event the lender preferred it; for Mr. Davis was ever willing to make the loan on such security, and declined it for no other reason than that Groves insisted it should be made upon a deed of trust executed by him, to whom defendant and his wife had conveyed the property for the mere purpose of the transaction.

In view of the error thus pointed out, the judgment should be reversed and the cause remanded. It is so ordered.

STATE ex rel. GOODMAN & CO. et al. v.
CIRCUIT COURT OF ST. FRAN-COIS COUNTY.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 12, 1912.)

1. CERTIORARI (§ 5*)—ADEQUACY OF OTHER REMEDY.

Certiorari does not take the place of mandamus to compel the making of a record, but it takes the record as it finds it, excluding the mere evidence which can, in the nature of things, relate to the merits only, tending to show, as it does, that the court erred in its judgment, since the office of the writ is not to review errors of that sort, and is only allowed when no appeal or writ of error or other available mode of review is afforded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Certiorari, Cent. Dig. §§ 5-6; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

2. CERTIORARI (§ 5*)—ADEQUACY OF OTHER REMEDY.

Where a motion, under Rev. St. 1909, § 7573, for rule and attachment to compel a justice of the peace to allow an appeal and return his proceedings in an action, together with the papers required to be returned by him, is denied by the circuit court, the ruling is reviewable by appeal or writ of error; and certiorari does not lie to review the ruling, though no formal judgment has been entered, since on a proper motion a formal judgment may be entered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Certiorari, Cent. Dig. §§ 5, 6; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

3. CERTIORARI (§ 16*)—FINAL JUDGMENT.

Certiorari reaches only to cases in which there are final orders or judgments.

Certiorari by the State, on the relation of Goodman & Co. and another, against the Circuit Court of St. Francois County. Writ quashed.

Merrill Pipkin, of Farmington, for relators.
J. H. Malugen of Bonne Terre, for respondent.

REYNOLDS, P. J. One William Good, at the relation and to the use of Abe Gordon, commenced his action before a justice of the peace of St. Francois county, for damages alleged to have accrued to him on the breach of a bond said to have been executed by Goodman & Co., the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., and Merrill Pipkin. Summons was issued, returned as served as to some of the defendants. Mr. Pipkin appeared and filed an affidavit denying the execution of the bond by him in any other capacity than as agent for others of the defendants. The other defendants, Goodman & Co. and the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., filed motions denying the jurisdiction of the court in the cause and Goodman & Co., denied that they had been served. The motions to dismiss for want of jurisdiction were overruled and the cause continued for service as to Goodman & Co. On the day to which the cause had been continued, plaintiff appeared by attorney but the defendants making default and the judgment reciting that it appearing that all the defendants had been duly served, the justice proceeded to hear the cause and found for plaintiff, rendering judgment against the defendants for the damages claimed. In due time the attorney for defendants filed an affidavit for appeal, the affidavit setting out that defendants appeared only for the purpose of appeal, and "that the application for an appeal from the judgment in the above entitled cause is not made for vexation, or delay, but because he believes the appellants are injured by the judgment of the justice therein." This was filed by the justice. Defendants thereupon signed and executed a bond which was approved by the justice. The justice entering up on his docket the fact of filing the bond and the application for an appeal, set out this in his docket entry: "The appeal is by me not granted on account of the defect in the affidavit."

Afterwards at the November, 1911, adjourned term of the circuit court of St. Francois county, the defendants filed their motion setting out that judgment had been rendered in the justice's court in December, 1911, for plaintiff and that within ten days thereafter the defendants filed affidavit for appeal, together with a good and sufficient bond, and that notwithstanding the filing of the bond and affidavit, the justice refused to grant and allow an appeal to the circuit court. The motion proceeds: "Wherefore by (virtue) of section 7473, R. S. 1909, defendants move for a rule and attachment on said justice to compel him to grant said appeal and send all papers to this court." The circuit court thereupon, on January 29, 1912, at the adjourned November term, issued an order reciting the motion "requiring the justice to grant an appeal," and that the court had seen and heard it and ordered "that the case be certified to this court by said justice O. M. Bonney, for examination and review in order that the court may determine whether the appeal herein should be granted." (The italics are in the return.) The justice thereupon, on March 21, 1912, filed the transcript and papers above referred to in the circuit court.

Afterwards, and at the succeeding May, 1912, term the defendants, by leave of court, filed an amended affidavit for appeal. This amended affidavit states "that the application for an appeal from the merits in the above cause is not made for vexation or delay but because he (affiant) believes the appellants are injured by the judgment of the justice herein. Affiant further states that this appeal is from the merits of the cause." After filing this amended affidavit, and apparently during the same May term, the defendants served on plaintiff's attorney notice of the appeal. This on the 4th of June, 1912, and during the May term. On the 13th of June and during the May term, 1912, of the circuit court the following proceedings were had in the cause, namely:

"Abe Gordon, Plaintiff, v. I. Goodman & Company, Defendants. Certified J. P. Now at this day the court of its own motion orders an entry nunc pro tunc correcting the record herein and that the entry of record of this court on January 29, 1912, which read as follows: 'Now comes defendant and files its motion to make a rule, order and attachment upon O. M. Bonney, justice of the peace of Perry township, St. Francois county, requiring said justice to grant an appeal of this cause to the circuit court, said motion being seen and heard; it is ordered that the case be certified to this court by said O. M. Bonney,' be corrected and reformed so as to read nunc pro tunc or now for then as follows: 'Now comes defendant and files its motion to make a rule, order and attachment upon O. M. Bonney, justice of the peace of Perry township, St. Francois county, requiring said justice to grant an appeal of this cause to the circuit court, said motion being seen and heard, it is ordered that the case be certified to this court by said justice O. M. Bonney for examination and review by this court, and now it is further adjudged that this court has no jurisdiction to order the appeal herein to be granted.'"

The defendants in the court below thereupon presented to this court a petition for certiorari to issue to the circuit court requiring it to send up the record and files in the cause. We issued the writ as prayed for and the return of the circuit court being duly made, sets out the foregoing as the record in the case.

[1] In the recent case of State ex rel. Evans v. Broadbent et al., Judges, 149 S. W. 473, not yet officially reported, our Supreme Court has held that where an appeal or writ of error does not lie, "certiorari does not go as a right, but it goes in such cases in order that profert of the challenged record be made to be searched for jurisdictional defects; that is, orders, judgments, and parts of judgments without (or in excess of) the jurisdiction of the subordinate court making or rendering them. * * * Certiorari does not take the place of mandamus to compel the making of a record; but it takes the record as it finds it, excluding the mere evidence which can, in the nature of things, relate to the merits only, tending to show, as it does, that the court erred in its judgment. The office of the writ is not to review error of that sort." Certiorari is only allowed when no appeal or writ of error or other available mode of review is afforded. State ex rel. v. Edwards, 104 Mo. 125, 16 S. W. 117.

[2] The proceeding before the trial court in this case was under section 7573, R. S. 1909. It has been held by our court in Morris v. Scherer, 76 Mo. App. 401, loc. cit. 406, that proceedings under this section, triable before the court without a jury, are not reviewable on appeal as to the finding of fact, but no decision that we are aware of holds that they cannot be reviewed on questions of law, by either appeal or writ of error. The action of the trial court in the case at bar was in effect a denial of the motion made before it for an order on the justice to grant an appeal. That was a final disposition of the cause by the circuit court. While it is true that no formal judgment appears then to have been entered up, that does not change the fact that the court denied the prayer of the motion; the relief sought. On proper motion a formal judgment to that effect could undoubtedly have been entered. At all events, while the motion of the relators here, made in the circuit court, was for an order on the justice requiring him to grant an appeal, the circuit court declined to issue an attachment or make an order granting an appeal. Nor did it ever make any such order. Even in the original order as entered, it does not, "by rule and attachment, compel the justice to allow the (appeal) and to return his proceedings in the suit, together with the papers required to be returned by him" (section 7573), but orders "that the case be certified to this court by said justice * * * for examination and review, in order that the court may determine whether the appeal herein should be granted." When the court subsequently entered up a nunc pro tunc order, it did not order an appeal but following its former order, ordered that the case be certified "for examination and review," and followed this up by the finding that it had no jurisdiction to order an appeal.

[3] As before noted it does not appear that any further order was entered in the cause by the court. If it be argued that the omission of a formal and final judgment precludes an appeal, then such omission is equally fatal on certiorari, for that writ reaches only to cases in which there are final orders or judgments. We do not think that the omission of a formal order is of substance here. It was open to correction, could have been supplied. Its omission does not change the fact that the court did deny the relief sought by relators here, defendants below. That order denying the rule for an appeal was a final disposition of the case, and authorized an appeal or writ of error.

Coming to the exact point in decision in this case, we hold that where application is made under the provisions of section 7573, R. S. 1909, for rule and attachment to compel the justice to allow an appeal and return his proceedings in an action, together with the papers required to be returned by him, and the circuit court refuses the rule, the action and the ruling of the court on that application is appealable or can be brought before the appellate court on writ of error.

Causes arising under what is now section 7573 have been before the appellate courts several times. In all of them to which our attention has been directed, the proceedings in the circuit court have been considered on appeal. See Kelm v. Hunkler, 49 Mo. App. 664; Morris v. Scherer, supra; Hagerty v. Llerly, 109 Mo. App. 631, 83 S. W. 542; Bader v. Jones, 119 Mo. App. 685, 96 S. W. 305; Leeper v. Carter, 137 Mo. App. 617, 119 S. W. 463. Being appealable, certiorari does not lie.

It follows that the writ of certiorari issued herein should be and it is quashed.

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§§ 101, 102*)—LIABILITY FOR INJURIES—DUTIES AS TO TOOLS AND MACHINERY.

The operator of a coal mine owed to an employé operating a coal mining machine the duty of exercising reasonable care to provide and maintain a feed chain, used in drawing the machine forward, reasonably suited to the purposes of its intended use.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 107*)—LIABILITY FOR INJURIES—DUTIES AS TO TOOLS AND MACHINERY.

An employer who continued a chain on a machine in use after it had become worn and dangerous, and after reasonable regard for the safety of employes required that it should be replaced, was negligent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 199-202, 212, 254, 255; Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 226*)—LIABILITY FOR INJURIES—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

A servant does not, and cannot, assume risks caused by the master's negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 659-667; Dec. Dig. § 226.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 208*)—LIABILITY FOR INJURIES—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

Where it was inevitable and natural that breakages of the chain on a machine operated by an employé would occur on occasions of unusual and unavoidable stress on the machine, the risks of injury therefrom, being natural and incidental to the service, were assumed by the employé, but the risks resulting from continuing to use a chain so defective as to be unsafe for ordinary usage were not assumed by him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 551; Dec. Dig. § 208.*]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 284*)—LIABILITY FOR INJURIES—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

An employé who knew that a chain on the machine he was operating was defective was not guilty of contributory negligence in continuing in the service, if a reasonably careful man in his situation would have concluded that he could work without subjecting himself to danger of immediate injury.

6. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 289*)—ACTIONS FOR INJURIES—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

In an employé's action for injuries, evidence held to present a question for the jury whether the danger of a chain breaking, which the employé knew to be defective was so obvious and imminent as to render the employé guilty of contributory negligence in continuing work.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Randolph County; A. H. Waller, Judge.

Action by Odus Bradley against the Northern Central Coal Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Willard P. Cave, of Moberly, for appellant. F. E. Murrell and M. J. Lilly, both of Moberly, for respondent.

JOHNSON, J. Plaintiff sued to recover damages for personal injuries he alleges were caused by negligence of defendant. He prevailed in the circuit court, and the cause is here on the appeal of defendant. The facts of the case are as follows: At the time of the injury, March 20, 1912, defendant was operating a coal mine in Randolph county, and plaintiff, an experienced miner, was employed in the mine, and was engaged in operating a coal mining machine. One of the links of a heavy wrought iron chain, called a feed chain and used in drawing the machine forward, broke while the machine was in operation, and a broken end was thrown violently against plaintiff, who was standing near the place of the breaking, and the small bone of one of his legs was fractured. The feed chain was 60 feet long, and its links were an inch and a half long, and made of round wrought iron rods $\frac{5}{8}$ of an inch in diameter, and, when new, its pulling strength was 14,000 pounds. The machine attached to the chain was an electrical cutting machine, the main parts of which were a powerful motor, a system of sprocket and pulley wheels through and around which the feed chain passed and a cutter bar. The feed chain "threaded" through the machine by being coursed around the various pulley and sprocket wheels, was firmly anchored at each end, and the machine was moved forward by means of the motor revolving the sprocket wheels, the teeth or sprockets of which engaged the links of the chain. In short, the machine traveled by pulling itself along the feed chain, and the chain carried the machine, as well as its load, which consisted of the resistance offered to the work of the cutter bar. It was the office of the bar to undermine the ledge of coal by cutting out the underlying and supporting material and the ordinary working load carried by the feed chain when the machine was cutting through dirt or soapstone was about 4,000 pounds. When the cutter encountered harder substances, the load was increased, and, when it struck hard rock or sulphur, it was necessary to remove the cutter as it could not work in such substances, and the attempt to go on would result either in breaking the chain or some part of the machine. The operator could tell by the hum of the motor the character of the resistance opposed to the cutter and by moving a lever which controlled the power could stop the machine instantly. There was also a fuse which would blow out and shut off the current when the strain on the machine became too great, and, in addition to these safety and regulatory appliances, there was a friction nut by which the attachment of the machine to the feed chain could be regulated on a scale varying from zero or no attachment to "positive," which firmly engaged the sprockets with the links of the chain in a manner to prevent any slipping. The friction nut was set periodically by the electrician employed by defendant, and usually was kept at the point where the sprocket teeth would not engage the links when the total load exceeded 7,000 pounds. Plaintiff states that he was forbidden to change the position of the friction nut. Defendant denies this statement, and contends that it was plaintiff's duty to use this appliance as one of the safety devices of the machine. For the purposes of the demurrer to the evidence which defendant insists should have been given, we shall accept the testimony of plaintiff on this subject, especially as it appears to be supported by a very plausible reason, viz., the amount of plaintiff's wages depended on the quantity of coal taken out, and it was found that the operators of machines, if allowed to manipulate the friction nut, were inclined to set it too high, and thereby throw a greater burden on the machine than it could stand. In other words, to increase the output to the maximum, they would try to force the cutter through harder substances than the safety of the machine and chain would permit. Hence the rule forbidding operators from touching the friction nut. In addition to these devices for safety and economy, the evidence of defendant shows that the bullders of the machine provided for the use of a feed chain which, though strong and powerful, would be much weaker than the weakest part of the machine, in order that the feed chain first would break and save the more expensive parts of the apparatus in the event of the machine being overloaded from any cause.

Breakages of the chain, therefore, were contemplated as possible and probable incidents of the life of the machine, and we infer that a desire to minimize the natural dangers of such mishaps was one of the motives leading to the selection of wrought iron, instead of steel, chains. On account of the great resiliency of steel, the recoil of a suddenly broken, tense chain of that material would be accompanied by peculiar dangers that could be avoided by the use of wrought iron chains, which do not rebound under such conditions, no matter how great the strain. The injury to plaintiff was not caused by a recoil of the chain. When the link broke, it was passing over a revolving sprocket wheel, and the chain end was propelled against plaintiff by motion it received from the wheel. The chain had been in service eight months, and the evidence of plaintiff tends to show that it had become so worn and fatigued it could not stand the strain of ordinary work. It had broken repeatedly during the preceding month or six weeks, and defendant, on the complaints of plaintiff, had promised to provide another chain. Twice before the occasion in question it broke that day and had been repaired by the blacksmith. The machine had been running through soft material, and had not been subjected to more than an ordinary strain. It had been carrying a load of about 4,000 pounds, its safety strength had been rated and should have been rated at 7,000 pounds, and yet it kept breaking under the burden of half a load. The evidence of plaintiff tends to show that defendant had actual knowledge of this defective condition of the chain in ample time by the exercise of ordinary care to remedy the defect. The petition charges: "That said defendant carelessly and negligently failed and refused to furnish him with reasonably safe and sufficient tools, appliances, and machinery with which to work, but, on the contrary, negligently and carelessly furnished him with dangerous, unsafe, and insufficient tools, appliances, and machinery with which to work, in that the feed chain of said mining machine was at the time, and for a long time prior thereto had been, weak and insecure, and incapable of sustaining the strain thereon when said machine was being operated, all of which was known, or by the exercise of ordinary care might have been known, to defendant." The answer is a general denial and pleas of contributory negligence and assumed risk.

[1,2] Defendant owed plaintiff the duty of exercising reasonable care to provide and maintain a feed chain reasonably suited to the purposes of its intended use. The chain had become worn and dangerous, and defendant, with knowledge of its condition, continued it in use after it should have been replaced if reasonable regard for the safety of plaintiff and his fellow workmen had been observed. Of the negligence of defendant there can be no serious question.

[3, 4] Counsel for defendant argue that the risk was one assumed by plaintiff. The rule now is firmly imbedded in our law that the servant does not, and cannot, assume risks caused by the master's negligence. Curtis v. McNair, 173 Mo. 270, 73 S. W. 167. It was inevitable and natural that breakages of the chain should occur on occasions of unusual and unavoidable stress on the machine and the risks of injury from such causes being natural and incidental to the service were assumed by plaintiff as a part of his contract of employment, but the breaking of the chain was not intended to be an incident of the ordinary work of the machine, and, since defendant could not remain within the confines of reasonable care and compel its servant to work with a chain so defective as to be unsafe for ordinary usage, so plaintiff, the servant, should not be held to have assumed a risk that obviously was caused by defendant's lack of due care.

[5, 6] Nor do we find good support in the facts and circumstances of the case for the contention of defendant that plaintiff was guilty in law of contributory negligence. Though he knew the chain was defective, he had the right to continue in the service provided a reasonably careful man in his situation would have concluded that he could work with the chain without subjecting himself to danger of immediate injury. We regard the question of whether the danger was so obvious and imminent as to convict plaintiff of contributory negligence as one for the jury. Burkard v. Rope Co., 217 Mo. loc. cit. 480, 117 S. W. 35, and cases cited.

There is a vital difference between knowledge of the extent and character of a danger and knowledge of a defect in which lurks a danger the extent or imminence of which is not discoverable to the servant by the reasonable use of the opportunities his situation affords. Dodge v. Coal Co., 115 Mo. App. loc. cit. 506, 91 S. W. 1007. An ordinary breaking of the chain would have entailed small risk to plaintiff. It was the fortuitous breaking at the revolving sprocket wheel that caused the injury. The jury were entitled to the belief that such a risk was not one that was glaring and obvious and that threatened plaintiff with imminent danger, but was one that the wisdom and prudence of an ordinarily careful master would have anticipated and employed reasonable care to obviate. The demurrer to the evidence was properly overruled.

A close inspection of the record convinces us the case was tried without prejudicial error. Points made against the rulings on evidence and in the instructions given the jury are ruled against the contention of defendant.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

KIEL v. OTT.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 12, 1912.)

1. WITNESSES (§ 391*)—IMPEACHMENT—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

Defendant, seeking to impeach plaintiff, asked a witness, who had testified to a certain statement made by plaintiff, what, if anything further, plaintiff had then said, to which the witness answered: "Well, he said this: 'You know as well as I do that O. is a good man, and a good church member, and has lots of friends, and if you prove my reputation it will be a job for me to gain this.'" Held, that the answer was proper as against an objection, made after it was given, that it had no bearing on the issues and tended to prejudice the jurors against plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1248; Dec. Dig. § 391.*]

2. WITNESSES (§ 391*)—IMPEACHMENT—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

The answer of the witness was admissible on the issue as to plaintiff's statement and as to his character, and as purporting to give the entire conversation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1248; Dec. Dig. § 391.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1066*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in an action for injuries from plaintiff's horse being frightened at a wood pile alongside the road, there was evidence tending to show that the horse had not been frightened, an instruction to find for defendant if plaintiff was injured from any cause, other than his horse being frightened at the wood pile, was harmless, though there was no direct evidence of any other cause.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4220; Dec. Dig. § 1066.*]

4. NEW TRIAL (§ 72*)—GROUNDS—VERDICT—PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE.

Where plaintiff's case rested almost exclusively on his own testimony, and his credibility was attacked, there was no such preponderance of evidence in his favor as warranted a new trial on the ground that a verdict for defendant resulted from prejudice, corruption, or gross ignorance of the jury.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Franklin County; R. S. Ryors, Judge.

Action by August Kiel against Simon Ott. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John W. Booth, of Washington, Mo., and J. G. Copeland, of Union, for appellant. Jesse H. Schaper, of Washington, Mo., and O. E. Meyersleck, of Union, for respondent.

REYNOLDS, P. J. This is an action by plaintiff to recover damages alleged to have been sustained in consequence of being thrown from his horse, it being charged that defendant had wrongfully and unlawfully and without right, piled or caused to be piled a lot of cord wood on a public road in such manner as to create an obstruction calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness and that while plaintiff was traveling along the road, riding a horse of ordinary gentleness, the horse became frightened at the piles of wood and jumped and threw plaintiff to the ground, thereby seriously injuring him, for which injuries sustained plaintiff claims judgment in the sum of $1,500.

The answer was a general denial.

On trial before the court and a jury, the jury returned a verdict for defendant from judgment on which plaintiff, filing his motion for a new trial and saving exception to that being overruled, has duly perfected his appeal to this court.

As to the facts it may be said that plaintiff's testimony tended to show that he received certain injuries by being thrown from his horse while he was riding along the road and through the piles of wood alongside of it. Defendant attacked the character of plaintiff for truth and veracity and also introduced evidence tending to show that the horse had not jumped; that measuring the tracks of the horse in the road showed the horse had neither jumped nor run off, as claimed by plaintiff.

The errors assigned are three: First, to the court refusing to strike out the testimony of a witness named. Second, giving to the jury an improper instruction, and third, to the overruling of plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

[1, 2] The first assignment of error cannot be sustained. The witness referred to being under examination on part of defendant, and testifying as to conversations between himself and plaintiff concerning the transaction, after having testified that in that conversation plaintiff had made a certain statement, was asked what, if anything further, plaintiff had then said. Whereupon the witness answered: "Well, he said this: 'You know as well as I do that Ott is a good man and a good church member, and has lots of friends, and if you prove my reputation it will be a job for me to gain this. You know that as well as I do.'" It is stated in the abstract that plaintiff thereupon moved the court to strike out the answer of the witness to the last question, "as having no bearing on the issues in the case and being improper evidence tending to prejudice the jurors against plaintiff." This is the motion referred to, which the court overruled and to which ruling plaintiff duly excepted. It will be noted that the question itself was not objected to when asked. The objection was made to the answer and for the reasons above. That answer might possibly have been objected to as not responsive to the question asked, although this is doubtful, but no such objection was made. The objection as raised is not tenable. The answer did bear on the issues as to plaintiff's own statements and on his character, and purported to give the whole conversation, as the witness was asked to do. That it may have influenced the jury in passing upon plaintiff's testimony unfavorably to plaintiff, does not render it improper.

[3] The instruction complained of is to the effect that if the jury found and believed from the evidence that plaintiff was injured on the date named, in the public road in front of the premises of defendant, by reason of any cause other than the frightening of the horse at the wood pile mentioned in the evidence, then the verdict will be for defendant. It is objected to this instruction that there is no evidence tending to show any other cause of injury than the frightening of the horse. It is true that there is no direct evidence of any other cause, but there was evidence tending to show that the horse had not been frightened and had not jumped on the occasion referred to. From that it would seem to follow that the jury had a right to infer, from the testimony in the case, that it was not the frightening and jumping of the horse that caused the injury. Apart from this, however, even conceding the proposition of the learned counsel for plaintiff, that there was a lack of evidence of any other cause, we are not prepared to say, on reading all the testimony in the case, that this instruction was harmful or in any manner misled the jury. It was undoubtedly understood by the jury to mean that to find for plaintiff, they must find that he sustained his injuries in the manner and from the cause alleged by him.

[4] This disposes of all the assignments of error except that plaintiff's motion for new trial, it is claimed, was improperly overruled. It is argued in support of this assignment that the motion for new trial should have been sustained by reason of the reception of the evidence and the giving of the instruction above referred to. We have disposed of these grounds. It is also claimed that the verdict of the jury is against the weight of the evidence to such an extent as to indicate that it is the result of prejudice, influencing the jury against plaintiff. In support of this ground, we are referred to Walton v. Kansas City, Ft. Scott & Memphis Railroad Co., 49 Mo. App. 620, loc. cit. 627. In that case it is there stated that in Price v. Evans, 49 Mo. 396, Judge Bliss impliedly states that it is error in the trial court to refuse a new trial where the preponderance of evidence against the verdict is so strong as to raise the presumption of prejudice, corruption or gross ignorance on the part of the jury. Our court held in the Walton Case that the facts in it clearly called for an application of that rule. Without determining whether that rule, said to be drawn from the Price Case, in the light of many decisions recognizing the right to pass upon the weight of evidence as resting solely in the trial court, is now in force, it is sufficient to say that the present case does not call for its application. We cannot say that the preponderance of the evidence in this case is so strong as to raise the presumption of prejudice, corruption or gross ignorance on the part of the jury. Plaintiff's case rested almost exclusively on his own testimony, and his credibility as a witness was very seriously attacked by several witnesses.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

BYRD v. VANDERBURGH.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 12, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 842*)—GROUNDS FOR NEW TRIAL—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

A ground of a motion for a new trial that "the verdict and judgment are for the wrong party," and that they are contrary to the evidence, is, in substance, the same as a claim that they are contrary to the greater weight of the evidence, which is not a ground of appellate interference.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3316-3330; Dec. Dig. § 842.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1003*)—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

That the verdict is contrary to the greater weight of the evidence is not a ground for disturbing a verdict by the appellate court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3938-3943; Dec. Dig. § 1003.*]

3. NEW TRIAL (§ 128*)—SUFFICIENCY OF MOTION.

A ground for a motion for new trial that the judgment and verdict are against the law is not sufficiently specific for consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 257-262; Dec. Dig. § 128.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1061*)—HARMLESS ERROR—RULINGS ON EVIDENCE.

Error in sustaining a demurrer to appellant's evidence in an attachment suit involving the right to possession of hoops as to particular hoops loaded in a car, was not reversible, where judgment went for appellant as to such hoops.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4137, 4209-4211; Dec. Dig. § 1061.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 260*)—OBJECTION TO EVIDENCE.

Error in admitting evidence cannot be reviewed if the ruling admitting it was not excepted to.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1503-1515; Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1056*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

Error in excluding evidence relating to an item of property in controversy as to which judgment was rendered for appellant was harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4187-4193; Dec. Dig. § 1056.*]

7. NEW TRIAL (§ 90*)—GROUNDS—PERJURY OR MISTAKE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Rev. St. 1909, § 2022, authorizing the granting of a new trial if the court is satisfied that perjury or mistake was committed by a witness, occasioning an improper verdict or finding as to such matter, if the moving party has a just cause of action or defense, gives the trial judge a wide discretion in granting a new trial on such ground, subject only to its reasonable exercise under the facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 181-183; Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 994*)—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

It is not the appellate court's province to interfere with findings by the court which depend upon the credibility of witnesses.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3901-3906; Dec. Dig. § 994.*]

9. NEW TRIAL (§ 89*)—GROUNDS—SURPRISE—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where, in attachment proceedings involving the right to possession of hoops, the only issue was whether interpleader who purchased the hoops from the debtor had taken actual possession thereof, and interpleader introduced evidence that it had marked the hoops, it could not claim a new trial on the ground that it was surprised because plaintiff's witnesses testified that the hoops were not marked when levy was made, though that fact was not denied at the justice's trial.

10. NEW TRIAL (§ 97*)—GROUNDS—SURPRISE.

If a party is surprised by any action at trial, such as the admission of evidence, he should immediately ask a reasonable postponement to enable him to produce counter evidence or move for nonsuit, in order to rely thereon for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 195-198; Dec. Dig. § 97.*]

11. ATTACHMENT (§ 308*)—ACTIONS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In attachment proceedings involving the right to possession of hoops claimed by interpleader as purchaser from the debtor, the burden was on interpleader to show that it had taken actual possession upon purchasing as required by law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1102-1109, 1111-1118; Dec. Dig. § 308.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, St. Genevieve County; Peter Huck, Judge.

Action by J. M. Byrd against W. F. Vanderburgh, in which the Bank of Marston interpleaded. From a judgment for plaintiff, interpleader appeals. Affirmed.

The controversy here is between the plaintiff, Byrd, an attaching creditor of defendant Vanderburgh, and the Bank of Marston, interpleader in the attachment suit, and involves the right to the possession of a quantity of hoops piled in the hoop sheds of the Marston hoop mill at Marston, Mo. The issues made upon the bank's interplea were tried to the court, jury being waived, and were found in favor of the plaintiff, the attaching creditor, as to all the hoops except some, which, when attached, had been loaded into a railroad car for shipment. The bank, interpleader, has appealed to this court. It claimed the right to the possession of the hoops under and by virtue of an instrument in the form of a bill of sale to it which was executed by defendant Vanderburgh on February 11, 1909, to secure certain advancements made and to be made by the bank, and purporting to transfer to the bank all hoops then in said sheds and all that might thereafter be manufactured by said mill or piled in said sheds or thereabout. It is conceded that neither the said instrument nor a true copy thereof was recorded or filed in the recorder's office. Up to Saturday, May 15, 1909, all the hoops remained in the hoop sheds, where they had been placed and kept by Vanderburgh while concededly in his possession. Part of them had been manufactured before the "bill of sale" was executed and part thereafter. The bank does not appear to have had possession or control of the sheds. They were appurtenant to the hoop mill which defendant Vanderburgh operated. On Saturday, May 15, 1909, the bank caused part of the hoops to be loaded on a car for shipment to a buyer whom Vanderburgh had found, he says, for the bank. The buyer's order for the car of hoops was addressed to the bank. A bill of lading issued in the name of the buyer. This loading was done by one Nelson, Vanderburgh's foreman, who was, however, according to the bank's evidence, employed by the bank for such loading. The hoops not so loaded remained in the sheds. On Monday, May 17, 1909, the hoops in the sheds as well as those on the car were levied on under the writ of attachment. The sole question upon the trial was whether the bank had taken possession of the hoops in the manner required by statute, before the attachment was levied. The cashier of the bank testified on its behalf that several weeks before the attachment the bank caused the hoops to be marked "here and there all over the several piles, 'Property of the Bank of Marston'"; that the words "Bank of Marston" were put on with a rubber stamp, and the words "Property of" written with a lead pencil just above them. Ankershell, assistant cashier, testified that he marked the hoops for the bank; that, in addition to the rubber stamp and lead pencil marking, he had written on sheets of paper the words, "Property of the Bank of Marston," and attached one or more of such sheets on each pile of hoops in the shed. On the other hand, W. A. Nelson, who had charge of the loading of the car for the bank, and J. D. Dockery, the constable who levied on the hoops, gave testimony on behalf of plaintiff, the attaching creditor, to the effect that the hoops were not marked by the bank until after the levy of the attachment. Dockery denied having testified before the justice of the peace that when he went to the shed he found the notices on the hoops. The grounds stated in the bank's motion for a new trial are as follows: "(1) Because the verdict and judgment is for the wrong party. (2) Because the verdict and the judgment are contrary to the greater weight of the evidence. (3) Because the verdict and judgment is contrary to the law and the evidence. (4) Because the court erred in sustaining in part the motion of the plaintiff, J. M. Byrd, in the nature of a demurrer as offered at the conclusion of the testimony of interpleader. (5) Because the court erred in sustaining the motion of plaintiff, Byrd, offered at the conclusion of all the testimony. (6) Because the court erred in admitting incompetent and irrelevant testimony offered by plaintiff over the objection of interpleader. (7) Because the court erred in refusing to admit competent, material, and relevant testimony offered by interpleader. (8) Because witnesses for the plaintiff committed either perjury or mistake in testifying that the hoops involved in the suit were not marked by the interpleader prior to the levy of the attachment, as see affidavits filed herewith. (9) Because interpleader was surprised by the testimony offered by plaintiff to the effect that the said hoops were not marked when levy was made, as this fact was not denied at the hearing before the justice of the peace. Affidavits proving the contrary to be the fact are filed herewith."

Accompanying this motion were six affidavits, which, if accepted as absolutely true, would establish that the marking occurred prior to the levy of the attachment, and tended to prove that the plaintiff's witnesses, Nelson and Dockery, knew that such marking had been done. The affiants, however, do not agree with the bank's witnesses at the trial as to when such marking was done. None deposed that it was done more than two weeks before the attachment levy, and one deposed positively that only "several days" before the hoops were loaded into the car he saw Ankershell doing the marking.

E. F. Sharp, of Marston, for appellant.
Brown & Gallivan, of New Madrid, for respondent.

CAULFIELD, J. (after stating the facts as above). As the appellant, interpleader, does not claim that there is any error on the face of the record proper, we may only consider what has been finally passed upon by the circuit court on the motion for a new trial.

[1] The first ground stated in said motion is that "the verdict and judgment are for the wrong party." This, and that embodied in the third ground, viz., that the verdict and judgment are contrary to the evidence, are merely the statement in another form of the second ground, which is that "the verdict and the judgment are contrary to the greater weight of the evidence." State ex rel. Stewart v. Todd, 92 Mo. App. 1. See, also, Heine v. Morrison, 13 Mo. App. 577; State v. Scott, 214 Mo. 257, 113 S. W. 1069.

[2] That is not a ground on which we may interfere with the judgment of the trial court.

[3] The statement in the third ground that the verdict and judgment are against the law is not sufficiently specific to compel consideration. State v. Scott, supra.

[4] The fourth ground relates to the action of the trial court in sustaining a demurrer to the evidence of the interpleader (appellant) as to the hoops loaded on the car. This action was taken at the conclusion of the testimony of the interpleader. But the judgment should not be reversed because of such action for the reason that it was for the interpleader as to those hoops, and whatever error was involved in sustaining the demurrer was thereby rendered harmless. The fifth ground is that the court erred in sustaining the motion of plaintiff offered at the conclusion of all the testimony. The record does not disclose that any such motion was sustained or offered.

[5] The sixth ground, that the court erred in admitting incompetent and irrelevant testimony offered by defendant over the objection of the interpleader, must be overruled because the record does not disclose that the interpleader saved any exception to any ruling on the admissibility of evidence offered by the plaintiff. The seventh ground is that the court erred in refusing to admit competent, material, and relevant testimony offered by the interpleader. The only evidence offered by the interpleader which appears to have been excluded and exception noted was the bill of lading for the car load of hoops.

[6] As this evidence related only to the hoops in the car, and the judgment of the trial court was in favor of the interpleader as to them, the error in excluding it, if any, must be held to have been harmless. This brings us to the eighth and ninth grounds stated, which are the principal grounds relied upon by appellant in urging that the judgment be reversed and a new trial granted. The eighth is that "witnesses for the plaintiff committed either perjury or mistake in testifying that the hoops involved in the suit were not marked by the interpleader prior to the levy of the attachment."

[7] The statute (section 2022, R. S. 1909) provides that the trial court shall grant a new trial if it "is satisfied that perjury or mistake has been committed by a witness, and is also satisfied that an improper verdict or finding was occasioned by any such matters, and that the party has a just cause of action or defense." "The purpose of this enactment is to clothe the trial judge, who enjoys the advantage of meeting the parties and witnesses face to face, with a wide discretion to be exercised in furtherance of substantial justice. He should be satisfied with the justice of the verdict, otherwise, it is his duty to set it aside. * * * With respect to the ground for a new trial under consideration, the judge is invested by the statute with the functions of a trier of fact, and his discretion is limited only by the rule that it must not arbitrarily be exercised, but must rest on a reasonable foundation of fact." Ridge v. Johnson, 129 Mo. App. 541, 107 S. W. 1103. See, also, Rickroad v. Martin, 43 Mo. App. 597; Sly v. Union Depot R. Co., 134 Mo. 681, 36 S. W. 235. In the case at bar there was nothing to satisfy the trial court that perjury or mistake had been committed by plaintiff's witness, except the testimony of interpleader's witnesses and the ex parte, and to some extent contradictory, affidavits, which interpleader filed with the motion for a new trial.

[8] Its determination of the matter must necessarily have depended upon its view of the mere credibility of the witnesses, with which it is not our province to interfere.

[9, 10] As to the ninth ground, viz., "interpleader was surprised by the testimony offered by plaintiff to the effect that the said hoops were not marked when levy was made, as this fact was not denied at the hearing before the justice of the peace," the following, quoted from the decision of our Supreme Court in Thiele v. Citizens' Ry. Co., 140 Mo. 319, loc. cit. 338, 41 S. W. 800, is a sufficient response: "It is a general rule that each party must understand his case and come prepared to meet the case made by his adversary. Therefore, a party cannot be surprised that his adversary introduced testimony in support of the issues made by the pleadings, even though such testimony is false. Hayne's New Trial, par. 79. The rule is thus forcibly stated by Phillips, P. J., in Bragg v. City of Moberly, 17 Mo. App. 221: 'If a party be surprised by an unforeseen occurrence at the trial, he should make his misfortune known to the court instantly and ask for a reasonable postponement to enable him to produce the countervailing proof. If he can relieve himself from his embarrassment by any mode, either by a nonsuit or a continuance, or the introduction of other testimony, or otherwise, he must not take the chance of a verdict, but must at once fortify his position by resorting to all available modes of present relief.'" In the case at bar the only issue was whether the interpleader had taken such actual possession of the hoops as was required by law of a vendor, or of a mortgagee whose mortgage was not recorded or filed.

[11] As to this the interpleader had the burden of proof. In an attempt to sustain this burden, it introduced evidence to the effect that it had marked or branded the hoops as its property prior to the levy of the attachment. The testimony introduced by the plaintiff, which interpleader claims was a surprise, merely contradicted the testimony which the interpleader had previously introduced. It is clear under the general rule just quoted that the interpleader could not be surprised that his adversary introduced such testimony, and, if he was, it was its duty to make known the fact of its surprise at the trial, a thing which it neglected to do. Recognizing the rules above quoted, the judgment cannot be reversed on the ninth ground.

It appearing then that the record is barren of error warranting a reversal of the judgment, the judgment is affirmed.

GRANT CITY v. SIMMONS.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 25, 1912.)

1. COURTS (§ 66*)—TERMS—ADJOURNMENT.

Under Rev. St. 1909, § 3809, providing that, if after the commencement of a term of court, the court shall not be held, it shall stand adjourned from day to day until the evening of the third day, and that, if the judge of any court having but one judge cannot attend the regular term, he may notify the sheriff, who shall adjourn the court to the next regular term or to such special or adjourned term as the judge shall direct, where the judge of a court having but one judge was unable to attend a term, the sheriff had power only to adjourn the court until the next regular term and not to adjourn it from day to day until the evening of the third day.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1092*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—TIME FOR FILING—EXTENSION—"NEXT REGULAR TERM."

Defendant was given until the last day of the next term of court to file a bill of exceptions. The next term should have been held in February, and the following term in May. Owing to the absence of the judge, the February term was not held. Held, that she had until the last day of the May term within which to file her bill of exceptions, since the order extending her time did not give her to any particular day of the year, but to a certain day in the "next regular term," which meant a term at which the court was legally open for the transaction of business, and not the time at which it could and should have been open, but was not because of the absence of the judge.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 642*)—APPEAL—MOTIONS TO DISMISS—EVIDENCE.

Under Rev. St. 1909, § 2083, providing that the Supreme Court and Courts of Appeals shall examine the record and award a new trial, reverse or affirm, or give such judgment as should have been given below, the court ordinarily is confined to an examination of the record, and cannot receive evidence de hors the record on any controverted issue, but, on a motion to dismiss the appeal, such evidence may be received to show that by a settlement there is no longer a real controversy before the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1412-1415; Dec. Dig. § 642.*]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 642*)—APPEAL—MOTIONS TO DISMISS—HEARING AND DETERMINATION.

A party moving to dismiss an appeal on the ground of a compromise or settlement has the burden of showing such compromise and that the person agreeing thereto on behalf of the appellant had authority to make such agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1412-1415; Dec. Dig. § 642.*]

5. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT (§ 89*)—AUTHORITY—CONDUCT OF LITIGATION.

An attorney may dismiss his client's suit or stipulate that it shall abide the judgment in another suit where the facts and parties are the same in the two actions and, under his general authority, has a wide range of action as to those things pertaining merely to the remedy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attorney and Client, Cent. Dig. §§ 133, 134, 139, 140, 167, 168; Dec. Dig. § 89.*]

6. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT (§ 101*)—AUTHORITY—SETTLEMENT OR COMPROMISE.

An attorney's general authority, as such, gives him no power to compromise his client's claim or demand or to make any agreement or take any action that will sacrifice his client's cause.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attorney and Client, Cent. Dig. §§ 209-216; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

7. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT (§ 101*)—AUTHORITY—DISMISSING APPEAL.

Where a stipulation by an attorney to dismiss an appeal was merely an incident to an unauthorized compromise of the case by him, it related rather to the cause than the remedy and was unauthorized.

8. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 113*)—POWERS OF AGENT—CONDUCT OF LITIGATION.

Accused's father, who managed and conducted her defense, as agent, had no authority to bind her by an agreement to dismiss an appeal from a judgment of conviction and pay the costs if the amount of the fine was remitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 635*)—VIOLATION OF ORDINANCE—CIVIL OR CRIMINAL.

A prosecution for the violation of a city ordinance is a civil and not a criminal case.

10. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 640*)—DEGREE OF PROOF—VIOLATION OF ORDINANCE.

A person prosecuted for a violation of a municipal ordinance, which is also an offense under the public laws of the state, is entitled to the benefit of the guaranties that attend one accused of crime, and is therefore entitled to the presumption of innocence and to have his guilt established beyond a reasonable doubt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1410; Dec. Dig. § 640.*]

11. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 830*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REASONABLE DOUBT.

Where defendant's guilt is required to be established beyond a reasonable doubt, the court must give a proper instruction on the question of reasonable doubt, although the one requested is faulty.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Worth County; William C. Ellison, Judge.

Effie Simmons was convicted of the violation of a municipal ordinance, and she appeals. Reversed and remanded.

J. E. Engle and John Ewing, both of Grant City, for appellant. Dubois & Miller and Edward Kelso, City Atty., all of Grant City, for respondent.

JOHNSON, J. This cause originated in the police court of Grant City on the complaint of the city attorney charging defendant with disturbing the peace of certain persons named in the complaint in violation of an ordinance which provides: "Every person who shall within the corporate limits of the city disturb the peace of any other person or persons, or of any family or neighborhood by violent or tumultuous conduct, or by loud and unusual noises, or by unseemly, profane, or indecent or obscene language, or by language calculated to provoke a breach of the peace, or by quarreling, fighting, or challenging to fight, or by assaulting or striking another, and every person or persons who shall permit the same in or upon any house or premises owned by him or them or under his or their control, so that any other person or persons in the vicinity are disturbed thereby, shall upon conviction thereof be punished as hereinafter provided. Every person who shall be convicted of a violation of any of the provisions of this article shall, when no other punishment is provided, be punished by a fine not less than five nor more than ninety dollars."

[1, 2] A trial in the circuit court where the case was taken by appeal resulted in a judgment of conviction which assessed a fine of $50 and costs against defendant. This judgment was rendered October 15, 1910, and on the same day defendant's motion for a new trial was overruled and an order was made allowing her an appeal to this court and giving her "until the last day of next term of this court to file her bill of exceptions." The next term of that court provided by law should have begun on the first Monday of February, 1911, and the next term after that term on the second Monday in May, 1911. Owing to the absence of the judge who was holding court in another county, the February term was not held, and no session of court was held in that county until the May term. The sheriff of the county convened the court on the first day of the February term (February 5), and adjourned from day to day until the third day (February 8), when he adjourned the court to the next regular term. Since the February term had no "commencement" within the meaning of that term, as employed in section 3869, Rev. Stat. 1909, and as there was but one judge of that court and he was unable to attend at that term, the sheriff had no power, under the section of the statute just cited, to open court and adjourn from day to day until the evening of the third day, and the only authority he possessed in such case was, on being notified by the judge of his inability to attend, to make proclamation at the courthouse door adjourning court until the next regular term. Respondent contends that, inasmuch as appellant's bill of exceptions was not filed on or before February 8th, which respondent treats as the last day of the February term, and no order of extension was made in that time, the bill which was signed and filed February 25th was filed out of time and cannot be considered as a part of the record. We held the bill was filed in the time specified in the original order, and that appellant was not required to procure an extension of time.

The order giving appellant "until the last day of the next term to file her bill of exceptions" had reference, not to any particular day of the year, but to a certain day in the next regular term of the court; and by the expression "the next regular term" is meant a term at which the court was lawfully opened for the transaction of business, and not to a time at which it could and should have been commenced but was not lawfully opened because of the absence of the judge.

The February term of the court had neither beginning nor ending—neither a first nor a last day. It was abandoned as the law provided it should be in such event, and the next term, within the meaning of the order granting leave to file a bill of exceptions, was the May term, since that was the first regular term at which the court was opened for the transaction of business. Notwithstanding the difference in the facts of the two cases, this case in principle is the same as that of State v. Tevis, 234 Mo. loc. cit. 283, 136 S. W. 339. In that case the appellant was given until the second day of the April, 1909, term of the circuit court to file his bill of exceptions. In the meantime the Legislature changed the date of holding that term from April to May. The bill of exceptions was not filed until the second day of the May term. The Supreme Court held it was filed in time, though it would have been out of time had the next term been held in April. The bill of exceptions is properly before us.

Before passing to the case on its merits, we will dispose of a motion of respondent to dismiss the appeal. It appears, from affidavits filed by respondent, that, after the rendition of the judgment, the case was compromised and settled by the parties on the following terms: Respondent agreed to remit the fine of $50, and appellant agreed to dismiss her appeal and pay the costs. It is not claimed that appellant personally participated in the settlement and the antecedent negotiations, but that she was represented by her attorney of record and by her father, who had managed and conducted her defense as her agent. Further it appears that respondent had prosecuted the father of appellant for an alleged violation of one of its ordinances; that a trial of the case had resulted in a judgment of acquittal from which respondent had appealed; and that, at the time of the settlement of the present case, that case also had been compromised and settled in a way to deprive respondent of the right to prosecute the appeal or to prosecute another action on account of the offense. Appellant has filed in this court the affidavits of herself, her father, and her attorney, in which all of the affiants state that neither the father of appellant nor her lawyer had any authority from her to compromise and settle the cause, and the last-named affiants deny that they made any agreement with respondent for the settlement of the case in hand or for the dismissal of the appeal.

[3] Under the statute (section 2083, Rev. Stat. 1909), an appellate court, in the disposition of causes coming to it on appeal or writ of error, is confined to an examination of the record, and cannot receive evidence de hors the record on any controverted issue. But this rule is not without exceptions, and among such exceptions are instances where there has been a settlement of the controversy, with an agreement to dismiss the appeal or writ of error. When a cause is settled and there is no longer a real controversy before the court, neither party will be permitted to urge a decision of issues no longer in existence, and evidence de hors the record will be received on the issue of settlement or no settlement. In re Hutton's Estate, 92 Mo. App. loc. cit. 186; Railroad v. Bridge Co., 215 Mo. loc. cit. 296, 114 S. W. 1084; Wait v. Railroad, 204 Mo. loc. cit. 506, 103 S. W. 60; Dulaney v. Buffum, 173 Mo. 1, 73 S. W. 125.

[4] The burden is on respondent to show the existence of the alleged settlement; and, to do this, it devolved on respondent to establish by proof, not only the fact that the father and the attorney of plaintiff or either of them made the settlement, but that they had authority from appellant to make it in her behalf. It is not contended by respondent, nor do its affidavits tend to show that appellant gave either of her agents express authority to compromise her case, or that she in any way consented to or ratified their act in entering into a compromise agreement, if, in fact, they did such a thing. Respondent relies on the general authority of the attorney as such to enter into an agreement for the dismissal of the appeal.

[5. 6] The general authority of an attorney gives him a wide range of action as to those things that pertain merely to the remedy. He may dismiss his client's suit or stipulate that it shall abide the judgment in another suit—the facts and the parties being the same in the two actions—but he has no authority from his employment as an attorney to compromise his client's claim or demand, or to make any agreement or take any action that will sacrifice his client's cause without express authority. The cases properly make a sharp distinction between acts of the attorney that pertain only to the remedy and those that strike at the root of the client's right. Davis v. Hall, 90 Mo. 659, 3 S. W. 382.

[7. 8] The agreement before us cannot be said to have provided merely for the performance of an act relating solely to the remedy. In many instances a stipulation to dismiss an action is of such nature and will be enforced, though made by the attorney without the knowledge or consent of his client; but the circumstances of the case in hand disclose a stipulation of an entirely different character. Here the agreement to dismiss the appeal was but a mere and, we might add, unnecessary incident of the contract compromising the cause. If that contract were valid, respondent could have forced a dismissal of the appeal without any special stipulation therefor and in the face of appellant's opposition. Since the real purpose and object of the alleged contract was the compromise and settlement of the cause, and the agreement to dismiss the appeal, at most, was but auxiliary to that purpose, that agreement partook of the nature and character of the purpose it was designed to serve, and therefore was one relating to the cause and not to the remedy. Neither the attorney nor the father of defendant had authority, under a general employment, to defend the action to bind her to a contract of that character.

The wisdom and justice of the rule that denies an attorney, under a general employment to prosecute or defend an action, the authority to enter into an agreement compromising his client's right could not find better exemplification than that offered by the facts of the present case. The judgment against defendant not only adjudged her guilty of a violation of law, but, in effect, denounced her as an unchaste and immoral woman. The record discloses, as we shall show, that she did not have a fair trial. To hold that her attorney, in virtue of his general employment to defend her against a charge so serious, might compromise the case in a manner to leave her under the perpetual stigma of such a judgment would be to give to attorneys a power and authority over the rights of their clients never recognized by the courts and abhorrent to all reason or sense of justice. The motion to dismiss the appeal is overruled.

Defendant is a widow who, with her two children, lived in the north part of Grant City. The prosecuting witnesses were neighboring housewives who had become scandalized by the nocturnal occurrences they had observed in the vicinity of defendant's home. Defendant admits that various men and boys had attempted to visit her at night, to her great shame and annoyance, and explains that such attempts were not in response to her invitations, express or implied, but were instigated by the cunning malice of her brother-in-law, who was her bitter enemy, and who sought in this manner to ruin her good name and reputation. She had procured a revolver to repel such assaults, and one night fired several shots at a man who tried to gain admission to her house and refused compliance with her command that he take his immediate departure. The neighbors, believing that the shots were fired in the course of some carousal or orgy, had defendant prosecuted for a violation of the city's peace ordinance. At the trial the witnesses for plaintiff testified to facts and circumstances which tended to support their view of the occurrence, while the evidence of defendant was to the effect that she fired the revolver in the necessary defense of her person and home.

[9, 10] We find prejudicial error in the record. The court refused an instruction asked by defendant to the effect that the law cast on plaintiff the burden of establishing, by proof, the guilt of defendant, beyond a reasonable doubt. Though it has been held repeatedly in this state that a prosecution for a violation of a city ordinance is a civil and not a criminal case, the Supreme Court in the recent case of King City v. Duncan, 238 Mo. 513, 142 S. W. 246, say that, where the offense for which the defendant is prosecuted—as for a violation of a municipal ordinance—is also an offense under the public laws of the state, the defendant is entitled to the benefit of the guaranties that attend one accused of crime under the general law, and therefore is entitled to the presumption of innocence and to have his guilt established beyond a reasonable doubt. At this term we held, in a case of this nature, that a "reasonable doubt" instruction was proper and should be given. City of Stanberry v. O'Neal, 150 S. W. 1104, not yet officially reported.

[11] And we will add that, though an instruction on this subject asked by the defendant be faulty, the duty devolves on the court to give an instruction in proper form. State v. Clark, 147 Mo. loc. cit. 38, 47 S. W. 886; State v. Reed, 154 Mo. loc. cit. 129, 55 S. W. 278; State v. Moore, 160 Mo. 443, 61 S. W. 199.

We do not deem it necessary to discuss the other assignments of error in appellant's brief. It suffices to repeat that defendant is entitled to the benefit of the guaranties accorded by our laws to a person accused of an offense against the criminal laws of the state.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded. All concur.

ARNOLD v. AETNA LIFE INS. CO.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 25, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 262*)—EXCEPTIONS—NONSUIT.

Where plaintiff did not except to the giving of a peremptory instruction to find for defendant, the nonsuit so taken must be regarded as voluntary.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 274*)—EXCEPTIONS—VOLUNTARY NONSUIT.

Where plaintiff did not except to a peremptory instruction to find for defendant, but took "an involuntary nonsuit with leave to move to set the same aside," an exception afterwards taken to the overruling of such a motion could not relate back to the ruling on the instructions; the nonsuit being in fact a voluntary nonsuit, since no exception was taken to the instruction.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; James E. Goodrich, Judge.

Action by Ida M. Arnold against the Aetna Life Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Aleshire, Hardin & Gundlach, of Kansas City, for appellant. Rosenberger & Reed, of Kansas City, for respondent.

JOHNSON, J. This is an action on a policy of accident insurance. The court, with the aid of a jury, proceeded to try the issues raised by the pleadings, and at the conclusion of the evidence gave a peremptory instruction to the jury to return a verdict for defendant. Plaintiff did not except to the giving of this instruction, but took "an involuntary nonsuit with leave given to move to set the same aside," and the court discharged the jury. Afterward plaintiff filed a motion to set aside the nonsuit. The court overruled the motion, and plaintiff excepted to that ruling and appealed.

[1] There is nothing in the record for us to review. The failure of plaintiff to save an exception to the ruling of the court in giving the peremptory instruction precluded her from taking an involuntary nonsuit, and we must regard the nonsuit as voluntary. As is said by Broadus, J., in Carter v. O'Neill, 102 Mo. App. 391, 76 S. W. 717: "All the authorities in this state are to the effect that a party, in order to have adverse rulings reviewed in an appellate court, must except to such rulings. For his failure below in that respect, plaintiff is not entitled to an appeal." Lewis v. Mining Co., 199 Mo. 463, 97 S. W. 938.

[2] The exception afterward taken to the ruling on the motion to set aside the nonsuit could not, and did not, relate back to the ruling on the peremptory instruction and provide an exception to that ruling, nor convert into an involuntary nonsuit one that had become irretrievably stamped as voluntary. Allen v. Railway, 141 Mo. App. 586, 126 S. W. 254; Bushyager v. Packing Co., 142 Mo. App. 311, 126 S. W. 985.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 12, 1912.)

1. PLEADING (§ 185*)—REBUTTER.

2. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 54*)—SIGNING—EX PARTE AFFIDAVITS.

Where the record in the trial court did not show that a bill of exceptions to the motion for new trial was preserved, and the judge refused to approve a bill so reciting, but did approve one omitting the recital of an exception, an ex parte affidavit of counsel, made part of an abstract, will not supply that defect; for Rev. St. 1909, §§ 2030, 2031, 2034, respectively providing that if the judge refuses to sign a bill of exceptions he shall certify his grounds, that the bill of exceptions may be signed by bystanders, and that when the trial judge refuses to permit the filing of a bystander's bill affidavits of its truth may be taken, provide the exclusive remedies for the refusal of the trial judge to sign or approve a correct bill of exception.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 502*)—PRESENTATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW IN COURT BELOW—NECESSITY.

Unless an exception to the overruling of the unsuccessful party's motion for new trial appears of record in the bill of exceptions, all inquiry into the proceedings of trial is closed to the appellate court; and it can only examine the record proper.

Appeal from Circuit Court, New Madrid County; Henry C. Riley, Judge.

Action by W. T. Murphy against the Lorwood Cooperage Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Brown & Gallivan, of New Madrid, for appellant. Brewer & Riley, of New Madrid, for respondent.

REYNOLDS, P. J. This action, brought in the circuit court of New Madrid county, seeks the recovery of a balance claimed to be due from defendant to plaintiff on the sale of certain timber then standing on lands in that county, to be cut into logs by plaintiff and the logs to be delivered at a price designated f. o. b. cars at a railroad switch in the county, it being charged that the amount was due when the logs were loaded by plaintiff on the cars at that place. It is averred that plaintiff cut and hauled a designated number of feet of the timber as described into logs, and loaded the logs on cars as required; that defendant received and paid for one of the carloads of logs but refused to receive or pay for the other two cars and notified plaintiff that no more of the timber would be received by it. Claiming a balance due, plaintiff demands judgment for that, with interest and costs.

The answer was first a general denial; then a denial of the incorporation of the plaintiff company, the answer duly verified. The reply took issue on this and also pleaded that at the time of the agreement mentioned in the petition, a person named represented to plaintiff that defendant was then an organized corporation; but that it was afterwards organized and had then ratified the contract made in its name. Defendant moved to strike out this reply on the ground that it was a departure. That motion being overruled, defendant filed what its counsel call "an answer to the replication."

The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff. Defendant in due time filed its motion for a new trial. That was overruled but so far as shown by the abstract of the bill of exceptions and, as admitted by counsel, so far as appears by the bill of exceptions which was filed, no exception was saved to the action of the court in overruling the motion for a new trial. Plaintiff in due time filed a motion in arrest of judgment. That was overruled and exception saved to the overruling of that motion. Defendant thereupon duly perfected appeal to this court.

[1] It is hardly necessary to refer to the pleadings or attempted pleadings, following the reply. Our Code specifically provides that the reply is the last pleading in a cause, that, of course, subject to a motion to strike it out or to a demurrer, as to any other pleading. An answer to a reply is unknown under our Code.

[2] Counsel attempt to cure the omission from the bill of exceptions of any exception to the action of the trial court in overruling the motion for a new trial by an affidavit made by one of those counsel, to the effect that he assisted in conducting the trial, that he prepared and filed the motion for new trial, presented it to the court, was there when the court overruled it and excepted to the action of the court in overruling the motion; that he prepared the bill of exceptions in the cause and presented the same to the attorney for respondent for approval; that that attorney refused to approve it for the reason that the record made by the clerk did not show that the appellant excepted to the action of the court in overruling the motion for new trial; that he presented the bill of exceptions to the judge of the circuit court for his signature and that that judge re-refused to sign the bill of exceptions containing an exception of appellant to the action of the court in overruling the motion for new trial because the record did not show any exception to his action in overruling the motion, and that the attorneys for respondent still refused to approve the bill of exceptions, compelling "appellant to file said bill of exceptions without their exception to the action of the court in overruling said motion for new trial therein noted."

It is thus distinctly admitted in this affidavit of counsel that the bill of exceptions does not show any exception to the action of the court in overruling the motion for new trial, and that the trial court refused to sign any bill of exceptions containing any statement that exception had been saved to the action of the court on the motion, but did sign what the court has certified to be a correct bill of exceptions and which counsel for appellant themselves filed as the bill of exceptions in this case. This affidavit of counsel appears printed in the abstract, there following the certificate of the clerk of the circuit court to the transcript. How it came into the abstract does not appear. It nowhere appears that it was filed in the circuit court or for that matter that it was ever filed with any court, unless incorporating it at the end of the abstract may be considered as filing it with us.

In support of this mode of attack upon the bill of exceptions, counsel rely upon State v. Feeley, 194 Mo. 300, loc. cit. 315, 92 S. W. 663, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 351, 112 Am. St. Rep. 511. In that case it is said at that page: "Matters of exception which occur in the presence of the court cannot be shown by affidavits, unless the court refuses to sign the bill when presented to him upon the ground that the matters therein stated, or some of them, are not true," citing several cases. This is very far from sustaining the contention of counsel, that a bill of exceptions can be amended as here attempted. The affidavits referred to by the court in the Feeley Case and cases there cited as being necessary are undoubtedly affidavits required to be filed in the trial court when the judge refuses to permit a bill of exceptions signed by by-standers to be filed. Section 2034, R. S. 1909. If the trial judge refuses to sign a bill of exceptions on the ground that it is not a true bill sections 2030, 2031, 2034, R. S. 1909, provide the mode and the only mode for meeting the situation and bringing the bill before the appellate court. One is, by preparing and filing a bill of exceptions to be signed by three by-standers, "reputable inhabitants of the state." The other is, if the judge refuses to permit the bill so signed to be filed, then the truth of that bill is tested by affidavits, not exceeding five; the by-standers or affiants to be disinterested spectators and not the parties in interest or their attorneys. State v. Jones, 102 Mo. 305, 14 S. W. 946, 15 S. W. 556. Nor can affidavits in contradiction of a bill of exceptions which has been regularly signed and filed be regarded. State v. De Mosse, 98 Mo. 340, 11 S. W. 731. It is true these two cited cases are criminal causes, but as said in State v. Jones, supra, "bills of exception are procured in the same way, whether the cause be civil or criminal." No such course was here followed, so that we can do no less than accept the bill of exceptions which was filed as correct, and to hold that exception was not saved to the action of the trial court in overruling the motion for a new trial.

[3] The Supreme Court, in very many cases and from an early day, has uniformly held that unless that exception appears of record, all inquiry into the proceedings at the trial is closed to the appellate court. See Parsons v. Clark & Co., 98 Mo. App. 28, 77 S. W. 582, and cases there cited. Bound by the decisions of the Supreme Court there cited by express mandate of the Constitution, we are compelled to hold that by reason of this purely technical defect in the record all consideration of this case on its merits is closed to us. All that is open to our examination and review is the record proper. Finding no error in that, we must and do affirm the judgment of the circuit court.

Appeal from Circuit Court, New Madrid County; Henry C. Riley, Judge.

Action by Stella Angel against the City of Portageville. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Brown & Gallivan, of New Madrid, for appellant. Ward & Collins, of Caruthersville, for respondent.

REYNOLDS, P. J. This is an action by respondent against the city of Portageville, to recover damages in the sum of $2,000, for injuries alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff in consequence of a defective sidewalk in the defendant city. The answer, after a general denial, sets up that plaintiff, "if injured in the manner as set out in her petition, the same was the result of her own carelessness and negligence directly contributing thereto in this," and then sets up that plaintiff was going along the sidewalk in broad daylight and was crossing over the point where the hole was alleged to be with full knowledge of the alleged defect, which was open and obvious, and that she passed over it in a careless and negligent manner, "there being a safe and secure way for her to have gone, thereby endangering her own safety." After filing this answer plaintiff by leave withdrew it and filed a demurrer on the ground that the petition did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. This was overruled and defendant refiled its answer.

There was a trial before the court and a jury and a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $750. Defendant in due time filed its motion for new trial. This was overruled. Afterwards and in due time defendant filed its motion in arrest of judgment which was also overruled. Thereupon defendant duly perfected its appeal to this court, filing its bill of exceptions in due time.

[1] In the abstract of the record furnished by counsel for appellant are two affidavits following the certificate of the clerk of the circuit court to the transcript. In and by these affidavits affiants state that they were the attorneys who assisted the city attorney in defending this case in the circuit court; that they prepared the motion for a new trial and a motion in arrest of judgment, signed them and filed them; that they were both present in court when the motions for new trial and in arrest were acted on by the court and at the time the court overruled the motions they excepted in open court to the action of the court in overruling each of these motions. It is further set out in these affidavits that the attorney for plaintiff refused to O. K. the bill of exceptions with exception of defendant noted to the action of the court in overruling the motions for new trial and in arrest, for the reason that the clerk of the court failed to get the exceptions of the defendant to the action of the court in his minute book and that the court would not sign the bill of exceptions without the approval of the attorney for plaintiff inasmuch as the records of the court failed to show exceptions to his action in overruling these motions; that for this reason counsel were unable to get their exceptions noted in their bill of exceptions. One of these affidavits is sworn to before the clerk of the circuit court of New Madrid county, the other before a notary in Indiana. There is nothing in the abstract indicating that these affidavits were ever filed in the circuit court or that they have been filed in any court, save that they are embodied in the abstract of the record, as before stated, filed in this court by appellant.

The bill of exceptions, as is recited in it, which was filed, sets out that defendant had tendered it as its bill of exceptions and prayed that it might be signed and sealed as such, which was accordingly done by the circuit judge in vacation.

It is contended by counsel for appellant that we can consider these affidavits as correcting the bill of exceptions. This presents precisely the same point which was involved in the case of Murphy v. Lorwood Cooperage Co., 151 S. W. 191, the opinion in which is to be filed along with the opinion in this case. It is unnecessary to repeat what is there said on this matter of the bill of exceptions. We refer to that as equally applicable to this case.

[2-6] This leaves for our consideration only the record proper. It is true that the petition in the case is indefinite and lacking in specific averments but we cannot say that it is so fatally defective as to state no cause of action or as not to support the verdict and judgment in the case. Demurring and that demurrer being overruled, plaintiff elected to answer and thereby lost the benefit of the demurrer save as to the juridic-tion of the court over the subject-matter of the action, or that the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Section 1804, R. S. 1909; Hanson v. Neal, 215 Mo. 256, loc. cit. 277, 114 S. W. 1073. Nor can it avail itself of a motion in arrest for the reason that it has failed to save exception to the overruling of that motion. Irrespective of this, it is always open to appellant to attack the petition in this court for failure to state any cause of action. However defective this petition is, it is clear that the necessary facts can be implied from what is defectively stated. When that occurs, a defendant will not be heard, after verdict and judgment, to object that such a petition will not sustain a judgment. Such objection is only available when the petition fails to state any cause of action, not where one is defectively stated. Hurst v. City of Ash Grove, 96 Mo. 168, loc. cit. 172, 9 S. W. 631; Scamell v. St. Louis Transit Co., 103 Mo. App. 504, loc. cit. 513, 77 S. W. 1021. In addition to this it is a recognized rule of pleading in this state that the defective allegations of the petition may be supplied by the averments of the answer, so that reading them together a cause of action is stated. Garth v. Caldwell, 72 Mo. 622, loc. cit. 629; Donaldson v. County of Butler, 98 Mo. 163, loc. cit. 166, 11 S. W. 572. We have set out the substance of defendant's answer in this case. Construing it with the petition, we hold that there is such a cause of action stated in the case as warranted the verdict and supports the judgment. The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Sullivan County; Fred Lamb, Judge.

Action by Martha Wilson against A. J. Salisbury and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

John W. Bingham, of Milan, and Smoot & Cooley, of Kirksville, for appellants. D. M. Wilson and J. W. Clapp, both of Milan, and Higbee & Mills, of Kirksville, for respondent.

BROADDUS, P. J. This is a suit to charge certain real estate with a lien to enforce a judgment.

On October 23, 1907, Jacob Salisbury, as principal, with the defendants, A. J. and E. H. Salisbury, as sureties, executed their promissory note for $104.50, payable to plaintiff, Martha Wilson, due in one year after date. Jacob and E. H. were the sons of A. J. Salisbury. Soon thereafter and before due, the plaintiff transferred the note to the Farmers' Bank at Pollock. Before the maturity of the note, the defendant A. J. Salisbury sold and conveyed the land sought to be charged to his son, the defendant E. H. Salisbury. The consideration agreed to be paid was the assumption by the grantee of mortgage indebtedness on the land to about $3,000, and the payment of unsecured debts of A. J. and E. H. Salisbury, which, it is claimed, amounted to about $1,800 or $1,900, but that of plaintiff was not included; and, as an inducement to E. H. Salisbury to buy the land, the father allowed him in the sale $3,000 as the son's part of the father's estate, the father having previously given to each of his other children an equal or greater amount; and the son was to pay his father in cash the balance of what the value of the farm amounted to, rating it all at $40 per acre, except about 12 acres, which was rated at $35 per acre. The total value of the farm was thus estimated to be about $8,601. The evidence tended to show that A. J. was insolvent, and that he had little or no other property, except the said real estate.

Over plaintiff's objection, defendants were allowed to show that, while the bank held the note, it extended to Jacob, the principal therein, without the consent of the sureties, an extension of time for payment; that is, for six months. After the expiration of the time extended, the defendant E. H. was called upon to pay the note; but he refused. Afterwards the bank received from G. W.

Wilson, the plaintiff's husband, the amount of the note and interest, and wrote on its face the words "Paid in full," and surrendered it. Thereafter plaintiff brought suit against all three of the signers of the note, but dismissed as to defendant E. H. and took judgment by default against Jacob and A. J. Salisbury. Thereafter this suit was instituted. The court found that the conveyance was voluntary to the extent of $3,000, being the amount which was to be given to E. H. Salisbury to equalize his share in the father's estate, and rendered judgment charging the land with a lien to the amount of plaintiff's judgment. The defendants appealed.

It is contended that plaintiff was an indorser of the note, and, as such, was only secondarily liable, and was therefore released by the unauthorized extension of time; it being made without her knowledge and for a valuable consideration. Therefore, whether the payment was made by plaintiff or her husband, it was voluntary, for which reason she cannot attack the conveyance.

[1] Without going into the correctness of defendants' premises that plaintiff was only secondarily liable, and was by the act of the bank extending the time for the payment of the note released, it does not follow that their conclusion that she cannot now attack the validity of the conveyance is correct. If it is true that plaintiff, being secondarily liable, was released from all liability by the act of the bank extending the time for the payment of the note, it should have been set up as a defense to the suit on the note. As between the same parties and the same subject-matter, a judgment on the merits of the first action constitutes a bar to the second action, as to any admissible matter which might have been received to sustain or defeat the demand. Paving Co. v. Field, 132 Mo. App. 628, 97 S. W. 179, and authorities cited.

[2] As the court did not affirmatively decide that the conveyance was made with a fraudulent intent, it is contended that the same was not void as to creditors. In support of this theory defendants rely upon the case of Bank v. Vollrath, 135 Mo. App. 63, 115 S. W. 510. There the court held that the transfer was not voluntary, and the existence of an intention to defraud did not necessarily follow; but the opinion recognizes the universal doctrine that a gift by an insolvent father of his property to his son is fraudulent as to creditors. One of the latest expressions on the question is found in Childers v. Pickenpaugh, 219 Mo. 376, 118 S. W. 453. See, also, Bank v. Nichols, 202 Mo. loc. cit. 323, 100 S. W. 613.

[3] The deposition of A. J. Salisbury, who was in court at the trial, was read, over the objections of defendant. The practice is permissible, on the ground that they are declarations of the adverse party. Bank v. Nichols, supra.

[4] It was not necessary that plaintiff should have procured an execution and return of nulla bona; the debtor having been proved insolvent. Turner v. Adams, 46 Mo. 95; Iron Co. v. McDonald, 61 Mo. App. 559. Affirmed. All concur.

STATE ex rel. RYAN, Collector, v. COLES et al.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 12, 1912. Rehearing Denied Dec. 3, 1912.)

1. DRAINS (§ 14*)—FORMATION OF DISTRICT—COLLATERAL ATTACK—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Where it was sought to defeat payment of assessments for the establishment of a drainage district, on the ground that the clerk's premature issuance of process deprived the county court of jurisdiction, the attack is a collateral one.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. §§ 5, 6; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

2. DRAINS (§ 14*)—FORMATION OF DISTRICTS—COLLATERAL ATTACK—INFERIOR COURTS.

While ordinarily the facts necessary to confer jurisdiction upon an inferior court, not proceeding according to the common law, must appear on the face of its record, yet, in view of Ann. St. 1906, § 8288, providing that the county court shall first determine whether the required notice had been given, a proceeding for the establishment of a drainage district is not subject to collateral attack, though the record shows that the notice was given before the report of viewers, instead of after, as required by statute; there being an express finding by the court that notice was given in obedience to the statute.

Appeal from Hannibal Court of Common Pleas; David H. Eby, Judge.

Action by the State, on the relation of Daniel Ryan, Collector, against W. Coles and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Smoot & Cooley, of Kirksville, for appellants. David A. Rouner and F. H. McCullough, both of Edina, for respondent.

NORTONI, J. This is a suit on a tax bill. The finding and judgment were for plaintiff, and defendant prosecutes the appeal.

The tax bill in suit was issued, under the drainage laws, in part compensation for the construction of a ditch by a drainage district organized in Knox county and incorporated under the statutes. Defendant refused to pay the taxes assessed against his lands within the drainage district; and hence this suit upon the tax bill for the installment of taxes assessed for the year 1908.

It is first urged the petition is insufficient, for the reason it does not set forth for what year the taxes evinced by the tax bill were assessed. Obviously, appellant has erred touching the fact upon which this argument is predicated; for the petition is clear with respect to the matter. It is set forth in the petition in plain and precise language that the taxes are due under an assessment made against the lands therein described in the year 1908. The point is not worthy of further consideration.

The principal argument advanced for reversal is to the effect that the notice of publication, issued by the clerk of the county court, in vacation, during the period in which the drainage district was in process of organization, is premature; and therefore, the entire organization of the drainage district is invalid. This argument proceeds from the fact that it appears in the record by a file mark that the report of the viewers appointed to view and report upon the practicability of the proposed drainage district was filed on July 19th, and the notice of publication, which the law contemplates should be predicated thereon, appears from a recital on the notice to have been issued by the county clerk on July 11th. Upon the petition being presented to the county court for the organization of the drainage district under the statutes (section 8278 et seq., Ann. St. 1906), and the preliminary proceedings thereon, the court appointed a board of three resident freeholders as viewers, or commissioners, to investigate the proposed district and report, under sections 8280, 8281, 8284, Ann. St. 1906. The record discloses that the viewers, or commissioners, thus appointed duly qualified and proceeded upon the discharge of their duties by filing with the county clerk a full and complete report touching the matter submitted to them. This report of the viewers is marked filed on July 19th; and it appears from the date line on the notice the clerk issued the notice of publication, which the law contemplates should be predicated upon the report of the commissioners, or viewers, on July 11th. The statute (section 8281, Ann. St. 1906) provides that after the report of the viewers is filed in the county court, as above provided, it shall be the duty of the court, or, in vacation, the clerk thereof, by an order of record, to fix the time of the hearing of the petition and report of the viewers thereon, and to cause a notice to be given, by publication by two insertions in some weekly newspaper of general circulation in the county, of the pendency of the petition, etc. Section 8287, Ann. St. 1906, also provides, upon the filing of the report of the viewers, the county clerk shall immediately set the hearing of the same for some day of the next regular term of the county court. This statute directs, too, that the clerk shall thereupon issue, in the name of the state, a notice, directed, by name, to every person returned by the engineer and viewers as the owner of every lot or tract of land affected by the proposed improvements, or of any interest therein, etc. When all of the provisions of the article touching the organization of drainage districts, and especially the statutes above referred to, are read together, no one can doubt that the law contemplates the court shall issue the notice of publication after the viewers have filed their report, and not until then; for, indeed, such seems to be the express provisions of the statute.

[1] As before said in the case before us, it appears from the file mark that the viewers reported their finding in the county court July 19th; and it appears, too, from the date line on the notice that the clerk issued the notice of publication, which should have originated thereafter, on July 11th. On this appearing, it is earnestly argued that the notice of publication so issued by the clerk as of date July 11th was premature and wholly unauthorized; and it is said, too, that the jurisdiction of the county court failed in respect of the subject-matter, the organization of the drainage district, because of this fact. The argument goes to the effect that the issuance of the notice of publication by the clerk, after the report of the viewers, is jurisdictional, and that upon its appearing in the record that such notice was issued before the report of the viewers was filed the whole proceeding touching the organization of the drainage district was invalid; and therefore the district was without authority to run an assessment of the tax upon defendant's land for benefits accrued, and report it to the county authorities. Obviously the proposition asserted presents a collateral attack upon the organization of the drainage district, and for that reason may not prevail.

[2] If the issuance of the notice of publication by the clerk goes to the jurisdiction as contended, the time of the issuance of such notice was a jurisdictional fact in pais, which the county court is expressly empowered by the statute to find and determine for itself. Section 8288, Ann. St. 1906, touching this matter, is full and complete. The statute reads: "The court shall first determine whether the required notice has been given. If it finds that due notice has not been given, it shall continue the hearing to a day to be fixed by the court, and cause the notice to be given as provided in section 8287; and when the court finds that due notice has been given, it shall examine the report of the engineer and viewers. * * *"

From this it appears the court is to determine whether or not the notice of publication has been properly issued and given by the clerk; for it is said, if the court finds such notice has not been properly given, the cause shall be continued, in order that the notice may be given. On the contrary, if it is found by the court the notice has been properly given, then the court may proceed as further directed in the statute. It would be difficult to confer in few words more complete authority upon the county court to determine this fact pertaining to its jurisdiction to proceed. The judgment of the county court finds and declares as a fact that this preliminary notice was properly issued and given. It appearing, as it does, that the court possessed full power, under the express provisions of the statute, to determine this jurisdictional fact, the matter pertaining to the issuance of the notice is forever concluded against a collateral attack by its judgment thereon. Though the general rule requires that courts of limited and inferior jurisdiction, such as the county court, not proceeding according to the course of the common law, should reveal affirmatively on the face of their records all the facts required by the statute to support their jurisdiction, it has been recently decided by the Supreme Court that an exception to the rule exists in those cases where the law, as here, invests the county court with authority to find the existence of such jurisdictional facts before it acquires or exercises jurisdiction in the premises. It is said in such cases the law presumes, when the matter is subjected to collateral attack, even in favor of a court of limited and inferior jurisdiction, that the inferior court found the essential jurisdictional facts to exist. See State ex rel. v. Taylor, 224 Mo. 393, 461, 123 S. W. 892. Indeed, the same court, in disposing of a question under the drainage laws very similar to the one here involved, said, in State ex rel. v. Wilson, 216 Mo. 215, 277, 115 S. W. 549, 568, as follows: "The law of this state is well settled to the effect that records of courts of limited and inferior jurisdiction, not proceeding according to the course of the common law, must show affirmatively all the facts which the statute requires to be stated, in order to give the court jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter of the suit. State v. Metzger, 26 Mo. 65; Hansberger v. Railroad, 43 Mo. 196; Schell v. Leland, 45 Mo. 289. But that law, like most laws, has its well-defined limitations and exceptions; and one of the exceptions is this: That where such court, or a mere ministerial board for that matter, possesses, under the law, jurisdiction of a certain class of cases, and is required to find the existence of certain facts in pais, in order to acquire jurisdiction of a particular case belonging to that class, the law will presume, in a collateral attack upon the judgment, that such facts did exist, and that such court or board passed upon them, as required by the statute. State v. Dugan, 110 Mo. 138 [19 S. W. 195], etc."

In the case last cited it was urged that the organization of the drainage district was invalid, for the reason that the record did not show the court had caused the notice of publication to be given. In other words, in that case no notice of publication whatever appeared to have been issued; but, notwithstanding this, the Supreme Court declared the organization of the drainage district valid, as against a collateral attack, on the ground that the county court was authorized to find and determine as a jurisdictional fact in pais that the clerk had issued the notice before it proceeded to organize and equip the district with power. Under these authorities it is entirely clear that, whatever the filing marks may show with respect to the lodging of the report of the viewers with the county court, and the date of the issuance of the notice of publication, the matter is immune from collateral attack; for, no doubt, the court investigated into the matter and ascertained that the clerk issued the notice of publication subsequently to the filing of the report on July 19th, instead of July 11th, as the date of the notice seems to suggest. To hold the mere date line made by the clerk, an obvious ministerial act, on the notice revealing July 11th as the date of issue, to impart absolute verity would be to require us to reject as for naught the judicial finding of fact made by the court and recited in its judgment touching the same. The judgment is conclusive in this collateral proceeding. Obviously, the entire organization and its indebtedness should not be overturned because a date line on a notice made by the clerk in his ministerial capacity conflicts with a solemn judgment to the contrary on the same fact.

We have examined the other questions presented by the appeal, but do not regard them of sufficient merit to warrant discussion in the opinion.

The judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 25, 1912.)

CARRIERS (§ 305*)—INJURY TO PASSENGER—FAILURE TO OPEN AND LIGHT DEPOT.

The injury to one who, knowing a depot would not be heated or lighted at night, went to it two hours before time for the train he was to take, and voluntarily got into a box freight car at the platform, occupied by a shipper, and in getting out, on arrival of the train fell, was not caused by any failure of the carrier in its duty to have the depot heated, lighted, and open a reasonable time before a train was due.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Cole County; John M. Williams, Judge.

Action by W. E. Sweeney against the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

A. M. Hough, of Jefferson City, and Lee Hagerman, of St. Louis, for appellant. W. C. Irwin and D. F. Calfee, both of Jefferson City, for respondent.

ELLISON, J. Plaintiff was injured by stepping or falling between one of defendant's freight box cars and its depot platform, while attempting to pass from the car to the platform at a little village called Tebbetts, after night. The negligence charged is not having the station building lighted, heated, and open, and not having the platform lighted. Defendant's demurrer to the evidence was overruled, and the verdict and judgment were for plaintiff.

Plaintiff went on a train from Jefferson City to Tebbetts. He was acquainted with Reifsteck, who lived in the village, about 300 feet from the depot, and he and a man named Davis engaged a conveyance from Reifsteck's boys, and, taking two of them along, the four started into the country. It was in March and while the roads were quite muddy, yet some of the witnesses thought it was freezing a little; at any rate, the weather was stated to be "cool and damp." While on the trip there was a mist or possibly little flurries of snow. A quart of whisky was taken along by Davis, and the party partook of this. The night was dark, and they had several mishaps, in one of which the doubletrees were broken and the vehicle turned on its side against a bank. Notwithstanding this condition of things, they escaped injury and got safely back to Tebbetts between 11 and 12 o'clock p. m. Plaintiff and Davis intended to leave that night on a train passing there at 1:40 a. m. They, still in company with the Reifsteck boys and presumably after putting away the team, went at 11:40 to the depot to wait for the train. The platform was not lighted and the depot building was dark. It was still "cool," though there was no rain or snow falling. A hotel, which appears not to have been kept open after bedtime, was near by. They, however, noticed a box freight car by the side of the platform on one side of the depot building. The car was occupied by a man who had some articles of property he was shipping. The man had a lantern. So, though uninvited, they, including the Reifsteck boys, stepped into the car, there to wait for the train. After a time plaintiff half reclined on some straw in a corner of the car. At 1:40 the whistle of the incoming train was heard. Plaintiff testified that, though "drowsy," he was not asleep, and got up and proceeded to leave the car. Others said he was asleep and was awakened. The bottom of the car and the depot platform were flush—that is, on a level—and about 15 inches space between; yet plaintiff, in attempting to step onto the platform, missed and went in between, striking and breaking some of his ribs. He was well acquainted with the village, the depot, its surroundings, and knew it was not kept open and that lights were not kept through the night.

Defendant's demurrer to the evidence should have been sustained. Defendant, ordinarily, was not liable to plaintiff in his approach to its station platform by way of or through a freight car standing at the station on one of its side tracks. It can be seen that plaintiff realized that this suggestion could stand in his way, and he has sought to avoid it by attempting to show that defendant's negligence in failing to have its station building open and lighted forced him into the car to protect himself from the weather, and thereby connected itself with his injury. There can be negligence without a neglected duty, and the duty must have been owing to the complaining party. Frye v. St. L., I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 200 Mo. 377, 407, 98 S. W. 566, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1069. It is therefore important to know when defendant's duty to plaintiff began, if at all. A depot building is not maintained as a rooming house or lounging place. It is intended as a waiting room for passengers for the reasonable time which should be allowed passengers for coming to it and making ready to depart on an incoming train, or to wait for delayed trains. Archer v. Railway Co., 110 Mo. App. 349, 85 S. W. 934; Phillips v. Southern Ry. Co., 124 N. C. 123, 32 S. E. 388, 45 L. R. A. 163; Illinois Cent. Ry. Co. v. Laloge, 113 Ky. 896, 69 S. W. 795, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 693, 62 L. R. A. 405.

Our statute (section 3094, R. S. 1909) specifically requires that stations at crossings with other roads shall be kept lighted and heated a reasonable time before departure of trains. The first part of the section requires that railway carriers "shall furnish sufficient accommodations for the transportation of all passengers * * * as shall, within a reasonable time previous thereto, be offered for transportation," etc. Whether this provision refers to waiting rooms, we need not inquire, since it is manifestly the duty of the carrier, aside from a statute, to keep its stations open, lighted, and heated such reasonable length of time before the arrival of trains, as we have above indicated. Sargent v. Railway Co., 114 Mo. loc. cit. 355, 21 S. W. 823, 19 L. R. A. 460; Draper v. Railway, 165 Ind. 117, 120, 74 N. E. 889, 6 Ann. Cas. 569. In some states a penalty is provided if they are not opened and lighted one-half hour before the arrival. Illinois Cent. Ry. Co. v. Laloge, supra. The greatest time we have noted in any statute was in that of Texas, where one hour is named. International & G. N. Ry. v. Pevey, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 460, 70 S. W. 778.

Plaintiff, though knowing there was no light or heat at the station at night, went to it two full hours before the train was due. He got into the freight car from his free choice and not from necessity. He had the Reifsteck boys with him, and, if he did not wish to arouse the hotel man, he could have remained in the nearby barn where the horses had been put away, until a few moments of train time. Sandifer's Adm'r v. Railway Co., 89 S. W. 528, 28 Ky. Law Rep. 464. Besides knowing the depot was not lighted when he went into the freight car, he knew it would not be when he would come out, for he stated he had taken a train there at other times.

So, conceding that it was defendant's general duty to have had its depot building open and lighted a reasonable time before the train was due, plaintiff is in no position to complain. His injury did not result from lack of light in his approaching the station in the regular and proper way. It came from his having voluntarily placed himself in what turned out to be a hazardous place. He went into that place without defendant's invitation or fault, and he got out at his own risk.

The judgment is reversed. All concur.

VINSON et al. v. LEE JORDAN LUMBER CO.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 25, 1912.)

ACCORD AND SATISFACTION (§ 8*)—PART PAYMENT—DISPUTE—CONSIDERATION.

Where a purchaser of lumber remitted, as each shipment was made, the contract price, less 2 per cent., and nothing was said as to the 2 per cent. till after all the shipments and such payments, there was no accord and satisfaction, not only because the payments were not made and accepted in full satisfaction, but because, there having been no dispute as to the amount of indebtedness, such an acceptance would have been without consideration.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Cole County; John M. Williams, Judge.

Action by A. C. Vinson and others, partners as the Hawthorn Lumber Company, against the Lee Jordan Lumber Company. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Pope & Lohman, of Jefferson City, for appellants. Irwin & Peters, of Jefferson City, for respondent.

BROADBUSH, P. J. This is an action for a debt instituted in a justice's court, where plaintiff filed an account setting out specifically different items as a charge of indebtedness against defendant.

The plaintiff is a company engaged in the lumber business at Tempson, Tex., and the defendant is a lumber company engaged in business at Jefferson City, Mo. The undisputed facts are that on August 20, 1909, the plaintiff sold to defendant a large quantity of lumber at a fixed price of so much per 1,000 feet f. o. b. at Caywood, La., with the exception of a small portion f. o. b. at Jefferson City. At the place and time of delivery of the lumber defendant was to pay on each car 80 per cent. of the price agreed upon, and the remaining 20 per cent. on each car as soon as unloaded. The lumber, which amounted to about 1,000,000 feet, was delivered as per the agreement, and the 80 per cent. of the price and all of the 20 per cent. was paid, except 2 per cent. The defendant refused to pay the 2 per cent., which amounts to $189.93, which is the amount sued on. The defendant filed its answer, in which it admits the purchase and delivery of lumber for which it agreed to pay a certain price, that the lumber was shipped by plaintiff to defendant from time to time in car load lots, and alleges that then and there defendant settled in full with plaintiff for each and every car load of lumber which was delivered, and deducted from the purchase price thereof 2 per cent. discount, and rendered to plaintiff a statement showing the deduction of said discount of 2 per cent. on each and every car of said lumber; and that plaintiff, with full knowledge of said deduction, consented and agreed to such settlement as final between plaintiff and defendant on each and every car that was delivered by plaintiff to defendant; that said deduction of 2 per cent. was made with full knowledge of plaintiff and in accordance with the understanding and agreement at the time of the making of the contract, although said deduction was not specifically mentioned in the contract entered into between plaintiff and defendant, but that it was agreed and understood by the laws of trade as well-established, long existing, and universal custom of the trade, etc. The contract was in writing and explicitly provided for payment of 80 per cent. of the purchase price upon delivery and the remaining 20 per cent. when unloaded. The defendant attempted to show that a dispute arose as to the amount of its indebtedness to plaintiff, and that defendant, with full knowledge and consent of plaintiff, deducted 2 per cent. discount from the indebtedness, which was accepted as a settlement in full, and that afterwards plaintiff's agent in a conversation with defendant's agent expressed himself as well satisfied with the settlement.

About all we can gather from defendant's testimony is that in making payments for lumber delivered at different times it retained 2 per cent. discount under the supposition that such was the trade custom, and that it sent a statement to plaintiff for each consignment of lumber received showing such deduction. But there was no evidence that plaintiff, not until after all the lumber was delivered and paid for, except the 2 per cent., demanded said 2 per cent. discount, consequently there was no dispute as to the amount of defendant's indebtedness during the time in which defendant made the different payments and rendered statements of the amount of lumber received and amount paid. According to defendant's evidence, plaintiff furnished no statement of account during the whole time.

There was nothing to dispute about, as the contract provided for no such discount. There was some evidence to the effect that there was a mistake in plaintiff's account of about $37 which was called to plaintiff's attention and adjusted at a time when defendant's agent was at plaintiff's place of business at Caywood, La., where plaintiff's agent said to the former: "Lee, that is all right. I am more than pleased with the way you treated me on this lumber deal. I got better grades and better treatment than I ever did from any man I ever sold lumber to, and you remitted so promptly in settlement for this lumber than any lumber I have ever sold." This is relied upon as evidence that the parties had settled a dispute as to the account. We do not think so, as there was no reference whatever made as to the 2 per cent. discount, and it could have made no difference if there had been, because the 2 per cent. discount had not been a matter of dispute. And it cannot be treated as a waiver, for there was no consideration of any other kind to support it.

The law in relation to accord and satisfaction is said to be that: Where a debtor in good faith disputes the amount claimed by his creditor to be due, and tenders the amount admitted to be due, if the tender is on condition that it is in full payment of the amount due and the creditor accepts the tender, this would amount to accord and satisfaction. Bahrenburg v. Trust Co., 128 Mo. App. 526, 107 S. W. 440. And it is said: "The acceptance of a part of an admitted debt in discharge of the whole will not bind the creditor for lack of consideration; but, if there is an honest difference in regard to the amount due and the parties agree that the debtor may pay a less sum in full of the creditor's claim and the former does so, he is discharged." Chamberlain v. Smith, 110 Mo. App. 657, 85 S. W. 645. The law as stated in these two opinions expresses fully the law in relation to accord and satisfaction.

The defendant's contention that there was an accord and satisfaction is not supported by these authorities. First, because there was no dispute as to the amount of the indebtedness; and, second, that the payment was not made and accepted in full satisfaction of the debt. The defendant did not even show that plaintiff accepted the payments made in full discharge of the debt, which was attempted, and, if it had been so shown, it did not bind plaintiff for lack of consideration.

The court erred in refusing plaintiff's demurrer to defendant's evidence, and should have instructed the jury to find for plaintiff. The cause is reversed and remanded, with directions to enter a judgment for the amount claimed.

LUCKEY v. CITY OF BROOKFIELD.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri.
Nov. 25, 1912.)

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 32*)—PERMANENT INJURY TO LAND—NUISANCE.

The injury from polluting a stream flowing through the land of an individual by construction by a city of a sewer system emptying into the stream is permanent, and inflicted on the completion of the system; and the owner may only maintain a single cause of action for the consequential damages, past and future, caused by a diminution of the market value of the land, which action is barred in 10 years from the completion of the sewer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 143-145; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Linn County; Fred Lamb, Judge.

Action by B. C. Luckey against the City of Brookfield. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Bresnahan & West and Bailey & Hart, all of Brookfield, for appellant. Burns, Burns & Burns, of Brookfield, for respondent.

JOHNSON, J. Plaintiff sued the city of Brookfield, a city of the third class, to recover damages for injury to his live stock, caused by the pollution by defendant of a water course that ran through his pasture land. The period for which damages are claimed in the petition is from August 5, 1910, to March 22, 1911, and the stock injured consisted of 230 sheep and 4 horses, which were kept in the pasture and had access to the contaminated stream. In 1899 defendant built a sewer system, which discharged the sewage of the city into a ditch, which, in turn, emptied into the stream in question, and the stream carried the sewage through plaintiff's pasture. It appears from the evidence of plaintiff that in ordinary seasons the volume of water flowing in this natural water course was sufficiently large to dilute the sewage and render it practically innocuous to live stock, but that at intervals, averaging three or four years in duration, the volume of water in the stream would become so reduced by scarcity of rainfall as to render the water injurious to animals that drank it. The period for which damages are claimed was in one of these comparatively infrequent dry seasons which, as stated, recurred about three times in each decade.

Defendant built and operated the sewer in the manner stated without acquiring the right by purchase or condemnation to use the water course for carrying off the sewage. The cause of action pleaded in the petition and submitted to the jury is bottomed on the idea that the nuisance thus created and maintained by defendant was temporary as to the land of plaintiff, since its injurious consequences were intermittent and widely separated, and that each injury should be treated as a new and independent cause of action. On this view of the case plaintiff insists that his damages in this instance are to be measured by the loss he suffered in consequence of the injury inflicted on his live stock, which had access to the stream during the period in question and drank its impure water. It is the theory of the defense that the nuisance is permanent; that all of the damages to the land of plaintiff accrued at the time of the completion of the sewer system in 1899; that such damages were comprised in and were to be measured by the diminution in the market value of the land, caused by the creation of a permanent nuisance; and that since this action was not commenced until October, 1911, more than 10 years after the cause of action accrued, it is barred by limitation. The trial of the issue thus raised resulted in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff, and the cause is here on the appeal of defendant.

With one exception, the facts and issues of this case run parallel with those we considered in the case of Smith v. Sedalia, 141 S. W. 1198, recently decided by this court and certified to the Supreme Court by one of the judges, on the ground that the decision was in conflict with the opinions of the Supreme Court in Smith v. Sedalia, 152 Mo. 283, 53 S. W. 907, 48 L. R. A. 711; Id., 182 Mo. 1, 81 S. W. 165. The Supreme Court, in an opinion written by Ferriss, J., approved and amplified our view of the law of that case (Smith v. Sedalia [Sup.] 149 S. W. 597), and, we think, definitely removed the cause of much of the confusion and uncertainty in the decisions relating to the subject of permanent and temporary nuisances and the proper measure of damages to apply in each class of cases.

In that case the city of Sedalia had finally completed a sewer system about 18 years before the commencement of the action in question, and had during that period been emptying the sewage of the city into a natural water course that ran through the land of the plaintiff. The injury to the useful occupation and enjoyment of the land was continuous; but the plaintiff's action was founded on the view that the nuisance was temporary, and that he might maintain periodical suits for the recovery of the damages he suffered in each successive period. But this view was rejected by this court, and afterwards by the Supreme Court, on the ground that the sewer system, which for 18 years had remained unchanged and had discharged practically an unvarying quantity of sewage into the water course, was a permanent structure that, at the time of its final completion, inflicted a permanent injury to the land, for which a single and indivisible cause of action inured to the landowner. After a careful review of the case law, we gave expression to the following conclusion: "These authorities compel us to say that the nuisance in question is permanent, and that plaintiff, if injured thereby, had a cause of action for his damages, past and future, all of which were comprehended in and were to be measured by the depreciation in the market value of his land, caused by the presence of the sewer. For 18 years past the sewer had remained in its present condition. It is just as substantial and enduring as a railroad embankment, drainage ditch, highway bridge, street pavement, office building, or city hall. It was built without any intention or expectation that it would be removed or materially changed for years to come; and if the present action was one for permanent damages, and was the only suit pending between the parties, we would not hesitate in declaring that plaintiff had made out a case for the jury, and that the true rule for measuring his damages was the depreciation in the market value of the land."

But it is argued by plaintiff that, though the sewer be permanent, and intended by defendant to be so, plaintiff, as the injured party, had the option to complain of it as a permanent injury and recover damages for the whole time, or to treat it as a temporary wrong to be compensated for while it continues; that is, until the act complained of becomes rightful by grant, condemnation of property, or ceases by abatement.

This idea is suggested in section 1046, 4 Sutherland on Damages (3d Ed.); but the suggestion is tentative, is not supported by authority, and, we think, is logically unsound. The reason successive actions may be prosecuted on account of a temporary nuisance is that, since the cause of injury is likely to be removed at any time, and thereby end the injury, there is no damage to the inheritance, and the injury is to the use of the land. The value of such use is measured by the depreciation in the rental value caused by the injury. But a permanent injury to the land is an injury to the inheritance, as well as to the use, and, as the whole is equal to the sum of all its parts, so recoverable damages for an injury which extends to the inheritance includes all temporary as well as lasting elements of damage; and all these elements, as we have said, are comprised in the rule that measures the damages by the depreciation in the market value of the land. There can be but one cause of action for a single injury, and a permanent nuisance is a single injury.

And Judge Ferriss observed in his opinion that "this suit is not grounded upon trespass merely, nor upon nuisance, although the injury takes the form of a nuisance, but upon the constitutional right to compensation for property damages for public use (Webster v. Kansas City, 116 Mo. loc. cit. 118, 22 S. W. 474; Turner v. Railway, 180 Mo. App. 540, 109 S. W. 101); and it is so argued in plaintiff's brief. The city, by proper proceedings to that end, had the right, by statute, to secure the use of this stream for sewer purposes. The city did not condemn, but appropriated, the use. Such action, however, does not deprive the plaintiff of his right to compensation; nor does it affect the measure of damages, which, for such use by the city, whether by condemnation or appropriation, is the diminution in market value of the land damaged. As this court said, in McReynolds v. Railway, 110 Mo. loc. cit. 488, 19 S. W. 824: 'No good reason, founded upon principle, can be assigned why the same rule should not be applied in both classes of cases [condemnation and appropriation].' The injury is the same; the damage is the same; and the compensation should be the same."

These decisions compel the conclusion that the sewer in the present case was a permanent structure; that on its completion it inflicted a permanent injury to the land now owned by plaintiff; and that a single cause of action then inured to the landowner for the damages, past and future, that were and would be consequent upon the injury, all of which damages were comprised in the diminution of the market value of the land.

We do not think the single departure in the facts of this case from those in the Smith Case materially affects the conclusion just expressed. That difference consists of the fact that in the Smith Case the injury flowing from the permanent structure to the land of plaintiff was continuous, while here it was intermittent, depending for its power to do evil upon the co-operation of a dry season, which came, and would continue to come, on an average of once in every three or four years. When the sewer was completed, the injurious effect it would have on the use of the land of plaintiff was apparent, and the loss that would be inflicted thereby could be ascertained and appraised with reasonable accuracy, and, doubtless, was reflected in an immediate depreciation of the market value of the land. It is a matter of common knowledge that such dry periods as were required to give potency to the injury recur as though controlled by some natural rule of averages. Broadly speaking, there was not only a permanent cause of injury in this case, but a resultant single injury that manifested itself and wrought damage periodically. In cases of this nature the test of whether the injury is permanent or temporary does not lie in the solution of the question of whether the injury caused continuous or intermittent damage, but in the question of whether or not its mainspring was a permanent cause that would insure the stability of the injury as a permanent and definite agency of damage.

This thought is expressed in the following excerpt from the decision of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, in Fowle v. New Haven Company, 112 Mass. 338 (17 Am. Rep. 106): "The case at bar is not to be treated strictly in this respect as an action for an abatable nuisance. More accurately, it is an action against the defendant for the construction of a public work, under its charter, in such a manner as to cause unnecessary damage by want of reasonable care and skill in its construction. For such an injury the remedy is at common law. And if it results from a cause which is either permanent in its character, or which is treated as permanent by the parties, it is proper that entire damages should be assessed with reference to past and probable future injury."

It is apparent from what we have said that the only cause of action accruing from the injury was barred by limitations duly pleaded in the answer long before the commencement of this suit; and therefore that the learned trial judge erred in not sustaining the demurrer to the evidence.

The judgment is reversed. All concur.

P. H. REA IMPLEMENT CO. v. SMITH.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri.

Nov. 25, 1912.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 14*)—OBLIGATION OF SURETY.

One requesting a merchant to let a third person have goods and promising to pay for them is, when goods are sold and charged to him, a surety, entitled to stand on the letter of his agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. § 33; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

2. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 89*)—SALES—DELIVERY—ACCEPTANCE.

A defendant requested a merchant to let a third person have goods, to be charged to defendant, and promised to pay for them. The third person selected the goods, but he and defendant left without them. On the same day, the third person returned alone, and concluded that he desired in place thereof other goods costing $5 more. He took the other goods, and gave a note for $5 to the merchant, which he afterwards paid. Held, that the transaction showed a delivery and acceptance, within the statute of frauds (Rev. St. 1909, § 2784), of the goods originally selected, and that the third person immediately exchanged such goods for other goods, so that the agreement of defendant was valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 165-173; Dec. Dig. § 89.*]

3. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 90*)—SALES—DELIVERY—ACCEPTANCE.

While at common law delivery was not essential, as between seller and buyer, to the passing of title to specific and ascertained personalty, yet under the statute of frauds (Rev. St. 1909, § 2784), a sale of goods for more than $30, unaccompanied by any writing or part payment, is not binding on the buyer, unless there is a delivery.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Saline County; Samuel Davis, Judge.

Action by the P. H. Rea Implement Company against W. A. Smith. From a judgment granting a new trial after sustaining a demurrer to the evidence, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Reynolds & James, of Marshall, for appellant. Alf. F. Rector, of Marshall, for respondent.

ELLISON, J. This is an action on an account for the purchase of a buggy and harness. At the close of plaintiff's case the trial court sustained a demurrer to the evidence. Plaintiff then, in due time, filed his motion for new trial, which was sustained, and defendant appealed to this court from that order.

The following is a synopsis of the evidence necessary to state: Defendant is a farmer, and plaintiff a merchant. Defendant is in such good repute as to have credit at plaintiff's store. A negro man wanted a buggy and harness, and defendant took him to plaintiff's store, where the negro, perhaps assisted by defendant, selected a buggy and a set of harness at the price of $50. Defendant then said to the salesman to let the negro have the buggy and harness for $50, and he would pay for it, or, as otherwise expressed in some statements of the witness, "to charge it to him." The salesman assented. Defendant and the negro then left, without taking the buggy and harness with them. That afternoon the negro returned alone to receive the buggy and harness. But he concluded he preferred another set of harness, worth $5 more than the set defendant bought. He took away this latter set, with the buggy, by giving his note to plaintiff for $5, which he afterwards paid. Afterwards, when plaintiff presented an account to defendant, the latter claimed to be discharged from his promise on the ground that plaintiff had changed the character of the transaction by substituting a different set of harness, at a different price, and that the contract plaintiff made with him had not been performed, in that the specific property had not been delivered.

[1, 2] One branch of defendant's case is likened to that of a surety, who is entitled to stand on the letter of his agreement. Beers v. Wolf, 116 Mo. 179, 22 S. W. 620. On the other hand, plaintiff insists that the contract was performed as made; that plaintiff sold a specific buggy and set of harness, there selected, which, being afterwards delivered to the negro, became his property; and that afterwards the negro exchanged the harness for another and more expensive set, by paying the difference in price.

We think it clear that, if the property had been delivered to the negro at the time of the sale and he had taken it away with him, it would have been his and he might have done with it what he pleased. He could have brought the harness back that afternoon, and exchanged it for another set, without affecting defendant's obligation. What he actually did amounted to the same thing; for, when he came back, as was stated in evidence by the salesman, "he took it out, and he said he would like to have a little better set of harness, and for me to let him have it and take him for the difference. We agreed to do that." He "took" the property "out"; that is, he took the buggy and harness out, took possession, and then exchanged the harness for another set, paying the difference in price. The taking it out and exchanging it, in the circumstances stated, was an exercise of dominion which was at once delivery, acceptance, and receipt, and filled every requirement of the statute of frauds (section 2784, R. S. 1909). It is true that afterwards this question was asked the witness: "You never did deliver to this darkey the harness Mr. Smith bought, did you?" And he answered: "No, sir." But we think, taking all the evidence together, it was meant that the harness first selected was not taken away from plaintiff's place of business by the negro.

[§] But if it should appear on a retrial that no delivery was made of the harness that defendant bought, then there was no contract binding upon him, on his asserting its invalidity under the statute of frauds; for, while it is true, as asserted by plaintiff, that delivery is not essential (as between vendor and vendee) to the passing of title to specific and ascertained personal property under the common law (Hamilton v. Clark, 25 Mo. App. 428; Commonwealth v. Hess, 148 Pa. 98, 23 Atl. 977, 17 L. R. A. 176, 33 Am. St. Rep. 810), yet under the statute of frauds, in instances where the property is sold for more than $30 and there is no writing, or part payment, the sale is not binding on the vendee if he asserts his right to avoid it. Browne on Statute of Frauds (5th Ed.) §§ 138d to 138l. And so the law is stated in Cunningham v. Ashbrook, 20 Mo. loc. cit. 558, 559.

The judgment granting the new trial is affirmed. All concur.

3. TRIAL (§ 256*)—DEFECTIVE PREMISES—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where, in an action against a landlord for injuries to the tenant's wife from a defect in the premises, the landlord urged that the premises were rented in the same condition as at the time of the accident, and that the wife knew it and therefore assumed the risk, the landlord, desiring a specific instruction on the question, should ask it, and not demur to the evidence, and merely request an instruction to find for him.

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 169*)—INJURIES—DEFECTIVE PREMISES—INSTRUCTIONS.

Instructions, in an action against a landlord for injuries to the tenant's wife, caused by her stepping into an uncovered drain pipe, that if the pipe was kept covered by a stone, which was a reasonably safe covering, the jury should find for the landlord; that it was his duty to keep the premises in a reasonably safe condition, so that the tenant and his family, while exercising ordinary care, would suffer no injury; that if the landlord negligently permitted the pipe to remain open and without a reasonably safe covering to prevent persons from stepping into it when exercising ordinary care in the use of the premises, and plaintiff while in the exercise of ordinary care stepped into the pipe and was injured, the verdict should be for her, provided the landlord knew, or by ordinary care might have known, the condition of the opening of the pipe—covered the charge of negligence in the petition that, notwithstanding the character of the pipe, the landlord negligently allowed it to become out of repair and dangerous, in that it was allowed to remain open and unprotected, and that he knew, or could have known by ordinary care, of the defect in time to have repaired the same before the accident.

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 169*)—INJURIES—DEFECTIVE PREMISES—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Instructions, in an action against a landlord for injuries to the tenant's wife from stepping into an open pipe on the premises, that it was the duty of plaintiff in using the premises to exercise such care as an ordinarily prudent person would use under similar circumstances, and if she failed to use such care at the time of the accident the verdict must be for the landlord, and that the burden of proof was on plaintiff, except on the issue of her exercise of ordinary care, and as to that issue the burden was on the landlord, etc., sufficiently submitted the issue of contributory negligence.

6. TRIAL (§ 244*)—INSTRUCTIONS—UNDUE COMMENT ON THE EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action against a landlord for injuries to the tenant's wife, caused by a defect in the premises, the evidence showed that the landlord was a nonresident, and that the premises were in the immediate care of his son as agent, an instruction that if the son, at the time of the accident and prior thereto, was the agent of the landlord, and he had knowledge a reasonable length of time prior to the date of the accident, his knowledge was notice to the landlord, was not objectionable as an undue comment on the evidence, or singling out a particular fact in evidence.

7. DAMAGES (§ 216*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction, in an action on the measure of damages for personal injuries, that in estimating the damages the jury must consider any change in plaintiff's physical condition resulting from the injury, the physical or mental anguish suffered on account of the injuries, and damages, if any, as the evidence reasonably shows she would suffer in the future therefrom, and that the jury should find a verdict for such sum as would under all the evidence reasonably compensate plaintiff for her injuries, including compensation for such sums as the evidence shows she has paid out for medical treatment, but not including any amount not actually paid by her, sufficiently defines the measure of damages.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Chas. C. Allen, Judge.

Action by Bertie E. Haywood against Jacob Kuhn. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. W. Lubke and Geo. W. Lubke, Jr., both of St. Louis, for appellant. E. Rosenberger & Son, of Montgomery, and Kurt Von Rupert, of St. Louis, for respondent.

REYNOLDS, P. J. The husband of plaintiff in this case was the tenant of defendant, renting from him the upper rooms of an apartment house, in which rooms plaintiff and her husband resided. The lower rooms were rented to another family. To the rear of this apartment house was a yard, at the back of which were sheds and outhouses. A gate or opening led to an alley. This back yard and the outhouses were used in common by the several tenants of the apartment house. There was no made walk through the yard, the tenants throwing ashes and cinders from the rear of the house to the back of the lot in muddy weather. There were two sewer or drain pipes between the house and the vaults, one some twelve inches the other some five or six inches in diameter. The twelve-inch pipe projected some six or seven inches above the ground and was covered with what is described as a tin tub. The flange or rim of the six-inch pipe was broken off level with the surface of the ground on one side; a portion of it appears to have projected two or three inches above the surface. A loose flat rock was used as a cover for this six-inch pipe. The premises were in this condition when rented.

There is a good deal of conflict in the testimony as to the size and weight of this rock, but that point is not material now. It was in evidence that the rock which was provided for this smaller pipe often became displaced and the tenants and members of their families were in the habit of replacing it over this sewer or drain pipe. Plaintiff testified she had often done that herself.

On the night of the 21st of October, 1907, plaintiff and a letter carrier, who was boarding with plaintiff and her husband, went out through this back yard and through the gate in the rear of the premises to go to a moving picture show on a street north of the premises. Returning from that and entering the premises through the rear gateway, plaintiff and her companion walking through the yard, plaintiff remembered that she had left some utensils out by the back fence. She turned back to get them to carry into the house. She had gone from six to eight feet away from her companion when he heard her scream. Going to her he found that she had fallen and that her right foot and limb had gone into this six-inch drain pipe and was so securely held that she could not withdraw the limb. Calling the tenants of the lower apartment to his assistance, they with considerable difficulty managed to extricate plaintiff's limb from the pipe, and her husband having joined them, they carried plaintiff into the house and up into her own apartment. She was confined to her bed for quite a length of time, and for a longer time to the house. While no bones were broken, she sustained a very severe sprain and was internally injured, the latter injury, as testified to by the attending physician, resulting in prolapse of the uterus, a permanent injury as testified by that physician. Plaintiff had paid the physician some $25 for his attendance and had also paid a nurse or attendant $2.50 a week for some six or eight weeks that she was with her. Plaintiff's occupation had been that of a seamstress and she earned about $1.50 a day. She testified that she had lost the effective use of her right limb, with which before then she had operated her sewing machine, and her earning capacity as a seamstress very greatly diminished. The physician testified that her injuries, both external and internal, in all probability were permanent. The plaintiff testified that the moon was shining, although not very brightly, on the night and at the time of the accident; that she saw the stone lying in the yard but supposed that it was in its usual place over the opening of the drainpipe and was not aware that the drainpipe was open until she stepped into it.

At the conclusion of the testimony for plaintiff, and again at the conclusion of all the testimony, defendant interposed a demurrer, both of which were overruled. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $1,750. Judgment following, defendant filed his motion for new trial as well as one in arrest of judgment. These being overruled and exception saved, defendant duly perfected appeal to this court.

The errors here assigned are to the improper admission of testimony and the refusal of the demurrers. As to the latter, it is claimed that it clearly appeared that plaintiff's own want of care directly contributed to her injury and prevented a recovery on her part, and further, that it appeared that the property was in the same condition at the time of the letting to plaintiff's husband as it was at the time of her injury and that she knew it and therefore assumed the risk of using the property in that condition. It is also assigned for error that the court singled out the testimony of a witness and commented on it and had singled out a particular fact in the evidence, thereby giving undue prominence to that fact. It is further contended that the instruction given at the instance of plaintiff as to the measure of damages is erroneous and misleading. For these reasons it is urged that the motion for new trial should have been sustained.

[1] Taking up these assignments in their order, we have to say as to the first one that it is untenable. It is founded on the claim that the physician who attended plaintiff should not have been permitted to testify that she had suffered the internal injury referred to. The averment in the petition as to the damages sustained is broad enough to have let in the testimony of this internal injury. To follow the language of the petition covering this particular point, it is set out that as the direct result of her fall, plaintiff's right ankle was "dislocated, sprained and badly wrenched, and that her body and right lower limb was bruised, scarred and injured and her entire nervous system disordered, shocked and also greatly injured internally, and that her injuries are permanent and incurable; that as a result of said injuries she is now a cripple and will be a cripple for life, and that she was made sick and sore and was confined to her bed for a long space of time, unable to help herself; that she has suffered and will in the future suffer great bodily pain and mental anguish, * * * and that her health and strength and ability to perform any kind of labor has been greatly and permanently impaired and destroyed." Counsel apparently are of the opinion that these words, "and also greatly injured internally," refer to her nervous system. Evidently that is not what was meant by the pleader or what would be ordinarily understood. The whole clause is, "and her nervous system disordered, shocked and also greatly injured internally." It is evident that the pleader intended to aver that plaintiff was also greatly injured internally. This idea may not be expressed very accurately; it would have been helped if after the word "disordered," the word "and" had been inserted, and between the words "and" and "also," the words "she was," had been interlined. But we think the language used was clearly intended to refer to internal injuries, not to nervous shock, and was sufficient to admit the evidence of injury to her womb, and it is of this latter that complaint is made.

[2, 3] In support of the second assignment of error on the refusal of the demurrers to the evidence and of an instruction to find for defendant, it is argued that the property was in the same condition at the time of the letting to plaintiff's husband as it was at the time of her injury and that plaintiff knew it and therefore assumed the risk of using the property in that condition, and hence she could not recover. That question of the property being in the same condition as when rented, was a question of fact for the jury. If defendant desired a specific instruction on it, he should have asked one—which he did not.

[4] The cause of action pleaded is "that notwithstanding the character of the five-inch vertical pipe or shaft above as described in its manner of construction the defendant negligently and carelessly allowed said five-inch pipe or shaft to become out of repair and dangerous, in that the same was allowed to remain open and unprotected, and that the defendant well knew, or could have known the same by the exercise of ordinary care, in time to repair the same before the injuries to the plaintiff hereinafter complained of, and that the said five-inch vertical pipe or shaft aforesaid was in the condition above described at the time of the injuries hereinafter complained of, to wit: on the 21st day of October, 1907."

We think the negligence charged was practically covered by instructions given. By one given at the instance of defendant, "The court instructs the jury that if from the evidence they believe that the pipe in question was kept covered by a stone and that said stone was a reasonably safe covering for said pipe to prevent persons from stepping into said pipe when using the yard in question for such purposes to which said yard was ordinarily put, then the jury will find for the defendant." It was further covered by an instruction given at the instance of plaintiff, and on which no error is assigned. By that instruction the court told the jury, among other things, that it was the duty of defendant to keep the yard in a reasonably safe condition for the purposes for which such yard was ordinarily used, so that the tenant and his family, while exercising ordinary care in its use, would suffer no injury; that if they found there was a sewer pipe underground between the vaults and the main sewer; that "the defendant, on the date herein mentioned, had and maintained a certain vertical pipe or shaft extending from the underground connection aforesaid, up and through the ground to the surface thereof, and that said pipe was hollow and open at the end and protruded from the ground; and if you further find and believe from the evidence that the defendant negligently permitted said pipe or shaft to remain open and without a reasonably safe covering to prevent persons from stepping into said pipe when exercising ordinary care in the use of said yard for such purposes to which said yard was ordinarily used and that the plaintiff while in the exercise of ordinary care and while using said back yard for the purpose for which it was ordinarily intended, stepped into, or slipped into said pipe and injured herself, then the court instructs the jury that your finding will be for the plaintiff, provided you further find and believe from the evidence, that defendant knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care might have known the condition of the opening of said pipe."

With these instructions before them the jury were practically required to pass on the very question on which counsel here assumes there was no evidence. The jury could only have found for plaintiff if they found from the evidence that the pipe in question had not been covered and kept covered by this stone and that the stone was not a reasonably safe covering for the pipe.

[5] It is further argued, in effect, in support of that assignment, that plaintiff cannot recover if she directly contributed to her injury. That proposition is beyond question, and as will be seen by the instruction quoted, given by the court at the request of plaintiff and not here challenged, that matter was submitted clearly and distinctly to the jury. It was further covered by an instruction given by the court of its own motion, "that it was the duty of plaintiff in using the yard in question to exercise such care as an ordinarily prudent person using said yard would have used under the same circumstances under which the plaintiff was using the same at the time described in the evidence, and if the jury find from the evidence that the plaintiff failed to use such care at the time she was injured, then the jury will find a verdict for the defendant." By other instructions given by the court of its own motion, the jury were correctly instructed as to the meaning of ordinary care and were further told that "the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to establish by a preponderance of the evidence the facts necessary for a verdict in (her) favor under these instructions, except upon the issue concerning the exercise of ordinary care by the plaintiff. As to that issue the burden of proof is on defendant to show the want of such ordinary care on the plaintiff's part." No error is assigned before us to the giving of any of these instructions. We think this error now assigned here is untenable.

[6] The third assignment of error is to the second instruction given at the instance of plaintiff. That instruction, in substance, told the jury that if they found from the evidence that Edward Kuhn, at the time of the accident and prior thereto, was the agent of defendant for the purpose of looking after and making any necessary repairs as might be reasonably required on the premises, then the court instructed the jury that if they found and believed from the evidence that Edward Kuhn had knowledge a reasonable length of time prior to the date of the accident that the opening of the pipe was not reasonably well protected to prevent a person who was using the yard for the purposes for which it was ordinarily intended and while in the exercise of ordinary care from stepping into or slipping into the pipe, then the knowledge on the part of Edward Kuhn was notice to his principal, the defendant. It appeared that the defendant himself was a nonresident of this state and that this property was in the immediate care of his son Edward Kuhn, the witness here referred to. We do not think that this instruction was incorrect either as an undue comment on the evidence or in singling out a particular fact in the evidence and giving undue prominence to it as claimed by counsel for appellant.

[7] The most serious and strenuous argument of the learned counsel for appellant, however, is directed to the instruction which the court gave as to the measure of damages. That instruction, numbered 3, so far as pertinent to this assignment of error is as follows:

"The court instructs the jury that if you find a verdict for the plaintiff you are, in estimating her damages, to consider any change in her physical condition which you may believe from the evidence resulted from the injury to her; the physical or mental anguish, if any, suffered by her on account of her injuries at the time of and since such injuries, as shown by the evidence, and such damages, if any, as you may from the evidence find it is reasonably certain she will suffer in the future therefrom; and you will find a verdict for such sum as in your judgment will under all the evidence reasonably compensate her for such injuries, including compensation for such sums of money, if any, as the evidence shows she herself has heretofore paid out for medicines, nursing and medical treatment, but not including any amount not already actually paid by her."

We have very carefully examined the cases cited by learned counsel for the appellant and which they claim condemn this instruction, but are unable to find that it violates any of the rules laid down in any one of those cases. Comparing this instruction with the instruction which was given in Curtis v. McNair, 173 Mo. 271, on page 290, 73 S. W. 167, that instruction being there set out and designated as instruction B, we are unable to perceive any substantial difference between this instruction here given and that in the Curtis Case, which was distinctly approved by our Supreme Court. The difference between the two instructions is a mere verbal difference, in no way whatever changing the meaning or altering the rule as announced in Curtis v. McNair, supra.

Finding no error to the prejudice of defendant, materially affecting the merits of the case, the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

NUISANCE (§ 3*)—PRIVATE NUISANCE—BREEDING BARNS.

One maintaining a barn and corral near a street for the sole purpose of keeping stallions to which he bred mares brought there maintains a nuisance to persons living from 200 to 400 feet from the barn and seeing the mares coming and going, and hearing the neighing and kicking, though the corral was inclosed with a high board fence, so that on the level one could not see in it or the barn.

Action by John McNulty and others against Harry E. Miller. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

B. R. Martin and C. C. Crow, both of St. Joseph, for appellant. W. R. Littell, of Tarkio, for respondents.

ELLISON, J. Plaintiffs are residents and property owners in the town of Tarkio, and instituted this action to enjoin and restrain defendant from using a certain building and corral as a breeding barn by the use of stallions and jacks. The decree in the circuit court was in their favor.

The decree suppressed an aggravated and disgusting nuisance, and was therefore right. Plaintiffs lived in their homes at distances from 200 to 400 feet from defendant's frame barn which he erected near the street in Tarkio for the sole purpose of keeping stallions to breed to mares. The plaintiffs' families consisted of their wives and children, some of the latter being grown girls. Others were young, of both sexes. The evidence showed that from spring till fall defendant kept three stallions to which he bred mares that were brought to his place for that purpose. The corral was inclosed with a high board fence, and on the level one could not see in it or the barn. But mares, many of them each day, were brought to the place and taken away. They were frequently hitched outside, in sight of the families.

Their coming and going were in full view. The neighing, kicking, squealing, and biting of the animals was terrific to small children, who asked their mothers what it meant. Older members of the families, from a sense of shame and modesty, were practically deprived of the use of their yards and porches and driven into the houses. They were embarrassed in having company at their premises, and some people went around over byways to avoid that street. The evidence in behalf of plaintiffs clearly shows a depreciation in the value of property, and that for defendant but tamely combats it. A prosecution by the town for a violation of an ordinance which forbids the acts of defendant was sustained at this term in a case submitted with this.

Equity affords relief in such situations as here presented. A like case was before the Supreme Court in which our view of the matter finds direct support. Hayden v. Tucker, 37 Mo. 214. It will be observed from the statement made in that case that the act of covering the mares could be seen from the outside, while here the act itself was screened from the sight. But it is obvious that a thing may be made a nuisance through other senses. Hearing many things identifies them completely without being corroborated by sight.

There is no need to discuss whether defendant's acts constitute a public or a private nuisance, or whether something of the nature of both. Certain it is that the offensive acts are recurring, and that they are of such nature that no money damage can afford relief (Paddock v. Sones, 102 Mo. 223, 240, 14 S. W. 746, 10 L. R. A. 254), unless we are to assume that plaintiffs' right to reside where they will can be made subject to defendant's choice of business.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

CITY OF TARKIO v. MILLER.

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 605*)—NUISANCES—POWER TO SUPPRESS.

A business which is a nuisance at common law may be suppressed by ordinance of a city.

2. NUISANCE (§ 61*)—PUBLIC NUISANCE—ACTS CONSTITUTING.

The keeping in a city of stallions for breeding purposes is a lawful and necessary business, and per se is not a nuisance, but it may be conducted in such a manner as to become a nuisance per se.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Nuisance, Cent. Dig. §§ 142-151; Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 604*)—NUISANCE—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY.

An ordinance of a city forbidding the use of a building in the city for keeping stallions for breeding purposes where such use disturbs the peace of the neighborhood or violates public decency is valid.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 631*)—NUISANCE—ORDINANCES—VIOLATIONS.

One keeping in a city stallions for breeding purposes in such a way as to scandalize the immediate neighborhood is guilty of violating an ordinance of the city prohibiting the keeping of stallions in such a way as to disturb the peace of the neighborhood, or violate public decency.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1386-1388; Dec. Dig. § 631.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Andrew County; A. D. Burns, Judge.

Harry El Miller was convicted of violating an ordinance of the city of Tarkio, and he appeals. Affirmed.

B. R. Martin and C. C. Crow, both of St. Joseph, for appellant. W. R. Littell, of Tarkio, for respondent.

ELLISON, J. This case is a prosecution against defendant for violating a town ordinance which forbids the use of a building in the town for keeping stallions or jacks for teasing and covering mares, where such use "would disturb the peace and quietude of the surrounding neighborhood, or scandalize them in the use and enjoyment of their property, or violate public decency or damage their property." He was convicted in the trial court.

The defendant here was the defendant in the injunction suit brought against him by the owners of property near his barn (decided at this term), and was submitted with that case.

[1] Defendant questions the power of the town to pass the ordinance. It is said that the town cannot, upon finding a man engaged in a business, declare it to be a nuisance and undertake to suppress it, unless it has been made a nuisance by statute or common law. But it is well understood that, if the business is a nuisance at common law, it may be suppressed by ordinance of a city.

[2] The keeping of stallions for breeding purposes is a lawful and necessary business and per se is not a nuisance. But it is a business which, like many others, may be conducted in such manner as to become a nuisance per se. Keeping a hotel is a necessary business; but its moral standard may be such as to make it a nuisance. A store for the sale of articles so necessary as groceries may be so conducted as to become a nuisance. A business, as such, may belong to the citizen as his common right, yet he may make a nuisance of it by his manner of exercising the right.

[3] Now, the ordinance in question does not forbid the keeping of stallions, nor breeding them to mares. It forbids its being done in such manner as will scandalize and disturb the peace of the inhabitants of the neighborhood and violate public decency. It was rightly held to be valid.

[4] The facts of this case illustrate the soundness of what we have said. Defendant did not merely keep stallions for breeding, but he kept them in such way and at such place in the town as to scandalize the immediate neighborhood. We have set out in the other case how the squealing and other noises of the animals while teasing and covering mares disturbed the families, tended to demoralize little children, and put to shame the females of the households, to such extent as to send them in from their yards and porches. We have been cited to Ex parte Robinson, 30 Tex. App. 493, 17 S. W. 1057. There is nothing in that case to aid defendant when applied to the facts. The court stated that it was shown in that case that the keeping and breeding of the stallion was "in a large, close brick livery stable," which people could neither "see nor hear," and where persons passing could not "know what was going on." The court stated that it did not want to be understood as saying that the city in that case could not have properly ordained an ordinance prohibiting breeding in the public view, and that such an act would be a nuisance per se. And the court would, of course, have said the same as to hearing, if the sounds were such as to scandalize the people of the neighborhood and put them to shame.

The evidence justified the verdict, and the judgment is affirmed. All concur.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Adair County; N. M. Pettingill, Special Judge.

Action by George Shaw against G. A. Goben and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Higbee & Mills, of Kirksville, for appellants. Charles E. Murrell, Smoot & Cooley, and A. Doneghy, all of Kirksville, for respondents.

ELLISON, J. This proceeding is by injunction, whereby plaintiff, a citizen of Kirksville, seeks to enjoin the city authorities from letting a contract for paving a certain street therein. A temporary injunction was granted, which afterwards, at the hearing of the case, was dissolved, and plaintiff appealed.

It appears that the paving was regularly proposed by proper resolution; and the city council, having found that a majority of the citizens owning property abutting the street had not protested, passed an ordinance directing the letting of a contract for paving. It is provided by statute (section 9255, R. S. 1909) that "if a majority of the resident owners of the property, liable to taxation therefor, at the date of the passage of such resolution, who shall own a majority of the front feet owned by residents of the city abutting on the street, avenue or alley proposed to be improved, shall not, within ten days thereafter, file with the city clerk their protest against such improvements, then the council shall have power to cause a contract for said work to be let to the lowest and best bidder."

A protest was filed, and the question is: Did it contain a majority of the resident owners of property, who own a majority of front feet owned by residents of the city? The contest is over the qualifications of two men, Webster and Vice. The former signed the protest, and defendants claim he was not a qualified signer by reason of not being a resident of Kirksville, as required by the statute. Vice was conceded to be a resident; but plaintiff claims that he was not a property owner, and therefore should not be counted in determining whether the protest was signed by a majority of property owners. Either of these questions being determined in favor of defendants' view affirms the judgment.

[1] The evidence showed that Vice did not have a deed to the property which, it is claimed, made him a property owner. But it showed that he had a contract for the property, and had taken possession and was living thereon, and had paid $1,000 in part payment of the purchase price, and had been offered a deed, which was returned for correction, and, owing to the fact that there were many joint owners, he had not yet received it. We think him a property owner, and that he was properly counted as such by the city council. He was the equitable owner, and could have compelled the execution of a deed upon tender of balance of purchase money. 22 Amer. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 925.

[2] The evidence showed that Webster was formerly a citizen of Kirksville, and that two or three years prior to signing this protest he moved with his family to a farm several miles in the country. He voted there at a primary election. He was assessed and paid his taxes there, and there sent his children to the public school. He stated, however, that he intended to return to Kirksville if conditions got better. Residence, as well as citizenship, is largely a question of intention; but one cannot overturn an accomplished fact by the mere assertion of a contrary intention. Lankford v. Gebhart, 130 Mo. 621, 638, 32 S. W. 1127, 51 Am. St. Rep. 585. A man who voluntarily and purposely does a thing will not be believed when he says that he did not intend to do it. Acts speak louder than words. So while Webster was residing with his family outside of Kirksville, he was not residing inside that place.

[3, 4] But it was shown that he moved with his family back to Kirksville on the 23d of November, 1911, intending to remain and become a citizen. On that day, though not yet a citizen qualified to vote, he became a resident qualified to sign a remonstrance, within the meaning of the statute. But the resolution was passed more than two weeks before his return to Kirksville. The statute requires that, to be qualified to sign a protest, he must be a resident at the time the resolution is passed.

We do not think the first point of objection to the judgment made in plaintiff's brief, as well as other objections, are well taken.

The foregoing considerations affirm the judgment. All concur.

SALES (§ 454*)—NATURE OF CONTRACT—"BAILEMENT FOR SALE"—"CONDITIONAL SALE."

A contract providing that certain property should be held on consignment until sold by consignee with consignor's approval, that it should be invoiced to the consignee at a fixed price, and, while he could sell it at any price he saw fit, any overplus, after deducting expenses paid by him, should go to him as his compensation, and that the consignor could annul any sale and retake the property, and under which the consignee was not required to pay anything for the property, but was required merely to turn over certain of the proceeds of sales, the consignor having the right at any time to order the property returned, constituted a bailment for sale, and not a conditional sale, within Rev. St. 1909, § 2889, making conditional sales fraudulent as to creditors, unless acknowledged and recorded.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Adair County;
Nat M. Shelton, Judge.

Action by the Packard Piano Company against George F. Williams. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Smoot & Cooley, of Kirksville, for appellant. Higbee & Mills, of Kirksville, for respondent.

ELLISON, J. Plaintiff is a corporation engaged in selling musical instruments, and one Tallman was in the retail music business in Kirksville. A creditor of Tallman obtained a judgment against him, upon which execution was issued and placed in the hands of the sheriff, who levied it upon a piano and organ in Tallman's possession. Plaintiff, claiming to be the owner of the instruments brought this action of replevin against the sheriff. The judgment in the trial court was for the defendant.

Tallman got the property from plaintiff under the terms of a written contract between them, and the sole question is whether such paper evidenced a sale by plaintiff to Tallman, or a consignment to sell for plaintiff as its agent. The contract is divided into 10 paragraphs or divisions, and is so redundant in verbiage as to be confusing. Putting it into smaller compass, we find it provides, in the first division, that the property is to be held by Tallman on consignment until sold and sale approved by plaintiff, Tallman to keep insurance for plaintiff's benefit. Second. It appears from this division that the property is invoiced to Tallman at a certain price for which he must account to plaintiff in this way, viz., if the sale is for cash, then the invoice price, less whatever discount may be agreed upon for cash remitted to plaintiff. If the sale is for notes, he indorses sufficient notes to make the invoice price and 20 per cent. more, which per cent. is to be credited to Tallman until the notes and interest thereon representing invoice price are collected, when it is to be paid to Tallman. If a sale for notes is not accepted by plaintiff, or if accepted and notes defaulted, then Tallman, on plaintiff's demand, is to take property from the purchaser and deliver to plaintiff if it wants it. If the property cannot be retaken, Tallman is then to pay plaintiff in cash. Other provisions allow plaintiff to retain all notes as security for any indebtedness of Tallman. Third. It is provided that, if Tallman should fail to indorse a note, plaintiff is authorized to do so for him. Fourth. Tallman is to pay all freight and taxes. Fifth. Provides that notes shall stand as security to plaintiff. Sixth. Provides that all property retaken from purchasers plaintiff may, if it so desires, reassign to Tallman. Seventh. If any property is returned to plaintiff, Tallman is to be credited with the invoice price less 10 per cent. as liquidated damages for shop wear, etc. Eighth. Tallman agrees, on demand, to deliver back to plaintiff all goods unsold and all notes in which plaintiff may have an interest. Ninth. Tallman is to make monthly report of all instruments on hand, or in possession of prospective purchasers, and not paid for. Tenth. Tallman agrees to assist plaintiff in all collections without charge, and that plaintiff may at all times have access to his books.

We have a statute in this state (section 2889, R. S. 1909) which avoids, as fraudulent, as to creditors, all conditional sales unless acknowledged and recorded, and it has been held in many instances that no disguise under the name of consignment or agency will be allowed to evade this statute. Manufacturing Co. v. Carriage Co., 152 Mo. App. 401, 133 S. W. 412; Bicking v. Stevens, 69 Mo. App. 168; In re Rabenau (D. C.) 118 Fed. 471. On the other hand, it has been decided by the Supreme Court and this court that, notwithstanding the statute, there may be consignments for sale, or sale agencies established, where the consignor will remain the owner without the necessity of recording his agreement. Weir Plow Co. v. Porter, 82 Mo. 23; Peet v. Spencer, 90 Mo. 384, 2 S. W. 434; Wilson-Moline Buggy Co. v. Priebe, 123 Mo. App. 621, 100 S. W. 558. And so it is elsewhere held. In re Columbus Buggy Co., 143 Fed. 859, 74 O. C. A. 611; Lenz v. Harrison, 148 Ill. 598, 36 N. E. 567.

So the question is: Does this contract evidence a sale or a consignment to an agent? It undoubtedly embodies some of the characteristics of each. Among the evidences of Tallman's ownership is the provision that he shall pay the freight, pay for insurance, and, though paying a fixed price to plaintiff, selling at any price he pleases, the latter being one of the marks especially establishing a sale as distinguished from a bailment, unless controlled by other parts of the agreement. But there is no reason why one party may not put his goods in the hands of another to sell for him, and agree upon any mode of compensation he likes, including whatever sum that other may sell for over the fixed price to be paid the owner, less whatever he obligates himself to pay out for freight and insurance, provided other parts of the agreement make clear that the property has not passed. In McCullough v. Porter, 4 Watts & S. (Pa.) 177, 39 Am. Dec. 68, this illustration is given: "Were I to put my horse into the custody of a friend to be sold for a designated sum, with permission to retain whatever should be got beyond it, it would not be suspected that I had ceased to own him in the meantime, or that my friend would not be bound to return him, even without a stipulation, should he have failed to obtain the prescribed price." In Re Columbus Buggy Co., 143 Fed. 859, 74 C. C. A. 611, after using that illustration from McCullough v. Porter, it is said that: "A contract between a furnisher of goods and the receiver that the latter may sell them at such prices as he chooses, that he will account and pay for the goods sold at agreed prices, that he will bear the expense of insurance, freight, storage, and handling, and that he will hold the unsold merchandise subject to the order of the furnisher, discloses a bailment for sale, and does not evidence a conditional sale. It contains no agreement of the receiver to pay any agreed price for the goods. It is not, therefore, affected by a statute which renders unrecorded contracts for conditional sales voidable by creditors and purchasers. The fact that such a contract provides that the receiver of the goods may fix the selling prices, and may retain the difference between the agreed prices of the accounting and the selling prices to recompense him for insurance, storage, commission, and expenses, does not constitute the contract an agreement of sale. It still lacks the obligation of the receiver to pay a purchase price for the goods and the obligation of the furnisher to transfer the title to him for that price." A reference to the contract, as epitomized by us, seems to clearly disclose a bailment for sale. It shows that the property is to be held on consignment until sold by Tallman, the sale to be approved by plaintiff. Next the property is invoiced to Tallman at a fixed price, and, while it may be sold by Tallman at any price he sees fit to ask, the overplus, after deducting expenses for insurance, freight, and taxes, going to Tallman as his compensation, yet a sale may be annulled by plaintiff, and the property ordered to be taken from the purchaser. But above all, and as making clear the relation these parties bore one to the other, the face of the whole contract shows Tallman was not to pay anything for the property. Lenz v. Harrison, supra, a case quite applicable to this. He was merely to turn over the proceeds of sales which he might make. And the eighth division of the contract allows plaintiff at any time to order the property (which has not been sold) to be returned to it. We have no fault to find with cases cited by defendant. They concede that parties may place and receive goods in consignment for sale without trenching upon the statute, but they properly decide that a sale in reality will be called a sale though disguised by words, such as "consignor," "agent," "agency," etc.

We are satisfied the judgment should have been for the plaintiff; and it will be reversed and the cause remanded that the entry may be made. All concur.

The court, undertaking to give an instruction on the whole case, must cover, not only plaintiff's, but also defendant's, side.

4. TRIAL (§ 253*)—INSTRUCTIONS—SUBMISSION OF WHOLE CASE.

Where, in an action for services, plaintiff proved an employment, the rendition of services thereunder, and their value, while defendant under the general denial proved that plaintiff was a partner in the work, an instruction authorizing a recovery if the parties entered into an agreement whereby plaintiff was to perform services, and plaintiff performed such services, was erroneous, when undertaking to cover the whole case, for failing to cover the issue of partnership.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 613-623; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

5. PARTNERSHIP (§ 218*)—EXISTENCE OF RELATION—QUESTION FOR COURT OR JURY.

The fact of partnership, not necessarily created by a mere participation in profits and losses, is a matter for the jury, where there are facts authorizing a verdict to that effect, and the character of the contract between the parties must be deduced from the evidence; but the court must determine whether there is such evidence as will entitle the jury to find partnership.

6. WORK AND LABOR (§ 4*)—RECOVERY FOR SERVICES RENDERED.

One who is employed to superintend the construction of construction work, and who renders services under the employment, is entitled to recover for the services actually rendered.

Reynolds, P. J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Circuit Court, St. Louis County; G. A. Wurdeman, Judge.

Action by Ben B. Thornton against Charles V. Mersereau. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

L. A. Hall, of St. Louis, for appellant. Geo. B. Logan, of St. Louis, for respondent.

REYNOLDS, P. J. The petition in this case as originally framed consisted of four counts. The first and fourth were abandoned at the trial and while there was a verdict for plaintiff on the third count, he remitted all of that verdict so that the only count necessary for consideration is the second. That states that plaintiff entered into the service of defendant, at the request of defendant, and served as superintendent of construction of certain construction work, the work being the construction of certain alleys in the city of St. Louis and the construction of certain abutments in St. Louis county of a railroad; that he was engaged in the work for thirty-three and one-half weeks, with the exception of three weeks; that the reasonable value of the services was $25 per week, making a total of $833.33 and that the only money he had been paid as compensation for his work amounted to $175.25. Judgment was demanded for the difference.

The answer was a general denial.

The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff on the second count for $500, and on the third count for $50, but under a motion for new trial filed by defendant, plaintiff remitted $175 of the verdict as to the second count and all of the amount returned on the third count. Judgment followed, plaintiff filing motions for new trial and in arrest, saving exception to the overruling of these, has duly perfected his appeal to this court.

The evidence of plaintiff as to the second count tended to show that he had an agreement with defendant as to superintending the doing of the work mentioned in the petition and that he was to receive a certain sum per week, also another sum as board money, and to have a share in the profits of the contracts under which the work was to be done; that defendant had failed to keep the contract.

Appellant makes six assignments of error here. First, to the refusal of an instruction in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence under the second count, asked at the close of plaintiff's evidence and of the whole case. Second, to error in the admission of certain evidence offered by plaintiff, it being contended that it was improper, incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial; and third, error of the court in giving an instruction at the instance of plaintiff and in refusing an instruction asked by defendant. Fourth, that the verdict and judgment is for the wrong party. Fifth, that it is the result of passion, prejudice and sympathy, and finally for the error of the court in overruling defendant's motion for new trial and his motion in arrest.

[1] Taking these up in their order, we cannot agree, even on the showing made by counsel for defendant, that the demurrer to the evidence under the second count of the petition should have been sustained. There was evidence given on the part of plaintiff in support of that count and while the testimony of the witnesses for plaintiff and defendant was very contradictory over this, its determination was for the jury and their finding is conclusive.

Counsel under this assignment argues that plaintiff's testimony is not entitled to belief. That matter was distinctly submitted to the jury by the instruction given at the instance of appellant, that if the jury believed from the evidence that any witness had willfully sworn falsely to any material fact, the jury was entitled to reject the testimony of that witness. The jury were further told by an instruction asked by appellant, that the burden of proof was on plaintiff and that he must prove his case by the greater weight of the evidence, and if the jury found from the evidence that plaintiff had failed to prove his case as to any one or more counts of his petition by the greater weight of the testimony, their verdict should be for defendant as to such count or counts. So that we rule the first assignment of error against appellant.

[2] The second assignment as to the admission of improper evidence is founded on evidence given by a certain witness, who testified that he was in appellant's office with respondent, was a party to the conversation between them, and in that conversation defendant had agreed to give plaintiff and witness $2 a week each as expense money. Defendant objected to this and moved to strike out the evidence of the witness "because it is not shown that that contract was ever carried out;" that plaintiff's evidence shows that this witness never became a party to any of this transaction at that time, and further that what the witness testified to was a conclusion, and counsel moved to have it stricken out. Counsel for appellant argues that it is apparent that if there was an agreement made between plaintiff, defendant and this witness, that contract, so far as the witness was concerned, was never carried out, and the fact that a contract of this character may have been made, to which the witness was a party and which is shown by his own testimony and that of plaintiff had never been carried out, is not admissible to prove and does not tend to prove that there was a contract between plaintiff and defendant, as the witness had testified that they were wholly unsuccessful in getting work and that he (witness) quit. There is no pretense that the contract between the witness and plaintiff on the one hand was a joint contract between them and defendant, so that while it was immaterial whether the witness had carried it out or not, his testimony was most clearly relevant, material and competent as tending to prove the contract on behalf of plaintiff with defendant. That error assigned is not tenable.

[3-5] The third assignment of error relates to the giving of an instruction at the instance of plaintiff and the refusing of one asked by defendant. The instruction given at the instance of plaintiff, of which complaint is made, in substance, is as follows: that if the jury found from the evidence that plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement whereby plaintiff was to perform services for defendant in the capacity of foreman of construction and that plaintiff did in fact perform such services and such services were of value, then the jury will find for plaintiff for the reasonable value of such services as they may believe from all the evidence in the case plaintiff may be entitled to. It is urged against this instruction that it undertakes to cover the whole case and omits all reference to the defense set up by appellant. The defense pleaded was a general denial. At the trial defendant, appellant here, undertook to prove that in point of fact plaintiff was a partner with him in the work of construction, payment for which is the basis of the action. It is the duty of the court, when undertaking to instruct on the whole case, to cover not only the plaintiff's side of it but that of the defendant.

Plaintiff testified that he and defendant were partners in the matter, plaintiff denying partnership and claiming an interest in profits only, which he testified had not been paid him, hence his action on quantum meruit.

The fact of partnership is a matter for the determination of the jury, if there are facts in evidence authorizing a verdict to that effect, McDonald v. Matney, 82 Mo. 358, and the character of the contract between the parties is to be deduced from the evidence, Torbert v. Jeffrey, 161 Mo. 645, loc. cit. 654, 61 S. W. 823, and it is for the court to determine whether there is such evidence before the jury as will entitle them to find partnership. Edgell v. Macqueen, 8 Mo. App. 71, loc. cit. 76; Carson et al. v. Culver et al., 78 Mo. App. 597, loc. cit. 603. "A mere participation in the profits and loss does not necessarily constitute a partnership," between the parties so participating," says our Supreme Court in McDonald v. Matney, supra, 82 Mo. loc. cit. 365, citing and quoting from several cases. See also Torbert v. Jeffrey, supra, and Nugent v. Armour Packing Co., 208 Mo. 480, loc. cit. 487 et seq., 106 S. W. 648. With this evidence in the case, the majority of our court hold that the trial court, in undertaking to instruct on the whole case, should have covered this issue. I do not agree to that. Counsel for respondent argues that as there was no plea of partnership, the answer being a general denial, that the evidence as to partnership should have been disregarded. Whether it should have been pleaded is not necessary to decide, as the evidence concerning it went in without objection.

[8] Appellant complains of the refusal of the court to give an instruction asked by him which, in substance, told the jury that if it believed from the evidence that the services mentioned in the second count of the petition were performed under an agreement between plaintiff and defendant and that defendant "did not under such agreement mentioned in these instructions, agree to pay plaintiff a salary for all or any part of such services, then plaintiff is not entitled to recover on the second count of his petition and your verdict on such count will be for defendant." This instruction is not correct and should not have been given in the form asked; it would have been error to say that plaintiff could not recover for "all or any part," unless defendant had agreed to pay plaintiff for all or any part, for the defendant surely was entitled to recover for that part of the services he might have proven he had rendered.

The above assignments are the material ones. As the judgment will be reversed and the cause remanded, it is unnecessary to consider the assignment as to the amount of the verdict.

We find no suggestion whatever in the argument of counsel for appellant even tending to show why the motion in arrest of judgment should be sustained.

For error in the first instruction, in that it fails to cover the whole case, while purporting to do so, the majority of the court are of the opinion that the judgment should be reversed and the cause remanded. It is so ordered.

CREASEY v. CREASEY.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 12, 1912. Rehearing Denied Dec. 3, 1912.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 288*)—SEPARATE MAINTENANCE—RIGHT TO ALLOWANCE OF MAINTENANCE.

In view of Rev. St. 1909, § 8295, providing for support and separate maintenance for a wife, that the allowance shall be for such time as the nature of the case shall require, and that the court shall from time to time make further orders as shall be just, a husband's abandonment of and failure to support his wife will not entitle her to separate maintenance for any given length of time, and his sincere offer to take her back and maintain her with conjugal kindness and affection, even after decree for maintenance, will defeat her right to separate maintenance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 1077; Dec. Dig. § 288.*]

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 298½*)—SEPARATE MAINTENANCE—POSTPONEMENT.

In an action for separate maintenance it is not error for the trial court to take the case under advisement and postpone its decision to a later date in order to give the parties an opportunity to become reconciled.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 1091, 1092; Dec. Dig. § 298½.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 265*)—EXCEPTIONS IN COURT BELOW.

Unless excepted to, the propriety of the action of the trial court in taking an application for separate maintenance under advisement and postponing its decision so that the parties may become reconciled cannot be reviewed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1461, 1536-1551; Dec. Dig. § 265.*]

4. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 298½*)—REOPENING CASE—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT.

In an action by a wife for separate maintenance, the trial court has the discretionary power of reopening the case and hearing additional evidence on the husband's attempts to effect a reconciliation after the action had been taken under advisement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 1091, 1092; Dec. Dig. § 298½.*]

5. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 297*)—SEPARATE MAINTENANCE—EVIDENCE.

In a suit by a wife for separate maintenance, evidence held to support a finding that the defendant offered in good faith to take plaintiff back and maintain her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 1090; Dec. Dig. § 297.*]

6. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 299*)—SEPARATE MAINTENANCE—JUDGMENTS—CONCLUSIVE-NESS.

An adverse judgment, in an action for separate maintenance by a wife whose husband had abandoned her, will be no bar to a future action, if upon the resumption of the marital relations he shall illtreat her, or upon an attempt to return to him in accordance with his offer he shall repulse her.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Audrain County; Jas. D. Barnett, Judge.

Action by Carrie B. Creasey against Mason M. Creasey. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Suit for maintenance brought by the wife against the husband under the provisions of section 8295 of the Revised Statutes 1909. The defendant, husband, had judgment, and the plaintiff has appealed.

The petition alleged that defendant, without good cause, abandoned his wife and refused and neglected to provide for her, other than to permit her to occupy one of his tenement houses. The answer admits the marriage and contains a general denial; also a plea, in substance, that defendant had offered to receive his wife again into his home and to afford her suitable maintenance, and was willing and able to do so, and that such offer, willingness, and ability continued up to the time of filing the answer. The reply alleged that the offer was not made in good faith and that defendant was not willing, etc. The trial began on June 14, 1910, and the hearing occupied that and the next day. The parties then announced that they rested, whereupon the court gave some declarations of law as offered by the plaintiff, modified some and gave them as modified, and refused others. It then laid the case over "to give the parties an opportunity to become reconciled." On November 9, 1910, the matter was called again for hearing, both the parties and their attorneys being present, and the court offered to give each party an opportunity to offer further evidence as to anything which might have happened in the interim. The defendant then offered testimony as to what had occurred in the way of endeavors on his part to effect a reconciliation with his wife. The plaintiff offered no testimony and refused to offer any, contenting herself with a mere formal statement by counsel in open court that her husband's endeavors were not in earnest; that some six weeks before she had asked the court to allow the costs and stated as a ground for the motion that she willingly forgave the defendant and promised to live with him as his wife; that the motion still remained undisposed of and no effort had been made to call it up; that "we do now consent to return and live with him." Counsel for plaintiff stated that he "offered no testimony at all on the theory that all this testimony has been improper." Thereupon the court rendered its decision and caused judgment to be entered, wherein it finds on the entire evidence that, though defendant originally abandoned plaintiff without cause and continued in fault until he endeavored in good faith to become reconciled to his wife and to provide for her, he has since September term, 1910, "been in good faith endeavoring to be reconciled to his wife and to have her live with him and to make ample provision for her," and, "finding no good reason for the parties to longer live separate and apart," the court dismissed the cause at defendant's cost. The testimony upon which these findings were based occupies 522 pages of the printed record. It is not practicable to set forth within the necessarily narrow confines of a judicial opinion even a full synopsis of such a mass of testimony. The only question raised here which calls for a reference to the testimony is whether the defendant's offer to take his wife back was made in good faith. With that question in mind we have carefully reviewed the entire testimony and base our decision of the question last mentioned on that. However, the following statement is, we believe, a fair indication of the general purport or trend of the testimony:

Plaintiff and defendant were married in Mexico, Mo., April 17, 1907. Both had been residents there for 25 or 30 years. Each had been married before. She had a minor son by her former marriage; he had three minor children by his. He was 46 years of age at the time of the trial, was engaged in the secondhand furniture business, and had property worth some $20,000, and an income of about $175 per month. He was a sober, industrious man, and both were of excellent moral character. Upon their marriage they, with their respective children, took up their abode in a commodious, well-furnished, and desirably situated residence which was owned by the defendant. Plaintiff's aged father also soon made his home there, paying no board, though there is some evidence that he did work for defendant to pay for his keep. For over a year and a half—that is, until about January 1, 1909—happiness reigned supreme in the home, and kindness and respect characterized the conduct of its inmates toward each other. Just what caused an entire change after that date is not disclosed, but thereafter the parties became cold and indifferent and avoided and repulsed each other. He was discourteous, professed not to love her, and reproved her in the presence of his children, and she was not without fault. Nothing, however, occurred between the parties which formed any insuperable obstacle to them thereafter becoming reconciled. Affairs culminated in defendant moving plaintiff into another and smaller house owned by him and then leaving her and filing suit for divorce, charging that she had offered such indignities to him as to render his condition intolerable. He filed the divorce suit on July 21, 1909, the day he left her. He left her no money and little provisions, and after a while ordered the merchants of the town to sell her nothing on his credit. He contributed nothing to purchase food and clothing for her until February 7, 1910, when the court, in this suit for maintenance, made her a temporary allowance of $100 for immediate personal needs, $150 for her attorney's fees, and $40 per month thereafter. Until then she subsisted on money she earned, clerking in a department store, and on such credit as she could obtain on her own account, occupying, however, the house he had placed her in, rent free.

On September 29, 1909, while his divorce suit was pending, the defendant herein called upon plaintiff. A Mrs. Tucker was making a call on plaintiff at the time. Thereupon, in the presence of Mrs. Tucker, he asked his wife to come back to him. It is needless to describe that offer or incident here. It is described and discussed in another suit between the parties, the opinion in which is handed down with this one. Creasey v. Creasey, 151 S. W. 219. It is the same with other offers alleged to have been made up to the time of the first hearing of this suit. It may be accepted that defendant made no sincere offer to return to his wife or to take her back until at least after such first hearing. The divorce suit was dismissed on September 29, 1909, the day defendant first called on his wife after the separation, as aforesaid. At the first hearing in this suit defendant professed to love his wife, and expressed a desire and willingness to have her come back. On her part she denied that she had gotten into a temper of mind, that she did not love her husband, and said that she loved him all the time. She would not say whether she loved him at the time of the trial. She admits that she had done nothing towards resuming her marital relations. Being asked whether she would live with her husband, she was not permitted to answer because of the objection of her counsel. The evidence on the second hearing tends to prove that after the first hearing—that is, after the court had laid the case over to give the parties a chance to become reconciled—the defendant called on plaintiff three times trying to induce her to return to him and met with refusals. Then he went to Texas on a visit and while there wrote two letters to her. They are profuse with protestations of love and entreaties to her to come back to him and contain promises to forgive and requests to be forgiven. It does not appear that she answered any but the first letter. In such answer, under date of July 13, 1909, she told him that it seemed too true that he had already forgotten the way he had "imposed" on her, and suggests that he had written at some other person's suggestion and dictation and not with his own words. She insinuates that he is writing pursuant to a "lesson" in accordance with a "plan." She states that her heart is broken; that she feels entitled to his love and would give the world for it, but that her intuition tells her that it would never do, for he had long since made up his mind to discard and hu-millate her. Her letter ends with, "I must close for I tremble so as I write this, and I do not want to say anything to discourage either of us in an honest effort to forget our differences." When defendant returned he called on plaintiff and asked her if, after studying the matter over, she was ready to come back, stating that he was willing to drop all past trouble and wanted her to do the same. He testified that he made this call upon his wife because he loved her. He repeated these visits 12 or 15 times asking her every time to come and live with him. She refused, saying that he was trying to set a trap to catch her in, and insisting that he deed her the house on South Jefferson street if she went back, and that he would have to go to her lawyers and settle with them. On October 16, 1910, he wrote to her again in the language of love and persuasion asking her to come back or to let him come back, promising to treat her right, etc. He asks for one more interview, intimating that he was getting discouraged and would have to give up unless she would consent this time. All the letters mentioned herein are set forth in full in the case before mentioned between the same parties. Finally she told him that she was "going to let the court pass on it."

During the cross-examination of defendant, plaintiff's attorney asked him whether if he was required to pay the attorney's fee if he would pay it rather than be living apart and separate from his wife, and he answered, "Certainly." The attorney then asked him why he did not take her back, and he answered, "She wouldn't go." Thereupon defendant's attorney challenged plaintiff's attorney to dismiss this suit for maintenance promising that defendant would take his wife back if it was done. Defendant interjected at this point, evidently addressing plaintiff's counsel: "Do you suppose I would have gone down after this woman as many times as I have and talked to her the way I have and not take her back? Would you have gone after anybody as many times as I have and her sit there and say, no, no, every time? Would you have gone back like I have if you wasn't sincere? No, you wouldn't, and no other man." Plaintiff's counsel merely answered, "We will see," and went on with his cross-examination. After this cross-examination had become rather acrimonious, impugning defendant's motives and disclosing or developing considerable antagonism between him and the examining counsel, without, we must say, having any tendency to encourage a desire or display of desire on defendant's part for reconciliation, the defendant refused to tell plaintiff's counsel whether he would take his wife back, saying that, though he had not given up hope of getting her back and had always wanted her to come back, he would let the court decide the matter, she having told him repeatedly that the court must decide it; that he would not say what he would do after the court had decided the matter, would not say that he would or would not take her back, would not answer the question, would go to her and say what he wanted to say to her regardless of what her counsel did or said. It seems that plaintiff's attorneys filed herein a motion for an allowance of additional attorney's fees, "and for grounds thereof says that she willingly forgives the defendant for those unhappy differences which impelled her maintenance of the present suit, and purposes to faithfully discharge all of her duties as the wife of defendant." Defendant testifies that after this motion was filed he met his wife and asked her if she meant what was said in it, and she said she did. He told her the court had already allowed her attorneys $150. She said he ought not to pay it again if that was the case. He proposed then that they go right away to the court house and dismiss this proceeding. She said: "No, sir; I am going to let the court pass on it." As we have already mentioned, the plaintiff refused to offer any evidence on the second hearing.

C. A. Barnes and D. A. Murphy, both of Mexico, Mo., for appellant. L. P. Crigler and Barclay, Fauntelroy & Cullen, all of St. Louis, and Fry & Rodgers, of Mexico, Mo., for respondent.

CAULFIELD, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] Plaintiff's counsel advances the theory that the only issues of fact that could be raised or tried were whether the husband without good cause abandoned his wife and neglected or refused to support her, and that therefore it was error for the court to consider the question whether the defendant was able and willing to resume his duty of making proper provision for his wife and to become reconciled to her and honestly endeavored to do so. Carrying this theory to its logical conclusion, plaintiff's counsel contends in his brief that, an abandonment and failure to provide for the wife having been shown to have existed, "the only thing remaining was for the plaintiff to determine upon what length of time she desired a separate maintenance and support to be awarded, and, if substantial evidence was adduced supporting her prayer, it then became the duty of the court to award it for such period of time, so that when the plaintiff in the case at bar requested an allowance for the remainder of her natural life and predicated her prayer upon the proposition that the defendant had given plaintiff cause for divorce, a decree in accordance with her prayer was the only allowance the court could make." Such theory and the contention based on it are without merit or precedent to sustain them. The courts of various states differ as to whether they have power, without statutory authority, to make and enforce an allowance for separate maintenance except as incident to a divorce proceeding; but there does not seem to be any question that a sincere offer on the husband's part to take back and maintain the wife and treat her with conjugal kindness and affection will generally defeat her right to a separate allowance. 21 Cyc. 1602; Kenley v. Kenley, 2 How. (Miss.) 751; Hair v. Hair, 10 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 163; Schraeder v. Schraeder, 26 Ill. App. 524; McMullin v. McMullin, 123 Cal. 653, 56 Pac. 554; Skittletharpe v. Skittletharpe, 130 N. C. 72, 40 S. E. 851. The wife gets no vested right to separate maintenance because her husband has abandoned and refused to provide for her. Such right ceases if he does not persist in such wrongful conduct and sincerely offers to resume his marital relations and obligations. Schraeder v. Schraeder, supra. Nor is the husband's offer to deal rightly by his wife any the less effective to defeat his wife's right to separate maintenance because made after being sued for separate maintenance or even after a judgment in such suit, though, of course, the lateness of his repentance might be considered in adjudging the question of his sincerity. Schraeder v. Schraeder, supra. In fact, the judgment should be so framed as to anticipate that contingency and allow only for a separate support to the wife until he will take her back and treat her with conjugal kindness and affection; and such are the usual terms of such judgments. 1 Bishop on Marriage, Divorce & Separation, § 1417. If he should sincerely become willing and offer to do that, the necessity for separate maintenance would cease. Skittletharpe v. Skittletharpe, supra. If the judgment was otherwise drawn, it would still be the duty of the court to refuse to enforce it, if it appeared that the parties had come together again, or that the husband was willing to assume his marital relations and obligations and was prevented only by his wife's refusal from doing so. Reid v. Robinson, 9 Lower Can. Jurist, 103. Our statute is in harmony with the foregoing ideas, for it provides that the support and maintenance shall be "for such time as the nature of the case and the circumstances of the parties shall require," and that the court shall "from time to time make such further orders touching the same as shall be just." Section 8295, R. S. 1909.

Applying these principles to the facts of the case at bar, it is evident that the trial court did not err in denying plaintiff a judgment for separate maintenance; it being satisfied by substantial evidence that defendant was willing and had repeatedly offered to resume his marital relations and obligations, and was prevented from doing so only by the refusal of his wife.

[2, 3] It was not error for the court to take the case under advisement and postpone its decision to a later day, and if it had been plaintiff did not preserve the point by excepting to such action. Kuhl v. Kuhl, 160

Mo. App. 363, 140 S. W. 949. Plaintiff did not suffer because of the postponement, for in the meantime she was enjoying an allowance for temporary maintenance.

[4] Neither did the trial court err in reopening the case and hearing additional testimony bearing on defendant's attempts, after the first hearing, to effect a reconciliation with his wife. It is a matter of discretion with the trial court to admit or exclude testimony after a case has once been closed, and such discretion will not be interfered with except in case of its manifest abuse. Kuhl v. Kuhl, supra. And in a suit like this for separate maintenance, where, as we have seen, the judgment, if for plaintiff, would not be a final one, in the sense that term is usually used, but would only be for separate maintenance until the husband was sincerely willing to resume his marital relations and obligations, and would not preclude him from afterwards seeking to effect a reconciliation, evidence of the husband's present attitude would be clearly pertinent to the matter before the court, for it would be idle to enter such a judgment if the husband was then willing to do his duty, and therefore separate maintenance was not necessary. Likewise it was not error for the trial court to modify the declaration of law offered by the plaintiff which declared that if defendant abandoned plaintiff without cause she was entitled to a separate maintenance, by adding thereto, "until defendant resumes his duties of making proper provision for his wife and becomes reconciled to her or honestly endeavors so to do." Such addition was in entire harmony with the law as above mentioned.

[5] Plaintiff further contends that the finding that the defendant's offer to take her back was made in good faith is not supported by any evidence in the case. It is clear that there is no foundation for this contention. The evidence tending to support such finding was ample and was substantially, if not entirely, uncontradicted, as will be seen from our statement of the facts. The plaintiff, though given an opportunity, refused to offer any testimony on that subject. Nor are we inclined to disturb the judgment because the husband finally refused to tell counsel for plaintiff what he would do in the matter of taking his wife back. It is fair to infer that by that time—that is, at that point in his cross-examination—he had become aggravated and wroth at plaintiff's counsel and resented the manner of his cross-examination, and such refusal could more readily be attributed to mere temporary spleen directed at plaintiff's counsel than to a real disposition not to resume his marital relations. Especially is this so when his testimony as to his endeavors to make up with his wife and his declarations in the prior part of his testimony are considered.

[6] We may add to the foregoing that, if the plaintiff returns to her husband, and he should illtreat her to such an extent as to justify her living apart from him, or if, upon an unequivocal attempt to return to him, he shall repulse her or refuse to cohabit with her as her husband, the decree in this case will not bar her remedy against him. Schraeder v. Schraeder, 26 Ill. App. 524, 525.

The judgment is affirmed.

CREASEY v. CREASEY.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 12, 1912. Rehearing Denied Dec. 3, 1912.)

1. DIVORCE (§ 37*)—DESERTION—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Where a husband wrongfully abandoned his wife, she is not guilty of desertion in living apart from him, unless, after a bona fide effort on his part to effect a reconciliation and to obtain her consent to his return, she refuses and continues to live apart for the statutory period.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 27, 107-132; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

2. DIVORCE (§ 133*)—ACTIONS—DESERTION—EFFORTS AT RECONCILIATION.

In an action by a husband for divorce, evidence held to show that his first efforts at reconciliation were not in good faith, but that subsequent efforts and attempts were in good faith.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 446-448; Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

3. DIVORCE (§ 37*)—DESERTION—EFFORTS AT RECONCILIATION.

Where a husband abandoned his wife, previous insincere efforts to return and effect a reconciliation, while material on the integrity of subsequent ones, do not preclude him from the advantage of a bona fide effort so as to render her acts in continuing to live apart desertion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 27, 107-132; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

4. DIVORCE (§ 37*)—DESERTION—EFFORTS AT RECONCILIATION.

Where actions for divorce and separate maintenance were pending between husband and the wife whom he had abandoned, the husband who had made numerous efforts at reconciliation was, upon the wife's offer to return to him, made the night before the day on which her action for maintenance was to be called, entitled to require as a condition to receiving her back that she agree to dismiss the action, without losing the benefit of his offers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 27, 107-132; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

5. DIVORCE (§ 37*)—DESERTION—EFFORTS AT RECONCILIATION.

Where a wife, whose husband abandoned her, instituted an action for separate maintenance, alleged offers in her motions for attorney's fees that she was at all times willing and ready to resume marital relations, being but excuses for demanding money, are not such bona fide offers as to render the husband guilty of desertion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 27, 107-132; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

6. DIVORCE (§ 37*)—"DESERTION"—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

A husband's wrongful abandonment of his wife does not constitute desertion, if within one year thereafter she showed by her words or conduct that she acquiesced in the separation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 27, 107-132; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2020-2024; vol. 8, p. 7635.]

7. DIVORCE (§ 37*)—GROUNDS—DESERTION.

Where a husband wrongfully left his wife, and she refused to return to him for more than a year, although he in good faith requested her return, the separation for more than a year does not entitle her to a divorce; the original abandonment in itself not being ground for divorce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 27, 107-132; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

8. DIVORCE (§ 133*)—DESERTION—EVIDENCE—CONSENT.

In an action for divorce evidence held to establish that a wife consented to her husband's living apart.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 446-448; Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pike County; W. T. Ragland, Judge.

Suit for divorce by Mason Creasey against Carrie B. Creasey. From a judgment awarding defendant a divorce, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Suit for divorce, wherein plaintiff was denied a divorce and defendant was granted one under the testimony on her cross-bill, with $2,500 alimony in gross. Plaintiff has appealed. The statutory grounds for divorce stated in the petition are: (1) That defendant absented herself without a reasonable cause for the space of one year; (2) that she offered such indignities to plaintiff as rendered his condition intolerable, particularizing. In her cross-bill defendant states against the plaintiff the statutory ground of offering her such indignities, etc., particularizing. She also makes an allegation, which the trial court treated as a sufficient charge that defendant absented himself without reasonable cause for the space of one year, as follows: "That plaintiff, disregarding his duties as the husband of the defendant, did on or about the 21st day of July, 1909, without any cause or excuse whatsoever, and against the desire and without the consent of defendant, deserted and abandoned defendant, and since said date has ever failed, neglected, and refused to support and contribute to the support and maintenance of defendant and to make any provision therefor, other than to permit her to occupy one of his tenement houses and a special allowance provided for a short period of time by the court in a former and other cause."

With a view to determining whether it justifies the decree, we have carefully examined the evidence, which occupies over 660 pages of the printed abstract. As a result thereof we adopt certain of the findings of fact embodied in the decree of the circuit court, as follows: "The court finds: That plaintiff and defendant were married at Mexico, Mo., on the 17th day of April, 1907, and continued to live together as husband and wife from that date until the 21st day of July, 1909. That plaintiff and defendant from the date of their marriage until the latter part of January, or first of February, 1909, faithfully demeaned themselves, and that each treated the other with kindness and affection. That during the latter part of January, or first of February, 1909, for some reason not disclosed by the evidence, a coolness sprang up between them, and their relations became estranged, and from that time on until their separation on the 21st day of July, 1909, there were mutual acts of retaliation and recrimination tending to alienate and destroy their mutual affection; but the court finds that all of the acts and conduct on the part of each of them, whether taken singly or together, did not constitute such indignities as to render the condition of either of them intolerable within the meaning of the statute so as to entitle either of them to a divorce on the ground of indignities alone. The court further finds: That from the date of the marriage of plaintiff and defendant until the 18th day of July, 1909, they lived in a large and well-furnished residence located in a desirable residence district in the city of Mexico, Mo. That on the 16th day or July, 1909, the plaintiff, with the intention of getting defendant out of his home and with the intention of abandoning her, after having so done, furnished a small house in a different part of said city of Mexico and removed his family, including plaintiff, thereto. That on the 21st day of July, 1909, and without any change in the general relations then existing between plaintiff and defendant, and without any previous notice or warning to defendant, plaintiff without legal cause or excuse deserted defendant, and on the same date instituted in the circuit court of Audrain county, Mo., his suit for divorce." We may, at this point, add to the foregoing that the divorce suit last mentioned was voluntarily dismissed by the plaintiff on the 29th day of September, 1909, on which day the plaintiff had offered to resume marital relations with the defendant. On November 9, 1909, the defendant instituted a suit for separate maintenance in the circuit court of Audrain county, Mo., which said suit was pending and undisposed of until November 9, 1910, during which time, however, and thereafter, from time to time, the plaintiff made offers of reconciliation and to resume marital relations with the defendant, which she did not accept or act upon.

The only question which we deem necessary to consider at greater length in this opinion is whether either of the parties is entitled to a divorce on the ground of desertion. That depends upon the sincerity of plaintiff's offers of reconciliation, and upon whether by her words or conduct, subsequent to his leaving her, she acquiesced in the separation continuing. In these respects the evidence discloses the following facts: On September 29, 1909, while his first divorce suit was pending, the plaintiff called at the defendant's house. A Mrs. Tucker was there talking to the defendant. She had come before she had her breakfast, though she lived about four blocks away, and she stated that fact to defendant. It appears to have been the first time plaintiff called since he left his wife. Prior to that time all his efforts seem to have been directed toward procuring a dissolution of his marriage. Whether he and Mrs. Tucker met there by prearrangement so that she might serve as a witness is a question. Plaintiff and Mrs. Tucker testify that, on the evening before, he had asked her to call for the purpose of ascertaining whether his wife would talk to him. They both assert that neither had any idea of finding the other there. She says that she had called twice the evening before and had failed to find defendant in. Defendant testifies in effect that Mrs. Tucker did not make those two calls; that she was home at the time they were said to have been made. Plaintiff does not explain why he did not postpone his visit until he heard finally from Mrs. Tucker as to his wife's willingness to talk with him. Defendant's version of what occurred on this occasion is as follows: Mrs. Tucker told her that plaintiff had been to her (Mrs. Tucker's) house the night before and wanted to know if defendant would have a talk with him. Defendant said: "I don't know. I haven't really recovered from the way Mr. Creasey has done me to have a talk with him." Then, seeing her husband approaching the house, she said to Mrs. Tucker, "There comes Mr. Creasey, and I don't feel like I want to talk with him yet awhile." Mrs. Tucker answered: "If I didn't want to see him I wouldn't go to the door." She did not go to the front door when he rang the bell, and he came around to the kitchen door and asked her if he could come in. She told him it was his house. He came in and said: "Mamma, I have come to have a talk with you. I want you to forgive this and let's go back." He threw his arms out to her, saying: "Mamma, I have come to acknowledge I have done wrong. Come to my arms and let me hug and kiss you." She answered, "Mr. Creasey, I can say to you, as you said to me time without number, that you need not come to me." Then he said, "Now you see, Mrs. Tucker." Defendant said, "Now you see, Mrs. Tucker, wasn't there a plot you two should meet here this morning?" Mrs. Tucker said, "Oh, no." He then said: "Mamma, your nieces are coming this month. I want you to come back home with me to the big house so we can entertain her in the big house." She answered that her niece would be entertained wherever she was. Then he said, "Come on, quit your foolishness." She answered that there was no foolishness with her; that she could not forgive yet; that she would have to have time. He asked her how much time. She said all that she wanted; that he had caused a wound in her heart it would take a long time to heal; that he had not only humiliated her but her father by having him arrested. Then she turned to him and said, "What would you give to have me back?" He pointed to his breast, and she answered: "Oh, is that all. Mr. Creasey, should I come back to you, you will have to meet conditions that you don't think you will have to meet." She says that ended the interview. Plaintiff testified, as to this first alleged attempt to effect a reconciliation: That when he came into the house he told her he wanted to have a talk with her. That he saw she had company there and that he wanted to talk to her alone. That she said, "No, she wanted a witness." "Very well," he said. Then followed his version of the conversation, which is in substance like hers, except that he says she told him he would have to deed her enough property to keep her as long as she lived. Mrs. Tucker's testimony corroborates his.

We may add here that, when plaintiff's suit for maintenance came on for trial, Mrs. Tucker appeared as a very friendly witness to plaintiff, having come voluntarily from Denver, Colo., where she was then living, for the purpose of testifying on his behalf. It may also be said that before she went to Colorado her conduct, if defendant's testimony is to be credited, savored of intermeddling in the affairs of this couple. Plaintiff caused his then pending divorce suit to be dismissed on that day. Defendant heard of this in a day or two. The divorce suit was then reinstated at her instance in order to have her motion for attorney's fees, which was pending at the time of the dismissal, passed on. It was then finally dismissed. He does not appear to have communicated further with his wife until October 28, 1909, when he sent her a letter by registered mail. It was excluded from evidence on the ground that it was a privileged communication, and it is not preserved in the record. Plaintiff testifies that he sent Will Steele, her intimate friend, to see her. In his answer filed in the maintenance suit plaintiff states that he sent a friend of hers and his, referring, we infer, to Steele, "to get her decision," meaning her decision on his offer made in the presence of Mrs. Tucker. Defendant admits that in the winter or fall of 1909 Steele spoke to her about returning to her husband, but says that when she asked him if he had been sent to see her he said, "No." What she said to Steele is not disclosed. She filed her suit for maintenance on November 9, 1909. In his answer filed in that suit on November 30, 1909, plaintiff admits that he had brought suit against her for divorce, but charges that it was on account of "the acts and conduct of plaintiff." He then sets up his alleged efforts to resume his marital relations and obligations, and further says: "And even now comes defendant and affirms his proffers to this plaintiff, and agrees to take her back and support her if she will come and live with him; and that there is no necessity for her to work for a living, if she has done so, and no necessity for her to have to employ lawyers to get her the necessities of life, but that this defendant is now and has been since first making the proposition to her, ready, willing, and able to take her back as his wife." In her reply, filed June 13, 1910, she stated, in response to this renewed offer: First, that it was not made in good faith; second, "that there is such an incompatibility in the temperament, disposition, and purpose in life between the plaintiff and defendant that a renewal of the marriage relationship would result in a repetition of the same or similar indignities stated in the plaintiff's (her) petition."

There were two hearings had in the maintenance suit; the first ending June 15, 1910, and the second about November 9, 1910. At the end of the first hearing the court laid over the case or withheld its decision to give the parties an opportunity to become reconciled. Thereupon plaintiff, the husband, caused his wife's uncle, J. A. Vaughn, who was friendly to her, to go and ask her to come back and live with him. This was in June, 1910. She says that she does not remember what she told her uncle. The uncle testified that she answered, "Not yet, she couldn't." He asked her why, and she said: "You don't know it all. He has even had men to watch my house." (We may say here that this "watching" was done by a deputy sheriff on one occasion at plaintiff's instance to ascertain what lawyer defendant was conferring with. It was not intended as a reflection on defendant's conduct and was not so construed by any one.) Plaintiff testified that he sent defendant's pastor to see her in an effort to have her come back. She admits that the pastor called and said something about her coming back to her husband. That she said: "Brother Truex, you don't know all. He hired a man to watch me." She testifies that he told her that her husband had not sent him. When the pastor called is not disclosed.

Shortly after the first hearing of the maintenance suit the plaintiff made a two weeks' visit to Texas. Defendant admits that he called upon her before going, though it is not disclosed what occurred then. While in Texas he wrote her as follows: "Wortham, Texas, July 10, 1910. Mrs. Carrie Creasey, Mexico, Mo.—Dear Wife: In writing you at this time I hardly know how to commence or what to say under the circumstances. Now if I knew you would answer and be nice to me I would surely know better what to say and would feel better about it after I had said it. But I can and do hope for the best this is Sunday morning and it is nice and cool and all are well and happy but myself I will go to Sunday school as I haven't missed a Sunday this year this is a fine place good crops and plenty of everything peaches plums in fact fruit of all kinds as well as fried chicken are ripe here and a mocking bird has a nest in fathers yard and the old bird came and sit in a tree close to my bedroom windo about day light this morning and sang to me for moore than an hour it was just grand and I am sure if you had of been with me you would of enjoyed it too. and I am sure it would of sounded much sweeter to me. For you are as usual on my mind all the time I do certainly wish you had come with me as I tried to get you to I am sure we both would be happier at least I know I would and I believe you would for I do not see how you can be happy the way things are now I am sure if you will come back to me and we both drop our past troubles and neither one of us never mention the past troubl to the other I am sure we can always get along and be happy for ever. Now don't you think so? Now write and tell me yes and that you will come to me for in spite of all that has been done and said I still love you. Now you just stop listening to others and come to me and see if I dont do as I said I would do. I hope you have been thinking over the two little talks I had with you before I left. Now you would not say if I could come to see you any more or that you would let me in or that you would talk to me if I did come and above all you would not say that you loved me not even a little bit. Now write me at once and say yes I do and will to all of them and I will come to you just as soon as I get to Mexico for I am always lonesome without you and I forgive you for all that has been said or done and I want you to do me the same way I know you said you never would be a wife to me any moore like you had been once but you surely did not mean that Now did you. Please answer this at once and say to me I was only joking and did not mean it Now I could and I would write you a long letter if I only knew you would receive it in the same spirit of earnestness which it was written and answer it. I know we are not going to live always so let us both live in the future so that when our time does come we will not be ashamed or afraid to go to be judged by him who will judge all of us according to the deeds done in the body and in closing this letter I want to say to you this much. you are the only little woman in this world I love and the only one I ever expect to love and I want you to believe me in all seariness and write to me so I can get your letter by saturday sure. Lovingly yours, with many kisses Mason. P. S. I have just been out in the county where they had plenty of watermelons muskmelons and fruit of all kinds We sure had a big time the girls ar canning fruit and making jelly and paservs to beat the band they all live on farms and have plenty of everything My appitite is good and everything tastes good to me I have gained six pounds since I talked with you as there is plenty of melons fruit and fried chickens here I hope to continu to improve in flesh for some time yet. and I believe if you will only write me the right kind of a letter I will get fat I am going south of here next week a few days to look for a new location to go into business and hope to please you what ever I do anyone can do well here if he will only hustle and I always have hustled and can yet if you will love and encourage me for I know you should anyway and belve you will. M."

This she answered as follows: "Mexico, Mo., July 13, 1910. My Dear Husband: I have received your letter and have read and reread it so often that I can almost quote it, it seems to true that you have already forgotten the way you imposed on me, and I cannot help feeling that like the mocking bird you are writing your lesson in imitation of the bird rather than as the originator of the music. I am glad that your health is improving and you are gaining in weight and if you will keep that up for a few months longer, and continue your lesson it is possible you may perfect you plans. My heart is indeed broken and I feel that I am entitled to your love and affection and would give all the world for it, but somehow my intuition keeps telling me that it would never do, for you, have long since made up your mind to discard and humiliate me. I must close for I tremble so as I write this, and I do not want to say anything to discourage either of us in an honest effort to forget our differences Yours in haste Carrie."

He also wrote to her while there as follows: "Wortham, Tex., July 1910. My Dear Little Wife: Mysterious you are still as great a mystry to me as ever. Now don't you rember back in 1906 before we were married I wrote you a love letter and pictured to you three kinds of trouble 1st the trouble you had already had 2nd the trouble you have and 3rd the trouble you are looking for. Now havent you had trouble enough. I am sure I have. Now it always will be a mystery to me why you turned against me and treated me the way you have I am sure I was good to you and no man ever did love a woman any better and was moore affectionet than I was to you. and I have asked you to forgive me for any thing that I have done that displeased you now it seems you have no love for me at all not even a kind word and all this time you know I do love you with all my heart. Now you said you got my letter but you did not answer it at all you only mentioned the mocking bird Now mama you try it again and see if you cant answer this one with a long letter and tell me I can come and talk with you and you will say something encouragin to me when I do come. Now mama I am sure you will feel better over it if you do. Now you seem anxious for me to stay here several months longer how can you say that when you know how anxious I am to see and love you. you spoke of the broken heart. yes my heart is broken and all for the love of you and you say you feel you are entitled to my love and affection and would give the world for it. When you know you had it every day yes every minute when you for some unknown reason to me threw it away just as if it was some uncard for toy. and even now when it is being offered to you again you are not only refusing it but seem to spurn it when you know it comes from an honest heart and with all searsness you did not say you would like to be with me or that you would like for me to be with you. I thank you for your promptness in writing me and do hope you will be as prompt in ansuring this one. Now mama as you did not ask me to answer your letter I am taking the liberty just as I did in writing you the first time and hope you will answer this one as promptly as you did the other one so you think you could give the world for my love and affection But your intuitions keeps telling you not to except either for it would never do Now you just listen to me and you come to me and stop listning to your intuitions and evry one else and we will both be happier I have always believed it was other talk and influence over you that was the cause of your doing the way you have. and I believe if others would let you alone even now you would come and be the sweet little wife to me you once was oh how I did love you and always will. you say you do not want to say anything to discourage either of us in trying to forget our differences are you trying to forget our difference if you are an honest effort will clear the way I have already made the honest effort and the way is clear. Now forget the past and writ me a long letter. so with lots of love and many kisses for you I am always your affectionally Mason."

While in Texas he also sent her a post card dated July 7, 1910, stating in substance that he had arrived the night before all right and had a nice trip, etc., and ending with "With love and best wishes to you." Under date of July 13, 1910, he sent her a post card containing the printed words, "I love but thee." From Mexico, Mo., he sent several post cards to her at Springfield. Among these, one dated August 10, 1910, bore the printed legend, "Please don't keep me waiting." Another, undated, had printed on it, "Some one longs for some one." On this card he wrote: "Better love and lost than never loved at all." Another, dated August, 1910, had printed on it, "If a body write a body and get no reply, may a body ask a body just the reason why?" On September 8, 1910, he sent her a post card from Colorado. About September 21, 1910, he sent her a post card on which was printed, "You're the only girl I ever loved—but I can't keep telling you so, all the time."

Across this he had written, "True as gospel." On September 25, 1910, he sent her a post card on which was printed a poem to the general effect that a man was his own best friend and that he should be good to himself. On August 13, 1910, she sent him a postal from Springfield on which was printed, "What's the use of loving if you can't love all the time?" On October 16, 1910, while he was in Mexico, Mo., he wrote a letter to her as follows: "Mexico, Mo., Oct. 16, 1910. My Dear Wife: I hope you will pardon me for taking the libirty of writing you at this time for my thoughts are continually of you. Now I know you do love me. or you would not put your arms around my neck and kiss me so sweetly and so many times and talk so loveing as you did to me last Sunday night. Now I have told you I would always love. Treat you right and do everything in reason for you go anywhere with you and that I would take you back here where I live or I would come to you where you live. Now what more can I do if you can think of anything moore please tell me what it is. you seemed just a little out of humor the other night when I walked home with you. Now I would like to have one moore private talk with you and if I cant induce you to become reconciled and live with me I will hafto give up for I have made so many personal appeals to you to come back and every time I have had to axcept no for an answer. Now if you will write and tell me I can. I will come and take you to lodge Tuesday night or I will take you home from lodge which ever you say Please write and tell me if either one suits you. We can then have a long talk togather and I do hope good results may follow please answer. Lots of love and many kisses for you. Yours Mason."

Plaintiff kept copies of the letters he wrote to the defendant. These letters were admitted in evidence over the objection of the defendant that they were privileged communications, on the theory that she had waived the privilege by withdrawing the objection to them at the trial of the maintenance suit. In addition to sending her these letters and post cards, he went to her house to talk to her 15 or 20 times. On the objection of her counsel that it was a privileged communication, plaintiff was not permitted to give his version of what was said at these interviews. She also wrote him several letters which were not permitted to be introduced in evidence because of the same objection advanced by her counsel. However, in her testimony she admits that on November 5, 1910, "he had been coming down there for months for me to go home with him"; that is, since in June, 1910. Being asked by her counsel what plaintiff said to her when he came to see her, she said: "Well, he would say, 'Come on and go with me, or let me stay with you.' The Court: And you declined, you refused to do that? A. No, I didn't come right out and refuse." There is no doubt, however, that she did not go back. She admits that at the time of the first hearing in the maintenance suit she could not see her way back to her husband, stating that this was because he treated her so cool when she "offered to return." It does not appear that she had ever offered to return, except that her attorneys in a motion for allowance of costs and attorney's fees had, stated as "grounds thereof * * * that she willingly forgives the defendant (now plaintiff) for those unhappy differences which impelled her maintenance of the present suit, and purposes to faithfully discharge all of her duties as the wife of defendant." The court had already allowed her attorneys $150 as a fee. After the first hearing of the maintenance suit, and while the plaintiff was endeavoring to effect a reconciliation with her, her attorneys filed another motion in said suit which stated "that an honest effort is being made by plaintiff to secure an amicable adjustment of the differences now existing between the plaintiff and defendant, * * * that, in order that the question of costs in this case up to the present time and the fees of the attorneys therein may not be in any manner construed as operating in restraint of an amicable adjustment of said matters between the parties, the said attorneys respectfully ask the court" to allow the costs theretofore asked for and $750 attorney's fees, and require the defendant (now plaintiff) to pay the same forthwith.

On October 6, 1910, both the parties went to Springfield, Ill., to attend the State Fair. She had previously told him that she was going. Though they went on the same train, they did not go in each other's company. He went alone; she went in the company of two ladies, one a Mrs. Botkins. Arriving at Springfield, he twice in the railroad station tried to get her to go with him to his sister's, who lived in Springfield, with whom they had stayed on a similar occasion two years before. She told him that the ladies were with her. He suggested that they go too; his sister having plenty of room. She refused. The next day he met her and her party at the fair grounds and talked to her again. While talking to her, Mrs. Botkins came up and said, "Mrs. Creasey, are you going with Mr. Creasey or with us?" to which she answered, "I am going with you." Mrs. Botkins then said, "If you are going with us, come on, and, if you are going with Mr. Creasey, let him take you like a man." Plaintiff said, "That's exactly what I am trying to do." Defendant would not go, though she says when he made these advances he was pleasant and gallant. She did say, however, that, though he asked her to go with him to his sister's that night, he did not then ask her to come and live with him again. She says that after the Springfield incident and before the maintenance suit was finally determined he came to see her at least on two or three different occasions, spending as much as an hour alone with her. A single isolated instance of her personally offering to go with him is testified to by defendant as having occurred on November 5, 1910, four days before the maintenance suit was to be called for final hearing, and about 9:30 o'clock at night. She told the story of that night under the assumption that all she told occurred in the presence of her boy, and then disclosed that nothing was said in the presence of the boy except that plaintiff shook his finger in her face and said, "Not until you promise me you will go with me Monday morning." Going to the door then he kissed her and said, "Good-bye, I will be here Monday morning." The trial judge then indicated that he would consider only the fragment of the occurrence which the boy is said to have witnessed, following the theory which defendant had invoked, that overtures for reconciliation not made in the presence of a third person were privileged communications. We will, however, mention the excluded story here. She states that she offered to go home with him that night. At first he hesitated, asking her what made her take the notion. Then he said, "all right," he would go and see that the house was prepared for her coming. He returned in about 15 minutes and asked her whether she would go with him Monday morning to get the records clear of the maintenance suit. This she refused to do, and then he would not take her unless she would promise, which she would not do. Asked on cross-examination why she refused, she said that she "owed the man no promise." She did not explain how he came to kiss her good-bye and to promise to be back for her Monday, immediately after reaching this unpleasant deadlock. Plaintiff on cross-examination denied the occurrence and says that she only offered to go providing he "did certain things."

The separate maintenance suit was decided against the wife on November 9, 1910. Thereafter on three occasions plaintiff tried to talk with his wife and she avoided him. Once he called at her house, and she did not come to the door, though the indications were that she was in. He waited and tried to speak to her on the street as she came out of the house, but she passed on and refused to talk to him. Another time she avoided him when he asked to walk home from church with her. In the meantime she appealed from the judgment against her in the maintenance suit. We decided that appeal at this sitting. See Creasey v. Creasey, 151 S. W. 215. He filed this suit for divorce on December 14, 1910.

Fry & Rodgers, of Mexico, Mo., P. H. Oulen, of St. Louis, and J. D. Hostetter, of Bowling Green, for appellant. D. A. Murphy and Clarence A. Barnes, both of Mexico, Mo., for respondent.

CAULFIELD, J. [1] We approve of the action of the trial court in denying plaintiff a divorce. It is conceded that the plaintiff left his wife voluntarily, and the trial court has found that neither party had been guilty of misconduct sufficient to constitute a cause for divorce—a finding which we approve. It was incumbent upon him then, if he would justly charge her with statutory desertion, to seek a reconciliation and offer to return. Such an offer must have been made in good faith; that is, with the bona fide intention to bring about a reconciliation, and not merely as a device to defeat her in litigation. Nelson on Divorce & Separation, § 73; Messenger v. Messenger, 56 Mo. 329. If the plaintiff made such an offer in good faith, and she refused, and her refusal continued for the statutory period of one year, he would be entitled to a divorce; not otherwise. She must be taken, under the circumstances, to have been absent by his consent until he offered to return or take her back, and she must have been absent without his consent for the full period of one year before she became guilty of statutory desertion.

[2, 3] Now we are not satisfied from the evidence that from July 21, 1909, when he left her, until in June, 1910, when the maintenance suit was first heard, he made any offer with the bona fide intention to bring about a reconciliation; at least we are not inclined to disturb the finding of the trial court in that respect. During this period of more than 11 months he made but four offers, of which only two may be considered as such. The one said to have been embodied in the letter sent by registered mail must be disregarded because that letter is not preserved in the record and we have no means of judging of its value or effect as an offer. The one said to have been sent through Mr. Steele cannot be regarded as an offer because it was not transmitted to the defendant as such. Steele told her when he called that plaintiff had not sent him. This leaves but two, the one made in the presence of Mrs. Tucker and the one made in plaintiff's answer in the maintenance suit. When the first was made, the relations between the parties were necessarily strained. For several months they had lived jarringly together. He had then left her without warning. For three months his divorce suit had been pending and he had been vigorously endeavoring to obtain a dissolution of the marriage. That suit was still pending when he called. It was a delicate matter for these two to meet in an attempt to restore a broken home, not a matter for a third person to witness. The presence of a third person was not calculated to relieve the strain or to allow of the frank, free avowals, confessions, and discussions so necessary to a successful reconciliation. Plaintiff must have known this, but nevertheless Mrs. Tucker was present, and there is some reason to believe that she was there by his connivance. Be that as it may, it was clearly divulged to him on this occasion that his wife believed that Mrs. Tucker was there by his prearrangement, and that she had considerable reason for so believing; Mrs. Tucker having called before her (Mrs. Tucker's) breakfast, avowedly to deliver a message from him coincidentally with his first visit of ostensible conciliation. This visit was clearly timed most unfortunately and, as he must have known, was more calculated to arouse suspicion and resentment in his wife than a spirit of conciliation. If he had been genuinely desirous to effect a reconciliation at this time, it seems that he would soon have followed this visit up with an offer made under more auspicious circumstances. He was silent for a month, when he registered a letter to her. This but tends to confirm the impression that he was trying merely to make evidence, not to effect a reconciliation. Thereafter he did nothing by way of communicating with his wife, except that he says he sent Steele to see her, and except for his answer in her suit for separate maintenance. As to his sending Steele, it does not appear that he sent Steele to plead with his wife on his behalf or to make her any offer, but merely to "get her decision" in response to his offer made in the presence of the witness Mrs. Tucker. Besides, the fact that he sent Steele is established only by his own uncorroborated testimony, which is in the face of the fact Steele disclaimed to her being sent by him. Steele was not called on as a witness. We see no reason for disagreeing with the trial court's conclusion that the offer made in the presence of Mrs. Tucker was made with a view to its being rejected and not accepted, as a mere device to aid him in litigation, not with a bona fide intention to bring about a reconciliation. The offer which he made in his answer in the maintenance suit is even more subject to objection. Presumptively it was addressed to the court and was intended primarily to defeat her action for separate maintenance. Necessarily it was not couched in terms of entreaty or persuasion, but was cold and formal promising and asking nothing by way of forgiveness. It was accompanied by the charge that his previous suit for divorce was brought on account of "her acts and conduct"; thus, by implication, at least, repeating his prior accusations. It was calculated to embitter, rather than to conciliate. It is clear then that the defendant did not refuse a proper offer of reconciliation a year or more before this suit was brought, and therefore was not guilty of desertion under the statute, and the plaintiff is not entitled to a divorce.

Thus far we find ourselves able to agree with the learned trial court. We cannot agree that the defendant is entitled to a divorce as the court decreed: First, because we do not believe that under the evidence the efforts of her husband after the first hearing in the maintenance suit, to effect a reconciliation, should be denounced as insincere; and, second, because we are satisfied that subsequently to the original separation and within one year thereafter she showed by her conduct that she acquiesced in the separation. As to the first, we may say here that the fact that plaintiff had previously made insincere offers must be considered in weighing the integrity of his subsequent ones; but it does not conclude the matter. The "door of repentance and return" must have been kept open to him for a year, under the law. Now we find that, at the end of the first hearing in the maintenance suit, the trial judge (not the one before whom this case was tried) laid the matter over to give the parties a chance to become reconciled; the evidence, no doubt, suggesting to his mind the propriety and expediency of such a course. We find the plaintiff then resorting, with a surprising though commendable persistency, to all the known modes of effecting a reconciliation. The most that may be said against his sincerity in these subsequent attempts is that he kept copies of the three letters which he wrote. As to the offers contained in these, it may be said that he wished to preserve evidence of them for use in the then pending litigation. This was not conclusive that they were insincere, though it was a circumstance pointing in that direction. It well may be that he made the offers in good faith, intending to perform them if accepted, though at the same time desiring to place himself in the right, in case she refused, by preserving evidence of his offers. The defendant was not advised that he kept copies, so his action in doing so could have had no effect on her, and was not calculated to influence her to reject them. The trouble with his previous offers had been that they were made under circumstances not calculated to lead to their acceptance. Not so with those embodied in these letters. The letters are framed in the language of entreaty and persuasion and, considered as offers of reconciliation, appear to be unexceptionable. To communicate with her by letter was not improper. Indeed, that method of communication is much to be commended, because it gave him an opportunity to express himself calmly and deliberately and gave her an opportunity to consider his offer, without the embarrassment and possibility of renewing the old quarrel, which might attend a personal visit. We are not inclined to view the offers contained in these letters as being insincere, and are fortified in that view by the evidence of the other offers which he made. His persistent following up of those letters with personal visits dispels any doubt in our minds of the sincerity of the offers they contained. The offer which plaintiff made through defendant's uncle was, it is true, made through a third person, who might be, and in fact was, used as a witness; but he was so friendly and close to defendant that it is improbable that plaintiff would have chosen him as a vehicle through which to convey a fraudulent and insincere offer of reconciliation. To communicate with her through her near and friendly relative was certainly unobjectionable and was calculated to conciliate.

The other offers which plaintiff made personally are not subject to the objection that he preserved evidence of them. Defendant herself testified that on November 5, 1910, "he had been coming down there for months for me to go home with him"; that is, since June. He had no witness on those occasions and did not try to have any. He made those offers privately, and nothing is suggested which affects their sincerity. It is the same with the post cards, which, though not offers, tended in that direction. He kept no copies of them. As we have already intimated, the very number of offers which this plaintiff made after the first hearing in the maintenance suit impresses us with their sincerity. Plaintiff forcefully exclaimed in his examination in the maintenance suit, "Do you suppose I would have gone down after this woman as many times as I have and talked to her the way I have and not take her back; would you have gone after anybody as many times as I have and her sit there and say, no, no, every time; would you have gone back like I have if you wasn't sincere? No, you wouldn't, and no other man." This expresses our impression exactly. It is inconceivable that, if he was then intending formal insincere offers to take her back, the man would have so persisted, and would have resorted to so much repetition. It is possible that the cause immediately moving plaintiff to endeavor to effect a reconciliation was the pendency of the suit for separate maintenance and the desire on his part to avoid a judgment coercing from him performance of the duty to support his wife. That does not diminish the legal effect of his offers to take his wife back, if he made them with the purpose of having her accept them if she would, and with intent, if she accepted, to take her back and treat her with kindness and respect and to perform his marital obligations. "No higher motives than those of convenience, it unfortunately must be allowed, have both induced and preserved multitudes of matrimonial unions." McMullin v. McMullin, 123 Cal. 653, 656, 56 Pac. 554, 555. In this case, as we have already indicated, we are satisfied that his offers were sincere, at least in the sense just mentioned, though by no means do we believe that that was the only sense in which he was sincere.

[4] As to the alleged incident of November 5, 1910, when she says she offered to go back to him and he refused, nothing but a fragment of it is disclosed, if we observe the rule by which the case was tried. It is improper to consider that mere fragment without the explanatory matter which preceded, or to consider the explanatory matter now when the parties treated it as inadmissible at the trial. However, if we consider her version of the whole incident, what does it amount to? Almost on the eve of the resumption of the trial of the maintenance suit, at 9:30 o'clock at night, after refusing for months to go back to him, she suddenly offers to do so. After expressing some curiosity at her sudden change of front, but willingness to receive her, he asks if she will promise to clear the record of the maintenance suit, that suit in which they had already undergone one long hotly contested trial and were immediately threatened with another; in which her attorneys had a motion then pending for $750 attorney's fees additional to the $150 they had already received, and she was demanding an allowance for separate maintenance. She refused to promise to dismiss the suit, and he refused to take her back until she would promise to do so. She now claims that she "owed the man no promise." We are of the opinion that she did. By her constant refusals to go back to him she had by this time put herself in the attitude of the wrongful absentee, and it was incumbent upon her now to make a proper and sincere offer, and an offer coupled with a refusal to abandon the litigation and to live in peace with him was not sufficient. Jenkins v. Jenkins, 104 Ill. 134. And plaintiff's many previous offers to take her back are not to be stamped with insincerity because, when she finally consented, he insisted that she dismiss the litigation and live with him in peace. It was not improper that he should wish to get at least her promise to abandon the litigation against him before undertaking the difficult matter of taking up their lives together again. Offering peace, he was entitled to a promise of peace, and she is mistaken when she says that "she owed the man no promise." It is to be noted that he did not purpose to delay her coming back until the suit was dismissed, but was willing that she should come back then, though it was late at night, upon her mere promise to later abandon the litigation. It appearing then that this husband repented and made a genuine offer to return and renew cohabitation before the statutory period of desertion was complete, this was sufficient to break the desertion and is a bar to the wife's suit.

Defendant here suggests that at the trial of the maintenance suit the husband refused to tell his wife's counsel what he would do in the matter of taking his wife back, saying, in substance, "that is a question for the future." We passed on that feature of the case in the maintenance suit, resolving that such answer on the part of the husband was more probably due to the fact that he had become aggravated and wroth at plaintiff's counsel and resented the manner of his cross-examination, rather than to a real indisposition to resume his marital relations, especially in view of his testimony as to his endeavors to make up with his wife and his declarations in the prior part of his testimony. Creasey v. Creasey, 151 S. W. 215. We see no reason for departing from the conclusion then formed. In fact, we are strengthened in it by the showing here that, immediately after the maintenance suit was finally determined in the husband's favor, he thrice attempted to resume negotiations with his wife.

[5] As to her alleged offers contained in the motions for attorney's fees, filed in the maintenance suit, they were not made as offers, but as excuses for demanding money, and were calculated to irritate without disclosing any conciliatory tendency. They should be disregarded. In saying this we do not mean to reflect upon the merits of those demands, nor to impugn the motives of the plaintiff or her attorneys in making them.

[6-8] The second reason which we have given for denying defendant a divorce is that subsequently to the original separation and within one year thereafter she showed by her conduct that she acquiesced in the separation. Although the husband's leaving was wrongful in the first instance, it did not constitute desertion within the meaning of this statute, if the wife by her subsequent words or conduct acquiesced in the separation. 1 Nelson on Divorce & Separation, § 91; Davis v. Davis, 60 Mo. App. 545; Droege v. Droege, 55 Mo. App. 481, 486. On the occasion of her husband's first offer in the presence of Mrs. Tucker we find defendant coldly inquiring what he will give her to come back and greeting with a scornful, "Oh, is that all?" his reference to himself. She further told him on that occasion and in the same connection that should she come back to him he would have to meet conditions "you don't think you will have to meet." In her answer in the maintenance suit she is not content with refusing his offer on the ground of insincerity, but goes further, and says in response to it that "there is such an incompatibility in the temperament, disposition, and purpose in life between the plaintiff and defendant that a renewal of the marriage relationship would result in a repetition of the same or similar indignities stated in the plaintiff's (her) petition." It thus appears that, while he was insincere in these two offers of reconciliation and may be taken to have desired the separation to continue, she too desired it to continue. Where the separation is acquiesced in by both, neither is entitled to a divorce on account of it. When her uncle came avowedly from her husband with a request for her to return, she answered that "not yet, she couldn't." He asked her why, and she said: "You don't know all. He has even had men to watch my house." Her letter to him disclosed the same inclination to bring up and dwell on his conduct before the separation as a reason for not going back to him. If we take her at her own word, it is clear that she was unwilling to go back to him because of his conduct before the separation. As that conduct was not sufficient to constitute cause for divorce, she could not, by remaining away in consequence thereof, "create for herself a cause for divorce, upon the theory that, by so electing to remain away from her husband, he incurs the guilt of deserting her. If the indignities themselves are not a sufficient cause for divorce, a new cause for divorce cannot be extracted from them by the voluntary conduct of the party seeking the divorce." Dwyer v. Dwyer, 18 Mo. App. 422. Her subsequent failure to go back, in the face of his personal appeals to her to do so, but emphasizes what had already been disclosed, that she was at least as eager to remain away from him as he was to remain away from her. She may have refused his first offers because she did not believe him sincere, but clearly that was not the only reason. The other reason, we are convinced, is that she did not desire to go back.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the circuit court to enter its judgment that the plaintiff take nothing by his petition and that the defendant take nothing by her answer, the defendant, however, to have and recover her costs in this behalf expended. The matter of an allowance to defendant for attorney's fees for services here and in the circuit court we leave to the circuit court.

LEDBETTER v. CITY OF KIRKSVILLE.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 25, 1912.)

1. TRIAL (§ 203*)—INSTRUCTIONS—COMMENT ON ISSUES.

In an action against a city for damages for personal injuries sustained by a fall caused by a defective crossing, an instruction that defendant claims in her petition that the sidewalk was a public sidewalk, and that, while she was walking on it at night, she fell and sustained permanent injuries because certain planks had been allowed to become and remain in a loose and dangerous condition, is not erroneous as a comment on what plaintiff claimed in her petition, but is a mere statement of the basis of plaintiff's claims for recovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 477-479; Dec. Dig. § 203.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 822*) — STREETS—ACTIONS FOR INJURIES—PRESUMPTION.

As it is presumed that a traveler along a city street has exercised ordinary care to protect himself from injury, and this presumption continues until the contrary is shown, an instruction, in an action against a city for damages for personal injuries caused by a defective sidewalk, that the city has entire control of the streets and is bound to exercise ordinary care to render them reasonably safe for all persons is not erroneous as in effect charging that the city is liable despite the contributory negligence of the traveler.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1758-1762; Dec. Dig. § 822.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1066*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTION.

In an action against a city for personal injuries caused by a defective sidewalk, where there was no evidence of any contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, an instruction that the city was bound to use ordinary care to keep its streets in a reasonably safe condition was harmless, though conveying the impression that the city was liable regardless of the negligence of plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4220; Dec. Dig. § 1066.*]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 818*) — STREETS—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

Municipal corporations being under the absolute duty of using reasonable care to maintain their sidewalks in good and safe repair so as to render them reasonably safe for travelers, evidence of the financial ability of the city to meet all of its obligations and duties as a corporation is inadmissible in an action for personal injuries caused by defective sidewalk, being immaterial and irrelevant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1726-1738; Dec. Dig. § 818.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Adair County; Nat. M. Shelton, Judge.

Action by Jacey E. Ledbetter against the City of Kirksville. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. Doneghy, of Kirksville, for appellant. Campbell & Ellison and Chas. E. Murrell, all of Kirksville, for respondent.

BROADDUS, P. J. This is an action for damages against the city of Kirksville, a city of the third class, caused by plaintiff falling through a defective culvert over a street crossing, whereby she was severely injured. The culvert was about four feet long and about the same width, and was a part of the crossing and connected the sidewalk on the west side of Sixth street with the brick part of the street crossing at the intersection of Filmore and said Sixth street. Sixth street runs north and south and is crossed by Filmore street, which runs east and west. The evidence showed that the crossing was constructed of boards and had been out of repair a sufficient length of time to charge the city with notice of its condition. The injury occurred on a very dark night, and there were no street lights. The plaintiff was on her way home from a visit, and, when she reached Sixth street, she thought she had arrived at Osteopathy avenue, the street upon which she lived, and the one she intended to take on her way home. She turned south on the west side of Sixth street, and had only gone a short distance when she discovered that she was on the wrong street, and, instead of retracing her steps and getting onto Osteopathy avenue, she groped her way along the west side of Sixth street until she came to said crossing, where she was injured. She was familiar with the east side of Sixth street where the walk was reasonably safe, but it was not shown that she was familiar with the condition of the walk on the west side. Plaintiff, at the time she was injured, was walking along with her two little girls, one on each side. For the alleged purpose of showing ordinary care upon the part of defendant, the city offered evidence showing the number of such crossings to be maintained, the number of officers to be paid, and the amount of taxation of all kinds which it could levy to meet its duties. The court refused to admit the proposed evidence. The defendant denied that it was negligent and alleged that plaintiff's injuries were the result of her own negligence. The plaintiff recovered judgment for the sum of $1,500. The defendant appealed.

[1] It is claimed that the giving of instruction No. 1 on the part of plaintiff was prejudicial error. It reads as follows: "Plaintiff in her petition claims that the sidewalk on the west side of Sixth street, at the intersection of Filmore street, in the city of Kirksville, was a public sidewalk, and that while she was walking along said sidewalk, at said intersection, on the night of August 8, 1910, she fell on said sidewalk and sustained serious and permanent injuries on account of certain planks in said walk, over a gutter, being negligently allowed to become and remain in a loose and dangerous condition, so as not to be reasonably safe for walking over the same. You are instructed that the defendant city has the entire control of the streets and sidewalks within its corporate limits, and is bound to use ordinary care and diligence to keep and maintain its sidewalks in reasonably good and safe repair, so as to render them reasonably safe for all persons passing on or over them by day or night. Therefore, if you believe from the evidence that a part of said sidewalk consisted of boards or planks laid lengthwise over a gutter at the intersection of said streets, and that the defendant city negligently permitted said boards or planks to become and remain in a loose, dangerous, or unsafe condition for persons traveling over said walk, either by night or day, in that said planks or boards, composing a part of said walk over a ditch or gutter, had become rotten and decayed, and the nails holding said planks in position had become loosened and removed, so that said planks had become, and were permitted to remain, rotten and loosened and insecure, or that some of said planks had been and were pushed out of place, leaving holes in said sidewalk over said gutter, and that said planks, or such of them as remained in position, were loose or rotten and insecure, so that, by reason of such condition of said planks or boards, they were liable to turn and give way when stepped on by a person walking along said sidewalk, and that said condition was known to, or could have been known by, defendant as defined in these instructions, and that by reason of such conditions, if you find from the evidence they existed, said sidewalk at said place was not reasonably safe, and that said walk at the place was a public sidewalk of said city, and that plaintiff on the night of August 8, 1910, while walking over said sidewalk at said place, stepped upon said boards, and by reason of said boards being in such condition, if you find they were, she was caused to fall, and sustained personal injuries thereby, then your verdict should be for the plaintiff, unless you further find and believe from the evidence that the plaintiff was herself guilty of negligence directly contributing to her injury. The burden of proving such contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff is on the defendant."

The first paragraph of the instruction is objected to for the reason that it is a comment on what plaintiff claimed in her petition, and that it restricted the issues of the case. We do not think the recitations in said paragraph amount to a comment on the allegations of the petition, but it appears to be a mere statement of what she claims as a basis for recovery. It was necessary for the jury to know authoritatively what the case was about. There could have been no harm, in order to avoid mistake, for the court to tell the jury what they had to try. It is true the paragraph does not cover all the allegations of negligence contained in the petition and put in issue, but it does cover all that is necessary for plaintiff to recover.

[2] The objection to the second paragraph "is that it imposes a greater burden on the city than the law has cast, as it told the jury that it was the duty of the city to use ordinary care to keep its sidewalks reasonably safe for all persons passing on or over the sidewalk, whether they were traveling in the ordinary way or not, and whether or not they were in the exercise of ordinary care." As a matter of course, the city should not be held for negligence if the street was reasonably safe for persons passing over it while in the exercise of reasonable care, for the city was not bound to guard against the acts of careless persons who might be on its streets. But the law does not presume that a person passing along a street is careless, but, on the contrary, the presumption is that he will exercise ordinary care to protect himself from injury, and this presumption continues until the contrary is shown.

[3] As we view the testimony, there was no evidence that the plaintiff was guilty of any negligence whatever. It was not, therefore, necessary to submit the question of whether or not plaintiff was in the exercise of ordinary care at the time of her injury. Yet the instruction did submit to the jury the question whether or not plaintiff was guilty of any negligence that contributed to her injury. Upon the whole, defendant could not have been injured by any defect of the instruction.

[4] The question is raised as to whether it was competent for the city to show the extent of its financial ability to meet all of its duties and obligations as a corporation, and whether the same has anything to do with the degree of care it owed to the public with reference to the condition of its streets. So far as we are informed, the question has not before this instance been before the courts of this state. In the state of Massachusetts, the court has passed on the question and holds that: "In an action against a town for personal injuries caused by an alleged defect in a public way, evidence of the population of the town, the assessed valuation of the property therein, the rate of taxation, and the amount of the appropriation for highways, all in the year preceding that of the accident, and the number of miles of public ways therein, is competent on the question of reasonable care and diligence on the part of the town in preventing or remedying the alleged defect; its weight is for the jury in connection with all other circumstances." Weeks v. Inhabitants of Needham, 156 Mass. 289, 31 N. E. 8. See, also, Sanders v. Palmer, 154 Mass. 475, 28 N. E. 778; Rooney v. Randolph, 128 Mass. 580. The reason given for the ruling is peculiar to that state. A statute provides "that towns shall be liable for personal injury or damage to property caused by defects in a highway 'which might have been remedied, or which damage or injury might have been prevented by reasonable care and diligence on the part of the county, town, place or persons obliged by law to repair the same.'" The court holds that the statute "is a limitation on the former liability of towns, and it is now necessary, not only that the defect should have existed which was the sole cause of plaintiff's injury, but that such defect be one which might have been remedied by reasonable care and diligence on the part of the town." And that: "It is the intention of the statute to protect towns from liability where there has been no lack of proper diligence on their part, and in determining that it is important to know what was done, as well as the cost of what it is contended should have been done, to keep the way in a suitable state of repair." Rooney v. Randolph, 128 Mass. 580.

In this state it is the absolute duty of a municipality to keep its streets in a reasonably safe condition for travel at all times and under all conditions, save and except for a reasonable time for repairing defects or for removing necessary temporary obstructions or those caused by the act of God. It would require legislation to put our streets on the same plane as those in the state of Massachusetts. The question would be one of expediency for the Legislature.

Finding no error in the record, the cause is affirmed. All concur.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 11, 1912. Rehearing Denied Dec. 9, 1912.)

MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 78*)—EMPLOYEES' INSURANCE ASSOCIATION—LIABILITY OF EMPLOYER—PETITION.

Where an employer and its employees devised a scheme of insurance for the employees by deducting a part of their wages for the payment of sick and death benefits, and providing for trustees of the funds with power to authorize the employer to handle the funds and guarantee the payment of benefits, and with power to appoint a manager, the employer, under the arrangement, being bound to pay out of the funds only on the order of the trustees or the manager, was not liable in equity for sick or death benefits until the trustees or manager ordered payment thereof, and a petition for benefits claimed for injury to an employé was demurrable in the absence of any allegation that such order had been made, or of facts making it the duty of the trustees or the manager to adjust the claim and order payment.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Buchanan County; Wm. D. Rusk, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Legg against Swift & Co. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the petition, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Fulkerson & Fulkerson and R. S. Newcomer, all of St. Joseph, for appellant. R. A. Brown, of St. Joseph, for respondent.

ELLISON, J. Plaintiff's deceased husband was in the employ of defendant, who conducts large beef packing establishments in several cities. Her husband took out a benefit certificate of insurance against disability from accidents and for the payment of a sum of money if an accident resulted in death. He was injured by the carcass of a beef falling upon him, and in about two years died from the injury. Suit was instituted by a bill in equity. Defendant demurred to the petition as not stating a cause of action and the trial court sustained the demurrer. Plaintiff declined to amend and appealed.

It appears that a scheme of insurance for its employes was devised by defendant, its officers and employes generally, whereby defendant would deduct a certain amount from the weekly wage of the employe; the amount depending upon the class. The scheme was embodied in a deed of trust and an agreement, both of which are pleaded. The deed of trust is quite lengthy in detail, all of which need not be referred to. The parties of the first part are some 15 persons; and the parties of the second part are 5 persons, and it is recited that the parties of the first part are desirous of providing for themselves, and such other persons who shall come in under the deed, "benefits in case of sickness, accidents or death, and for that purpose are desirous of providing for the safe-keeping and management of all funds that may be obtained or contributed for that purpose." It then recites that the parties of the first part have requested the parties of the second part "to act as first trustees of the said funds," and that they have agreed to do so; and that the funds shall consist of contributions from members and interest thereon. It is then recited that the conduct of the business of the association shall be by an advisory committee of 15 members, who shall determine the requirement necessary for membership, fix the classes, and determine the amount of contributions and benefits. It is then recited that "the trustees of the association" (who are parties of the second part in the deed of trust) shall appoint a manager who shall have charge of all the business pertaining to the association and they shall also appoint a medical director. It is then provided that the trustees have full power and authority over all funds belonging to the association, without incurring any personal liability; and they are given authority to enter into an agreement with Swift & Co. (defendant) providing for the handling of all funds by that company, who are to pay interest thereon at 5 per cent. on all monthly balances, and are to "provide for the expenses of operating the association," and "guarantee the payment of all benefits as provided by the rules." The petition then alleges that by the aforesaid authority in the deed of trust the trustees therein named executed the agreement contemplated by the deed. The agreement is then set out, whereby it appears that Swift & Co. (this defendant) are to deduct from the pay rolls, out of wages due its employes who are members of the association, the requisite amounts from time to time for the purpose of making the contribution required by the rules, which they are to hold under the provisions of the agreement, and are to pay out of such funds the association liabilities upon the order of the trustees or the manager of the association. They likewise agree to pay interest and provide for the operating expenses and to make good any deficiency of funds to meet obligations to members.

There has been much said in the briefs about the law of trusts and trustees, which we need not discuss. It seems clear the trial court was right in sustaining the demurrer. Swift & Co., the only party proceeded against by plaintiff, are not shown to be in default by the allegations of the petition. They are shown to be mere custodians of the fund for payment of such claims against the association as may come into existence by reason of a member getting hurt, or becoming sick, or dying. It clearly appears, as we have already stated, that the conduct of the business of the association is to be with the advisory committee which determines the amount of contributions, how collected, and the amount of benefits, and the trustees, into whose hands is lodged full power over the funds of the association with a duty of appointing a manager and medical director. Such manager is shown to have immediate management of the business; and the medical director decides when a member is disabled and when ready for work, reports the condition of the sick, etc. All that part of the association's business which relates to matters of admission of members, which passes upon the justness or propriety or legality of claims, are matters with which defendant has nothing to do. In short, defendant has no concern in any part of the grievances set forth by plaintiff. Defendant's duty, as shown by the pleading, is "to pay out of the funds the benefits required to be paid by the association, upon the order of said trustees or the manager of the association," under the rules of the association.

The sole conditions which would cast a duty upon defendant and upon which a liability would arise are not stated. Nor is there any excuse alleged. There is no allegation of facts which would have made it the duty of the trustees or manager to order defendant to pay deceased, or plaintiff since his death. Nor is there anything alleged which would show that it became the duty of those officers whose acts preceded the duties of the trustees or manager. It is alleged that deceased presented himself to the medical examiner for examination and that he made claim for accident benefits; but it is not alleged that he was examined or was refused examination, or that he demanded an order on defendant for the money due him. It is alleged that proofs of death were made, but mere proof of death would not cast a duty upon defendant.

The whole amount claimed by plaintiff is $1,424. Of this sum $624 is for "accident benefits," accruing between the injury and the death two years afterwards, and yet there is no statement particularizing this. Indeed, the whole idea of plaintiff, as is clearly to be inferred from the petition, is to throw upon defendant the burden of defending an unascertained claim, when its only duty is the ministerial act of paying out funds upon order of the association with which deceased had his contract.

We do not see why the mere stating of her complaint as in equity (in the circumstances here shown) should allow plaintiff any more privileges or relieve her of any of the necessities of stating a case than if the action had been at law. Nor do we see that plaintiff's petition is aided by the authorities cited. This defendant has not been guilty of a breach of trust. If deceased took such steps as to cause his claim for benefits to be adjusted and audited by the proper officers under the rules of the association, then it became the duty of the trustees or the manager to order its payment by defendant. So if plaintiff, after deceased's death, so far complied with the rules of the association as to entitle her to the sum for which the certificate of insurance called in case of death, it became the duty of those officers to order defendant to pay it. Hammerstein v. Parsons, 38 Mo. App. 332, 338. Otherwise it was not.

It seems to us the vital interest which the petition discloses that other parties have, and the predicament in which this defendant would be, as relating to those interests, have not been fully appreciated by plaintiff, as is evidenced by instituting her action against defendant alone. There are trustees of the fund, who are in control of it for the benefit of scores of others insured as deceased was. They are not made parties to this action and would not be bound by it. If plaintiff may proceed against this defendant alone, so may every other insured, and thus a hazard be put upon defendant which neither equity nor law will justify. Defendant has not been vested with any title to the fund by the deed of trust, the agreement, or the rules; its duty being, as already stated, merely to pay out the fund upon the presentation of a proper order. Leyden v. Owen, 150 Mo. App. 102, 129 S. W. 984.

The judgment should be affirmed. All concur.

A reviewing court is concluded by a determination of a jury upon a debatable issue of fact.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 768*)—INJURIES TO PEDESTRIANS—CARE REQUIRED.

A city engaged in carrying dangerous currents of electricity over public streets owes no duty to persons on the streets as an insurer, but must exercise the highest degree of care to safeguard them and their property against vagrant currents escaping from its wires by keeping the same confined to the wires, and by exercising reasonable care to discover the escape of a current, and to use reasonable dispatch in relieving the danger.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 768*)—INJURIES—HIGH CURRENT WIRES—LACK OF INSULATION—SLEET STORM.

Where a city operating electric light wires carrying dangerous current knew that its wires were located beneath telephone wires, and permitted one of such wires to remain uninsulated at a point where it was spliced, it must be charged with knowledge that such telephone wires might break in a severe sleet storm and was guilty of negligence which would charge it with the death of a horse killed by stepping on a telephone wire which broke during such a storm and fell across the uninsulated wire.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Randolph County; A. H. Waller, Judge.

Action by M. S. Wilhite against the City of Huntsville. From a judgment for plaintiff on a demurrer to evidence, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. J. Howard, of Moberly, for appellant. Aubrey R. Hammett, of Huntsville, for respondent.

JOHNSON, J. Plaintiff sued the city of Huntsville, a city of the third class, to recover damages for the loss of a horse which he alleges was killed by the negligence of defendant. The cause is before us on the appeal of defendant from a judgment recovered by plaintiff in the circuit court.

The horse was killed about 5:30 a. m. January 14, 1911, while being driven into a public street in Huntsville from a livery barn owned and operated by plaintiff in that city. A pole line carrying both telephone and electric light wires ran along the street in front of the barn, and the entrance to the barn was about midway in the space between two of the poles. The telephone wires were a part of a telephone system operated by a private corporation, and the electric light wires were owned and operated by defendant as a part of its municipal lighting system. The telephone wires were about seven feet above the electric light wires, and, being employed to carry only low and harmless currents of electricity, were uninsulated. The electric light wires carried a high and deadly current, and were insulated.

Some time before the night in question, one of these wires had been spliced at a point almost opposite the west side of the entrance to the barn, and there was no insulation on the wire in a space of four or five inches at the place of the splice. It is a fair conclusion from the fact and circumstances detailed in the evidence of plaintiff that the place had existed from the time of the splicing of the wire by defendant until the time of the injury. A heavy rain and sleet storm raged throughout the night of the injury, and incrustated telephone and electric light wires with a thick, heavy coating of ice. One of the telephone wires in front of the barn broke under its burden of ice, and one of its ends fell to the street in front of the barn. The wire crossed the electric light wire we have described and remained in contact with that wire at the place where there was no insulation, with the result that the electric light current was short-circuited by the broken and hanging telephone wire, and was grounded at a point nearly opposite the west side of the barn entrance. The breaking of the telephone wire occurred during the storm, and the presence of the loose wire in the street was first observed by a pedestrian about three hours before the injury. It appears that the agents and servants of defendant made no effort during the night to discover and repair dangerous defects caused by the storm, which was very severe and of a nature especially harmful to overhead wires; and, further, the evidence discloses that defendant had not equipped its power house with appliances commonly installed and used in such plants for detecting short circuits and material losses of electricity. A servant of plaintiff, who drove the horse out of the barn, had been warned by another servant to look out for a sagging wire to the right of the entrance and, heeding the warning, turned the horse to the left on emerging from the door. The night was very dark, and the driver could not see the fallen wire. The horse stepped on it with one of his forefeet and received a shock that threw him down. Defendant endeavored to show that the wire became wrapped around the horse's leg, and that the struggles of the animal were sufficient to tear off the insulation of the electric light wire at the place of contact between the two wires; but the witnesses for plaintiff say that the horse did not struggle, and was killed almost instantly.

[1] As we view the evidence, the issue of whether the insulation was removed from the place of the splice in the wire at the time the wire was strung or last repaired by defendant, or was removed by the chafing of the telephone wire, caused by the death struggles of the horse, is a debatable issue of fact, the solution of which was properly left to the jury; and in passing on the demurrer to the evidence we shall adopt the conclusion that the servants of defendant who spliced the wire left it bare of insulation at that place.

The petition alleges three grounds of negligence, viz.: First, the failure of defendant to maintain insulation on the electric light wire at the place described; second, the failure of the servants of defendant to exercise proper care in the inspection of the system during the night of the storm to discover dangerous defects in its lines produced by the storm, and to protect persons and domestic animals rightfully on the public streets from their injurious consequences; and, third, the failure of defendant to equip its plant with appliances for detecting the existence of short circuits and truant currents. The answer traverses the several charges of negligence and pleads contributory negligence on the part of the driver of the horse.

[2] The only questions before us of serious moment are those arising from the demurrer to the evidence, which defendant argues should have been given. Defendant, in the prosecution of its business of carrying high and dangerous currents of electricity over the public streets, was not an insurer of the safety of persons lawfully using the streets, but owed them the duty of the exercise of the highest degree of care to safeguard them and their property against the assaults of vagrant currents escaping from its wires. This duty may be said to be composed of two main ingredients: First, care in keeping a force so subtle and dangerous confined to its prescribed course; and, second, reasonable care, which in such business means the highest care, to discover, as quickly as the circumstances of the given case will permit, the escape of a deadly current from captivity, and to move with reasonable diligence in the performance of the task of reducing the escaped foe to harmlessness, in order that the safety of the innocent wayfarer and his beast may not be imperiled. Geismann v. Electric Co., 173 Mo. 654, 73 S. W. 654; Winkelman v. Light Co., 110 Mo. App. 184, 85 S. W. 99; Brown v. Light Co., 137 Mo. App. 718, 109 S. W. 1032; Goodwin v. Telephone Co., 157 Mo. App. 596, 138 S. W. 940; Freeman v. Telephone Co., 160 Mo. App. 271, 142 S. W. 733.

[3] In the exercise of the degree of care imposed on it by the rules just mentioned, defendant, in the construction and maintenance of its lines, was bound to anticipate the probable results of severe storms, and to employ reasonable prudence and foresight to guard against the dangerous possibilities of such storms. "Liability for negligence is measured by the consequences that could reasonably be anticipated to follow from the negligent act." Strack v. Telephone Co., 216 Mo. 601, 116 S. W. 526. Knowing that telephone wires were strung on the pole line above its own high-power wires, and that such wires were likely to break under the strain and stress of a severe sleet storm, defendant should have anticipated the falling and grounding of a telephone wire across and in contact with its own wires as a natural result of a storm of such character, and was negligent in leaving an uninsulated place in its wire which, if brought into contact with a grounded telephone wire, would short circuit the high-power current and carry it to the public street to menace the safety of people and domestic animals lawfully upon the street. The suggestion that, owing to the icy condition of the wires and the ground, insulation would not have prevented the escape of electricity through the grounded telephone wire cannot be allowed to excuse defendant, as a matter of law, from liability for the injury. That argument and the evidence on which it is based relates to the subject of proximate cause, and merely raises an issue of fact with the evidence of plaintiff, which tends to show that the injury could not and would not have occurred had defendant's wire been properly insulated at the point of contact with the telephone wire. The jury were entitled to infer that the negligence of defendant in maintaining an uninsulated wire was the proximate cause of the injury.

These considerations compel the conclusion that the learned trial judge did not err in overruling the demurrer to the evidence; and we do not deem it necessary to discuss the remaining grounds of negligence on which, in his petition, plaintiff bases a right to recover. We find the issues were fairly tried and submitted to the jury, and accordingly the judgment is affirmed. All concur.

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 803*)—INJURY TO PEDESTRIAN—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

No one saw decedent, a boy 19 years of age, when he fell over an embankment in a street into a ravine. Decedent had known the street and ravine since childhood, and the action occurred in the daytime; and there was nothing to indicate that he stumbled and fell, and nothing to show that he may have run over the embankment to escape some other danger. Held, that decedent was guilty of contributory negligence, since he must have walked over the embankment without noting his surroundings, or lost his balance while doing something else.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Buchanan County; Wm. D. Rusk, Judge.

Action by Nicholas Brady and others against the City of St. Joseph. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed.

W. B. Norris, O. E. Shultz, and Phil. A. Slattery, all of St. Joseph, for appellant. C. W. Meyer, of St. Joseph, for respondent.

ELLISON, J. Plaintiffs' action is to recover damages resulting to them from the death of their son, occasioned, as they allege, by the negligence of the city. The judgment in the trial court was for plaintiffs.

[1] It appears from the evidence that for a number of years, near where plaintiffs resided in the limits of the defendant city, a deep ditch or ravine, with steep banks, ran a short part of its course in one of defendant's streets. A roadway likewise ran in the street, at one place in a few feet, and others 20 or more feet, away from the ravine. There is considerable evidence as to just how the ravine ran and where the deceased was found, where his hat was discovered, etc. But for our purposes it may be conceded that deceased went over the embankment at a place within the limits of the street, and was thereby killed. No one saw him as he went over. The last seen of him was just before reaching the place, when he was proceeding on his way to perform some service for his mother. He was found dead at the bottom of the ravine, with his head and, perhaps, his shoulders under water.

Deceased was 19 years old, and had known this street and ravine since early childhood. The time of the accident was in the afternoon, in June, in full daylight. There were no obstructions to the foot or the eye. There was nothing to suggest that he stumbled over something in the road and was thereby thrown into the ditch. Nor was there anything occurred whereby he may have run into it in an effort to escape some other danger. Necessarily he must have walked into it while wholly oblivious to his surroundings, or of what he was doing; or else he was attempting, for some reason, to get down the bank and lost his balance. But whatever caused him to get into the place where found, it must have resulted from his contributory negligence.

Woodson v. Street Ry., 224 Mo. 685, 123 S. W. 820, 80 L. R. A. (N. S.) 931, 20 Ann. Cas. 1039; Wheat v. St. Louis, 179 Mo. 572, 78 S. W. 790, 64 L. R. A. 292; Kaiser v. St. Louis, 185 Mo. 366, 84 S. W. 19.

[2] There is no need to urge cases upon our attention where there were things which concealed the danger, or might shut it out of sight. Such cases have no bearing upon the conditions here presented.

In the stress of this situation plaintiffs call upon the ordinary presumption that he was in the exercise of ordinary care for his own safety. But that presumption does not arise. It is crowded out of the case by the fact that he saw the danger, or blindly refused to see. "There can be no presumption of ordinary care in the face of such facts to the contrary and without explanation." Huggart v. Railway Co., 134 Mo. 673, 679, 680, 36 S. W. 220, 221; Hayden v. Railway Co., 124 Mo. 566, 573, 28 S. W. 74.

[3.] The suggestion is made that the deceased had incipient epilepsy. But we need not deal with such solution of the mystery of his action; for it was not pleaded (Woodson v. Street Ry., supra), and, in addition, was abandoned by not having been mentioned in instructions offered by plaintiffs.

Plaintiffs' case being without legal support, the judgment must be reversed. All concur.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Adair County; Nat M. Shelton, Judge.

Replevin by the Advance Thresher Company against Albert Speak and others, with counterclaim by defendants. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and cause remanded.

Fugate & Son, of Novinger, and Campbell & Ellison, of Kirksville, for appellant. Smoot & Cooley and J. E. Rieger, all of Kirksville, for respondents.

ELLISON, J. Plaintiff's action is replevin, whereby it seeks to recover a lot of personal property. Defendants had judgment in the circuit court. Plaintiff appealed.

[1] There is no bill of exceptions, and we have only to ascertain whether the record proper discloses any legal cause for our interference.

The petition, answer, reply, verdict, and judgment, composing the record proper, are set out in the transcript, and we will confine our investigation to these. The petition is in replevin, and plaintiff seeks to recover from defendants' possession 13 head of live stock, a wagon, harness, and one "Advance 26 horse power steam engine with hose," with all appliances for plowing and harrowing, all of the value of $1,040. Damages for the detention of the property, in the sum of $500, is also claimed.

The answer is a general denial and a counterclaim. In setting forth the ground of the counterclaim, defendants have stated the cause of the controversy. It appears that defendants bought, at the price of $2,000, the steam engine of plaintiff largely on credit, executing their notes for the purchase money, and giving a chattel mortgage on the engine and the other property to secure their payment; that when they came to work it they found it would not do practical plowing, and was not worth to exceed $700. It is alleged in the answer that defendants had contracted for breaking sod for others, whereby they could have made a profit of $800, and that they could not do the work on account of the engine not working. It is also alleged that of the personal property mortgaged to plaintiff the sheriff took, by the replevin writ, the engine and two of the horses, valued at $200, and turned them over to plaintiff. Payments on the notes, aggregating $858, are alleged. Finally, it is alleged that defendants "are otherwise damaged in the sum of $500." The prayer of the answer is that the court order a return of the property; that defendants' damages be ascertained; and that their notes be ordered surrendered.

The verdict was as follows: "We, the jury, find for the defendants and assess the amount due them at $735." The judgment following the verdict, as set out in the record, was: "It is therefore considered and adjudged by the court that the defendants have and recover of and from the plaintiff the said sum of seven hundred thirty-five dollars ($735) so found and assessed by the jury to be due them, together with costs in this behalf laid out and expended taxed at _____ dollars ($_____), and that they have execution therefor."

[2] As we have stated, we have no guide as to what transpired in the trial court, except what is shown by the record proper, which includes the verdict and judgment. Bateson v. Clark, 37 Mo. 31; Lilly v. Menke, 126 Mo. 190, 212, 28 S. W. 643, 994.

[3] As we understand defendants' position, it is not claimed that the verdict is regular or proper, but that, plaintiff having failed to complain by filing a motion in arrest, it cannot now be noticed on appeal. The rule that all matters constituting the record proper may be examined by an appellate court, notwithstanding there is no bill of exceptions including a motion in arrest, has been so far modified as to require a motion in arrest for all immaterial errors not of a serious or fatal character. But, unless the errors complained of are formal, minor, or immaterial, they will be examined on appeal, though there is neither a motion nor bill of exceptions. Sweet v. Maupin, 65 Mo. 65; McIntire v. McIntire, 80 Mo. 470, 473; State ex rel. v. Scott, 104 Mo. 26, 31, 15 S. W. 987, 17 S. W. 11; Land Co. v. Bretz, 125 Mo. 418, 423, 28 S. W. 656; State ex rel. v. Carroll, 101 Mo. App. 110, 74 S. W. 468; Nichols v. Lead & Zinc Co., 85 Mo. App. 584; Bank v. McMullen, 85 Mo. App. 142.

[4, 5] It follows that, if the errors in the verdict and judgment in controversy are of a material or fatal character, plaintiff is entitled to a reversal, notwithstanding there was no motion or bill of exceptions. It is said, in Roden v. Helm, 192 Mo. 71, 93,

90 S. W. 798, 805, a case without a bill of exceptions: "That judgments and decrees must be responsive to the pleadings in this state is no longer an open question." In Schneider v. Patton, 175 Mo. 684, 723, 75 S. W. 155, 166, it is said that "no principle is better settled than that, unless a judgment is responsive to the issues presented in the pleadings, it is erroneous." And in State v. Modlin, 197 Mo. 376, 379, 95 S. W. 345, 346, that in considering the sufficiency of a verdict "it must be borne in mind that it is well-settled law in Missouri that if the verdict, which is a part of the record, is not responsive to the issue, or is uncertain or indefinite, it is open for review on appeal or writ of error as a part of the record proper." In State v. Rowe, 142 Mo. 439, 442, 44 S. W. 266, it is held that the verdict must be so responsive to the issues as to afford the party protection against the same claim in another action. It is said, in 1 Graham & Waterman on New Trials, 140, that "if the jury find only part of the issue, judgment cannot be entered on the verdict. It is void for the whole, and a venire de novo will be awarded." The authors then add a quotation from Lord Coke, that "a verdict that finds part of the issue, and finding nothing for the residue, this is insufficient for the whole, because they have not tried the whole issue wherewith they are charged. As if an information of intrusion be brought against one, for intruding into a messuage and one hundred acres of land, upon the general issue, the jury find against the defendant for the land, but say nothing for the house, this is insufficient for the whole, and so was it twice adjudged." Alilson v. Darton, 24 Mo. 343; Pratt v. Rogers, 5 Mo. 51; Jones v. Snedecor, 3 Mo. 390; 3 Graham & Waterman on New Trials, 1384, 1390; 2 Thompson on Trials, § 639; Patterson v. United States, 2 Wheat. 221, 4 L. Ed. 224; Lyon, Cobb & Co. v. Stewart & Campbell, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 676.

[6] In view of these authorities, it seems to be clear that the verdict under consideration is materially improper and insufficient. It leaves the case near as much undetermined as before the trial. It, and the judgment following, do not make it known whether the horses and engine, or either of them, which were taken from defendants and delivered to plaintiff by the sheriff, are to be considered the property of plaintiff or defendants. It is not known whether the notes remaining in plaintiff's hands are to be considered as settled, or whether they are still due. The verdict is as though it were given in an action of assumpsit, or for general damages without any complications with other matters. So far as the record before us is concerned, may there not be future litigation over the title to the property? The verdict merely reads that the amount due defendants is $735. Is that found as a general adjustment of all the issues, leaving the property as belonging to plaintiff, or is it for the damages, alone, claimed by defendants, or is it for part recovery back of $858 payments made on the notes?

We have been cited by defendants to several cases in which a reversal of judgments was refused, because the verdict was not materially wrong, and there was no motion in arrest; but none of them approach to the seriousness of this.

The judgment should be reversed and the cause remanded. All concur.

CUMBLE et al. v. ST. LOUIS, I. M. & S. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Oct. 28, 1912.)

1. PLEADING (§ 245*) — AMENDMENTS TO PLEADINGS—DISCRETION OF COURT.

The court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow amendments to the complaint several days after the action was dismissed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 635, 653-675; Dec. Dig. § 245.*]

2. PLEADING (§ 246*)—TRIAL—AMENDMENTS.

The court did not err in refusing to allow an amendment which, in the court's view of the complaint, would have rendered it inconsistent and contradictory.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 676-683; Dec. Dig. § 246.*]

3. PLEADING (§ 218*) — DEMURRER — RULES AND REGULATIONS—HEARING.

Facts alleged must be taken as uncontroverted on demurrer, and it is a question of law whether they are sufficient to show that a provision in a bill of lading is unreasonable, and not an issue for the jury under the act of April 30, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 558, § 3), requiring "the reasonableness or unreasonableness of such rules and regulations to be determined by a jury"; such provision having no application where the facts are undisputed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 549-566; Dec. Dig. § 218.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 159*)—INJURIES TO GOODS—NOTICE.

A provision in a bill of lading of fruit that a written notice of intention to claim damage should be presented to the carrier within 36 hours after notice to the consignee of arrival at the place of delivery is not unreasonable, as it is the consignor's duty to have either the consignee or an agent at the destination to ascertain the condition of the goods.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 668-671, 699-703½, 711-714, 718, 718½; Dec. Dig. § 159.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 159*)—INJURIES TO GOODS—NOTICE OF INTENTION TO CLAIM.

Provisions in a bill of lading requiring a written notice of "intention to claim" damage or written notice "of loss or damage" are not limitations upon or exemptions from liability, but only conditions precedent to recovery, and such notice is not necessary where the carrier has examined and knows the condition of the goods after their arrival at their destination.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 668-671, 699-703½, 711-714, 718, 718½; Dec. Dig. § 159.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Crawford County; Jeptha H. Evans, Judge.

Action by R. C. Cumble and others against the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

This was a suit by the appellants against the appellee to recover damages for loss to a shipment of peaches which appellants allege in their complaint were delivered to the appellee at Greenwood, Ark., for shipment to St. Joseph, Mo., and that, through the negligence of appellee in carrying out its contract (which alleged acts of negligence are specifically set out in the complaint) plaintiffs were damaged, for which the appellants pray judgment. The complaint in the present case is, in all essential particulars except the amendment to paragraph 1, similar to that which was held sufficient in St. Louis, Iron Mtn. & S. Ry. Co. v. Cumble, 141 S. W. 939.

The amendment to paragraph 1 of the complaint is as follows: "That after said peaches were accepted for shipment by the defendant and had been loaded into said car for shipment, and without further consideration passing, the defendant issued and delivered a receipt or bill of lading therefor and delivered the same to R. C. Cumble. That a copy thereof is hereto attached and marked Exhibit A and B. That the defendant used no other form of receipt, and would not have given plaintiff a different one, and that plaintiff paid full rates upon said shipment. That said writing contained a clause providing that, in case of damage to said fruit, the consignee thereof should give notice to the delivering carrier of an intention to claim damage therefor within 36 hours after notice of arrival of the freight at the place of delivery. That said clause was inserted therein without the consent of plaintiff, of the owners of said peaches, or of the said J. B. Paine, consignee thereof. That said provision was unreasonable in this, to wit: That the owners of said fruit lived at Greenwood, Ark., when said peaches were shipped and when the same arrived at St. Joseph, Mo.; that it was more than 36 hours before the same could be examined in the regular course of business and the damages found; that the consignee thereof was at Van Buren, Ark., at the time, and had hundreds of cars of peaches in transit to different points of destination from Denver, Colo., to New York, N. Y., and was obliged to obtain the same from the delivering carrier to commission merchants who were mere selling agents and had no authority, and who, in this case, had no knowledge of the condition of said peaches when loaded by the initial carrier, and who had no knowledge or information that the same had been damaged in transit, and had been damaged through the fault and negligence of any of the carriers, and had no means of knowing of the intention of the consignee thereof or of the owners thereof to claim damage therefor; that the consignee could not give said notice within said time for the reason that he did not know within said time that the same had been damaged, or of the real condition of the peaches when accepted for shipment, or upon arrival; that the time was unreasonably short; that the delivering carrier examined said peaches upon arrival and knew for itself the condition of the consignment on arrival; that the defendant, the general agent for fruit shipments, C. F. Carstarphen, and its local agent at Greenwood, Ark., L. W. Rhodes, knew all of the foregoing material matters; that, by reason of delay in arrival of said peaches at their destination as aforesaid, the market value thereof declined $1 per crate before their arrival, and plaintiff was damaged said amount by reason thereof."

A demurrer was interposed to the complaint containing nine grounds, the sixth of which is as follows: "There is no allegation of a compliance with the terms of the written contract to any paragraph of plaintiff's complaint; that the bill of lading provided: 'Claims for damages must be reported by consignee in writing to the delivering line within 36 hours after the consignee had been notified of the arrival of the freight at place of delivery. If such notice is not there given, neither this company nor any of the connecting or intermediate carriers shall be liable.'" The seventh ground raised practically the same question as the sixth ground, copied above. The court sustained the demurrer, among others, on the sixth and seventh grounds, and dismissed the complaint. Several days after the complaint had been dismissed, the appellants offered certain amendments, which the court refused to allow, and appellants had their exceptions noted to the ruling of the court in refusing to allow these amendments. They also duly excepted to the ruling of the court in sustaining the demurrer and dismissing their complaint, and have duly prosecuted this appeal.

Robert A. Rowe, of Greenwood, Rowe & Rowe, of Ft. Smith, and C. A. Starbird, of Alma, for appellants. E. B. Kinsworthy and R. E. Wiley, both of Little Rock, W. V. Tompkins, of Prescott, and Thos. B. Pryor, of Ft. Smith, for appellee.

WOOD, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] 1. Conceding, without deciding, that the amendments tendered contained subject-matter germane to the cause of action set up in the original complaint, the court nevertheless did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow these amendments to be made at the time when they were offered. Appellants did not offer to amend the complaint until several days after the cause of action had been dismissed.

[2] The court, in sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the complaint for the reasons set forth in the sixth and seventh grounds of the demurrer thereto, held that there was no allegation of a compliance with the terms of the written contract set up in the complaint. Having so decided, the court did not err in refusing to allow an amendment which, in the court's view of the complaint, would have rendered the same inconsistent and contradictory. The only question we now decide with reference to these amendments is that the court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow them at the time they were offered. As the case must be reversed for reasons herein-after stated, if counsel are so advised, they may offer and obtain a ruling of the lower court on these amendments at the next hearing.

2. The question presented by the court's ruling on the sixth and seventh grounds of the demurrer is whether or not appellants allege in their complaint facts sufficient to show a compliance on their part with the contract of shipment, as set up in their complaint, which provides that, "in case of damage to said fruit, the consignee thereof shall give notice to the delivering carrier of an intention to claim damages therefor within 36 hours after notice of the arrival of the freight at the place of delivery." The appellants did not allege in their complaint that they complied with this provision of the contract by giving the written notice specified therein, but they allege that the provision requiring written notice was unreasonable, and set out facts which they say show it to be an unreasonable provision.

[3] The facts as alleged must be taken on demurrer as uncontroverted. It therefore becomes a question of law as to whether these facts are sufficient to show that the provision is or is not unreasonable, and not an issue to be submitted to the jury under the provisions of the act approved April 30, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 558, § 3), requiring "the reasonableness or unreasonableness of such rules and regulations to be determined by a jury." That provision can have no application in cases where the facts are undisputed upon which the issue of reasonableness or unreasonableness is predicated. See Kansas & Arkansas Valley Ry. v. Ayers, 63 Ark. 332, 38 S. W. 515.

[4] Without repeating here the facts alleged in the complaint to show that the provision for written notice was unreasonable, it is sufficient to say that, in our opinion, these facts are not sufficient to show that the provision was unreasonable. The fact that the owners of the fruit shipped lived at Greenwood, and the destination of the fruit was at St. Joseph and other distant points out of the state where the goods were consigned, would not show that the provision for notice was unreasonable, nor would the fact that the consignee was at Van Buren, Ark. The fact that the consignor and the consignee depended upon commission merchants at points of destination to receive the shipments for them, and that these commission merchants had no knowledge of the condition of the peaches when loaded, and no knowledge that they had been damaged by the carrier in transit, would not be sufficient. If the consignor or the consignee could not themselves be at the points of destination so as to obtain the necessary knowledge of the condition of the peaches when delivered to enable them to give notice of an intention to claim damages therefor in case of damage or loss, they would have to have agents at such points of consignment, and could give such notice within the time prescribed. Arkadelphia Milling Co. v. Smoker Mds. Co., 100 Ark. 37, 139 S. W. 680; C. R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Neusch, 99 Ark. 568, 139 S. W. 679; St. L., I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Townes, 93 Ark. 430, 124 S. W. 1036, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 572.

It would be the consignor's duty to have either the consignee himself at the point of destination or to have some agent there representing him to whom the delivery could be made, and who could ascertain the condition of the shipment when it arrived at its destination, and who could give the notice required by the contract. Thirty-six hours after notice of arrival for notice of a claim for damages is not an unreasonably short time for the consignee to receive all the information necessary as to the damage he has sustained, if any, and to give written notice of an intention to claim such damage to the delivering carrier. Mr. Hutchinson in his work on Carriers (3d Ed.) § 442, says: "The object of conditions of this character, it is said, is to enable the carrier, while the occurrence is recent, to better inform himself of what the actual facts occasioning the loss or injury were, and thus protect himself against claims which might be made upon him after such lapse of time as to frequently make it difficult, if not impossible, for him to ascertain the truth. It is just, therefore, that the owner, when the loss or injury has occurred, should be required, as a condition precedent to enforcing the carrier's liability, to give notice of his claim according to the reasonable conditions of the contract."

We quoted the above from Mr. Hutchinson in the case of St. Louis & San Francisco Ry. Co. v. Keller, 90 Ark. 308, 119 S. W. 254. In the latter case the contract for notice provided that: "No carrier shall be responsible for loss or damage of any of the freight shipped unless it is proved to have occurred during the time of its transit over the particular carrier's line, and of this notice must be given within 30 hours after the arrival of the same at destination. No carrier shall be responsible for loss or damage to property unless notice of such loss or damage is given to the delivering carrier within 30 hours after delivery." The court, in discussing this provision, made no distinction between the provision requiring notice for loss or damage and one requiring notice of an intention to claim damage, but treated such provision as meaning the same thing, as shown by the authorities cited and the language of the opinion. In the above case it was held that such a provision in the contract is "a condition of recovery and not an exemption from liability." "Its effect," says Judge Frauenthal, speaking for the court, "is to require the one, who has the peculiar knowledge, to inform the other, who has not that knowledge, to seek the facts while they exist, so that the facts may be obtained and presented by both sides; its effect is therefore to uphold and enforce rights if they are founded on truth, and not to limit or defeat those rights." And, continuing, he says: "This court has uniformly upheld and enforced similar provisions in contracts of common carriers where the same, under the circumstances of the case, were reasonable and the damages occurred during the actual transportation of the goods"—citing many cases of this court where the provision of the contract required "notice of intention to claim damages" to be given in writing, etc.

[5] So, under our decisions, it makes no difference whether the provision of the contract requires written notice "of loss or damage" to be given, or whether the language of the contract provides for written notice of an "intention to claim" for loss or damage. Under our decisions, the purport of these provisions is the same, have the same legal effect, and are not limitations upon or exemptions from liability of the carrier, but are only conditions precedent to recovery. St. L., I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Furlow, 89 Ark. 404, 117 S. W. 517; St. L. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Keller, supra.

It is alleged in the concluding portion of the amendment to the complaint that "the delivering carrier examined said peaches upon arrival and knew for itself the condition of the consignment on arrival. That the defendant, the general agent for fruit shipments, O. F. Carstarphen, and its local agent at Greenwood, Ark., L. W. Rhodes, knew all of the foregoing material matters."

In Kansas & Arkansas Valley Railway v. Ayers, supra, there was a shipment of cattle under a contract which contained a provision for notice similar to the one at bar. The proof showed that the notice in writing was not given. The agent at the depot where the cattle were delivered saw the cattle and knew that some of them were dead, and that they were in a bad shape generally, but he did not know, and was not informed, that any claim would be made for damages. The court, in passing upon the question as to whether written notice of damage for the dead cattle was required, said: "The cattle that were dead in the car before the stock was removed and mingled with other cattle were not within this provision of the contract as to notice. The object of requiring the notice by the shipper of his intention to claim damages to be given before the cattle were removed and mingled with other cattle was to afford the railway company a fair opportunity to examine the cattle before they were removed and mingled with other cattle. As to those that were dead, the company had all the opportunity it could have had to examine them."

Under the doctrine of the above case, it was not necessary, as a condition of recovery, that the appellants give appellee written notice of an intention to claim for damages to the peaches if the delivering carrier, through its agents, examined and knew the condition of the peaches while in its possession after their arrival at their destination. The complaint alleged such knowledge on the part of the carrier, and hence, in this respect, stated facts sufficient to show that the written notice was unnecessary. Where the facts stated show that the delivering carrier has actual knowledge of all the conditions that a written notice could give it, then written notice is not required, and a provision requiring it under such circumstances would be unreasonable.

Appellee relies upon the recent case of Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific R. Co. v. Williams, 142 S. W. 826, to sustain its contention as to the alleged failure of the appellee to comply with provisions of the contract as to notice. But appellant fails to observe the distinction between the Williams Case and the cases of Kansas & Arkansas Valley Ry. v. Ayers, and St. L., I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Cumble. The present case is controlled by the rule in the latter cases. In the Williams Case the provision requires that the claim for the loss, damage, or delay should be made within four months. The language of the contract in that case contemplated the presentation of a formal claim for damages, specifying what was lost or damaged and the amount thereof, etc. But here, as we construe the language of the contract, it only requires that the consignee report that he has sustained loss or damage and his intention to claim therefor; but it does not contemplate the presentation within the short time of 36 hours, the formal claim as required in Railway v. Williams, supra. If such were the case, the provision as to time might be considered unreasonable. Whereas, as the provision is only for notice that damage has resulted, and requiring that the consignee report that fact, it is not unreasonable. The distinction between the cases is pointed out by the Chief Justice in Railway v. Williams as follows: "In the present case the requirement is not merely for notice to the carrier that damage has resulted, but it is that the claim for the loss, damage, or delay shall be presented within the stipulated time. The purpose of the requirement is to give the carrier timely opportunity to investigate the claim for damage after the same has been presented. This involves the right to investigate the contents of lost packages, the value of lost articles, as well as the facts bearing upon the question of its liability. The distinction is clearly pointed out by Judge Riddick in the opinion of the court in W. U. Telegraph Co. v. Moxley, 80 Ark. 554 [98 S. W. 112], and we are of the opinion that that decision is conclusive of the present case."

The court therefore erred in sustaining the demurrer, and for this error the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer and for further proceedings.

CUMBIE et al. v. ST. LOUIS, I. M. & S. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 4, 1912.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 40*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—FURNISHING CARS.

The statute requiring carriers to furnish, without discrimination or delay, sufficient facilities for the carriage of freight does not make the duty an absolute one, but is only declaratory of the common law, and does not require the carrier to provide in advance for any unprecedented and unexpected rush of business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 120-122; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 67*)—FURNISHING CARS—CONTRACTS.

A carrier who contracts to furnish all the cars necessary to transport the peach crop from a certain locality, on failure to do so, cannot defend on the ground that it was prevented from doing so by heavy and unprecedented traffic or other unavoidable casualties, but the contract does not relieve the shipper from ordering the cars for a specified time and place as required by law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 224-229; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 66*)—FURNISHING CARS—CONTRACTS—MUTUALITY.

A shipper's order calling for a specified number of cars for a specified day, when accepted by the carrier, is a contract binding the carrier to furnish the cars, and the shipper to furnish the goods to load the cars, but such contract does not render the carrier liable for failure to furnish cars to parties who did not authorize the order, but who would have used the cars if they had arrived.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 221; Dec. Dig. § 66.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Sebastian County; Daniel Hon, Judge.

Consolidated actions by R. C. Cumble and others against the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Appellants instituted separate suits against appellee to recover damages for appellee failing to furnish them cars for the shipment of peaches. These cases were consolidated and tried together in the court below. The same judgment was rendered in each case, and the issues involved in the appeal are the same. The evidence adduced by appellants tends to prove substantially the following state of facts: Quite a number of people were engaged in the business of growing peaches for sale and shipment, and some of them organized themselves into what they called a "Fruit Growers' Association." Mr. C. B. Carstarphen was the agent of appellee railway company to solicit shipments of freight over its line of railroad. In the spring of 1907 he went to Greenwood for the purpose of soliciting in advance the shipment of peaches over appellee's line of railroad. He talked with Mr. R. C. Cumble and others in regard to the matter. He asked them what they wanted, and Mr. Cumble told him they wanted a shed. Carstarphen said that it was too late to build a shed for that season, and, if it would suit the peach growers as well, the railroad company would keep iced cars there for the surplus left over, and it would be much better than a shed; that at that late day he would rather do that than to undertake to build a shed, and it was agreed that he was to do that. R. C. Cumble estimated that between 75 and 100 cars of peaches would be shipped from Greenwood, Ark. Carstarphen agreed to keep cars there at all times for the peaches to be loaded in. He said that the shippers could load the peaches direct from the wagon into the iced cars. When the season arrived for the shipment of the peaches, R. C. Cumble said: "The understanding was that I was to order cars orally. We agreed that it would be unnecessary to order cars by making a written order, because I was the agent and was supposed to be right there on the ground with the railroad agent; that is the plan we hit on, and the plan we worked on, and the plan we ordered on. The understanding over there was that I was to make the order by 5 o'clock in the evening so as to be sure we would get the cars."

We further quote from his testimony as follows: "Q. Then when would the cars be expected? A. We would be expecting them, if he ordered for the next morning, at 10 o'clock—that is, if they could get them here—they agreed to get them here, if they could, on the 10 o'clock train the next morning; if not, by 5 o'clock the next evening; get some cars for the next morning by 10 o'clock, ordering them at 5 o'clock this evening. Q. That is the understanding that they would bring part of the cars on the 10 o'clock train that you ordered for 5? A. Or bring them out on the evening train, would make the order for 10 o'clock, and they would get them, if they could; if not, they would get them on the evening train at 5 o'clock. Q. If you made the order for the 10 o'clock train they would bring them on the 10? A. Yes; they did not always do it. Q. It was the understanding they would? A. Yes, sir. Q. But didn't always do it? A. No, sir. Q.

You made the order for the evening train, it was the understanding they would get them that way? A. Yes; but they did not always do that. Q. I will ask you if the orders had come out as you made them, whether you made them in time for them to have had cars there for the peaches if they had filled your orders? A. I think practically so; of course anybody might make a mistake and order a car too many or might lack having enough, because you don't know this evening at 5 o'clock how many wagon loads come in, but we tried to ascertain those things about how many were gathered and about how many wagon loads came in, and tried to make an estimate at 5 o'clock about how many cars would be needed the next day and order that amount; I think, if we had got the cars we ordered, we would have had plenty of cars. Q. To have loaded them right off the wagons without having to stack them out there? A. Yes, sir. Q. Or on sheds or platforms. How long after the shipping season was it until they failed to fill your orders for cars? A. I am not sure; but my impression is that the first failure they made was about either Saturday or Sunday, and we began the first of the week, perhaps about the first of the week; I do not think it was more than three or four days. Q. I will ask you if, at the time the peaches there in controversy were left there on the shed, being no cars for them, I will ask you if you did not order plenty of cars then, if they had filled your orders, to have taken the peaches? A. Yes; I ordered cars every day—that is, right at the very beginning—I do not know whether I ordered cars the first day or began the next day, I think I did, but at one time might be a few peaches scattered around there and might need car to-day and would not need one a day or two—during the active part of the season I did."

The testimony on the part of the appellants tended to show that their peaches rotted because of the fact of appellee failing to furnish them cars in which to ship them. The testimony on the part of the railway company tended to show that, when the time arrived to ship the peaches, the matter of ordering cars was left to the railroad company's agent at Greenwood, and that his judgment as to the number of cars necessary from day to day was to be controlling. Other facts will be stated or referred to in the opinion. There was a verdict in favor of the railroad company, and the cases are here on appeal.

Rowe & Rowe, of Ft. Smith, and R. A. Rowe, of Greenwood, for appellants. Thos. B. Pryor, of Ft. Smith, for appellee.

HART, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] Counsel for appellants first insist that the effect of the agreement made with Mr. Carstarphen, as detailed in the statement of facts, obviated the necessity of them ordering cars for the shipment of their peaches, and that it was the duty of the railway company to have the cars there at all times for the shipment of peaches, whether ordered by appellants or not. We do not agree with them in this contention. We have held that our statute requiring carriers to furnish, without discrimination or delay, sufficient facilities for the carriage of freight is not intended to make the duty of carriers to furnish transportation facilities an absolute one, but is simply declaratory of one of the requirements of the common law, and therefore does not require the carrier to provide in advance for any unprecedented and unexpected rush of business. St. L. S. W. R. Co. v. Clay County Gin Co., 77 Ark. 357, 92 S. W. 531.

In the case of Mauldin v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 73 S. C. 9, 52 S. E. 677, it is held that the difference between the obligation to furnish cars imposed by law, and that imposed by a contract to furnish them, is that the contractual obligation is more onerous, for, while a railroad is not liable for nonperformance of its legal obligations, where it has a reasonable excuse to furnish cars, such as heavy and unprecedented traffic, it is not relieved from the obligations to perform its contracts by unexpected emergencies in its business.

In 4 Elliott on Railroads (2d Ed.) par. 1473, the author states the difference as follows: "Where a railroad company expressly undertakes by special contract to furnish cars at a specified time, it is bound to perform its contract. Where there is no express contract, then, as we have seen, an unusual press of business may excuse the company for a failure to furnish cars; but, where there is an express contract, the rule is that a press of business, although unusual and unexpected, will not relieve the company from liability. Where there is an express contract, of the character above indicated, to furnish cars at a specified time, the fact that an unavoidable accident prevents the company from performing its contract will not exonerate it from liability to a shipper who suffers an injury because of the failure to perform the contract." See, also, Midland Valley R. Co. v. Hoffman Coal Co., 91 Ark. 180, 120 S. W. 390.

[2] In view of these principles, we think the effect of the contract, as stated in the statement of facts, was to preclude the railroad company from imposing, as a defense for failing to furnish cars, that it was prevented from doing so by heavy and unprecedented traffic or other unavoidable casualties, and that the contract did not relieve the shipper of the obligation of ordering cars for a specified time and place as required by law.

[3] It is next contended by counsel for appellants that, when the time for the shipment of the peaches was at hand, R. C. Cumble made an agreement for himself and all others who intended to ship peaches from the locality that he was to order cars orally; that, if the order was made on one afternoon, the cars were to be sent out on the first train the next morning, or, in default of that, on the afternoon train. Such a contract would be void for want of mutuality as to all parties except Cumble and those who had authorized him to make such a contract for them. It is well settled that a shipper's order calling for a specified number of cars for a specified day, when accepted by a common carrier, constitutes a contract binding the carrier to furnish the cars and the shipper to furnish the goods wherewith to load the cars. Hutchinson on Carriers (3d Ed.) vol. 2, par. 495; Railway Co. v. Bundy, 97 Ill. App. 202.

In the present cases there is no testimony that appellants authorized R. C. Cumble to make such a contract for them. Let us suppose that Cumble had ordered a given number of cars for a designated day and the railroad had furnished them in compliance with the order. Can it be said that the railroad company would have had an action against these appellants if a sufficient number of peaches had not been placed in the cars for shipment to fill them? There can be no doubt but that this question must be answered in the negative. A request to a carrier for cars carries with it, by implication of law, an agreement to make use of the cars, if the request is complied with, and a correlative promise to pay the railroad company whatever loss might be incurred by it in the event the cars were not used. The contract must be sufficiently definite to bind the carrier to furnish the cars and the shipper to use the cars when furnished. Under the facts of these cases, as detailed by appellants, if cars ordered by R. C. Cumble had been furnished by the railroad company and had not been used, the railroad company would have had a cause of action against R. C. Cumble, but none against these appellants, because they did not authorize him to order cars for them, and the jury could not have inferred a promise by them to do something which they had not agreed to do.

Indeed all of the appellants, except R. C. Cumble, expressly stated that they did not order any cars on the day in question, nor authorize any one else to order cars for them. They had brought their peaches to the town of Greenwood, and, failing to find a local market for them, then carried them to the depot and offered them for shipment.

Therefore the judgment will be affirmed.

EDWARDS v. BOND.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 18, 1912.)

1. MORTGAGES (§ 38*)—ABSOLUTE DEED AS MORTGAGE—PRESUMPTION AND BURDEN OF PROOF.

In a suit to declare a deed absolute on its face a mortgage, the law presumes that it was an absolute conveyance, and the burden is upon the complainant to show that it was a mortgage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 95, 96; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

2. MORTGAGES (§ 38*)—ABSOLUTE DEED AS MORTGAGE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—DEGREE OF PROOF.

In the absence of fraud or imposition, the proof to overcome the presumption that a deed absolute on its face is an absolute conveyance, and to establish its character as a mortgage must be clear, unequivocal, and convincing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 108-111; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

Appeal from St. Francis Chancery Court; Edward D. Robertson, Chancellor.

Suit by J. E. Edwards against Scott Bond. Decree for defendant, and complainant appeals. Affirmed.

J. F. Wills, of Argenta, and C. L. O'Daniel, of Little Rock, for appellant. S. H. Mann and J. W. Morrow, both of Forrest City, for appellee.

KIRBY, J. This is a suit in chancery to declare a deed, absolute on its face, a mortgage, for an accounting, and redemption of the land conveyed, and from a decree in favor of appellee refusing to grant the relief prayed this appeal comes. The testimony is in sharp conflict, and it may be there is a bare preponderance of it in favor of appellant.

[1, 2] The deed being absolute in form, the burden was upon appellant to show that it was a mortgage, the law presuming that an instrument is what appears on its face to be an absolute conveyance, and, in the absence of fraud or imposition, the proof to overcome this presumption and establish its character as a mortgage must be clear, unequivocal, and convincing. Hays v. Emerson, 75 Ark. 554, 87 S. W. 1027; Rushton v. McIlvene, 88 Ark. 301, 114 S. W. 709.

We are unable to say that the chancellor erred in holding the evidence insufficient to overcome the presumption arising from the deed of absolute conveyance, that it is what it purports to be, and the decree is affirmed.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1002*)—VERDICT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A verdict on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed merely because it appears to the Supreme Court to be against the preponderance of the evidence; the jury being the sole judges of the credibility of the witnesses.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 63*)—OBSTRUCTING WATER COURSE—DAMAGES—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction, in an action against a railroad company for causing the waters of a creek to overflow the land of plaintiff, that, if the jury believe that any obstructions put into or negligently left in the creek by the company either caused the damage to plaintiff's land or contributed to cause damage, the verdict must be for plaintiff, does not permit the recovery of all damages caused by the overflow because they may have been increased by the obstructions, but only means that the company is liable for the part of the injury to which its negligent acts contributed, and, so construed, is not erroneous.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 232*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—OBJECTIONS IN TRIAL COURT.

Where an objection raised below to an instruction was properly overruled, an objection on other grounds cannot be urged on appeal.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Saline County; W. H. Evans, Judge.

Action by W. M. Williams and others against the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. B. Kinsworthy, R. E. Wiley, and W. G. Riddick, all of Little Rock, and H. S. Powell, of Camden, for appellant. Mehaffy, Reid & Mehaffy, of Little Rock, for appellees.

McCULLOCH, C. J. The plaintiffs, three of them, are owners of small tracts of land in Saline county, Ark., and instituted this action against the railway company to recover damages alleged to have been caused by reason of injury to said lands from waters overflowing from Cliff's creek. It is alleged in the amended complaint that the overflowing of the lands was caused by the act of the defendant in allowing obstructions to be placed and to accumulate in the culvert where the railroad passes over Cliff's creek; the allegation being that within three years before the commencement of the action the agents and servants of the defendant, in repairing the culvert, dumped the old material, such as "guard rails, rotten ties, and ends of timbers cut off from fitting the material for said repairs, into the stream below," and that said timbers were allowed to remain in the stream below the culvert and dam it up, so that it caused the lands of plaintiffs to be injured by the overflow. It is also alleged that within three years next before the commencement of the action defendant's agents and servants, in repairing the culvert, had put new piling thereunder, "placing said new piling between the ends of the fill * * * and the edge of said stream; that the old piling was sawed off about two feet above the top of the ground, the stumps of the old piling being left sticking up out of the ground and so near the channel of said stream that in times of high water drift would lodge against said stumps and assist in backing the water up and forcing it to flow out of the original channel." In the original complaint there was an allegation of negligence in narrowing the culvert; but this is alleged to have occurred five or six years before the commencement of the action, and no effort was made to recover under that allegation. The case was tried entirely upon the question whether the injury was caused by negligence of the defendant within three years before the commencement of the actions. The cases were consolidated, and on trial before a jury a verdict was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs assessing damages in the aggregate sum of $70, and the defendant has appealed from the judgment.

[1] It is insisted, in the first place, that the testimony is not sufficient to support the verdict. Much space is given in the brief to the argument of the question whether damages could be recovered for the injury, if any, which resulted from the narrowing of the trestle or culvert; but plaintiffs concede that there is no right of recovery on account of that act, and the case was submitted to the jury entirely upon the right to recover upon alleged acts of negligence which occurred within three years. While the great preponderance of the testimony seems to be in favor of the defendant, we are of the opinion that there was enough to go to the jury, and that the verdict is sustained by the evidence. The trial jury was the sole judge of the credibility of the witnesses, and it is not our duty to reverse a case simply because the verdict appears to us to be against the preponderance of the evidence. Many witnesses testified that Cliff's creek frequently overflowed, and that the alleged obstructions in the culvert did not and could not have appreciable effect upon the flow of water; but there was some testimony to the effect that the stream did not overflow sufficiently to damage plaintiff's lands until these obstructions were allowed by the defendant to accumulate in the culvert.

[2] The following instruction was given over defendant's objection, and the ruling is now assigned as error: "If you believe from the evidence in this case that any obstructions put into the creek, or negligently left in the creek by the defendant, either caused the damage to plaintiffs' land or contributed to cause the damage, then your verdict must be for the plaintiffs." It is insisted that this instruction is erroneous, for the reason that it permits the recovery of all damages caused by the overflow merely because the damage may have been increased by reason of the obstructions placed in the culvert. We scarcely think the instruction is open to that objection, as it is fairly susceptible only of the meaning that the defendant is liable for that part of the injury to which negligent acts of its servants contributed; but, even if this part of the instruction is not strictly accurate and is open to the objection now made to it, it is too late to complain for the reason that the defendant at the time based its objection upon an entirely different ground.

[3] It objected on the ground that the first part of the instruction was erroneous, and asked that the court strike out the following words: "Any obstructions put into the creek, or negligently left in the creek by the defendant." The use of those words was proper and was clearly within the issues, so the court did not err in refusing to sustain that objection, and it is now too late to urge any other objection.

There are several other assignments of error which we do not deem of sufficient importance to discuss.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

NATIONAL PACKING CO. v. BOULLION. (Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 18, 1912.) CORPORATIONS (§ 492*)—LIABILITY FOR TORTS—SLANDER OF AGENT—COURSE OF EM- PLOYMENT.

Defendant packing company's auditor, who was employed to investigate the accounts of its employés and ascertain any shortages and secure evidence as to the persons responsible therefor, but not to make any charges of crime in connection with any defalcations discovered, while making an investigation of the sales tickets sent out by plaintiff, a shipping clerk, which appeared to have been altered, stated that there had been some forgeries and it was "up to plaintiff to make settlement." Held, that the auditor's statement, even if slanderous, was not made in the course of his employment, or scope of his authority, so as to charge defendant therewith.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pulaski County; John W. Blackwood, Special Judge.

Action by Frank L. Boullion against the National Packing Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed, and cause dismissed.

The National Packing Company is a corporation of Illinois, doing business in Arkansas. The appellee brought suit against the Packing Company for slander, alleging that its auditor, "while acting in due course of his employment, committed an injury to the name and character of plaintiff by speaking the following words to plaintiff in the presence and hearing of divers persons:

'Boullion, the house has been robbed and there have been some forgeries. You acknowledge to signing these tickets, and it is up to you to make settlement.' That Boullion then said: 'Do you mean to charge me with robbery and forgery?' To which Fisher replied: 'You need not try to throw anything over my eyes. We are not asleep. You have acknowledged to the handwriting, and it is up to you to make settlement'—implying that Boullion had committed some species of larceny and forgery." Appellee prayed for $10,000 actual damages and $5,000 punitive damages. The appellant denied that its auditor meant any injury to the good name and character of appellee, and denied that he spoke the words set out in the complaint. It denied that its auditor used any language which either charged or implied that appellee had been dishonest or had committed any forgery, or had been guilty of appropriating to his own use any money belonging to appellant. It set up that, if the auditor used the language alleged, such language was not within the scope of his employment and was not authorized by appellant; and, further, that, if such language was used, it was without appellant's knowledge or consent, and it had not at any time adopted or ratified the same.

The testimony on behalf of the appellee tended to show that he was in the employ of appellant as shipping clerk. His duties were to see that the stock of meats was taken care of and to wait on the people, see that their orders were filled, and to send out merchandise on orders which came in. On the 19th of January, 1911, one Fisher, an auditor of the appellant, was in the office of the company checking up the office. On that occasion Fisher, in a conversation with appellee, in the presence of other employees of appellant, used the language, addressed to appellee, set out in the complaint. The language was used while the auditors were making an investigation of sales tickets which had been made out by the appellee, and which appeared to have been altered. The investigation showed that there was a shortage, and the appellee testified that the auditor of the appellant used the language above, intending to accuse him of forgery and larceny. The testimony on behalf of appellant tended to show that its auditor did not use the language set out in appellee's complaint. The auditor of the appellant, to whom the language was attributed, testified that the conversation he had with appellee was for the purpose of trying to find the guilty party. In so doing he was carrying out the business of the company intrusted to him. He denied that he used the language set up in appellee's complaint, but stated that whatever conversation he had with the appellee was with a view of "trying to locate who the guilty party was." It was his duty, not only to locate the shortage, but to locate the responsible party. He was to find out who the guilty party was, and get all the evidence he could with reference to that matter. He was to gather all the evidence he could tending to reflect the guilt of the parties responsible and to report the same to the home office. He had authority to use his own judgment and methods in securing the evidence, but was not to have the guilty party arrested.

The appellant, among other prayers, asked the court to instruct the jury to find for the defendant, which the court refused, and appellant duly excepted.

The verdict and judgment were in favor of the appellee for $250.

Rose, Hemingway, Cantrell & Loughborough, of Little Rock, for appellant. Gus Fulk, and Bradshaw, Rhoton & Helm, all of Little Rock, for appellee.

WOOD, J. (after stating the facts as above). In Lindsey v. St. L., I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 95 Ark. 534, 129 S. W. 807, Lindsey sued the corporation for slander. He alleged that the slanderous words were spoken "by special agents in the employ of defendant for the purpose of finding said missing cotton and said charge was made by them in furtherance of the defendant's business, which they were employed to do for the purpose of ascertaining whether plaintiff was the guilty person or had guilty knowledge of the matter, and of inducing him, if guilty, to confess it," etc. Lindsey contended that the slanderous words uttered by the agents of the railway company while engaged in ferreting out the crime were within the scope of their employment and that the company was liable to him for slander. The court, in passing upon his contention, said: "Slander is unlike other torts. It is the individual act of him who utters it, and often arises entirely out of his momentary feelings and passions, without forethought on the speaker's part. It is such an act as cannot be anticipated, and for that reason cannot be impliedly authorized in advance. Hence it has been held that the utterance of slanderous words by an agent of a corporation must be ascribed to the personal malice of the agent who uttered them, 'rather than to the act performed in the course of his employment and in aid of the interest of his employer,' and the corporation must be exonerated 'unless it authorized, approved or ratified the act of the agent in uttering the particular slander.' Here proof of agency will not be sufficient to prove such authority or ratification."

In Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Bridwell, 147 S. W. 64, the plaintiff sued the oil company and its agents for slander alleged to have been committed by making defamatory statements in regard to the inspection and quality of the oil which plaintiff was engaged in selling. The plaintiff alleged "that the agents of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, while engaged in selling its oil, stated to the customers of the plaintiff that his oil would not stand the test prescribed by the inspection laws of the state of Arkansas, and that both plaintiff and his customers in selling said oil were acting in violation of the criminal laws of the state." It was alleged that the statements were made of and concerning plaintiff's business, and were injurious thereto. The court in that case used the following language: "There is some conflict of authority in respect to the liability of a corporation for slander, but, inasmuch as a corporation must transact its business and perform its duties through natural persons, it is now well settled that a corporation is liable in damages for slander as it is for other torts. To establish its liability, the utterance of the slander must be shown to have been made by its authority or ratified by it, or to have been made by one of its servants or agents in the scope of his employment and in the course of the business in which he is employed."

[1] The undisputed evidence in this case shows that it was the duty of appellant's auditor to investigate the accounts of its employes and to ascertain if there were shortages, and to gather the evidence tending to show who was responsible, but he did not have authority to accuse any one of crime in connection with such defalcations. He could select his own methods and use his own judgment in making his investigations and in getting up the evidence; but he was not authorized to make arrest or make criminal charges against any one. Conceding, therefore, that the language charged in the appellee's complaint was slanderous, there is no testimony to warrant the conclusion that this language was uttered by the agent of the appellant in the course of his employment or within the scope of his authority, nor was there any evidence tending to show that the alleged slanderous words were ratified by the appellant. The facts of this record are similar to the facts in Lindsey v. St. L., I. M. & S. R. Co., supra. The agent in that case at the time of the alleged slanderous words was engaged in ascertaining who committed the crime of stealing or taking cotton from the railway company. Judge Hart, speaking for the court, in the case of Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Bridwell, supra, in approving the doctrine announced in Lindsey v. Railway Co., supra, said: "In that case the railway company had sent a special agent to trace some cotton which was missing, and the special agent accused the station agent at Monticello of stealing it. The full measure of his duty was to trace the missing cotton, and his conduct in insulting the agent was entirely beyond any authority given him either expressly, or which could be fairly implied from the nature of his employment or the duties incident to it."

Applying the doctrine of the above cases to the undisputed facts in this record, we must hold that the appellant was not liable. The court therefore erred in not granting appellant's instruction No. 1, asking an instructed verdict, and in overruling appellant's motion for a new trial.

The judgment is therefore reversed, and the cause dismissed.

2. RAILROADS (§ 441*)—INJURIES TO STOCK ON TRACK—DUTY OF KEEPING LOOKOUT—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Under Acts 1911, p. 275, requiring persons running trains to keep a constant lookout for persons and property on the track, and placing on the railroad the burden of showing, in an action for an injury, that such lookout was kept, proof by a plaintiff in an action for the death of and injury to horses on a railroad trestle which would justify an inference that such property had been injured in the operation of the train, and that the danger might have been discovered, and the injury avoided, had a lookout been kept, would cast upon the defendant the burden of showing that a lookout was kept.

3. RAILROADS (§ 446*)—INJURIES TO STOCK ON TRACK—DUTY TO KEEP LOOKOUT—EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action for injury to horses on a railway trestle under Acts 1911, p. 275, requiring persons running trains to keep a constant lookout for property on the track, there was evidence that there was only one person beside the motorman in the motor car alleged to have caused the injury, testimony that at a point on the line near where the accident occurred there was loud talking and hallooing by the persons in the car was properly admitted to show that the motorman was not keeping a lookout.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Yell County; Hugh Basham, Judge.

Action by P. C. Lindley against the Central Railway Company of Arkansas. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appealed. Affirmed.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

P. C. Lindley sued the Central Railway Company of Arkansas in the circuit court for $750 alleging that on the 15th of October, 1911, the defendant's servants engaged in running a motor car and train from Ola to Plainview so negligently ran and operated the car and train as to cause two mares to be killed and one to be injured. The answer denied negligence. The facts are substantially as follows: The railway company operated a motor car from Plainview to Ola for the purpose of carrying passengers. It was built with a deck with springs, and its capacity is six or eight passengers. The engine is a small type motor, slow speed, and is on the deck of the car. One man runs the car. On the 15th day of October, 1911, A. T. Reed, one of the servants of the company, ran the car from Plainview to Ola, and came back with a passenger. He arrived at Ola about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and started back about 7 o'clock p. m. He had one passenger, who was also an employe of the railway company. On his return, when within about 150 yards of bridge No. 9, he discovered three horses on the bridge. The bridge or trestle was about 90 feet long, and the horses were on the end next to the approaching car. Reed was not able to extricate the animals from the bridge, and abandoned his car and walked on to Plainview, which was about two miles distance.

P. C. Lindley, the plaintiff, testified: "The next morning after the horses had become entangled in the bridge, I learned of the occurrence, and went to the scene of the accident. Two of the horses were found dead near the bridge, and I recognized them as my horses. Another one was found on the right of way nearby. Its feet and belly were badly scarred. It was also my horse. I examined the railroad track and found my horses' tracks on the railroad for about 300 or 400 yards back from the bridge. The tracks of my horses were going towards the bridge, and, when I got in about 150 or 200 feet of the bridge, it looked as if the tracks were plainer. The tracks appeared as if the horses were running faster, or at least that they had struck the ties, and in some places had torn pieces or splinters off of them. I have often had occasion to notice the tracks of horses going at a rapid rate of speed and tracks of horses walking along. The tracks as they got nearer to the bridge indicated that the horses were running faster. The ties on the railroad track where the horses went on the bridge were scarred and torn up, as if the horses were running. The ties were torn up for about 30 or 35 feet. The plaintiff also testified as to the value of the horses that were killed and the amount of damage to the one that was injured."

Another witness for the plaintiff testified that he lived about one mile from Ola, and at a distance of about 250 feet from the railroad track; that he heard the car pass on its return to Plainview, and heard some persons on the car hallooing. He does not think the motor car was going faster than it usually did, and said that its usual speed was 14 or 15 miles per hour. On cross-examination he stated that he heard the hallooing about two miles from the bridge where the mares were killed and injured, and does not think it was loud enough to alarm the horses at the bridge.

Another witness testified that he lived about 200 yards from the railroad, and something over a quarter of a mile from the bridge where the mares were killed and injured. He heard the motor car go to Ola and back. On the return trip he heard some people on the car talking and laughing.

A. T. Reed, for the defendant, testified that he ran the motor car on the day in question. He says he was keeping a sharp lookout for persons and objects on the track, and did not discover the animals until they were on the bridge; that he was going at the rate of eight miles per hour when he discovered the horses; that he had no light on the car, but from the starlight he could see about 150 yards in front of the car; that he was looking straight ahead, keeping a close lookout for anything that might be in front, and that he was about 150 yards from the bridge when he saw the animals on it; that he shut off his power and let his car drift within 150 feet of the bridge; that he found it was impossible to do anything towards extricating the animals.

There was a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $300, and from the judgment rendered the defendant has appealed to this court.

Hill, Brizzolara & Fitzhugh, of Ft. Smith, for appellant. Sellers & Sellers, of Morrilton, for appellee.

HART, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] Counsel for the defendant say this action is based on the lookout statute, making it the duty of all persons running trains in this state to keep a constant lookout for persons and property on the track, and contends that a motor car is not a train within the meaning of the statute. In the case of Little Rock & Ft. Smith Ry. Co. v. Blewitt, 65 Ark. 235, 45 S. W. 548, the court held that an engine is a train within the meaning of the statute. See, also, Railway v. Taylor, 57 Ark. 136, 20 S. W. 1083. The motor car in question was run by the defendant company for the purpose of carrying passengers over its line of railroad, and we think was a train within the meaning of the statute.

[2] 2. It is next contended that the court erred in refusing to give instruction numbered "A" asked by the defendant. It is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that, if they find from the evidence that the horses whose death and injury are sued for were found dead or injured so near the roadbed of the defendant company as to indicate that they were thrown there by a passing train of the defendant company, then the presumption is that the killing or wounding was done by the defendant's train, and that it resulted from want of care, and the defendant would be liable unless this presumption is rebutted by evidence overcoming it, but this presumption does not attach if the evidence shows that the horses were not killed or wounded by contact with a train of defendant company. The jury is instructed that if they find that the horses whose death and injury is sued for herein were killed or injured on a bridge from falling therein, and were not killed or injured by the coming in contact with a train of the defendant, then there is no presumption of negligence on part of the defendant, and the plaintiff cannot recover unless he shows, by a preponderance of the evidence, negligence on part of defendant's employes causing the death or wounding of the horses sued for." It was not charged, or attempted to be proved, that the horses were killed and injured by a train striking them. The action was not brought under section 6776, Kirby's Digest, and that section has no application to the facts of this case. The suit was brought under the act of May 26, 1911, which is as follows: "It shall be the duty of all persons running trains in this state upon any railroad to keep a constant lookout for persons and property upon the track of any and all railroads, and if any person or property shall be killed or injured by the neglect of any employes of any railroad to keep such lookout, the company owning or operating any such railroad shall be liable and responsible to the person injured for all damages resulting from neglect to keep such lookout. Notwithstanding the contributory negligence of the person injured, where if such lookout had been kept, the employe or employes in charge of such train of such company could have discovered the peril of the person injured in time to have prevented the injury, by the exercise of reasonable care after the discovery of such peril, and the burden of proof shall devolve upon such railroad to establish the fact that this duty to keep such lookout has been performed." Acts 1911, p. 275. Under this section, that part of the instruction which tells the jury in effect that there is no presumption of negligence on the part of the defendant where the horses were not killed or injured by coming in contact with a train is too broad, and is not the law. The statute makes the railroad company liable for all damages resulting from negligence to keep a lookout for property upon its track, and imposes upon the railroad company the burden of proving that it has kept such lookout. The statutory policy of imposing the burden of proof in this respect upon the railroad company doubtless had its origin in the fact that the company's employes would know whether they kept a lookout or not, and the owner of the property would not know whether they had performed their duty in this respect or not. In other words, the statute makes it the duty of railroad companies to keep a lookout for property upon its tracks, and makes it liable for all injuries that occur by reason of its failure to perform this duty. Under the lookout statute, when the plaintiff has proved facts and circumstances from which the jury might infer that his property had been injured on account of the operation of the train, and that the danger might have been discovered and the injury avoided if a lookout had been kept, then he has made out a prima facie case, and the burden is on the defendant to show that a lookout was kept as required by the statute. For the reasons here given, instructions numbered "B" and "2" asked by the defendant were properly refused by the court.

[3] It is finally insisted by counsel for the defendant that the court should have directed a verdict for it under the facts. While we do not agree with counsel in this contention, it must be admitted that the question is a very close one. It is true that the motorman and also the other occupant of the car testified that the motorman kept a sharp lookout and was looking straight ahead all the time, and that the horses were not seen until they were found on the bridge or trestle, but it cannot be said that their testimony in this respect was reasonable and consistent, and was uncontradicted by any other fact or circumstances adduced in evidence. It will be remembered that the motorman testified that he could see objects on the track 150 yards ahead, and was looking straight ahead all the time. The testimony of the plaintiff shows that the horses came upon the track 300 or 400 yards from the bridge and the impressions of their tracks made on the roadbed showed that soon after getting on the track they commenced running and continued to run faster as they approached the bridge.

[4] Then, too, testimony was introduced by the plaintiff tending to show that the persons in the car were heard hallooing and loudly talking and laughing. This testimony was not introduced, as counsel for the defendant seem to think, for the purpose of showing that the loud talking and laughing was calculated to frighten the horses, but was no doubt introduced for the purpose of showing that the motorman, being engaged in an animated conversation with the other occupant of the car, was not keeping the lookout required by the statute, and the testimony was competent for that purpose. It will be remembered that there were only two persons in the car and the motorman would necessarily be a participant in the loud talking and laughing. Under all the facts and circumstances adduced in evidence, the jury were warranted in finding that the motorman was not keeping the lookout required by the statute, and that, had he been doing so, he would have seen the horses on the railroad track some distance before they reached the trestle, and would have observed that they were frightened by the approach of the motor car, and that they commenced to run and continued to run faster as the car approached them. Hence, the jury might have found that he was guilty of negligence in not stopping the car when he had reason to believe the horses would not leave the track before reaching the trestle, and, under such circumstances, should have anticipated as a natural and probable consequence of not stopping the car that the horses would run into the trestle and be killed or injured. St. L., I. 2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 187)—OBJECTIONS—JOINDER OF PARTIES.

Where there was no objection to a joinder of parties, it will not be considered on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1184-1189; Dec. Dig. § 187.*]

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 146*)—ACKNOWLEDGMENT OR NEW PROMISE—REQUIREMENT OF WRITING.

While, in the absence of a forbidding statute, an oral acknowledgment or promise will interrupt the statute of limitations, yet, under Kirby's Dig. § 5079, which provides that no verbal acknowledgment or promise shall be sufficient evidence to take any case founded on contract out of the operation of the statute, such acknowledgment or promise must be in writing, signed by the party to be charged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 593-596; Dec. Dig. § 146.*]

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 15*)—AGREEMENT WAIVING LIMITATION—WRITING.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 5079, which provides that no verbal acknowledgment or promise shall be sufficient to take any action founded on contract out of the statute of limitations, an oral waiver of the statute, or promise not to plead it, need not be in writing; such promise, if based upon an additional consideration, constituting an original undertaking, and not an acknowledgment or new promise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 62-65; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 15*)—PROMISE NOT TO PLEAD STATUTE—SUFFICIENCY.

The suspension of the statute of limitations by a promise not to plead it is based on the doctrine of estoppel; and such promise, to be effectual, must be an express promise not to plead the statute, or its language must clearly evince an intention not to do so, upon which the creditor has a right to rely.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 62-65; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

6. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 145*)—NEW PROMISE—REQUISITES.

In order to constitute a new promise, based upon sufficient consideration, there must be an agreement on the one part to pay and an agreement on the other part to forbear; but an agreement to extend the time of payment to a future date, or to the happening of an event beyond the period of the statute of limitations, is sufficient consideration for a new promise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 584-588, 590-592; Dec. Dig. § 145.*]

7. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 145*)—ACKNOWLEDGMENT OR NEW PROMISE—REQUISITES—CONSIDERATION.

A promise by a debtor, that as soon as he could get his father out of the penitentiary he would pay all of the account, upon which the creditor, without agreeing not to sue, forbore suit, was without the consideration necessary to make it an original promise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 584-588, 590-592; Dec. Dig. § 145.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Mississippi County; Frank Smith, Judge.

Action by Dr. W. E. Turner, in which one Dr. Dunavant joined as party plaintiff, against H. H. Burnett. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed, and cause dismissed.

H. H. Burnett, pro se. J. T. Coston, of Osceola, for appellees.

MCCULLOCH, C. J. [1, 2] Appellees are practicing physicians, and instituted this action before a justice of the peace against appellant to recover an account for professional services rendered. The account which forms the basis of the action seems to embrace items alleged to be due the two physicians separately—that is to say, $101.50 to Dr. Turner and $50 to Dr. Dunavant—but no question is raised as to the improper joinder of the two causes of action. The suit was first instituted by Dr. Turner, and afterwards Dr. Dunavant was allowed to join as a party plaintiff; but no objection is made to this, and both of these questions pass out of the case.

Appellant does not dispute the items of the account, but relies entirely upon his plea of the statute of limitations. It is conceded that the action was not instituted until more than three years after the services were performed; but appellees seek to take the case out of the operation of the statute on account of a special promise on the part of appellant to pay at a future date, or, rather, to pay in the future on the happening of a certain event. The facts of the case are very simple, and there is but slight conflict in the testimony. In October, 1906, appellant was wounded by a gun or pistol shot, and Dr. Turner was called to attend him. He did so, and gave appellant continuous attention for something like a month, when the condition of the wound rendered a surgical operation necessary. In this emergency Dr. Dunavant was called, and performed the operation, charging a fee of $50 therefor. Dr. Turner's bill was $101.50 for his entire services. Nothing has ever been paid on the account, and more than three years elapsed before the institution of this action. Dr. Dunavant testified that he frequently requested appellant to pay the bill, and on one occasion—the particular time not mentioned—appellant promised to pay the bill when his (appellant's) father should be released from the penitentiary in the state of Missouri, where he was then incarcerated. Dr. Dunavant states the transaction in the following language: "I never put the man's name on my books at all. I told Dr. Turner that I would charge him, and he looked after the collecting. I just left it with him to collect. In the meantime I had asked Dr. Turner about it, and he told me that Mr. Burnett was slow, and I saw him and got after him myself, and he says: 'My papa is in trouble up in Missouri, and as soon as I can get him out of it I will pay, it all'—and under that kind of a promise I held off."

In other parts of the testimony it is disclosed that appellant's father was in the penitentiary, and that he was released therefrom within three years from the commencement of this action. Was this promise sufficient to take the case out of the operation of the statute? It is observed that the testimony nowhere discloses any express promise not to plead the statute of limitations; nor does it show any agreement to postpone the date of payment to any future day. Dr. Dunavant merely states that appellant promised to pay when his father got out of trouble, and that upon that promise he did not sue until after the occurrence of that event. He states further in his testimony that he frequently thereafter demanded payment of appellant. Appellant denied that he ever made this promise to Dr. Dunavant, but says that when payment was repeatedly demanded he merely promised that he would pay as soon as he got able.

[3] The statutes of this state provide that "no verbal promise or acknowledgment shall be deemed sufficient evidence in any action founded on contract whereby to take any case out of the operation of this act, or to deprive the party of the benefits thereof." Kirby's Digest, § 5079.

In the absence of a forbidding statute, an oral promise or acknowledgment will interrupt the statute of limitations; but it is seen from the above that we have a statute on that subject in this state, and, in order "to suspend the statute by promise or acknowledgment, such promise or acknowledgment must be in writing and signed by the party to be charged." The correct rule is thus stated, and is sustained by the great weight of authority. See 25 Cyc. 1351, and numerous authorities there cited.

[4] It is equally well settled by the authorities that an oral waiver of the statute of limitations, or promise not to plead it, does not fall within the statute above quoted, and need not be in writing. 19 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 322; Bridges v. Stevens, 132 Mo. 524, 34 S. W. 555; Jordan v. Jordan, 85 Tenn. 565, 3 S. W. 896; 1 Wood on Limitations, p. 76.

[5] The suspension of the statute by reason of a promise not to plead it is based on the doctrine of estoppel; and, in order for it to be effective, the promise must be an express one not to plead the statute, or the language of the promise must be such as clearly evinces an intention not to do so, upon which the creditor has a right to rely. Otherwise it could not be said that he was estopped by the conduct of his debtor, and the rule does not apply. 19 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, pp. 286, 287; Hill v. Hilliard, 103 N. C. 34, 9 S. E. 639; State Bank v. Hill, 10 Humph. (Tenn.) 176, 51 Am. Dec. 698; Parks v. Satterthwaite, 132 Ind. 111, 32 N. E. 82.

[6, 7] A new promise, based upon an additional consideration, to pay at a future date constitutes an original undertaking, and does not fall within the terms of the above-quoted statute, requiring a promise or acknowledgment of a debt to be in writing (Sloan v. Sloan, 11 Ark. 29); and an agreement to extend the time of payment to a future date, or to the happening of an event which might carry it beyond the period of the statute of limitation, is sufficient consideration upon which to base a new promise. In order, however, to constitute a new promise, based upon sufficient consideration, there must be an agreement on the one part to pay and an agreement on the other part to forbear. The evidence in this case wholly fails to show facts which would suspend the operation of the statute of limitations. It shows neither an express promise on the part of the debtor not to plead the statute of limitations, nor an agreement on the part of the creditor not to sue. The most that the evidence shows is a bare promise on the part of the debtor to pay in the future on the happening of a certain event, and that the creditor did forbear suit until after the happening of that event. There was therefore no additional consideration, so as to make the new promise constitute an original agreement; nor was there an express promise not to plead the statute of limitations, so as to work an estoppel. According to the undisputed evidence, the verdict should have been in favor of appellant, and, as the case has been fully developed, no useful purpose would be served by remanding it for a new trial.

The judgment is therefore reversed, and the cause is dismissed.

Appeal from Cleveland Chancery Court; John M. Elliott, Chancellor.

Action by J. H. Henderson against the E. W. Emerson Company for a partnership accounting. From a judgment as stated, both parties appeal. Affirmed.

The appellant sued the appellee E. W. Emerson Company, a corporation, alleging that it had entered into a partnership with him for the purpose of buying and selling cotton seed; the partnership beginning October 1, 1910, and to continue throughout the season. Appellee W. A. Tolson was the manager of E. W. Emerson Company, through whom it is alleged that the partnership agreement was made. He was made a party defendant. The appellant alleged that he had no means of ascertaining the status of the partnership or his rights therein and prayed for an accounting and for judgment for the amount found due after such accounting. The answer admitted a contract of partnership between appellant and appellees for the buying and selling of two cars of cotton seed. They were to share the net profits as to these, but no further. A master was appointed with the following directions: "To make an accounting to ascertain the status of the partnership herein, which accounting shall be in the alternative, that is, he shall ascertain the relative rights of the parties upon the hypothesis that the contention of the plaintiff that the partnership continued throughout the season is correct, and he shall then ascertain the relative rights of the parties hereto upon the hypothesis that the answer of the defendant contending that the partnership was to last only until two car loads were bought and sold is correct, and submit his findings to the court in this alternative, and the said master is hereby vested with all the powers and intrusted with the performance of all the duties which by law and the rules of this court devolve upon a master in chancery." Depositions had been taken before the master was appointed and proof was also taken before him. Upon the testimony in the case he reported as follows: "After a careful review of all the proof submitted by both plaintiff and defendant, I am of the opinion that the contract between plaintiff and defendant ended when the first two cars were sold, and from the statements hereto appended it would seem that the credit given was in excess of the true amount due. Net profit on seven cars $546.06. Net profit on two cars $37.82." The court, on final hearing, approved the report of the master in all things and entered a decree, giving one-half of the net profits of $37.82 to the appellant and one-half to the appellee E. W. Emerson Company, and adjudged the costs against the appellant. The appellant and appellees appeal.

J. H. Henderson, pro se. E. W. Emerson & Co., pro se.

WOOD, J. (after stating the facts as above). Appellees raise here, for the first time, the question of ultra vires as to the E. W. Emerson Company, which, in the view we have taken of the evidence, it is unnecessary to pass upon, for, conceding, without deciding, that the E. W. Emerson Company could have entered into a partnership with the appellant, we are of the opinion that the finding of the chancellor that such partnership "was for the purpose of buying two cars of cotton seed during said season" was not clearly against the preponderance of the evidence. It was a question of fact as to whether or not the contract was for the buying and selling of only two cars of cotton seed, or whether it was for the buying and selling of cotton seed for the entire season. It could serve no useful purpose to set out in detail and discuss the evidence tending to support the contention of the respective parties.

The appellant testified in substance that on or about the middle of October, 1910, a partnership was formed between W. A. Tolson and himself for the purpose of buying and selling cotton seed; that they were to share equally in the profits; the partnership to continue throughout the entire season. He states that eight or nine cars of seed were sold. He bought seed himself and also put his own cotton seed into the partnership. He was engaged in buying cotton, and when he bought the cotton he directed the parties from whom he bought to take the cotton seed they had for sale to E. W. Emerson Company who would settle for the same. He said he left $400 or $500 there during the season to buy cotton seed with. He asked Tolson, the manager of E. W. Emerson Company, as early as January, 1911, and then again in February, 1911, for an accounting. His understanding was that the partnership was to buy and sell seed for the season. He received no notice that the partnership had ceased or that it was limited to any certain time. The appellees had rendered him no statement of their partnership transactions up to the time of his bringing suit against them. After that they rendered him a statement showing that on the 2d of March, 1911, he had been given a credit of $24 and some cents. After the contract was entered into appellant was taken sick, but he received no notice during the time of his illness that he was not complying with his contract. According to his understanding there was no definite amount of seed to be bought by him.

Appellant introduced certain exhibits, showing that on November 1, 1910, he had a balance of $218.60 with E. W. Emerson Company; on December 1st, $250.31; on January 2, 1911, $189.86; and on February 1st, $126.54.

The bookkeeper of the E. W. Emerson Company testified that during the fall of 1910 Tolson told him that "from now on John Henderson will be a partner in the seed business," and that at no time during the season did Tolson notify him that the partnership was ended. Later on in his testimony he stated that he could not say "for certain that Tolson used the words 'from now on.'" Tolson stated that they would buy seed together, and if he fixed any time limit on the business witness could not recall it.

A witness on behalf of appellant testified that he made a contract with appellant in October, 1910, by which he was to turn in to Henderson and his partner what seed that he might buy, and that in pursuance of this contract he turned into the E. W. Emerson Company all the seed that he bought.

Another witness testified that during the fall of 1910 he heard Tolson say "that John (Henderson) wanted to go in partners, but he was afraid to take him in for fear he would want to cut prices." Along in the fall of 1910 "once in a while a man come in with cotton seed and would state that they were John Henderson's seed." He did not know whether he "heard any one after October 28th say that the seed which he brought in were John Henderson's." He heard Mr. Tolson say "he was afraid John Henderson would go to cutting prices."

Appellee Tolson testified that he entered into a contract with appellant Henderson in October, 1910, to buy and sell cotton seed. The partnership was only for the buying and selling of one or two cars. He kept Henderson in partnership for the buying and selling of two cars because they could not sell one car without the other. He says the car was shipped out on the 28th day of October, 1910. He got returns from the two cars in November. Henderson did not come around for a settlement, but drew on the 14th of November for $450. He did not make Henderson a statement of it until March 2d. He stated that his books were at all times subject to the inspection of the appellant. He did not consider that Henderson was in the seed business after the two cars were shipped out. He never gave him any notice that the partnership had ceased because it was understood in the beginning that the contract was to continue until one or two cars were bought and was to end then.

[1] The master exceeded the authority given him in finding that the contract continued for only two cars of cotton seed. The reference made to him by the court did not require that he should make a finding as to how long the partnership was to continue. Therefore his finding in this regard cannot be considered as having any weight for any purpose as against appellant.

[2] But aside from this we are not able to say that the finding of the chancellor was clearly against the preponderance of the evidence.

[3] The issue as raised by the pleadings was whether or not the alleged partnership was to continue for the buying and selling of only two cars of cotton seed, or whether it was to continue for the entire business of the season of 1910. The burden was on the appellant on this issue. There was a sharp conflict in the evidence, and it was a question of fact.

[4] A chancellor's finding will not be disturbed unless against a clear preponderance of the evidence. Carr v. Fair, 92 Ark. 359, 122 S. W. 659, 19 Ann. Cas. 906, and cases cited; Cunningham v. Toye, 97 Ark. 537, 134 S. W. 962; Cotton v. Citizens, 97 Ark. 574, 135 S. W. 840. The appellant has not established his contention according to the above rule. This view makes it unnecessary to discuss other questions presented in appellant's brief.

The judgment is therefore correct, and it is affirmed.

ADCOCK v. COKER et al.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 4, 1912.)

1. STATUTES (§ 40*)—FORM OR ENACTING CLAUSE—CONSTITUTIONALITY.

Sp. & Priv. Acts 1911, p. 472, enacted by "the General Assembly of the state of Arkansas," instead of by "the people of the state of Arkansas," as required by the initiative and referendum amendment to the Constitution, is not thereby rendered unconstitutional.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 43, 44; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

2. INJUNCTION (§ 187*)—TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER—EFFECT—"INJUNCTION TO STAY PROCEEDINGS UPON A JUDGMENT OR FINAL ORDER."

A temporary restraining order is not "an injunction to stay proceedings upon a judgment or final order" of the county court, within Kirby's Dig. § 3998, providing that upon the dissolution of a judgment to stay proceedings upon a judgment or final order damages shall be assessed by the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 398, 406, 407; Dec. Dig. § 187.*]

3. INJUNCTION (§ 241*)—JURISDICTION—JUDGMENT FOR DAMAGES.

The court, on intervention of the prosecuting attorney in an injunction suit by the county treasurer to restrain the county judge from establishing a depository for county funds, asking judgment against the treasurer and his bondsmen on their injunction bond for damages on daily balances in the hands of the treasurer between certain dates, was without jurisdiction to render judgment on the injunction bond, since the determination of the amount of interest for which the collector was liable was within the exclusive jurisdiction of the county court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 544-552; Dec. Dig. § 241.*]

Appeal from Drew Chancery Court; Zachariah T. Wood, Chancellor.

Injunction by H. H. Adcock, as Treasurer of Drew County, against W. A. Coker, as County Judge of Drew County, and others, in which the prosecuting attorney intervened in the name of the state and for the benefit of the county, asking to have the temporary restraining order set aside, and for a judgment against the plaintiff on his injunction bond. Injunction dissolved, and decree entered against complainant for damages in the sum of interest on daily balances and for further damages for delay, and complainant appeals. Decree modified and affirmed.

The appellant, as treasurer of Drew county, applied to the chancery court for a temporary injunction restraining the county judge of Drew county from establishing a depository for the funds of the county, under the provisions of Act No. 181, approved April 12, 1911; the enacting clause of which is as follows, "Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of Arkansas." The appellant executed a bond and obtained a temporary restraining order. Before the final hearing the prosecuting attorney intervened in the name of the state, for the use and benefit of Drew county, and filed a complaint against the appellant, asking that the temporary restraining order be set aside, and that appellant be ordered to present a statement of the daily balances of all funds in his custody as treasurer since the restraining order was issued, and the amount of all the funds that he would have delivered to the depository had not the restraining order been issued, and prayed that judgment be entered against the appellant and his bondsmen on the injunction bond at the rate of 5½ per cent. on the daily balances. The court, on final hearing, dissolved the injunction and entered a decree against the appellant and his bondsmen "for damages in the sum of 5½ per cent. on daily balances in the hands of plaintiff, as treasurer, from and after October 2, 1911, until paid, and for all other and further damages that may arise by further delay and appeal from this decree until final settlement," etc. From this decree the appellant duly prosecutes this appeal.

Patrick Henry, of Monticello, for appellant. Williamson & Williamson and R. W. Wilson, all of Monticello, for appellees.

WOOD, J. (after stating the facts as above).

[1] 1. Act 181 of the General Assembly, approved April 12, 1911, is valid. It was recently held by this court that an enabling clause like the one under consideration does not render an act unconstitutional. Ferrell v. Keel, 151 S. W. 269. That case rules this.

[2] 2. The court erred in rendering judgment against the appellant and his bondsmen. The temporary restraining order was not "an injunction to stay proceedings upon a judgment or final order" of the county court. Section 3998, Kirby's Digest; Greer v. Stewart, 48 Ark. 21, 2 S. W. 251; Stanley v. Bonham, 52 Ark. 354, 12 S. W. 708.

[3] The complaint on the information of the prosecuting attorney did not state facts sufficient to give the chancery court jurisdiction to render judgment against appellant and his bondsmen on the injunction bond. In the case of State, for the Use of Columbia County, v. Nabors, 145 S. W. 550, the county brought suit against Nabors, the collector of Columbia county, and his bondsmen to recover interest on funds of the county, which were to be turned into the county depository. In that case the court held that suit could not be maintained against the collector and the sureties on his official bond for the interest that would have been earned until "a determination and adjudication fixing the liability" by the county court. In other words, the court held that the determining of the amount of interest, if any, for which the collector and his bondsmen were liable in that case was within the exclusive jurisdiction of the county court.

It follows from the application of the doctrine of that case to the facts of this record that the chancery court had no jurisdiction to render the judgment herein for damages. To this extent the decree will be modified; and as thus modified it is affirmed.

A person who took possession of leased premises was not excused of liability for the rent by informing the landlord that he was merely acting as attorney for the tenant's creditors, where he did not disclose the names of the creditors, since an agent disclosing the fact that he is agent, but not disclosing the name of his principal, is personally liable.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Craighead County; W. J. Driver, Judge.

Action by Joe Ksir against H. M. Cooley. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

N. F. Lamb, of Jonesboro, for appellant. Hawthorne & Hawthorne, of Jonesboro, for appellee.

HART, J. Joe Ksir instituted this action against H. M. Cooley to recover compensation for the use and occupation of a certain brick storehouse situated in the town of Jonesboro, Ark. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and from the judgment rendered the defendant has duly prosecuted an appeal to this court.

The facts adduced by the plaintiff are substantially as follows: Sam Bryan rented a storehouse from Ksir at $55 per month, and was conducting therein a mercantile business. The defendant, Cooley, as attorney for certain creditors of Bryan, recovered judgments against him, and caused executions to be issued thereon. He threatened to have the executions levied on the stock of goods of Bryan, unless payment was made at once. It was finally agreed between them that Bryan should turn over the keys of the storehouse to Cooley, and let them remain in his possession pending negotiations for a settlement. In pursuance of this agreement, Bryan locked up the storehouse, and turned over the keys to Cooley. Bryan did not thereafter exercise any control over the stock of goods, but allowed them to remain in the storehouse in the possession of Cooley for about two months, at which time bankruptcy proceedings were instituted against him.

The plaintiff, Ksir, testified that about four or five days after Bryan was closed up he went to see Mr. Cooley about his rent, and that Cooley told him he would get dollar for dollar; that later on he went to see Mr. Cooley again, and asked him how long he was going to keep it; and that Cooley answered that he could not tell, it might take him 10 days or it might take him a month; that he again went to Cooley and told him he wanted his house; and that Cooley replied he could not get his house, but would get his rent. H. M. Cooley testified: "When the storehouse was locked up, the keys were handed to me, and my recollection is that I left the keys in the First National Bank, as it was the largest creditor. During the time the store was locked up I went in there several times to see about fastening up things, and to see if anybody was molesting the stock of goods. At the end of about two months a petition in bankruptcy was filed against Sam Bryan, and later on he was adjudged a bankrupt. Shortly after the keys were turned over to me, Mr. Ksir came to my office, and wanted to know about his rent. I told him I was only representing the creditors, and would not be responsible for the rent. Some time later he came back and demanded pay. I told him that I was only representing the creditors, and trying to make a settlement with Bryan, and told him I would not be responsible personally for the rent."

[1] It is undisputed that the storehouse belonged to Ksir, and that Bryan occupied it as his tenant. It is also undisputed that Bryan turned over the keys of the storehouse to the defendant Cooley, who represented certain creditors of Bryan. From this time on Cooley exercised sole control over the stock of goods, and kept possession of the storehouse in which the goods were situated. He admits that he went in there several times to see that the store was properly fastened, and to see if anybody was molesting the goods. Ksir, the owner of the store, acquiesced in him so holding it. From this evidence but one inference can be legitimately drawn, and that is that Ksir was the owner of the store, and that by his permission Cooley held possession of it for two months for the benefit of certain creditors of Bryan. In the case of Dell v. Gardner et al., 25 Ark. 134, the court held: "Where the entry upon the lands of another is peaceable and the occupation acquiesced in, without any agreement, written or verbal, as to rent, the owner may bring an action for use and occupation." See, also, Bright v. Bostick et al., 27 Ark. 55.

[2] But the defendant contends that he told the plaintiff that he would not be personally responsible for the rent; that he was only acting as the representative of certain creditors of Bryan in the matter. It will be noted, however, that he did not disclose to the plaintiff the names of the creditors for whom he was acting. This it was his duty to do if he would excuse himself from responsibility on the ground of agency. The rule is that though the agent discloses the fact he is agent, but does not disclose the name of his principal, he may be held personally liable as principal. Neely v. State, 60 Ark. 66, 28 S. W. 800, 27 L. R. A. 503, 46 Am. St. Rep. 148, and cases cited. In this view of the case, it is not necessary to consider whether the circuit court erred in its instructions to the jury. The judgment upon the facts and the law upon the whole case is right, and will therefore be permitted to stand. Gibbon v. Dillingham, 10 Ark. 9, 50 Am. Dec. 233; St. L. S. W. R. Co. v. Russell, 64 Ark. 236, 41 S. W. 807.

The judgment will therefore be affirmed.

ST. LOUIS & S. F. R. CO. v. NEWMAN.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 11, 1912.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 398*)—INJURIES TO PERSONS ON TRACKS—POSSIBILITY OF STOPPING AFTER DISCOVERING PERIL—EVIDENCE.

In an action for the death of a person killed while riding a speeder on a railway track, evidence held to sustain a finding that the train could have stopped in time to have prevented the injury after the discovery of the deceased on the track.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1356, 1358-1363; Dec. Dig. § 398.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 252*)—INSTRUCTIONS—EVIDENCE TO SUSTAIN.

Though, in an action for the death of a person killed while on a railroad trestle, there was no evidence that he was intoxicated, an instruction that, if the railroad employes had reason to believe from the appearance of the decedent that he was suffering from drunkenness or other cause and was thereby insensible to his imminent danger, they must presume that he might or would not get out of the way, and it was their duty to use proper care to avoid injuring him, was not improper, where there was evidence that, from some cause or other, the decedent had stopped on the trestle with his back to the approaching train when the warning whistle was sounded, as such evidence warranted a finding that he was not aware of his danger; the fact that drunkenness was assigned as the cause of his insensibility being without prejudice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 506, 596-612; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

3. RAILROADS (§ 377*)—INJURIES TO PERSONS ON TRACK—DUTY OF EMPLOYÉS.

Employés who see a person on the track far enough ahead of the train to get out of the way, and who are not aware that he is deaf, insane, or from some other cause insensible to the imminent danger of his position, or unable to get out of the way, may presume that he will do so and may go on without checking the speed of the train until they see that he will not do so, when it is their duty to give extra alarm by bell or whistle, and, if that is not heeded, to stop the train in time to avoid injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 1280; Dec. Dig. § 377.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Crittenden County; Frank Smith, Judge.

Action by S. I. Newman against the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 150 S. W. 560.

W. F. Evans and W. J. Orr, both of St. Louis, Mo., for appellant. A. B. Shafer, of Memphis, Tenn., for appellee.

MCCULLOCH, C. J. The plaintiff's intestate, Hans Nass, was run over and instantly killed by a freight train on a trestle of defendant's railroad near Tyronza, a station in Poinsett county, Ark., and this action was instituted to recover damages for the benefit of the widow and next of kin. Nass was a trespasser on the track, and the question in the case is whether or not the train operatives failed to exercise care, after making discovery of the perilous situation of deceased, to prevent injuring him. The case was tried upon this theory, and the trial resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff assessing damages.

[1] The chief ground urged for reversal is that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the verdict. Nass was a stranger in those parts, and had only been living at Tyronza for a short time. He was accustomed to using, on the railroad, a speeder which belonged to a timber inspector, but did so without permission of the railroad company. On the day that he was killed, he took the speeder and rode it to Deckerville, another station south of Tyronza, and was returning about sundown, when he was run over by the train. There is evidence tending to show that he went to Deckerville for the purpose of getting some whisky at a saloon located there. Only one person witnessed the occurrence except the trainmen themselves. This was a man named Leonard, who was a farmer living a short distance from Tyronza, and who was starting from his field towards his house when it occurred. He walked up on the track, started towards home, when a freight train came from the north, and he stepped off the track to allow the train to pass. As he did so he noticed a man riding a speeder on the trestle. He testified that the man appeared to have stopped. He afterwards measured the distance and found that he was about 2,220 feet from the north end of the trestle when the train passed him. He states that shortly after the train passed and obscured his view of the man on the trestle, the alarm signal was given from the engine by blowing the whistle, and was continued until the train reached the trestle and stopped. His measurement showed that the engine was 1,192 feet from the north end of the trestle when the alarm was first sounded. He did not go down to the trestle to see whether injury had been inflicted, as he supposed, so he states, that the train had been stopped in time to prevent injuring the man; but, after he learned that the man had been killed, he examined the place and saw the evidences of the speeder being knocked from the trestle 94 feet from the end of the trestle. Another witness, who lived at Tyronza, testified that as soon as he heard of the accident he went down to the scene and found the broken speeder lying in the water near the trestle, 50 or 75 yards from the north end. The trestle was 635 feet long and about 30 feet high, spanning a shallow body of water called "Dead Timber Lake." The evidence justified the jury in concluding that Nass, when struck by the train, was sitting on his speeder on the trestle from 90 to 150 feet from the end, and that the trainmen could see that he had stopped. The evidence warranted the conclusion that the trainmen did see him from the fact that they began to give the alarm 1,192 feet from the north end of the bridge, which placed them at that time at a distance of about 1,300 feet from deceased's position on the trestle. There was also evidence to the effect that the train could have been stopped in a distance of from 100 to 200 yards, according to the favorable or unfavorable conditions with reference to the working of the air and the amount of tonnage in the train. In that state of the proof, it is our opinion that the jury were warranted in finding that the trainmen—that is to say, the engineer or fireman—discovered the perilous situation of this man in time to have avoided the injury. They could see him on the trestle, where he appeared to have stopped, and, as they approached him, should have known that he was in a position of peril of which he was insensible or from which it was impossible for him to extricate himself. He was facing north, and one who discovered his presence could see that he was unable to make his escape from the trestle. The fact that the alarm was continued down to the point where the train stopped shows that the trainmen were aware of his peril all during that time, and their failure to stop the train at an earlier moment is sufficient to sustain the charge of negligence. The evidence shows that the engine ran by him some distance before the train was stopped. None of the trainmen testified in the case; therefore it is not shown just how far the engine went by before it was stopped, and the jury were left to draw inferences only from the situation as described by the witness Leonard and the other witness who testified with reference to the place where the broken speeder was found. The defendant did not attempt to account in any way for the happening of the injury or to introduce evidence explaining how it occurred. We are of the opinion that the situation described by the witnesses warranted the inference that the engineer or fireman saw the man on the trestle and was aware of his perilous situation, but failed to exercise ordinary care to prevent injuring him. The verdict is therefore sustained by the evidence.

The court instructed the jury, upon defendant's request, that if the employees in charge of the train saw Nass on the trestle at a distance ahead sufficient to enable him to get out of the way before the train reached him, "and they were not aware that he was deaf or insane or from some other cause insensible of danger or unable to get out of the way, they had the right to rely on human experience and presume that he would act upon the principles of common sense and the motives of self-preservation common to mankind in general and get out of the way, and they had the right to go on without checking the speed of the train until they did see, if they did, that he was not likely to get out of the way," etc. The court, over the defendant's objection, modified the instruction by adding the following: "If, however, Nass was seen upon the track and was known to be or from his appearance gave the operatives of the train good reason for the belief that he was insensible of his danger or unable to avoid it, then they would have had no right to presume that he would have gotten out of the way, but should have acted on the hypothesis that he might not or would not, and then should have used the proper degree of care to avoid injuring him. Failing in this, the railroad company would be responsible in damages if by the use of such care they might have avoided injuring him, if they did injure him. There is no presumption that Nass was insensible of his danger, but that is a fact that would have to be established by the plaintiff by the greater weight of evidence."

[2, 3] The court also gave the following instruction, to which the defendant objected and saved its exception: "(4) The court instructs you further that if from the evidence in this case it has been shown that the decedent, Hans Nass, was upon a railroad bridge near Tyronza Station on the date mentioned, and if it be further shown that the employees of the railroad company operating its railroad train saw him on the track far enough ahead of the train to get out of the way, if you believe from the evidence that they were not aware that he was deaf, or insane, or from some other cause insensible to the imminent danger of his position, or unable to get out of the way, then the agents and servants of the railway company had a right to presume that he would do so, and to go on without checking the speed of the train until they saw he would not do so, it became their duty to give extra alarm by bell or whistle, and, if the agents or servants of the railroad company then saw that that was not heeded, it became their duty to stop the train, if possible, in time to avoid the injury to him. However, if you believe from the evidence in this cause that the servants and agents of the railroad company had reason, from the appearance of the decedent, to believe that he was suffering from drunkenness or other cause, and thereby was insensible to the imminent danger, or was in such a situation as to be unable to avoid it, then the servants and agents of the railroad company must presume that he might or would not get out of the way, and it became their duty to use proper care to avoid injuring him, and, unless they did use proper care to avoid injuring him, the railroad company would be liable, and your verdict should be for the plaintiff." The particular part of this instruction to which objection is made is that which submits the question of the appearance of the deceased as to his insensibility of danger on account of drunkenness or other cause. It is argued that the evidence fails to show that he was in any state of intoxication, and therefore it was erroneous to submit that question. The instruction is abstractly correct. Railroad v. Wilkerson, 46 Ark. 513. It can scarcely be said that there is any testimony in the record that deceased was intoxicated at the time; but the point of the case for submission to the jury is whether or not he was in a position of danger which he failed to appreciate, or whether his position was such that he could not extricate himself from it. The evidence shows that he had stopped on the trestle, and this was sufficient to warrant the finding that he was not aware of his danger and was making no effort to extricate himself. The question was whether or not he was insensible of his danger, and not the cause of his insensibility. This question was submitted to the jury, and we fail to see how there could have been any prejudice from including drunkenness as the cause. Whatever the cause may have been, the jury necessarily found by their verdict, under these instructions, either that deceased was insensible of his danger and was making no effort to extricate himself from it, and that defendant's servants were aware of this, or that he was in a position where he could not extricate himself from the danger even if he knew of it, and the trainmen were aware of that and failed to exercise ordinary care to prevent injuring him. In either event defendant was liable, and there could not therefore have been any prejudice in submitting the question whether drunkenness was the cause of decedent's insensibility to danger, if such was his condition.

Our conclusion is that the case went to the jury upon instructions which fairly submitted the issues and which were in no wise prejudicial to defendant. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

ST. LOUIS, I. M. & S. RY. CO. v. STEED.
(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Oct. 28, 1912.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 270*)—INJURY TO EMPLOYÉ—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE—REPAIR OF APPLIANCE AFTER ACCIDENT.

Evidence of repair of the appliance by the master after the accident is incompetent to show negligence of a master in furnishing a defective appliance by which an employé is injured.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 913-927, 932; Dec. Dig. § 270.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§§ 1031, 1032*)—PRESUMPTION—HARMLESS ERROR—INTRODUCTION OF EVIDENCE.

Prejudice from introduction of incompetent evidence is presumed; so the party introducing has the burden of showing none resulted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4038-4046, 4047-4051; Dec. Dig. §§ 1031, 1032.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence of repairs after an accident resulting from a defective appliance is prejudicial error, especially where counsel for the prevailing party refers to such evidence in his argument.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4153-4160, 4166; Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 253*)—INSTRUCTIONS—OMITTING ISSUES.

An instruction that, if the jury found certain facts, plaintiff should not be regarded as having assumed any danger from the defective appliance, and the jury should find for him if he was injured as he claims, is erroneous, as leaving out defendant's claim of contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 613-623; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 293*)—DUTY TO FURNISH SAFE TOOLS—INSTRUCTIONS.

Refusing an instruction to the effect that the master is only required to use ordinary or reasonable care to furnish safe tools and appliances for use of employes, and giving one that it was defendant's duty to furnish safe tools and appliances for its employes to work with, was error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1148-1161; Dec. Dig. § 293.*]

6. DAMAGES (§ 210*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction in a personal injury case authorizing the jury to find such sum as "in your opinion and judgment" will compensate him is erroneous in not limiting their judgment and opinion to being based on the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 537, 538; Dec. Dig. § 210.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Lawrence County; R. E. Jeffery, Judge.

Action by T. H. Steed against the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

This was a suit by appellee for damages for personal injuries sustained, it was alleged, on account of the negligence of the railway company in furnishing defective appliances with which to perform his work. The answer denies the allegations of the complaint, and pleaded appellee's contributory negligence and assumed risk as a bar to the action.

The facts substantially are that T. H. Steed, a man 72 years of age, was in the employ of the railway company in its roundhouse at Hoxie, Ark., classed as a "wiper," and on April 1st he, with others, was told to clean up the roundhouse, and remove the scrap iron therefrom. This they proceeded to do, and in loading a barrel filled with chips and dust and bits of brass from the lathe he claims to have been injured. He and two others picked up this barrel, which weighed anywhere from 150 to 700 pounds according to the different witnesses, and carried it about 10 feet and set it on the edge of a push car, intending to roll it out to the yards. They did not push the barrel far enough onto the edge of the car to balance, and one of the men desired to change his hold, and asked Steed if he thought he could hold it until he changed. Steed replied, "Yes," and the other turned loose, and the plank in the edge of the car gave down, throwing the entire weight of the barrel against him, and in lifting and holding it he was ruptured. He was at the time earning 16 cents per hour, and was 72 years old. He suffered pain from the injury, which is permanent, and still is unable to work. The push car was about 20 inches high, and had been in use around the roundhouse for some time, had been used by the appellee before, and there was one plank broken, or shivered, rather, not broken entirely in two where the barrel was placed upon it and two broken at the other end. These broken planks were plainly visible to any one seeing the car. During the introduction of the testimony the plaintiff and other witnesses were allowed to state that the car was repaired after the injury, and that it was broken entirely down later by loading a small boiler upon it, and a new top thereafter put on it.

Appellant's counsel objected to all the testimony relating to the subsequent repairing of the car and moved to exclude it from the jury, stating that it made no difference what was done with the car after the accident, to which appellee's counsel replied: "Mr. Campbell is right, but it relates back to the probable condition of it at the time of the injury, and is a recognition on the part of the company that it needed repairing. I would have a right to show that to show that it was broken as my client says it was at the time of the injury, by the means of which he received the injury, I would be permitted to show that to corroborate my client; but I am offering it to show that it was a defective car that was afterwards broken down in the loading of it." The court overruled the objection, to which exceptions were saved.

The court instructed the jury, giving instructions numbered 1, 2, and 4 for plaintiff, as follows:

"No. 1. You are instructed that if you find that plaintiff, T. H. Steed, was engaged in loading the barrel of iron in question on to the push car, and that he was acting under orders of his foreman in so doing, and that the work was such as was his duty to do when so ordered, and that the loading of the barrel on to the car was done in the usual natural and customary manner, and that plaintiff, by reason of his position and place with reference to the barrel, the push car, and those helping him, he could not see or observe any patent or latent defects in the floor of the said car at the point where the floor broke, if you find it did break under the weight of the barrel, he should not be regarded as having assumed any danger risk by reason of the defective plank in the flooring of the car, and you should find for him, if he was injured as he claims he was.

"No. 2. It is the duty of the defendant company to furnish safe tools and appliances for its employes to work with, and if you find that the car floor was defective by reason of its being of too thin or weak plank, or otherwise insufficient to sustain the weight placed upon it, or that there were other latent or patent defects in the floor of the car, and that the defendant with reasonable and ordinary care and diligence could have known of them, or, knowing them, did not apprise plaintiff, and he was injured and damaged thereby, the defendant is liable to plaintiff in damages, unless you should believe from the evidence that the plaintiff also knew of such defects in the floor of the car where it broke under the weight of the barrel, if you find it broke."

"No. 4. If you find for plaintiff, he is entitled to damages for bodily pain and suffering, and upon that point you are authorized to find such sum as in your opinion and judgment will compensate him therefor."

And refused defendant's requested instruction numbered 6, as follows:

"No. 6. The defendant was not an insurer of the plaintiff's safety, and there is no duty resting upon it to guarantee that the machinery, tools, and instrumentalities furnished by it to the plaintiff to work with may not prove defective. The defendant was only required to use reasonable care to that end."

The following statement of appellee's attorney, in argument was also objected to: "It (the push car) had been used for this purpose before and even subsequently it, perhaps, did not break at this particular point, but in loading some other heavy stuff on it, which it ought to have been strong enough to hold, it broke in two in the middle entirely. Said one of the witnesses, 'The whole floor gave away.' It was seen out of commission by this, and later on was seen with new beams and new floor, and used again."

The jury returned a verdict, and from the judgment thereon this appeal comes.

E. B. Kinsworthy, of Little Rock, and S. D. Campbell and Fred Suits, both of Newport, for appellant. T. H. Steed, pro se.

KIRBY, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1-3] The court erred in permitting the introduction of the testimony relative to the repairing of the car after the accident and injury and the argument of counsel complained of thereon. It has often been held that evidence of the subsequent repairing of the defective appliance, after an injury has occurred from its use, is incompetent and not permissible to show negligence of the master in furnishing it. Prescott & N. W. R. Co. v. Smith, 70 Ark. 179, 67 S. W. 865; St. L. S. W. R. Co. v. Plumlee, 78 Ark. 147, 95 S. W. 442; Ft. Smith L. & T. Co. v. Soard, 79 Ark. 388, 96 S. W. 121; Bodcaw Lbr. Co. v. Ford, 82 Ark. 555, 102 S. W. 896; St. L., I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Walker, 89 Ark. 556, 117 S. W. 534. "When incompetent evidence is introduced, prejudice is presumed, and the burden is upon the party introducing it to show that no prejudice resulted." Railway v. Courtney, 77 Ark. 431, 434, 92 S. W. 251; Railway v. Walker, supra. It is not shown in this case that no prejudice resulted from the introduction of the incompetent testimony, but the prejudice was rather increased by the argument of counsel in relation to it.

[4] Instruction numbered 1, given by the court for appellee, was erroneous in leaving out entirely the appellant's claim of contributory negligence upon his part, and concluding, after a statement, that, if they should find certain facts, he "should not be regarded as having assumed any danger risk by reason of the defective plank in the flooring of the car, and you should find for him if he was injured as he claims he was." We do not think this conclusion amounts to directing the jury, as appellant claims, that they should find for appellee in any event, if he was injured as he claimed to be, but only that, if they found certain facts, then appellee had not assumed the risk, and was entitled to recover. It was erroneous, however, in directing them that they could find for appellant under certain conditions if he did not assume the risk without taking into account the defense of contributory negligence. Helena Hardware Co. v. Maynard, 99 Ark. 377, 138 S. W. 469.

[5] The second instruction is confusing and incorrect, as was the suggestion in the latter part of the instruction numbered 1 given on the court's own motion in saying "it is the duty of the defendant to furnish safe tools and appliances for its employes to work with." This was attempted to be remedied later on in the instruction, but ineffectually. The law only requires that the master shall use ordinary or reasonable care to furnish safe tools and appliances for the use of employes (Railway v. Gaines, 46 Ark. 567; Railway v. Rice, 51 Ark. 479, 11 S. W. 699), and instruction numbered 6, as requested by appellant, was a correct statement of the law on this point, and amounted to a specific objection to the incorrectness of instruction numbered two on that account, and the court erred in refusing to give the one and in giving the other as requested.

[6] Instruction numbered 4 left the jury to their opinion and judgment as to the amount of damages they should award for bodily pain and suffering, instead of limiting their judgment and opinion to being based upon the testimony, which they could not, of course, arbitrarily disregard.

We have not examined the other instructions with a view to approving them.

For the errors indicated, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

KEOPPLE & McINTOSH v. DELIGHT LUMBER CO.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 11, 1912.)

1. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—SALE—CONTRACT—BREACH—RIGHT OF RECOVERY.

Plaintiff, who contracted to furnish timber, and who attempted to avoid the contract by selling the same timber to third persons at a time when the defendant was satisfactorily discharging the contract, could not recover a sum deposited to secure the fulfillment of the contract, as one who commits the first substantial breach can have no action for the opposite party's subsequent failure to perform.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Cent. Dig. §§ 6-12; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

2. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—CONTRACTS—BREACH—WAIVER.

Though the purchaser of timber failed to comply with provisions of the contract in regard to the inspection of logs and the making of weekly payments for logs delivered, and the seller gave notice of an intention to consider the contract at an end, such provisions were for the benefit of the seller, and where after such notification it shipped logs, and during the whole life of the contract accepted payment in a method different from that specified, there was a waiver of such terms, and the failure to comply with them cannot be relied on as a breach.

Appeal from Pike Chancery Court; James D. Shaver, Chancellor.

Action by Keopple & McIntosh against the Delight Lumber Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and rendered.

The appellants and the appellee Lumber Company entered into a contract whereby the Lumber Company agreed to sell to the appellants "all the white oak and hickory timber owned by them on nine forties of land" in Pike county of certain kinds and dimensions specified in the contract. The contract, among other things, provides as follows: "The purchasers agree to keep a man in the woods to pass on all logs as they are being cut and to accept all logs which are offered by the company that will meet the specifications and to reject any logs that may be offered which will not meet the above specifications, and said inspection shall be final. The company agrees to cut and deliver all of said timber as above described f. o. b. cars of the St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern Railway Company at Delight, Ark. The purchasers agree to pay $20 per thousand feet for all white oak and hickory timber. Said purchasers agree to pay for all logs delivered at Delight, f. o. b. the cars by the company, on Monday morning of each week, for all logs delivered in the past week, and to keep on deposit with the Bank of Delight $1,000 as a guarantee that they will carry out the terms of this contract, said $1,000 to be turned over to the company upon the failure of the purchasers to comply with the terms of this contract, otherwise to be subject to the orders of the purchasers. The said company agrees to begin the execution of this contract within thirty days from this date, and to continue as rapidly as is consistent without interfering with the regular operation of their sawmill. All timber as herein agreed upon shall be delivered within twelve months from this date. Logs to be scaled with 'Doyle's scale stick.' The contract was executed on the 29th day of March, 1910. The appellants deposited $1,000 in the Bank of Delight in pursuance of the contract, and the parties entered upon its performance.

This suit was instituted by the appellants against the appellees in the chancery court of Pike county to recover the $1,000 that had been deposited by the appellants with the Bank of Delight. The appellants in their complaint set up the contract, and alleged that the same had been complied with by the parties to it until September 19, 1910; that on that day the appellee Lumber Company notified the appellants that it considered the contract void, and thereafter would refuse to comply with or perform the contract on its part. The appellants set up that the Lumber Company had declared the sum of $1,000 forfeited, and had demanded payment of the same; that appellants had made demand on the Bank of Delight for the $1,000, which it had refused to pay, and they prayed that the sum be adjudged to be a special deposit to guarantee the performance of the contract by appellants that the same be declared a penalty; and that the receiver of the bank be instructed to pay the same to them. The Lumber Company, in its answer, set up that the notice given to appellants on the 19th day of September, 1910, that it would consider the contract void was sent out long after appellants had violated the contract "by refusing to inspect and receive logs in the woods," and by refusing at various times "to pay for logs loaded on cars at Delight," and by notifying the Lumber Company that it could not accept logs until such time as the appellant might be in position to handle same. The Lumber Company also denied that the appellants had complied with the conditions of the contract in any manner. The Lumber Company also denied that the deposit of $1,000 was a penalty, and alleged that it was intended by the parties as liquidated damages in case of breach of the contract on the part of appellant, and the Lumber Company therefore prayed that the receiver of the bank be directed to pay the $1,000 to it. The court found that the Lumber Company "in all things complied with its part of the said contract; that the plaintiff failed and refused to comply with the terms of the said contract by their failure and refusal to receive logs after they had been notified and requested by the defendant Delight Lumber Company to do so," and further found "that the said $1,000 was intended by the parties, at the time they entered into the said contract, to be liquidated damages in case the contract was breached by the plaintiff."

Carmichael, Brooks & Powers, of Little Rock, for appellant. Geo. A. McConnell and Sam T. Poe, both of Little Rock, for appellee.

WOOD, J. (after stating the facts as above). The appellee Lumber Company is not in a position to insist on a forfeiture to it of the $1,000 in controversy, for the reason that a clear preponderance of the evidence shows that it committed the first substantial breach of the contract. The contract required the Lumber Company "to sell to appellants all hickory owned by them ten inches in diameter and up" on the land mentioned in the contract. The appellants both testified that, after the Lumber Company had cut a car and a half of hickory, they positively refused to cut any more. Bowers, the agent representing the Lumber Company, in charge of the woods where the cutting was done and "whose authority was recognized in all working departments," told appellants that he never intended to deliver the balance of the hickory logs under the contract. Appellants stated that they thought there must have been some 250,000 feet left standing on the ground after the delivery of the car and a half that had been cut, containing about 7,300 feet. This testimony of appellants was corroborated by another witness, who testified that he heard a conversation between Keopple and Bowers concerning the hickory as follows: "They asked me how many feet I had and I told them a little bit over 7,300 feet, and Bowers said, 'Is that all?' and I told him it was, and he said 'We can't get out any more at that price." Bowers in his testimony denied this, but the preponderance of the evidence on this issue was in favor of appellants.

[1] This conversation according to the undisputed testimony took place some time early in May, 1910. The testimony shows that the Lumber Company never shipped any more hickory after that time. At the time this breach of the contract occurred there was no complaint on the part of the Lumber Company that appellants were not complying with the contract on their part. On the contrary, the president and general manager of the Lumber Company testified that appellants carried out their contract "fairly well for a period of something over four months." The testimony shows that the first car load of logs under the contract was shipped on April 16th. Four months from that day would be August 16th. Therefore, according to the testimony of the president and general manager of the Lumber Company, appellants were performing their contract fairly well up until after August 16th. Yet as early as August 5th the Lumber Company was conducting negotiations with Nickey & Sons Company, at Memphis, Tenn., for the sale of the timber which it had already contracted to appellants. On the above date August 5, 1910, the Lumber Company wrote Nickey & Sons Company as follows: "We have 500,000 feet or more of extra fine white oak timber. We would like to sell you this," etc. Again on August 9th: "We stated that we had 500,000 feet or more of fine white oak. We have possibly a great deal more than this. Please let us hear from you with reference to smaller sizes by return mail," etc. The manager of the Lumber Company testified that the logs referred to in the above letters were the same timber that was included in the contract with the appellants. The above testimony shows, at least, an attempt on the part of the Lumber Company to avoid its contract with appellants at a time when it is conceded by the Lumber Company that appellants were satisfactorily discharging the contract on their part. The law is well settled that "he who commits the first substantial breach of a contract cannot maintain an action against the other contracting party for a subsequent failure on his part to perform." National Surety Co. v. Long, 125 Fed. 887, 60 C. C. A. 623, and cases there cited; National Surety Co. v. Long, 79 Ark. 528, 96 S. W. 745.

[2] The appellees claim that the appellants had breached the contract by failing "to keep a man in the woods to pass on all logs as they were being cut and to accept all logs," etc., and by "failing to pay on Monday morning of each week for all logs delivered in the past week." These provisions of the contract were for the benefit of the appellee Lumber Company, and the testimony shows that whatever technical breach-as there may have been in these particulars were waived by the appellee Lumber Company. Bowers, the agent of the Lumber Company to make the inspection, testified concerning this as follows: "After the first week, Mr. Keopple and myself had a talk, and we agreed that I knew about what he wanted, and it was not necessary for him to stay there. He didn't have anything else there to do, and I thought I could get the logs out to suit him. We agreed that he would take up the logs once a week. He agreed to come and take the logs up as often as we needed to get them out of the way. He didn't always do that; failed two or three times." Concerning the subject of payment under the contract, the president testified that "it was satisfactory to the Delight Lumber Company for these invoices to be rendered to the firm of Keopple & McIntosh as the logs were loaded out and for them to mail a check on receipt of these invoices for the amount thereof." And, again: "It was understood that they were to mail us checks for them as soon as the invoices and bills of lading were received. That was perfectly satisfactory when they did that." The above testimony shows that a literal compliance with the provisions of the contract as to the inspection and as to the manner of payment was not insisted on by the Lumber Company, but that a different arrangement from that stated in the contract was made and pursued with the Lumber Company's express consent.

On the 12th of September, 1910, the appellants received from the Delight Lumber Company the following telegram: "Mr. Keopple did not come to take logs to-day as promised. If you fail to come or send a man to arrive here to-morrow to take logs, also pay for those shipped last week, we will consider contract void and make no further shipment of logs. Shipped two cars to-day." Yet, after sending this telegram, the testimony shows that the Lumber Company shipped out logs under the contract on September 14th and 15th, as shown by the invoices in evidence which the Delight Lumber Company rendered to the appellants. There is an agreement in evidence to the effect that the appellants were not indebted to the Lumber Company for logs shipped under the contract. Therefore the Lumber Company must have received payment for the logs as shown by the invoices of the 14th and 15th of September. As late then as the above dates, and after the Lumber Company had telegraphed the appellants that it would consider the contract void, we find it acting under and recognizing the existence of the contract. The testimony on behalf of the appellants tended to show that as early as possible after receiving the telegram one of the appellants went to Delight to make the inspection and take up the logs. Witness says: "When I got that telegram, I was at home. My family was sick. I went down there the next day."

All the conduct of the Lumber Company as revealed by the testimony shows that there was a waiver of any breach of the contract that there might have been upon the part of the appellants. After the Lumber Company gave notice by the telegram that it would consider the contract as void, it continued to recognize it as binding by making shipments of timber under it, and accepting the payments for those shipments. On the 19th of September, 1910, the Lumber Company wrote to appellants as follows: "This is to again notify you that owing to your persistent and continued failures to come and receive our logs, as per terms of contract, as well as violations of the contract by you in other respects, we are compelled to hereafter treat the contract as void, and govern our actions accordingly." But, before the Lumber Company gave the appellants this notice of a final intention on their part to treat the contract as rescinded for alleged breaches thereof on the part of the appellants, it had already breached the contract on its part and abandoned same by selling the timber included in the contract to Nickey & Sons Company of Memphis, Tenn., as evidenced by correspondence of the Lumber Company with Nickey & Sons Company in the record which it is unnecessary to here set forth.

We are therefore of the opinion that the court erred in its finding of fact and in declaring a forfeiture. The conclusion we have reached makes it unnecessary to determine whether the provision in the contract for the deposit of $1,000 was in the nature of a penalty or liquidated damages. The judgment is therefore reversed, and judgment will be entered here in favor of appellants for $1,000.

OAK LEAF MILL CO. v. LITTLETON.

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§§ 101, 102, 278*)—DUTY AS TO APPLIANCES AND PLACE TO WORK.

On the question of negligence of the master in furnishing appliances and a place to work, the test is what a reasonably prudent person would ordinarily have done in like circumstances; and what was the custom of others under like conditions and circumstances is evidence, but not conclusive, of what such a person would ordinarily do.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§§ 286, 289*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in an action for injury to a log scaler in a sawmill from logs rolling against him while on the log deck, held to make a question for the jury as to negligence because of the log deck being constructed with two unfastened planks in it, and also as to contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1001, 1006, 1010-1050; Dec. Dig. §§ 286, 289.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 129*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Leaving two planks unfastened in the floor of a log deck in a sawmill was the proximate cause of the injury to the log scaler, where, when he was on the deck in the course of his duty, a knot in a log rolled down, struck the lower end of one of the planks, throwing up the other end, striking against other logs, and causing them to roll down on him; the result being one a person of ordinary experience and sagacity could foresee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 427-435, 437-448; Dec. Dig. § 129.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 219*)—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

A servant does not assume, as incident to his employment, risks from latent defects in appliances or place of work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 610-624; Dec. Dig. § 219.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 296*)—INSTRUCTIONS—IGNORING EVIDENCE.

Where, in other instructions, the jury had been expressly told that their finding of negligence, or not, must be based on the evidence, an instruction explaining what constituted negligence, and stating that if they believed a certain thing was done, and was negligence, and caused plaintiff's injury, he, unless guilty of contributory negligence, was entitled to recover, is not objectionable as leaving the jury to believe defendant negligent, regardless of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 705-713, 715, 716, 718; Dec. Dig. § 296.*]

6. DAMAGES (§ 132*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—EXCESSIVE VERDICT.

A verdict of $1,500 for injury to the ankle of a log scaler was not excessive; he having been confined to his room a month, and at the trial, four months later, testifying his ankle was still stiff, and that he suffered great pains, and that it still pained him; and there being evidence that the injury was permanent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 372-385, 396; Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

Kirby, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Hot Springs County; W. H. Evans, Judge.

Action by William Littleton against the Oak Leaf Mill Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This is an action by a laborer against his employer to recover damages for injuries received in the course of his employment. The facts in the case are substantially as follows:

The Oak Leaf Mill Company is a corporation engaged in the operation of a sawmill, and is the defendant in this action. The plaintiff, William Littleton, was a log scaler for the company, and his duties required him to pull the logs up into the mill from the millpond, scale them, kick them out on the log deck, and keep them down against the saw carriage, where the sawyer could throw them on his carriage by a mechanical appliance call a "trip." Littleton's duties made it necessary for him to go at times to all parts of the log deck to keep the logs down where the sawyer could reach them. He was injured on the 20th day of September, 1911, and had been at work in the position of scaler for about one year before he was injured. About one month before his injury, the mill company constructed a new log deck. This log deck is situated in the east end of the sawmill. The log deck is an inclined platform, sloping from north to south, with a gradual fall of 3 feet from the highest to the lowest point. It is 18 feet long from north to south, and between 24 and 26 feet wide from east to west. Attached to the log deck, and running north and south the length of the deck and parallel to one another, were skid rails, along which the logs were rolled from the upper to the lower side of the deck. These skids were placed at a distance of about 6 feet apart, and were between 6 and 8 inches higher than the deck floor. The deck was floored with planks 2 inches thick and 12 inches wide. The planks were nailed down upon heavy sills, which are 8 inches thick and 8 inches wide. All of the planks in the floor are nailed down, except two at the lower side of the deck. The two unfastened planks are between 5 and 6 feet in length, and have the same width and thickness as the other planks in the deck floor. They are situated something like halfway between the east and west side of the deck, and are located on the lower side of the deck. An appliance, called the "nigger bar," is situated directly beneath these two unfastened planks. The two unfastened planks rest upon the first and second sills, and their upper ends are supported by the second sill and fit up against the end of the other planks of the floor, which are nailed to the sill. Their lower ends are supported by the first sill, and extend over the sill from 5 to 6 inches. The two unfastened boards are made to fit the other parts of the floor. To keep them in place and prevent their slipping, cleats of wood are nailed upon the under side of the two planks at both ends and fit up against the sides of the two sills, which support the boards. In this way the two planks are fitted into the floor of the deck, so that they can be taken out and placed back without delay and inconvenience. The purpose of this is to enable the operatives to get to the bolts and other attachments of the nigger bar, which are located under the deck floor at this place, and by means of which the nigger bar is adjusted. Parallel with the south or lower side of the log deck, and adjacent to it, is the carriage track, along which the saw carriage runs. The logs were loaded from the deck on the saw carriage by means of a loading appliance, which is situated at the lower end of the deck and operated by a lever in the sawyer's stand. This loading appliance consists of what is called a "trip," or "nigger bar," and the loader. The nigger bar is a perpendicular iron bar set back in the log deck some 3 feet from the edge of the deck which is next to the carriage track. It is about halfway from the east and west side of the deck. The trip or nigger bar is secured by means of bolts and other attachments beneath the deck floor. South of the nigger bar, and between it and the edge of the log deck, is the loader. This is a cylindrical shaft of iron, some 4 inches in diameter, running east and west across the deck floor, and attached to the floor in such a manner as to enable the sawyer to operate a lever and make the loader seize the logs and throw them on the carriage. Attached to the loader, and extending at right angles with it, are iron arms, or knives, about 2½ feet long, which reach out and take hold of the logs on the deck which are to be loaded on the carriage.

William Littleton testified: "I had been working as log scaler for the defendant company about one year before I was injured. My duties made it necessary for me to go at times to all parts of the log deck to roll the logs down to where the sawyer could reach them. On the day I was injured, I had pulled up from the pond and kicked out on the log deck enough logs to make the deck about half full. Some of the logs had knots on them and stopped on the inclined platform, so there were no logs nearer the saw carriage than about four feet. This made it necessary for me to move the logs down where the sawyer could get to them with his trip. The log nearest to the sawyer's carriage had a knot in it, and I took my cant hook and shoved the log down at its east end. I then went to the west end and pushed the other end of the log down. This left the other logs standing between four and five feet from the lower end of the log deck. They were stationary because of the small knots in the logs, which kept them from rolling on down the log deck. After I had shoved the first log down, I started to go back across the deck from the west to the east, and walked between the log I had already shoved down and those which were stationary under the deck above me. While walking back across the deck, and just as I got about midway and stepped on one of the unfastened planks, the sawyer, being ready for the log which I had pushed down next to the carriage, worked his trip, and, the log being by the trip turned forcibly, it fell, with a knot striking the projecting end of one of the unfastened planks with such force that it caused the upper unfastened end to fly up. The upper unfastened end, when it flew up, struck one of the logs with such force that it jarred the logs loose and caused them to roll down towards me. Because of the fact that I was on the unfastened plank that flew up, I became unbalanced, and in jumping towards the east to get clear of the logs I was caught by one of the logs rolling down on my foot before I could get in the clear, and my foot was badly crushed. The old log deck had all of the planks on it nailed down. The deck floor was habitually covered with bark and trash, and the fact that the two planks were not nailed to the floor was not noticeable, and I did not know that they were not nailed down like the rest of the floor."

Another witness for the plaintiff testified that he was a scaler for the mill company, and that a day or two before he had seen the loose planks kick up by having a log roll over and strike the lower end of them. He said the upper end of the loose planks would jump up when the logs struck the lower end.

The sawyer for the mill company testified that just before Littleton was hurt it was not necessary for him to operate the trip and throw a log on the carriage, because he already had one on there. He said that he did not operate the trip. He said that he never operated the trip until he was ready to place another log on the carriage; and that when he was ready to do this he made a fuss with the trip to give the scaler notice.

The dogger on the saw carriage testified that he was looking at Mr. Littleton when the injury occurred. He said it was his duty to watch him so he did not roll the logs so far that they would run on the carriage; that when Mr. Littleton was hurt he was rolling down the logs himself; that he had his shoulder against the handle of his cant hook, trying to roll a log down; that the log he was prying at broke loose from the other logs, and the one just behind it rolled down on Mr. Littleton before he could get out of the way.

W. N. Mosley testified: "I am the foreman of the defendant's mill, and have been engaged in the sawmill business about 17 years. For the first 10 years I was engaged in construction work, and during the last 7 years in the operation of sawmills. During my employment in construction work, I have built log decks for sawmills. I know what is considered a good log deck. I have examined log decks at other sawmills. The log deck at the mill of the defendant, where Mr. Littleton was hurt, is about the same as other log decks. I constructed it, and left the two planks unfastened in order that we might get down where the nigger bar was and adjust the bolts when it became necessary. It is necessary very frequently to adjust the bolts of the nigger bar. The logs do not, as a usual thing, roll down and cause the planks to kick up. They could not kick them up on account of the shaft on the other side of the mill. They go under the shaft, and I do not see how anything could go higher than that shaft. It could not go higher than four inches. It only extends about three inches over the shaft, and the logs rolling down there could not knock them and make them go higher than the shaft. It is the customary method of constructing log decks to have loose planks, like the ones in question, so as to take them out. I have not worked in any mill where they did not have the loose boards in the log deck. I never saw any mill that did not have the loose boards in the log deck, as we have them here. I do not see how the boards would kick up if a rolling log with a knot on it were to roll down and strike the end of the boards, because the shaft extends over the sill, as I have already indicated. The planks go under the skids and extend over the sill. If a log rolls down with a knot on it, the knot would not strike the two planks on account of the shaft. You would have to take the shaft out before it would."

William Littleton, recalled, testified: "Q. Mr. Littleton, you heard what Mr. Mosley there testified with reference to that shaft preventing that plank from kicking up. Under the circumstances, I wish you would explain to the jury just how that is—I will ask you, first, is he, or is he not, mistaken about what he says? A. Well, I will make my statement, and they can say for themselves. Now, this shaft runs across under there for these rollers to hang on. It is about five inches above the floor, and when a log has a knot on it it runs down and strikes under that shaft, and when it strikes down there this plank flies up. The knot can go in between this shaft and the end of these boards, and that throws that up, like that. (Indicating.) Q. There is nothing, then, to prevent a knot from striking that plank there and kicking that plank up, just like that, or just like it did do? A. No; there is nothing to prevent it from doing that; and he can describe it just like I can, and he knows it done it."

Other facts will be stated or referred to in the opinion.

The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, and from the judgment rendered the defendant has appealed.

T. D. Wynne, of Fordyce, for appellant.
J. C. Ross, of Malvern, for appellee.

HART, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] The defendant adduced evidence tending to show that the log deck in question was built like those in common use by other sawmills. Counsel for the defendant insists that, inasmuch as the master is not bound to use the newest and best appliances, he performs his duty when he furnishes those which are in common use and are reasonably safe; and that the former is the test of the latter. There is an irreconcilable conflict of opinion upon the question whether or not the master, in furnishing appliances for the servant, has fulfilled his duty in this regard by furnishing those which are ordinarily used in the business. An extended discussion and citation of authority on both sides of the question will be found in the case note to Niko Wilta v. Interstate Iron Company, 103 Minn. 303, 115 N. W. 169, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 128.

A careful consideration of the question leads us to the conclusion that the contention of the defendant is not sound. It is true that a master is only bound to exercise ordinary care to furnish his servant a safe place in which to work. Holmes v. Bluff City Lumber Co., 97 Ark. 180, 133 S. W. 819; Ozan Lumber Co. v. Bryan, 90 Ark. 223, 119 S. W. 73.

In the case of Wilcox v. Hebert, 90 Ark. 145, 118 S. W. 402, we held: "A master is only held to the exercise of ordinary care, proportionate to the danger to be incurred, in the selection of reasonably safe machinery and appliances, and in keeping them in proper condition; and it is not an insurer of the safety of the appliances furnished, nor bound to supply any particular kind of machinery, nor to use any particular character of safeguard against danger." But the controlling test of the exercise of reasonable care is not what has been practiced by others in like situation, but what a reasonably prudent person would have ordinarily done in such a situation. A bad custom may have grown up through ignorance or selfishness.

The jury were required to test the character of the defendant's conduct by what a reasonably prudent person would ordinarily have done in the like circumstances, as disclosed by all of the evidence, including that relating to the conduct and practice of others. What was the custom of others under like conditions and circumstances is evidence of what a reasonably prudent man would ordinarily do; but it is not conclusive evidence of that fact. Prof. Wigmore, in discussing this phase of the question, says: "The distinction is, in itself, a simple one:

(1) The conduct of others evidences the tendency of the thing in question; and such conduct—e. g., in using brakes on a hill, felt shoes in a powder factory, railings around a machine, or in not using them—is receivable with other evidence showing the tendency of the thing as dangerous, defective, or the reverse. But this is only evidence. The jury may find from other evidence that the thing was in fact dangerous, defective, or the reverse, and that its maintenance was, or was not, negligence in spite of the above evidence. (2) Meanwhile the substantive law tells them what the standard of conduct for negligence is; and this standard is a fixed one, independent of the actual conduct of others. To take that conduct as furnishing a sufficient legal standard of negligence would be to abandon the standard set by the substantive law, and would be improper. This conduct of others, then, (1) is receivable as some evidence of the nature of the thing in question, because it indicates what is the influence of the thing on the ordinary person in that situation; but (2) it is not to be taken as fixing a legal standard for the conduct required by law. This distinction is patent enough; but it is sometimes judicially ignored. Such evidence is sometimes improperly excluded on the erroneous supposition that the mere reception of it implies that it is to serve as a legal standard of conduct. The proper method is to receive it, with an express caution that it is merely evidential, and is not to serve as a legal standard." Wigmore on Evidence, vol. 1, par. 461. See, also, Labatt on Master and Servant, vol. 1, par. 50; Chicago Great Western Ry. Co. v. McDonough, 161 Fed. 657, 88 C. C. A. 517; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Moore, 166 Fed. 663, 92 C. C. A. 357, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 963.

[2] It is next insisted by counsel for defendant that there was no negligence on its part, and that the court erred in refusing to take the case away from the jury. As we have already seen, it is the duty of the master to exercise ordinary care in seeing that the servant is provided with a reasonably safe place in which to work, and in default thereof he is guilty of negligence. Where a master furnishes, or causes to be built under his direction and control, a platform, scaffold, staging, or like structure for the use of his servant in the prosecution of his work, it is his duty to exercise ordinary care to see that it is reasonably safe for the purpose contemplated. 26 Cyc. 1115. The general rule is that, where the facts are such with respect to the negligence of the parties that reasonable minds might differ with respect thereof, the case should go to the jury.

The alleged defect in the log deck was a structural one. The evidence on the part of the plaintiff shows that in the discharge of his duties he was required at times to go on all parts of the deck; that frequently when the logs were started by him down the deck they would stop rolling on account of the knots in them, pinning them to the floor; that in such cases he was required to go down and take a cant hook and roll them down to the foot of the deck near the saw carriage; that the deck in question had two loose boards, which had cleats on the under side to keep them in place, but which were not nailed down to the sills like the other planks in the floor; that these unfastened planks fitted closely into the other parts of the flooring; and that on this account, and because of the accumulation of shavings on the deck floor, he was not aware that the planks were not nailed down. On the day he was injured, a lot of logs had accumulated on the upper part of the deck, and failed to roll down to the lower end of it because of some knots in the logs. The plaintiff took his cant hook and rolled one of these logs down the deck next to the saw carriage. He says that on his way back from the west to the east end of the deck he had occasion to walk across these unfastened planks, and that just as he stepped on one of them the sawyer worked the trip, and this caused the log at the lower end of the deck to strike the unfastened plank and make it fly upwards. The plank, as it flew upwards, struck the mass of logs piled above them on the floor of the deck with such violence as to dislodge them, and they rolled down and crushed his foot. The evidence on the part of the defendant shows that it was necessary to construct the log deck with these unfastened planks, in order to go down under the deck to adjust the nigger bar, when it became necessary. Evidence was also adduced by it tending to show that this was the usual and customary way to construct log decks. It will be observed that the two planks had cleats nailed on their under side to keep them in place, so that the planks were constructed in the nature of a trap-door. At but little cost, hinges or other fastenings could have been put on them, so that when a log with a knot on it struck the lower part of the planks they would not fly up. The evidence for the defendant also tends to show that the injury did not happen as testified to by the plaintiff himself, but that the plaintiff himself started the logs to rolling by pulling on them with his cant hook.

It is also insisted by counsel for defendant that the case should have been taken from the jury, because the physical facts are opposed to the testimony given on the part of the plaintiff. We cannot agree with him in this contention. The plaintiff himself testified that the injury occurred as detailed above. Another witness for the plaintiff testified that he was a log scaler at the defendant's mill, and had seen the unfastened planks fly up by reason of a log with a knot on it striking the lower end thereof. He said this had occurred only a day or two before the day he testified. The undisputed testimony shows that the unfastened planks extended about five inches over the sill next to the saw carriage, and, according to the testimony of the plaintiff, there was sufficient room for a log with a knot on it to strike the lower end of these unfastened planks and cause them to fly up. The shaft extended in a parallel direction to the lower end of the deck floor. The plaintiff said that a knot could go between this shaft and the end of the unfastened plank; that there was nothing to prevent the knot from striking the plank and kicking the plank up.

Under all the facts and circumstances adduced in evidence, we think both the question of the defendant's negligence and the plaintiff's contributory negligence were properly submitted to the jury. As bearing on the question, and as illustrative cases, we cite the following: Oak Leaf Mill Co. v. Smith, 98 Ark. 34, 185 S. W. 333; Doyle v. Missouri, K. & T. Trust Co., 140 Mo. 1, 41 S. W. 255; Rice & Bullen Malting Co. v. Paulsen, 51 Ill. App. 123; Burnside v. Peterson, 43 Colo. 382, 96 Pac. 256, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 76.

[3] It was contended by counsel for defendant that the leaving of the two loose boards in the log deck floor was not the proximate cause of the accident; but we cannot agree with his contention. It is a fundamental rule of law that to recover damages on account of unintentional negligence of another it must appear that the injury was the natural and probable consequence thereof, and that it ought to have been foreseen in the light of the attending circumstances. St. L., I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Bragg, 69 Ark. 402, 64 S. W. 226, 86 Am. St. Rep. 206; St. L., I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Buckner, 89 Ark. 58, 115 S. W. 923, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 458; Pulaski Gas Light Co. v. McClintock, 97 Ark. 576, 134 S. W. 1189, 1199, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 825.

From the evidence it appears that it was the duty of the plaintiff to go at times on all parts of the deck floor. The logs, by reason of having knots on them, frequently lodged on the deck floor, and the plaintiff was required to pry them apart and roll them down next to the saw carriage. According to the testimony of the plaintiff, it would sometimes happen that when the sawyer worked the trip on a log with a knot on it the knot would strike one of these loose boards and cause the upper end to fly up. That the end which flew up might strike logs which had lodged just above it and cause them to roll down was an occurrence which might reasonably have been anticipated and regarded as likely to happen.

Inasmuch as the plaintiff's duty required him to be on all parts of the log deck, and as, according to his testimony, he had no notice, and could not be charged with notice, that the planks were not nailed down to the floor, the injurious consequences of such an accident as did happen might have been avoided if the defendant had nailed the unfastened planks to the floor, or had warned the plaintiff that they were not nailed down. When the situation of the plaintiff with reference to his work is considered, we are of the opinion that a man of ordinary experience and sagacity could foresee that the result which did happen might ensue.

[4] Little need be said on the question of the assumption of risk. The alleged defect was a structural one, necessarily known to the master. A servant is bound only to see patent defects, and he does not assume the risks arising from latent defects or dangers in the machinery, appliances, or place furnished for his use by the master. Archer-Foster Construction Co. v. Vaughan, 79 Ark. 20, 94 S. W. 717. As we have already seen, the deck floor was nailed down, except the two short planks, and, according to the testimony of the plaintiffs, these planks fitted up closely to the other part of the deck floor, and the whole floor was habitually covered with bark and trash, so that the fact of the two planks not being nailed down was not apparent. Therefore the risk was not an obvious one, and for that reason was not one assumed by the plaintiff as an incident to his employment, and the question of assumed risk was properly submitted to the jury.

[5] It is next insisted by counsel for defendant that the court erred in giving the following instruction to the jury: "The court instructs the jury that it was the duty of the plaintiff, in the performance of his duties of employment, to exercise ordinary care for his own safety; and it was also the duty of the defendant company to exercise ordinary care in furnishing plaintiff a reasonably safe deck floor on which to perform his duties and work. If, in the construction of said deck floor, defendant left unfastened planks so fitted up against the ends of other planks as not to be noticeable, and if you believe this was negligence, and further believe such negligence caused plaintiff's injuries to his foot and ankle, as charged in the complaint, then, unless the plaintiff was guilty of negligence causing or contributing to his own injury, or assumed the risk of injury, he is entitled to recover in this case."

Counsel for the defendant insists that the instruction leaves out of consideration entirely the evidence in the case, and, in fact, tells the jury to find for the plaintiff if they believe that defendant was negligent in the construction of its log deck, regardless of the testimony in the case. We do not think the instruction is susceptible of that construction. The court in another instruction had told the jury what the relative duty of the plaintiff and defendant to each other was, and had expressly told them that their finding of negligence, or not, must be based upon the evidence. The court explained to the jury what constituted negligence on the part of the defendant, and manifestly, by the language used in this instruction, did not intend to tell the jury it might set up an arbitrary standard of negligence of its own, but, on the contrary, meant to tell the jury that negligence on the part of the defendant must be found by them from the evidence introduced in the case, under the law as given them by the court.

[6] Finally, it is contended by counsel for defendant that the verdict is excessive. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $1,500. The plaintiff was confined to his room for one month. He testified that his ankle was still stiff, and that he could only walk with difficulty. Other evidence was introduced by him tending to show that his injury was permanent. The plaintiff testified that he suffered great pain from the injuries, and that his foot pained him at the time of the trial, which was nearly four months after the injuries were received by him. Therefore we do not think the verdict is excessive.

The judgment will be affirmed.

1. EVIDENCE (§ 243*)—DECLARATIONS.

Declaration of a coemployee, immediately after a servant's injury, that if he had done his duty and made them as he should it would not have happened is inadmissible against the master, not being part of the res gestæ, but a mere narrative of a past occurrence.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 218*)—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—PATENT DANGERS.

On the question of assumption of risk by a mature but inexperienced employé, bringing poles to be bent into hoops, by one end being put between two pieces of wood three or four feet long driven in the ground, and the other end then being pulled over and placed between two like pieces, held, under the evidence, that, while the danger of the pole breaking or slipping from between the pieces of wood, when being pulled down, was obvious and patent, the danger of one of the pieces of wood pulling up was not; so that he did not assume the risk thereof, unless he was warned or appreciated the danger.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pulaski County; F. Guy Fulk, Judge.

Action by R. F. Goodwin against the River, Rail & Harbor Construction Company. Judgment for plaintiff; defendant appeals. Reversed, and remanded for new trial.

Appellee instituted this action against appellant to recover damages for personal injuries received by him while working for appellant. Appellant was engaged in the work of preventing banks of rivers from caving. It used the Gabion system. The system is patented, and is so arranged that it changes the current of the river where it is washing. As a part of the system, poles of wood, bent in the form of a half circle and fastened together, are used. They are called hoops. The hoops are made in the following manner: Two stobs of wood, 3 or 4 feet long, are driven in the ground about 12 or 14 inches. They are placed far enough apart to put between them one end of the poles which it is desired to bend. Men then take hold of the other end of the pole and pull it around and place it between other stobs similarly driven in the ground, so that the pole forms a half circle. The men are required to pull, instead of push, the end of the pole around, because it is less dangerous. For instance, if the men were at work on the outside pushing the pole around, and it should break or slip from between the stobs, they would be more likely to be injured than if they stayed on the inside and pulled the pole around. For this reason those engaged in making the hoops were required to work on the inside. On the day appellee was injured, other servants of appellant were engaged in making hoops in the manner above described. Appellee and another servant of appellant were engaged in carrying poles from a boat, tied to the river bank, to a place in front of the hoops. He was injured by one of the poles flying out from its fastening and striking him on the leg, just as he was passing along there with one end of a pole on his shoulder.

Appellee details the circumstances attending his injury as follows: "I was a farmer, and had never been engaged in any other occupation. I am 45 years of age. I did not want to work for appellant, because the business was new to me, and I was afraid I would get hurt. They first engaged me to dig holes in the ground and bury logs in them, for the purpose of securing the Gabions thereto. After I had worked on this for a few days, I was told to assist in carrying poles and placing them in front of the hoops, which were being made by other servants of the company. We had only carried three or four poles at the time I was injured. The pole we were carrying at the time I was injured was 5 or 6 inches thick at the butt, and about 18 or 20 feet long. We had carried it from the boat, and were traveling along a beaten path to place it in position at the side of and somewhat in front of the hoop that was being made. Just as we came opposite the stobs they had driven in the ground, and started to make the turn, one of the stobs pulled out of the ground. This released the pole which was being bent into the hoop, and the end flew around and struck me on the leg, breaking it. I did not know it was dangerous to go in front of the hoops when they were making them. I thought the stakes were put in the ground deep enough to hold them. I saw the men at work making the hoops, and saw that they were staying inside the hoops while making them, but supposed they did so because they could pull more on the inside than they could push if they were on the outside. It did not occur to me that standing on the inside and pulling was safer than standing on the other side and pushing. I was in about 4 or 5 feet of the stob when it pulled out of the ground. At the time I got hurt, they had not fastened the pole. They had just got it to the stake, and were fastening it down when the stob pulled out. I was not warned of the danger of working around the hoops." Other evidence was adduced by appellee tending to corroborate his testimony and to show the character and extent of his injuries.

Appellant adduced evidence tending to show that appellee, in carrying the poles out at one time, stepped over the hoops in the performance of his task, and had been warned not to do that any more, because it was dangerous. Other evidence for appellant tends to show that the stob did not pull out but that the pole slipped from between the stobs and flew back and struck appellee breaking his leg. Other evidence will be referred to in the opinion.

The jury returned a verdict for appellee and the case is here on appeal.

Coleman & Lewis, of Little Rock, for appellant. Jas. A. Gray and Geo. A. McConnell, both of Little Rock, for appellee.

HART, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] Appellee testified that a Mr. Taylor was a servant engaged in the making of hoops, and was standing about 10 or 15 feet away when he was injured. Appellee said that Taylor came to him at once when he was injured, and when asked, "What did he say?" answered: "He said, if he had been doing his duty and making them like he should have made them, it wouldn't have happened, and he wouldn't have had it happen for a hundred dollars; and I was in so much pain I didn't pay any attention." This testimony was permitted to go to the jury over the objections of the appellant, and the action of the court in this respect is now assigned as error. We think the assignment is well taken.

Counsel for appellee seek to uphold the ruling of the court by the decision in the case of Beale-Doyle Dry Goods Co. v. Carr, 85 Ark. 479, 108 S. W. 1053, 14 Ann. Cas. 48. There the excited declarations of a child to his father, while plaintiff was lying injured at the bottom of the elevator shaft, and before he had been discovered, that a man had pushed the elevator door open and walked in, were held to be admissible on the issue of whether the door was left open or not. The remark of Taylor was not competent. It did not illustrate or explain how or what caused the accident. His statement was not so connected with the transaction as to characterize and be a part of it. What Taylor said could give character to nothing that happened. It could neither qualify nor explain it. It was a mere narrative of a past occurrence depending for its force and effect solely on the credit of Taylor, unconnected with the act done, and receiving no credit or significance from the accompanying circumstances. It was not therefore competent as original evidence in the matter of res gestæ. Ft. Smith Oil Co. v. Slover, 58 Ark. 168, 24 S. W. 106; Little Rock Traction & Electric Co. v. Nelson, 66 Ark. 494, 52 S. W. 7; Stecher Cooperage Works v. Steadman, 78 Ark. 381, 94 S. W. 41; St. L., I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Pape, 100 Ark. 269, 140 S. W. 265; Caldwell v. Nichol, 97 Ark. 422, 134 S. W. 622.

The declaration was not made by an officer in the appellant company having the right to break for it and bind it by declarations of that kind. It follows from the authorities appealed to that we have already cited that the declaration was improperly admitted, and was prejudicial to the appellant. In Jones on Evidence, § 357, the rule is stated as follows: "The declaration of an employé or officer as to who was responsible for an accident, or as to the manner in which it happened, when made at the time of the accident or soon after, have been held incompetent, as against the company, on the ground that his employment did not carry with it authority to make declarations or admissions at a subsequent time as to the manner in which he had performed his duty; and that his declaration did not accompany the act from which the injuries arose, and was not explanatory of anything in which he was then engaged, but that it was a mere narration of a past occurrence."

[2] It is next contended by counsel for appellant that the evidence did not warrant the verdict. In the case of Arkansas Midland Ry. Co. v. Worden, 90 Ark. 407, 119 S. W. 823, the court said: "When an employé takes service with his employer, he impliedly agrees to assume all the obvious risks of the business, including the risks of injury from the kind of machinery then openly used, as well as the method of operating the business then openly observed. * * * This is the rule which applies to an employé of mature years and experience in the particular work or business; for there is no duty on the part of the master to warn an experienced servant of obvious dangers, as they are among the ordinary incidents of the service, and he is bound to take notice of these, and must be presumed to have realized and appreciated such dangers. * * * But the rule is different as to a servant who, by reason of youth or inexperience in the particular work, does not fully realize and appreciate the danger. In that case it is the duty of the master to give proper instructions, and to warn the inexperienced servant of patent as well as latent dangers. * * * And before the inexperienced servant can be presumed to have realized the danger and assumed the risk it must be shown that he was instructed and warned of it."

Appellee was 45 years of age, and was in possession of all of his faculties. He had lived in the country all his life, and was a farmer. The danger from a pole breaking as it was being pulled around, in order to fashion it into a hoop, was patent and obvious to any one. It may also be said that the danger arising from one end of the pole slipping out from between the stobs while the pole was being bent was an obvious and patent danger. The rule is that the master is not required to explain patent dangers which are ordinarily incident to the services, and which it may be reasonably expected, under all the circumstances, the servant can see and appreciate. But we do not think that the danger arising from one of the stobs pulling up was an obvious and patent one, under the evidence detailed by appellee. He says that he had never seen any work of that kind done, and was wholly without experience as to the method of doing it; that he informed appellant of his ignorance and inexperience before he commenced to work for it; that appellant put him to work carrying poles and placing them in front of and a little to one side of the hoops. The stob in question, which pulled up, had only been driven down that afternoon, and was pulled up while the first hoop was being made. Under these circumstances, the jury might have found that it was the duty of appellant to have informed appellee of the way he should travel to place the poles in the position where he was directed to put them, and to have instructed and to have cautioned him sufficiently to have enabled him to comprehend the danger of the stob pulling out. If the circumstances were such that the appellant owed it as the duty to appellee to instruct him, and it failed to do so, and appellee was injured on account of its failure to do so, appellant was liable in damages for the injury. On the other hand, the appellant testifies that on one trip, in carrying a pole, appellee walked over the hoop, and that he was warned of the danger of so doing. Whether appellee knew or ought to have known what caution was necessary for him to use, while walking along the path in the performance of his work of carrying the poles, in order to avoid the injury that he received, or appreciated the danger of the failure to use such caution, or had received the necessary instruction and warning before the injury, was properly a question for the jury.

Other assignments of error are pressed upon us for a reversal; but the views we have already expressed render it unnecessary to discuss them. The assignment in regard to the arguments of appellee's counsel before the jury is not likely to arise on a retrial of the case, and the principles of law that we have already announced will be a sufficient guide for the court in instructing the jury.

For the error in admitting the declaration of Taylor, the judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

1. STATUTES (§ 40*)—ENACTMENT—STYLE OF BILL.

Const. art. 5, § 19 (Kirby's Dig. § 18), provides that the style of the laws shall be, "Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of Arkansas," and article 5, § 1, provides that the legislative powers shall be vested in the General Assembly, which shall consist of the Senate and House of Representatives. The latter section was amended by the initiative and referendum amendment to the Constitution so as to provide that the legislative powers shall be vested in the General Assembly consisting of a Senate and House of Representatives, but reserving to the people the power to propose amendments to the Constitution, and the powers of initiative and referendum with reference to statutes and, after defining such powers, the amendment provides that "the style of all bills shall be, 'Be it enacted by the people of the state of Arkansas.'" Held, that the provision as to the style of bills referred only to bills initiated by the people under the amendment, and did not repeal section 19, so that all bills initiated and enacted by the General Assembly are still properly styled, "Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of Arkansas."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 43, 44; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 18*)—CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS—CONSTRUCTION.

In determining the intention in framing a constitutional amendment, the court must keep in view the Constitution as it existed before it was amended, the evil to be remedied by the amendment, and the terms of the amendment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 13, 17; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 18*)—AMENDMENTS—CONSTRUCTION.

Any interpretation of a constitutional amendment which would conflict with any other provision or is not absolutely necessary to effectuate the amendment should not be indulged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 13, 17; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 24*)—AMENDMENT—ABROGATION OF PRIOR PROVISIONS.

In order that a constitutional provision may be abrogated by another provision, there must be an irreconcilable conflict between the purposes of the two provisions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 21-29; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 24*)—REPEAL BY IMPLICATION.

Repeals by implication are not favored even in case of statutes, and certainly not in case of long-enacted constitutional provisions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

6. STATUTES (§ 47*)—CERTAINTY—CREATION OF DRAINAGE DISTRICTS—DESCRIPTION OF BOUNDARIES.

Act approved March 9, 1911 (Sp. & Priv. Laws 1911, p. 184), creating the Village Creek and White River levee district, in defining the boundaries of the district failed to locate the stopping point of the district line in section 2, township 10 north, range 3 west, which was the end of the first call, and insufficiently defined the course through sections 1, 2, 11, 10, 9, and 16 in township 9 north, range 3 west, and did not fix the line along White River, but left it to be placed where deemed most practical. Held, that a statute creating a levee district must define its boundaries with certainty or provide for that being done by some other agency, and the act in question was invalid for not describing the territory proposed to be embraced with sufficient certainty.

Hill and McCollum, Special Justices, dissented in part.

Appeal from Jackson Chancery Court; Geo. T. Humphries, Chancellor.

Action by John W. Ferrill and others against John H. Keel and others. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded, with directions to overrule demurrer and grant relief.

McCaleb & Reeder, of Batesville, and Jno. W. & Jos. M. Stayton, of Newport, for appellants. Stuckey & Stuckey, of Newport, and Morris M. Cohn, of Little Rock, for appellees. T. S. Osborne, of Fort Smith, amicus curiae.

HARROD, Special Judge. The judges of the Supreme Court having certified to the Governor their disqualification to determine the validity of the enacting clause of the act involved in this suit, this special court was appointed by the Governor under section 9 of article 7 of the Constitution to determine this cause. The General Assembly of this state, at the 1911 regular session, created the Village Creek and White River levee district by an act approved March 9, 1911 (Sp. & Priv. Laws 1911, p. 184). The commissioners of the district organized, selected assessors and engineers, and proceeded to assess the lands of the district for the levee tax. Various landowners commenced suit in the Jackson chancery court to enjoin the proceedings. A demurrer was interposed to their complaint, and it was sustained, and, electing to stand on their complaint, their suit was dismissed, and they appealed to this court to reverse that decree.

The appellants urge here, among others, the following grounds for reversal: First. That the act is void because its enacting clause is, "Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of Arkansas." Second. That the boundaries of the district are so indefinitely described by the act that the land subject to the tax could not be definitely ascertained, and that the act was therefore void.

[1] The style of the act in question is, "Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of Arkansas." Is that style of bill or enacting clause valid since the adoption of the initiative and referendum amendment? The amendment is as follows: "That section 1, article 5, of the Constitution of the state of Arkansas be amended so as to read as follows: 'Section 1. The legislative powers of this state shall be vested in a General Assembly, which shall consist of the Senate and House of Representatives, but the people of each municipality, each county and of the state, reserve to themselves power to propose laws and amendments to the Constitution and to enact or reject the same at the polls as independent of the Legislative Assembly, and also reserve power at their own option to approve or reject at the polls any act of the Legislative Assembly. The first power reserved by the people is the initiative, and not more than 8 per cent. of the legal voters shall be required to propose any measure by such petition, and every such petition shall include the full text of the measure so proposed. Initiative petitions shall be filed with the Secretary of State not less than four months before the election at which they are to be voted upon.' The second power is a referendum, and it may be ordered (except as to laws necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety) either by the petition signed by 5 per cent. of the legal voters or by the Legislative Assembly as other bills are enacted. Referendum petitions shall be filed with the Secretary of State not more than ninety days after the final adjournment of the session of the Legislative Assembly which passed the bill on which the referendum is demanded. The veto power of the Governor shall not extend to measures referred to the people. All elections on measures referred to the people of the state shall be had at the biennial regular general elections, except when the Legislative Assembly shall order a special election. Any measure referred to the people shall take effect and become a law when it is approved by a majority of the votes cast thereon and not otherwise. The style of all bills shall be, 'Be it enacted by the people of the state of Arkansas.' This section shall not be construed to deprive any member of the Legislative Assembly of the right to introduce any measure. The whole number of votes cast for the office of Governor at the regular election last preceding the filing of any petition for the initiative or for the referendum shall be the basis on which the number of legal votes necessary to sign such petition shall be counted. Petitions and orders for the initiative and for the referendum shall be filed with the Secretary of State, and in submitting the same to the people he and all other officers shall be guided by the general laws and the acts submitting this amendment until legislation shall be specially provided therefor."

The amendment proposes to amend section 1 of article 5 of the Constitution. That section is as follows: "The legislative powers of this state shall be vested in a General Assembly, which shall consist of the Senate and House of Representatives." No other section or article of the Constitution of 1874 is mentioned in the amendment. Section 19 (section 18 in Kirby's Digest) of article 5 of the Constitution reads as follows: "The style of the laws of the state of Arkansas shall be: 'Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of Arkansas.'"

The question is, Was this provision of the Constitution abrogated by the initiative and referendum amendment? Is this specific provision of our organic law to be treated as no longer in force? It is claimed that it was annulled by this provision of the initiative and referendum amendment: "The style of all bills shall be, 'Be it enacted by the people of the state of Arkansas.'" So the question we are to consider involves the construction of the initiative and referendum amendment in relation to the enacting clause of this act. Two constructions are open to the court. It may be held that section 18 is abrogated by the amendment, or it may be held that it remains in force as not affected by the amendment. The correct decision of the case involves nothing but the application of rules of law that must govern the court in the construction of the amendment.

[2, 3] By what rules of law should we be governed? More than 60 years ago, in the case of State v. Scott, 9 Ark. 270, Mr. Justice Walker, in a case involving the construction of an amendment to the Constitution, said: "In determining the intentions of the framers of the amendment, we must keep in view the Constitution as it stood at the time the amendment was made, the evil to be remedied by the amendment, and the amendment proposed, by which the evil is to be remedied. No interpretation should be allowed which would conflict with any other provision of the Constitution, or which is not absolutely necessary in order to give effect to the proposed amendment. On the contrary, such construction should be given as will, if possible, leave all the other provisions in the Constitution unimpaired and in full force." These rules of construction were laid down at an early day, when the jurisprudence of our state was in its infancy, but none better have been proposed at any time or any place. Let us try this case by these rules of construction and see what the result will be. How did the Constitution stand when the amendment was adopted? It provided that all legislative power was in the General Assembly (section 1, art. 5), and that the style of all laws should be, "Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of Arkansas." Section 19, art. 5. Now what was the evil the initiative and referendum amendment was designed to remedy? It is well known that it was the failure of the legislative department of the state government to respond to the will and wishes of the people. This failure sometimes took one form and sometimes another. Sometimes it was the failure or refusal to enact laws the people wanted; sometimes it was in passing laws the people did not want passed. Now, how were these evils to be remedied? By adding to existing legislative power—the power of the people to pass the laws they wanted—and by diminishing the legislative power to the extent of permitting the people to pass upon and approve or reject laws enacted by the General Assembly. The evil to be remedied was not the style of the bills, but the substance of the bills. The people were not specially concerned with the style of enacting clause, but they were profoundly interested in the provisions of the laws. The initiative and referendum amendment was not intended to interfere with the ordinary processes of legislation, nor was it intended in any manner to entirely abolish the legislative power of the General Assembly. It was intended as a supplement to the existing legislative power, on the one hand, and as a curb or restraint on that power, on the other hand. The amendment was not intended in any sense as an abandonment of representative government, but rather its very aim and purpose was to make government representative.

In construing this amendment, it is our duty to keep constantly in mind the purpose of its adoption and the object it sought to accomplish. That object and purpose was to increase the sense of responsibility that the lawmaking power should feel to the people by establishing a power to initiate proper, and to reject improper, legislation. If the adoption of this amendment creates in the minds of Senators and Representatives a true sense of their responsibility to the people, and thereby makes the legislative department of the government truly representative, its wise and beneficent purpose will have been accomplished if no bill is ever initiated and no legislative act is ever referred. But a new method of legislation being provided for by the amendment—that is, the right of the people to initiate legislation—it became both important and necessary that the style of laws enacted by the people should be provided for in the amendment. Was the style of any bills or laws except those to be initiated by the people contemplated, considered, or in any manner thought of, by the framers of the initiative and referendum amendment? Why should we suppose that they were thinking of anything else except the business they had in hand. The business they had in hand was to establish a power in the people to legislate and to provide a manner of exercising that power. Was the style of laws enacted by the General Assembly material to the procedure of the people in enacting laws? We are sure that the people knew, when they adopted the initiative and referendum amendment, that the great bulk of legislation would continue to be enacted by the General Assembly; that the initiative would only be used and the referendum invoked on great and important questions. When they spoke of the style of bills, were the framers of the amendment thinking about the exercise of the old legislative power of the General Assembly, or were they thinking about the exercise of the new power they were creating? We are told that no interpretation should be allowed that would conflict with any other provision of the Constitution. If we hold that the words of the amendment that the style of all bills shall be, "Be it enacted by the people of the state of Arkansas," apply to bills passed by the General Assembly as well as to bills initiated by the people, the interpretation will be in direct conflict with section 19, art. 5, which says that the style of laws of the state of Arkansas shall be, "Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of Arkansas." Is an interpretation that will cause a conflict between section 19, art. 5, and the amendment necessary to give full effect to the amendment? Not at all. The fullest possible effect is given to the amendment when it is said that bills initiated by the people shall be styled, "Be it enacted by the people of the state of Arkansas." So far as the introduction or presentation of bills is concerned, the amendment refers only to laws initiated by the people, and necessarily, when it speaks of the style of bills, it means bills for the introduction and presenting of which it is providing. From the object to be attained, the mischief to be remedied, the language used, its position in the text, and its relation to other language used, we entertain no doubt that this conclusion is sound.

Now it is our duty to construe the amendment, if possible, so as to leave other provisions of the Constitution unimpaired and in full force. Why not leave section 19, art. 5, in full force? It is said that if this construction is adopted, bills enacted by the General Assembly will have one style, "Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of Arkansas," and that bills initiated by the people will have another style, "Be it enacted by the people of the state of Arkansas." This, of course, is true, but what of it? Is that a matter of such importance that it will justify us in disregarding the provisions of the Constitution? Is there anything out of the way, unusual, unreasonable, or extraordinary in having one style for laws enacted by the General Assembly and a different style for laws initiated and enacted by the people? Instead of being unreasonable, it seems to us wholly reasonable and logical. What is the object of the style of a bill or enacting clause anyway? To show the authority by which the bill is enacted into law; to show that the act comes from a place pointed out by the Constitution as the source of legislation.

It is clear, from the canons of construction we have taken for our guide, that section 19 of article 5 must stand, unless it is expressly repealed, or unless it is in conflict with or repugnant to the amendment. Of course it was not expressly abrogated, for it was not referred to. It is equally true that it is not in conflict with or repugnant to the initiative and referendum amendment. They are not in conflict because one relates to legislation by the General Assembly and the other relates to legislation initiated by the people. They could only be repugnant if the initiative and referendum amendment covered the whole scope of legislation. This, in our judgment, it did not do. The amendment not only does not deal with the whole scope of legislation, but it shows on its face, affirmatively, that it is only creating an additional legislative power and regulating the manner of its exercise. Instead of dealing with the whole scope of legislation, the initiative and referendum amendment leaves absolutely untouched the many provisions of the Constitution contained in article 5 that relate to the exercise of legislative power by the General Assembly.

[4] Before any court would be justified in holding a provision of the Constitution abrogated on account of repugnancy to some other provision, it must appear that there is an irreconcilable conflict between the purposes of the provisions that are claimed to be repugnant. Surely there is nothing of that kind here.

[5] Repeal by implication is not favored, even in the construction of ordinary acts of the General Assembly, and certainly such repeal should not be favored when applied to long-established provisions of the organic law. It is said that the words "all bills," in the initiative and referendum amendment, mean "all bills," from whatever source they emanate. In our opinion they mean all bills that were being considered, that were in the minds of the proposers of the amendment; that is to say, bills that were to be initiated by the people.

We have endeavored to follow rules of construction that have been formulated by the wisdom of ages, and they lead us irresistibly to the conclusion that section 19, art. 5, of the Constitution of 1874, is still unimpaired and in full force as to all bills not initiated by the people. The principles of law and rules of construction that support the view we have reached are so elementary and well established that citation of authority is deemed unnecessary. In our judgment, any other conclusion would do violence to the language used and would violate all cardinal rules of construction. In these views Mr. Special Justice HOUSE and Mr. Special Justice WALKER concur, and we unite in holding that the style of the bill in question in this case is proper and that the act is not invalid because of the style of its enacting clause.

Mr. Special Justice HILL and Mr. Special Justice McCOLLUM dissent from the foregoing opinion wherein it holds that the act with the style, "Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of Arkansas," is valid, for these reasons: This was the style prescribed by the successive Constitutions of the state from 1836 to 1874, inclusive, and is still the necessary style unless the initiative and referendum amendment has changed it. The initiative and referendum amendment re-enacts section 1, art. 5, of the Constitution, vesting the legislative power of the state in the General Assembly, consisting of the Senate and House of Representatives, and adds thereto a reservation to the people of the right to legislate themselves through the initiative and referendum therein incorporated into the organic law. This court has recently held that the initiative and referendum amendment suspended the operation of all acts passed by the General Assembly until 90 days after its adjournment, and, if within that time a proper referendum petition was filed against any act (except emergency acts), it is suspended until adopted by the affirmative vote of the people, and also that the referendum extends to all acts passed by the General Assembly (except the emergency bills permitted it to exercise free of this right), even extending unto local bills. The amendment prescribes the number of votes necessary to adopt any measure submitted to the people, and provides that the people or the General Assembly may submit amendments to the Constitution, or measures, for adoption or rejection, at general elections, or special elections to be called to vote thereon. The lawmaking power of the state is thereby revolutionized, and all of it vested, affirmatively or negatively (save, alone, a limited class of emergency acts), in the people themselves. The power of the referendum may not be exercised, but the people have a given time in which to exercise it, and the absence of its exercise is as certainly an approval of an act as active exercise of it by its adoption at the polls. It is similar to the veto power of the Governor. He has a given number of days after the adjournment of the Legislature to approve bills, and, if he fails to do so, the bill becomes a law without his approval, and he, by his nonaction, when he has a right to act, as positively approves a measure as if he signed it. And thus the people have the right to determine all legislation, either affirmatively or negatively. In the amendment carrying to the people this power is the clause in question, "The style of all bills shall be, 'Be it enacted by the people of the state of Arkansas.'" As long ago as 1871, this court, in Vinsant v. Knox, 27 Ark. 266, held that the constitutional provision that the style of all bills should be, "Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of Arkansas," was mandatory, and that a bill without this style (or substantially this style) was void, although otherwise regularly passed and approved. Therefore the people knew that the style of a bill could not be disregarded, and it was vital before they incorporated this clause in the initiative and referendum amendment. When they provided in this amendment that the style should be, "Be it enacted by the people," they deliberately changed a vital part of bills from the style prevailing since the state was admitted into the Union.

It is argued that this applies only to initiated bills, but the law is not so written. It plainly says "all bills." Moreover it is found in the sections specially dealing with the referendum and, from context and position, necessarily applies to referred bills. The amendment deals with initiated and referred measures and becomes a substitute for the pre-existing law wherever the old provisions are inconsistent with the new. It makes radical changes in the existing Constitution, and one of the provisions of the existing Constitution prescribes that the style should show enactment by the General Assembly. Both clauses cannot stand—one applying to bills enacted by the General Assembly, and the other applying to bills initiated or referred—because any bill may be referred (with the exceptions noted), and it will not be known until after the adjournment what bills are referred. Every act passed might be referred and every one adopted, and their adoption would be by the people, not the General Assembly; and every act might be defeated and none become laws. No act might be referred, in which event, by negative action, the people permitted acts of the General Assembly to become laws after 90 days from its adjournment. Thus it is seen that it is consistent with the new order of things for the source of the power to be disclosed in the face of an act, and not consistent with that power for the old source of authority—the General Assembly—to appear on the act when, in fact, it was no longer concerned in the enactment except, in the few instances of emergency, legislation permitted the General Assembly free of the control of the people by direct action. The wisdom of making the formal part of an act vital may well be questioned, but that is not for the court to determine. The adoption of this amendment determines that the people themselves are the source from which all legislation emanated directly, and no longer remained in their Representatives other than as they, after examining their work, concluded to approve it by nonaction. This new style of a bill was to give emphasis to the new method of legislation, and it is an outward form and expression of this concrete fact.

The Oregon court, in considering the effect of a constitutional amendment upon provisions in the existing Constitution not consistent with it, said: "There is no express repeal; they simply cease to exist by reason of new provisions on the subject being substituted for them." Ex Parte Prindle (Cal. App.) 94 Pac. 871. That is exactly the situation in regard to section 19, art. 5, of the Constitution of 1874. By reason of this new provision prescribing the form of enacting clause for all bills, it ceased to exist, and this new style was then substituted therefor. Therefore we conclude that an enacting clause, running in the name of the General Assembly, is invalid since the adoption of the initiative and referendum amendment, and all bills, before they can become laws, must have an enacting clause substantially as prescribed in the amendment. "Be it enacted by the General Assembly" cannot be substantial compliance with "Be it enacted by the people." Each has a definite meaning. Each indicates the source of power giving force to the act. Each represents its day and the stage of popular government of that day. They are not interchangeable; they present different thoughts, different views, different hopes, and, mayhap, different illusions. The use of one is not equivalent to the use of the other so as to fulfill the rule of substantial compliance.

With the conclusion of Special Justices HILL and McCOLLUM as to the validity of bills enacted by the Legislature, upon its own initiative, bearing the style, "Be it enacted by the people of the state of Arkansas," Special Justices HOUSE and WALKER concur, but for reasons different from those expressed by Justices HILL and McCOLLUM; Justices HOUSE and WALKER holding that the style of such bills is a substantial compliance with the provisions of section 19 of article 5 of the Constitution, and that therefore any bill bearing the title, "Be it enacted by the people of the state of Arkansas," is a valid enactment, whether it be enacted by the General Assembly or initiated and enacted by the people. Vinsant v. Knox, 27 Ark. 266; Jackson v. State, 142 S. W. 1153. With this view I do not concur, as I do not think the enacting clause, "Be it enacted by the people of the state of Arkansas," is a substantial compliance with section 19, art. 5, of the Constitution.

[6] That leaves for our consideration the question as to whether or not the district is invalid because of the alleged uncertainty of the description of the territory proposed to be embraced therein. We understand the law to be that, when the Legislature creates a levee or other improvement district, it must define its boundaries with certainty, or provide for the same being done by some other agency. The Legislature undertook to define the limits of this district. We have carefully considered the act, and hold that it fails to define the limits of the district with sufficient certainty to determine what lands are included therein. Among other defects in the description are these: The stopping point of the line of the district in section 2, township 10 north, range 3 west, being the end of the first call, is not located. The course through sections 1, 2, 11, 10, 9, 16, in township 9 north, range 3 west, is not sufficiently defined. The line along White River is not fixed, but is left to be placed where it is deemed most practical. There are other defects in the description, but we do not discuss them, as those already mentioned are sufficient to defeat the act for uncertainty in the description of the territory proposed to be embraced therein. We hold the act invalid for this reason.

The cause is therefore reversed and remanded, with directions to the court below to overrule the demurrer and grant the petitioners the relief prayed.

ALF BENNETT LUMBER CO. v. WALNUT LAKE CYPRESS CO.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 11, 1912.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 147*)—INTERPRETATION.

The purpose of the interpretation of a contract is to ascertain the intent of the parties as shown by the circumstances surrounding the making of the contract, its subject, the relation of the parties, and the sense in which the words would be commonly understood.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 730, 743; Dec. Dig. § 147.*]

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 33*)—TERMINATION OF AGENCY—EXPIRATION OF TERM.

A contract between a manufacturer of cypress lumber and a company engaged in the business principally of selling pine lumber, and which had to make some changes in the conduct of its business to enable it to successfully sell cypress lumber, making such company the manufacturer's exclusive sales agent and providing that it should remain in force as long as the manufacturer was operating its plant and until the lumber it then owned and should in the future purchase should have been cut into lumber, did not authorize the manufacturer to terminate it at any time by ceasing to operate its mill, but required that it should not be terminated until the lumber owned by the manufacturer, tributary to its mill, should have been cut into lumber.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. § 54; Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 41*)—FALSE REPRESENTATIONS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action against a manufacturer of lumber for breach of its contract making plaintiff its exclusive sales agent, evidence held insufficient to show that plaintiff's representations as to its ability to sell lumber were false, assuming that they amounted to more than a mere expression of opinion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

4. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 33*)—BREACH—WAIVER.

Where the president of a corporation, which had made another company its exclusive sales agent and had also borrowed money from such company, with knowledge of breaches of the contract by such other company, requested the cancellation of the agency contract and, upon a refusal, solicited and received a further loan, it waived the breaches of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. § 54; Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

5. DAMAGES (§ 40*)—BREACH OF CONTRACT—PROSPECTIVE PROFITS.

A party agreeing to perform work for another and prevented from so doing by the other may recover the profits which the evidence makes it reasonably certain that he would have made if permitted to carry out the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 72-88; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

6. DAMAGES (§ 163*) — BURDEN OF PROOF — PROFITS.

The party suing to recover profits lost through defendant's breach of a contract has the burden of proving the amount of its damages therefrom.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 454-459; Dec. Dig. § 163.*]

7. CORPORATIONS (§ 628*) — DISSOLUTION — PAYMENT OF DEBTS.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 958, providing that, when a corporation surrenders its charter, the chancery court shall have jurisdiction to pay its debts and distribute its assets, a liability of the corporation arising from its wrongful cancellation of a contract is a debt of the corporation for which the assets are liable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 628.*]

Appeal from Jefferson Chancery Court; Jno. M. Elliott, Chancellor.

Action by the Alf Bennett Lumber Company against Walnut Lake Cypress Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and rendered.

Appellee, Walnut Lake Cypress Company, was a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Arkansas on February 16, 1907. Its stockholders were E. P. Ladd, C. S. Bacon, W. B. Craft, and R. E. Schulze. Mr. Ladd was president, and Mr. Craft was secretary and treasurer and was in the active management of the business. It does not appear that the other two stockholders took any active part in the business. The corporation was organized for the purpose of owning and operating a sawmill for the manufacture of cypress lumber. The company owned about 25,000,000 feet of cypress lumber situated near Walnut Lake, Ark., and the mill was built and operated at that point. The sawmill had not been built at the time of the incorporation of the company, and it did not commence to operate until May, 1908. In the fall of 1907 the company, being pressed for money to finish the erection of the mill, opened negotiations for a loan with the appellant, Alf Bennett Lumber Company, located at St. Louis, Mo. The latter company was engaged in the business of selling the output of various lumber mills. Alf Bennett was the president of the company, and Mr. Ladd, president of the Walnut Lake Company, had known him for several years. Ladd gave Craft a letter of introduction to Bennett. Craft then went to St. Louis and asked Bennett for a loan of a sum of money, which it was afterwards agreed to be $15,000. The indebtedness was to be evidenced by short-time notes which were to be extended from time to time until the Walnut Lake Company began to sell its output. As an inducement to the Alf Bennett Company to make this loan, Craft proposed that the two companies should enter into a contract by which the Bennett Company should have the entire charge of selling the output of the Walnut Lake Company. Such a contract was finally agreed upon. It was dated October 16, 1907, and is as follows: "This agreement, made and entered into on the 16th day of October, 1907, between the Walnut Lake Cypress Company, a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the state of Arkansas, party of the first part, and the Alf Bennett Lumber Company, a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the state of Missouri, party of the second part, witnesseth: Whereas, the party of the first part is operating a sawmill for the manufacture of cypress, oak and gum lumber and lath at Walnut Lake, Arkansas; and, whereas, it is deemed mutually advantageous for the party of the second part to be the exclusive sales agent for the party of the first part for its entire cypress, oak and gum manufactured products aforesaid, for the period of time hereinafter set out in this contract, and upon the terms and conditions set out; now, therefore, to that end it is agreed between the parties hereto as follows: First. The party of the first part agrees that, during the life of this contract, the party of the second part shall be its exclusive sales agent for the sale and marketing of the entire cypress, oak and gum manufactured products of its sawmill and plant as aforesaid. Second. As such sales agent, the party of the second part shall fix the selling price of said manufactured products, subject to the approval of the party of the first part, and shall pay the party of the first part the same price that they obtain for such products. Third. In the event that the party of the first part receives orders for any of its cypress, gum and oak lumber products direct from proposed purchasers or through any sources other than the party of the second part, such orders shall be filled upon the direction and order of the party of the second part. Fourth. All shipments shall be made and billed and invoiced to the persons and as directed by the parties of the second part. Fifth. The party of the second part agrees to guarantee the payment of the net amount (after deducting commissions of the party of the second part) upon all shipments sold and delivered through orders secured by the party of the second part, within fifteen (15) days from the date of invoice or invoices for such shipments. Sixth. In the event that upon shipments paid for by the party of the second part the purchaser shall make deductions on account of the grade of the lumber shipped, or because of damage in transit, the party of the second part shall be credited by the party of the first part with the amount of such deductions, and adjustments shall be made between the party making such deductions and the party of the first part. Seventh. The party of the second part for its services shall be entitled to, and may retain out of any settlements made with the party of the first part, a commission of 5 per cent. upon the net amount of invoices for all shipments, after deducting freight, in addition to the regular 2 per cent. discount for cash. Eighth. In view of the fact that settlements between the parties hereto on account of shipments will often be made on estimated freight charges, it is agreed that monthly corrections and adjustments of the accounts of the parties hereto shall be made on or before the 10th day of each calendar month throughout the year. Ninth. This contract shall be and remain in force and effect as long as the party of the first part is operating their plant at that point, and until all the timber they now own and shall in future purchase shall have been cut into lumber. Tenth. It is further agreed that the party of the first part shall have the right to inspect all orders on the books of the party of the second part whenever they may desire, and the party of the second part obligates itself at all times to secure the highest market price, which it is their ability to obtain. Eleventh. It is understood that any local sales of lumber by the party of the first part in less than car load lots shall be exempt from the commission of the party of the second part."

After the contract had been entered into, the Bennett Company proceeded to lend the Walnut Lake Company the sum of $15,000, as had been verbally agreed upon. The loan was made during the winter of 1907 and 1908. As the notes became due they were renewed from time to time, and the accruing interest was by agreement between the parties entered on the books of the Bennett Company as an open account charged against the Walnut Lake Company. The Walnut Lake Company commenced cutting lumber in May, 1908, and the Bennett Company, as its agent, began to sell the output under the terms of the contract. The testimony shows that it requires from three to four months for lumber to become sufficiently dry to ship, and that none of the stock of the Walnut Lake Company was in condition to ship until about the middle of July. On October 26, 1908, Mr. Craft wrote to the Bennett Company and canceled the contract between the two companies. The letter stated that the Bennett Company had failed to make sales according to the contract and to advise truthfully in regard thereto, and that for these and many other violations of the contract the Walnut Lake Company canceled the contract and refused to permit the Bennett Company to make any further sales of lumber for it.

On October 28, 1908, a meeting of the stockholders of the Walnut Lake Company was held, and a resolution to dissolve the corporation was adopted. On October 30, 1908, a petition was filed in the chancery court praying for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the assets of the company. This was done in pursuance of section 958, Kirby's Digest, which provides that, when any corporation has surrendered its charter, the chancery court shall have jurisdiction to pay its debts and to distribute its assets among the stockholders according to their several interests. A receiver was duly appointed and subsequently filed a report showing assets amounting to $229,388.55 and liabilities in the sum of $87,866.67. On December 5, 1908, the Alf Bennett Company filed an intervention in the nature of a claim for damages in the sum of $32,000, which it is alleged it would have earned under the contract had it been permitted to have carried it out. In its intervention it alleged that it had complied with its part of the contract and that the notification of the abrogation of the contract, the surrender of the charter, and the appointment of a receiver were in pursuance of a conspiracy entered into by the stockholders of the Walnut Lake Company for the purpose of evading the obligations of the contract between that company and the Bennett Company. On January 20, 1909, the court ordered the receiver to sell the assets of the Walnut Lake Company at public sale. This was done on February 28th following, and the entire property was bought in by Mr. Craft for $115,000. Craft gave bond to secure the deferred payments, with Mr. Bacon and Mr. Ladd as his sureties. Mr. Craft in purchasing the assets of the receiver acted for himself, for Mr. Ladd, Mr. Schulze, and Mr. Guthrie. Mr. Bacon had already sold his interest to Mr. Ladd. Immediately after the sale, the mill and all the assets were turned over to the new company, which had been organized with the same stockholders, except Mr. Bacon, who had sold his interest to Mr. Ladd, and Mr. Guthrie, who had subscribed for $5,000 stock in the new company. The new company, called "the E. P. Ladd Cypress Company," took up the indebtedness of the Walnut Lake Company and proceeded to operate the sawmill. It operated it for the next three years, and during the time cut about 18,000,000 feet of lumber.

The testimony in the case is very voluminous; and, that the opinion may not be too long, the remaining facts in the case will be stated and referred to under appropriate headings in the opinion. The chancellor found in favor of appellee, Walnut Lake Cypress Company, and the case is here on appeal.

Charles A. Houts, of St. Louis, Mo., and A. H. Rowell, of Pine Bluff, for appellant. Bradshaw, Rhoton & Helm, of Little Rock, and Danaher & Danaher, of Pine Bluff, for appellee.

HART, J. (after stating the facts as above).

[1] The right of appellant to recover in this case depends upon the construction of the ninth clause of the contract, which is as follows: "This contract shall be and remain in force and effect as long as the party of the first part is operating their plant at that point, and until all the timber they now own and shall in future purchase shall have been cut into lumber." The purpose of all interpretation is to ascertain and give effect to the intention of the parties to the contract as expressed by their writing, and in doing this it is necessary to consider the circumstances surrounding the making of the contract, its subject, the situation and relation of the parties, and the sense in which, taking these things into consideration, the words used would be commonly understood; for it fairly may be assumed that the parties used and understood them in that sense.

[2] Applying this fundamental rule of construction, it is contended by counsel for appellee that the Walnut Lake Company in making this contract foresaw that it might wish to sell or be forced to quit business at any time, and therefore embodied in the contract the provision that the contract should remain in force only so long as it was "operating their plant at that point." They insist that the further words, "and until all the timber they now own and shall in the future purchase shall have been cut into lumber," were added to cover the possible contingency that the Walnut Lake Company, in case of fire or other casualties to its plant, might wish to rebuild at some other point and cut the timber at a new mill site. They contend that the evident intention of the parties, as expressed by the language of the contract, was that the contract should be in force only so long as both of the conditions may continue to exist, viz., while the Walnut Lake Company operates its plant at Walnut Lake and its timber remained uncut. We cannot agree with their contention. The Bennett Company was not engaged in the business of loaning money, but was engaged in the business of selling lumber for those who manufactured it. The lending of money to its customers was merely an incident to its principal business. It was principally engaged in the business of selling pine lumber at the time the contract was entered into, and, in order to carry out the contract with the Walnut Lake Company, it was necessary to make some changes in the conduct of its business in order to enable it to successfully sell cypress lumber. Under these circumstances, it is unreasonable to suppose that the parties to the contract contemplated an agreement which could be terminated by the Walnut Lake Company ceasing to operate its mill at Walnut Lake before its timber was sawed into lumber. Such a construction would not give any meaning to the clause, "and until all the timber they now own and in the future shall purchase shall have been cut into lumber." We are of the opinion that the contract, as made, clearly indicates that it was not intended that the contract should be terminated until the timber owned by the Walnut Lake Company, tributary to the site of the mill at Walnut Lake, should have been cut into lumber. As illustrative cases sustaining our contention we cite the following: Mississippi River Logging Co. v. Robson, 69 Fed. 773, 16 C. C. A. 400; Lewis v. Atlas Mutual Life Insurance Co., 61 Mo. 534; Ford Hardwood Lumber Co. v. Clement, 97 Ark. 522, 135 S. W. 343.

[3] 2. The next question we shall consider is whether or not the Walnut Lake Company was induced to make the contract by the fraudulent representations of the Bennett Company. To sustain the finding of the chancellor in behalf of the appellee, it is claimed that Bennett misrepresented his ability to sell cypress lumber. Concerning this matter, Ladd testified that some time before the contract was entered into he met Mr. Bennett on the train and they got into a conversation in regard to making a contract to give Bennett the exclusive sale of the output of the sawmill when it was erected and put in operation. Nothing definite was arranged about the contract at that time. Bennett explained to Ladd that his company had a large selling force, and that they understood the handling of cypress lumber to good purpose; that they could handle it to better advantage than the manufacturers of the lumber. Craft conducted the negotiations leading up to the making of the contract. In regard to this he testified as follows: "We were desirous of a line of credit, and I went to see Mr. Bennett, and he represented that he had special ability to sell our stock for the reason that he had a large selling force and had experience in selling cypress, and represented that he would be able to help us out to the extent that we would probably need money until such time as we could make other arrangements. We insisted on his going into the matter thoroughly, and he explained that he had had some four or five years' experience in selling cypress, and that, while he did not have any one in his office that had had more experience than he had, he would give the matter his personal attention. He related the experience he had had and stated why he wished to make this contract with us; said that he had found our stock—that is, the stock that the old concern had turned out—to be a very superior grade; that he had found us hard competitors to get over; and for these reasons he especially desired the selling contract. In view of these representations, and believing that he had the ability, we considered making the contract with Mr. Bennett, and Mr. Bennett and I went into the terms of the contract together. I made the contract with him under the representations made by him."

In addition, it is shown that, after the Bennett Company began to sell the lumber for the Walnut Lake Company, Ladd and Craft at different times each went to St. Louis and assisted Bennett in making sales of some lumber. At none of these times, however, did they go to St. Louis for that purpose. They went there for the purpose of borrowing money with which to run the mill, and while there went with Bennett to some old customers of Ladd who had bought lumber from him while he was engaged in the sawmill business prior to the time the Walnut Lake Company was organized. There is nothing in the testimony to indicate that Bennett's corporation was not competent to handle, as sales agent, the output of the Walnut Lake Company's sawmill. The testimony shows that Alf Bennett, the president of the company, had had several years' experience in the sale of cypress lumber, and that he employed another person to take charge of a department of the company for the sale of cypress lumber, and that the man so employed had had several years' experience in selling cypress lumber. If it can be said that the representations made by Bennett amounted to anything more than a mere expression of opinion as to his company's ability to act as sales agent for the Walnut Lake Company in the sale of the output of its mill, certainly it cannot be said that the testimony is sufficient to sustain the charge of false representations as to the ability of the Bennett Company to act as sales agent under the contract.

[4] 3. It is also claimed that the decision of the chancellor should be upheld because the appellant company committed certain breaches of the contract. One of these is that it failed to make certain remittances of the proceeds of the sales within the time specified in the contract. Another is that a customer who had purchased lumber put in a claim for damages due to the fact that the lumber shipped to it did not correspond with the grade mentioned in the order. The Bennett Company allowed this customer a reduction, but the deduction was not large enough, according to the contention of the Walnut Lake Company. It claimed that the Bennett Company damaged its reputation for fair dealing by not allowing the claim in full. Another alleged breach of the contract is that the Bennett Company did not sell the lumber in all instances according to the grades of the Walnut Lake Company. The testimony shows that the Walnut Lake Company graded its lumber according to its own rules, and that its grading did not correspond with the grading rules of the Southern Cypress Manufacturers' Association, which were considered standard throughout the territory in which the Walnut Lake Company's stock was sold. To illustrate: The Walnut Lake Company's No. 3 common was equivalent to the association's grade of No. 2 common. In other words, the Walnut Lake Company graded its lumber one grade higher than the association's corresponding grades. Old customers of Ladd understood this difference in the grading and purchased accordingly. New customers did not understand the difference in the grading, and on that account it was difficult to sell them. So in some cases the Bennett Company, in order to make sales to new companies, billed the lumber to them according to the grades of the association, but remitted the full amount of the proceeds, less its commission, to the Walnut Lake Company. Still another alleged breach of the contract is that at one time the Bennett Company employed a sub-agent to sell some lumber and endeavored to charge up the Walnut Lake Company with his commission in addition to its own, but the testimony shows that, when the Bennett Company's attention was called to the matter, it rectified the mistake. In regard to these alleged breaches of the contract but little need be said for the reason that, if it be conceded they were breaches of the contract, the Walnut Lake Company waived them. The testimony shows that in the latter part of September, 1908, Mr. Ladd made a trip to St. Louis for the purpose of inducing Mr. Bennett to cancel the contract. At that time Mr. Ladd was in possession of all of the facts and circumstances connected with these alleged breaches of the contract. He told Mr. Bennett that he had not been living up to his contract, and that he wanted him to cancel it. He told Bennett that they needed more money. Bennett refused to cancel the contract, but offered to secure for the Walnut Lake Company $5,000 in addition to the $15,000 already loaned it. Ladd told Bennett that they had to have the money and that, if he would not release them from the contract, they would take that. Bennett afterwards did arrange it, and raised the $5,000 for the Walnut Lake Company as he had agreed to do. Thus it will be seen that Ladd acted with the full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances connected with the alleged breaches of the contract and will be deemed to have waived them. Grayson-McLeod Lumber Co. v. Slack-Kress Tie & Stave Co., 143 S. W. 581; Thomas-Huycke-Martin Co. v. Gray, 94 Ark. 9, 125 S. W. 669, 140 Am. St. Rep. 93.

[5] 4. Can the appellant recover its prospective profits as damages? In the case of Ford Hardwood Lumber Co. v. Clement, 97 Ark. 523, 135 S. W. 343, it is held: "Where plaintiff agreed to perform certain work for defendant; which he was prevented from doing by defendant's fault, he is entitled to recover the profits which the evidence makes it reasonably certain that he would have made had defendant carried out its contract." See, also, Singer Mfg. Co. v. W. D. Reeves Lumber Co., 95 Ark. 363, 129 S. W. 805; Spencer Med. Co. v. Hall, 78 Ark. 336, 93 S. W. 985.

[6] The burden was on the appellant to prove the amount of its alleged damages. Gay Oil Co. v. Muskogee Refining Co., 97 Ark. 502, 134 S. W. 639. In the present state of proof, as abstracted, the testimony for the appellant does not aid us in arriving at a correct conclusion as to the amount of damages suffered by appellant. It is true that Alf Bennett, the president of the company, testified as to the gross amount of profits his company would have earned, but, according to the terms of the contract, this would not be the compensation due it. In arriving at the prospective profits, we must look principally to the testimony of Mr. Craft, who was the secretary of the Walnut Lake Company, and who was introduced as a witness by it. Section 7 of the contract is the one which provides for the amount of commissions to be paid. Craft testified that, considering the invoices, appellant would not have made more than a gross profit of 80 cents per thousand feet. He also testified that it would cost appellant 50 cents per thousand feet to sell the lumber. This would leave it a net profit of 30 cents per thousand feet. Under clause 11 of the contract, local sales of lumber in less than car load lots were exempt from the commission. Lumber used by the Walnut Lake Company in the erection of its building was also exempt. Then, too, it will be remembered that appellant had been paid for the lumber sold by it up to the time that the Walnut Lake Company refused to permit it to continue to act as sales agent. Again Craft says that, in sawing up lumber, a certain amount of stock is always accumulated, which cannot be shipped at a profit. When all of these matters are considered, he estimates that no more than 13,000,000 feet of lumber could have been shipped by the Walnut Lake Company after the time it canceled the contract. The net profits that would have accumulated to appellant from the sale of this lumber would be 30 cents per thousand feet on 13,000,000 feet, which amounts to $3,900, and this is the amount appellant is entitled to recover as damages in this case.

[7] 5. Section 958, Kirby's Digest, provides that, when any corporation has surrendered its charter, the chancery court shall have jurisdiction to pay its debts and to distribute its assets among the stockholders according to their several interests. Pursuant to this section of the digest, a receiver was appointed for the Walnut Lake Company when it surrendered its charter. During the pendency of the proceedings to wind up its affairs, appellant filed its intervention, claiming damages for the breach of the contract with it. Inasmuch as we have held that the Walnut Lake Company had no right to cancel the contract, and that appellant was entitled to recover damages under it, it follows that the claim of appellant for damages was a debt of the corporation, and the assets of the corporation in the hands of the receiver are liable for the amount of this claim.

The decree of the chancellor will therefore be reversed, and judgment entered here for appellant in the sum of $3,900.

PUBLISHERS: GEORGE KNAPP & CO. v. WILKS et al.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 11, 1912.)

1. GUARANTY (§ 54*)—DISCHARGE OF GUARANTOR—ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENT.

A contract guaranteeing the payment of the price of newspapers furnished by a publisher to a third person was executed by the guarantor at a time a blank space for the date in the contract between the publisher and the third person existed. Subsequently the third person inserted a date in the contract which was a date subsequent to the date of the contract of guaranty, and which merely fixed a time for the commencement of the liability of the parties. Held, that the guarantor was not relieved from liability since the act done did not increase his liability.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guaranty, Cent. Dig. § 65; Dec. Dig. § 54.*]

2. GUARANTY (§ 54*)—DISCHARGE OF GUARANTOR—ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENT.

Where a contract of guaranty, guaranteeing the payment of the price of newspapers furnished by a publisher to a third person, was executed at a time the contract between the publisher and the third person contained a blank space as to the number of newspapers to be supplied daily, and the guarantor knew that fact, the filling in of the blank space did not relieve the guarantor from liability; the guarantor giving implied authority to fill up the space necessary to complete the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guaranty, Cent. Dig. § 65; Dec. Dig. § 54.*]

3. GUARANTY (§ 20*)—DISCHARGE OF GUARANTOR—FRAUD.

One induced to execute a guaranty of the payment of the price of newspapers furnished by a publisher to a third person, by the fraudulent representations of the third person, may not escape liability to the publisher innocent in the transaction and acting on the contract of guaranty in good faith.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Benton County; J. S. Maples, Judge.

Action by the Publishers: George Knapp & Co. against E. S. Wilks and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and rendered.

One Walter R. Isbell entered into a written contract with appellant, dated Ft. Smith, Ark., April 30, 1910, whereby he agreed to buy 100 copies per day of the St. Louis Republic at a certain price named in the contract. The papers were to be delivered in St. Louis, Mo. To guarantee the performance of the contract the appellees executed to appellant the following instrument: "We, the undersigned, hereby become sureties, individually and collectively, for W. R. Isbell, and hold ourselves responsible to you for the prompt payment by him for all copies of the St. Louis Republic furnished him by you. We further guarantee that such payment shall be made at your office in St. Louis, Mo., and that whenever there shall be default in such payment we guarantee to pay the amount due on demand."

Appellant sued appellees on account for papers furnished Isbell, and for which he had not paid, amounting to the sum of $178.17. The appellees answered, setting up the following: First, fraud in securing the execution of the contract sued on; second, that the contract sued on had been materially altered in this: that the words "Ft. Smith, Arkansas, April 30, 1910," and the words "one hundred" had been inserted in contract with Isbell after the contract of guaranty was signed by appellees, and the contract of guaranty was therefore void; third, that the agreed place of performance was at Bentonville, when the contract designated "Ft. Smith." The testimony of the appellees tended to show that at the time they executed the contract of guaranty the words "Ft. Smith, Arkansas, April 30, 1910," and the words "one hundred" were not in the contract. That the places where these words now occur were blank spaces. The appellees lived at Bentonville, Ark. Isbell had been selling papers there. He brought the contract of guaranty to appellees and told them that he was going to continue to sell papers in Bentonville, and upon that representation appellees executed the contract. They would not have executed the contract, as they stated, if they had known that Isbell was going to sell the papers at Ft. Smith instead of at Bentonville. He was a one-legged boy, and they were willing to sign the bond, thinking that he was going to continue the sale of papers in Bentonville. They never had any correspondence with the appellant before signing the guaranty.

The court refused to direct a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the amount in suit, and the jury returned a verdict in favor of appellees, and from this judgment in their favor this appeal is duly prosecuted.

Dick Rice, of Bentonville, for appellant.

WOOD, J. (after stating the facts as above).

[1] Conceding that the blank spaces in the contract were filled in by inserting in the blank for the date the words "Ft. Smith, Arkansas, April 30, 1910," and in the blank space left for the number of copies of the paper the words "one hundred," and that these insertions were made by Isbell after the contract of guaranty was executed by the appellees, still we are of the opinion that these were immaterial alterations that did not affect the liability of appellees under their contract of guaranty. Under the undisputed evidence, the only object of inserting the date in the contract between Isbell and the appellant was to fix a time when the liability of Isbell and the appellees for the papers furnished should begin. The contract between Isbell and appellant contained this provision: "This contract will be in effect when duly approved." It was immaterial, under the provisions of the contract, as to the date that the contract bore; for the liability of the appellees would commence, under the provision above quoted, from the time of its approval. The contract, under its terms, took effect from that date. The contract between Isbell and appellant does not show on its face the date when it was approved, nor is there any evidence allunde as to when it was approved; but the approval, of course, could not have been before the contract was executed, and in the absence of proof it must be assumed that the contract was approved on the day of its execution.

The contract of guaranty was dated April 22, 1910, eight days prior to the date of the contract between Isbell and appellant. Therefore the liability of appellees is not increased by the insertion of the date in the contract between Isbell and appellant subsequent to the date of the contract of guaranty upon which they are sued. The appellees, under their contract of guaranty, became responsible to the appellant "for the prompt payment by him for all copies of the St. Louis Republic furnished him."

[2] So far as the contract is concerned, the number of papers was not specified, and there is no evidence to show that the number was agreed upon. On the contrary, a blank space was left in the contract between Isbell and appellant to be filled in, according to the undisputed evidence. Therefore the filing in of the number of copies of the paper to be furnished Isbell by appellant was not an alteration which appellant was not authorized to make. "If a party to an instrument intrusts it to another for use with blanks not filled, such instrument, so delivered, carried on its face an implied authority to fill up the blanks necessary to perfect the same, and the person to whom the instrument is so intrusted must be deemed the agent of the party who committed the instrument to his custody." 2 Cyc. 159. See White-Wilson-Drew Co. v. Egelhoff, 96 Ark. 105, 131 S. W. 208. Here the appellees executed the bond in suit, agreeing to be liable to appellant for all the papers it furnished Isbell, and this bond was delivered to the obligee. This was authority for the appellant to insert the number of papers furnished in the contract between it and Isbell. See Inhabitants of South Berwick v. Huntress, 53 Me. 89, 87 Am. Dec. 539.

The uncontradicted evidence showed that appellees knew when they executed the bond in suit that there were blanks in the contract between Isbell and appellant to be filled by the appellant. The filling in of these blanks, therefore, did not relieve the appellees of liability on their contract.

[3] If Isbell, by making false representations to appellees, perpetrated a fraud upon them which induced them to sign the instrument in suit, the appellant was in no manner responsible for that fraud, for there is nothing to show that appellant at the time it entered into the contract with Isbell to furnish the papers had knowledge of the facts which appellees claim constituted a fraud upon them. Appellant was innocent in the transaction, and it approved the contract of guaranty in suit and acted upon it in good faith. The appellees, by signing the instrument of guaranty, enabled Isbell to procure the papers from appellant under his contract. The appellees, therefore, are not in a position to defeat appellant's claim by a charge of fraud. They are estopped from setting up any charge as against the claim of appellant. "It is no defense to an action upon a bond that the sureties were ignorant as to the extent of the obligation assumed or were misled by the principal in reference thereto, in the absence of proof that the obligee was a party to the fraud." Western N. Y. Life Ins. Co. v. DeWitt W. Clinton, 66 N. Y. 326; Powers v. Clarke, 127 N. Y. 417, 28 N. E. 402; 20 Cyc. 1419; Bascom v. Smith, 164 Mass. 61, 41 N. E. 130; Lucas v. Owens, 113 Ind. 521, 16 N. E. 196; McWilliams v. Mason, 31 N. Y. 294, cited in appellant's brief.

The court should have directed a verdict in favor of the appellant. For the error in refusing to do so the judgment is reversed, and judgment will be entered here in favor of appellant for $178.17, the amount of its claim, with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from April 25, 1911, the date of the filing of suit.

FREEO VALLEY R. CO. v. HODGES,
Secretary of State.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 18, 1912.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 32*)—RAILROAD COMPANIES—DISSOLUTION—"ANY CORPORATION"—"SUCH."

Kirby's Dig. § 957, provides that any corporation may surrender its charter by a resolution, on filing a certified copy of the resolution with the Secretary of State and the clerk of the county in which "such corporation" is organized. When that section was adopted as a part of the act of April 12, 1893 (Laws 1893, p. 265), railroad corporations could be organized by filing the articles of association with the Secretary of State, while manufacturing and other business corporations were required by Kirby's Dig. § 845, to file their articles of association and certificate with the clerk of the county in which they were to have their principal place of business and also with the Secretary of State. Held, that section 957 does not apply to railroad corporations "such" meaning, previously mentioned or specified, and the phrase "in which such corporation is organized" limiting "any corporation" to those required to file their articles and certificate with the clerk of the county in which they are to have their principal place of business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 63-69; Dec. Dig. § 32.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, p. 419; vol. 7, pp. 6750-6754; vol. 8, p. 7808.]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 596*)—DISSOLUTION—RIGHT TO DISSOLVE.

In the absence of statute, strictly private corporations may surrender their charters and dissolve voluntarily except so far as creditors have a right to object.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2386, 2387; Dec. Dig. § 596.*]

3. RAILROADS (§ 18*)—RAILROAD COMPANIES—POWERS AND DUTIES.

Railroad corporations have powers not enjoyed by strictly private corporations and are required to perform public duties which such private corporations do not owe.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pulaski County; Guy Fulk, Judge.

Petition by Freeo Valley Railroad Company for a writ of mandamus against Earle W. Hodges, Secretary of State. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the petition, the petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Gaughan & Sifford, of Camden, for appellant. Hal L. Norwood, Atty. Gen., and Wm. H. Rector, Asst. Atty. Gen., for appellee.

HART, J. Appellant, Freeo Valley Railroad Company, is a railroad corporation organized under the laws of the state of Arkansas and, as such, presented to the Secretary of State a certified copy of a resolution adopted by its stockholders for the purpose of surrendering its charter, claiming that it had a right to do so under section 957, Kirby's Digest. The Secretary of State declined to file the resolution. Appellant then filed a petition in the Pulaski circuit court asking for a writ of mandamus against the Secretary of State to compel him to do so. To this petition the appellee filed a demurrer which was sustained by the circuit court. The case is here on appeal.

[1] The only issue raised by the appeal is: Can appellant surrender its charter by complying with section 957, Kirby's Digest? It is as follows: "Any corporation may surrender its charter by resolution adopted by the majority in value of the holders of the stock thereof and a certified copy of such resolution filed in the office of the Secretary of State, and a copy thereof filed in the office of the county clerk of the county in which such corporation is organized, shall have effect to extinguish such corporation."

[2] It is contended that the words "any corporation" as used in the act includes railroad corporations. In the absence of a statute on the subject, the decided weight of authority is that strictly private corporations may surrender their charters and dissolve themselves except so far as creditors have a right to object.

[3] On the other hand, railroad corporations are invested with certain powers not enjoyed by strictly private corporations, and they also are required to perform certain duties to the public which the latter do not owe. Elliott on Railroads, vol. 1, par. 608.

It will be presumed that the Legislature had knowledge of the state of the law as it existed at the time the act in question was passed. The section of the act under consideration is a part of an act of the Legislature in regard to the dissolution of corporations. The act was passed April 12, 1893 (Laws 1893, p. 265). At that time there was no board of railroad incorporation. Railroad corporations could be organized by the persons desiring to form such corporations complying with the requisites of the statute and filing their articles of association with the Secretary of State. Manufacturing and other business corporations were required to file their articles of association and certificate with the county clerk of the county in which the corporation was to have its principal place of business, and then to file said articles and certificate bearing the indorsement of the county clerk in the office of the Secretary of State. The act provides that said certificate shall be recorded by the county clerk and Secretary of State in books kept by them for that purpose. Kirby's Digest, § 845. The section of the act under consideration provides that any corporation may surrender its charter by filing a certified copy of the resolution with the Secretary of State and a copy thereof with the county clerk of the county in which such corporation is organized.

"Such" is defined by Webster as "having the particular quality or character specified; certain; representing the object as already particularized in terms which are not mentioned." That is to say, it is used in the sense of previously mentioned or specified. It is evident then that the word "such" has reference solely to any corporation which was authorized and directed to file its articles of association with the county clerk by the act under which it was incorporated. As we have seen, manufacturing and business corporations alone are required to file their articles of association and certificate with the Secretary of State and, also, with the clerk of the county court of the county in which they are organized. Therefore, the phrase "in which such corporation is organized" limits the words "any corporation" to corporations which are required to file a copy of their articles and certificate with the clerk of the county in which the incorporation is to have its principal place of business, and such corporations, being corporations formed for manufacturing and other business purposes, alone have the right to surrender their charters without the consent of the state, and the act in question was passed for the purpose of providing a method by which voluntary dissolution should be made.

The judgment will be affirmed.

McPHERSON v. CONSOLIDATED CASUALTY CO.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 18, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 113*) — SETTING ASIDE DEFAULT JUDGMENT—APPEALABILITY.

An appeal from an order setting aside a default judgment must be dismissed as premature.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 417*) — SETTING ASIDE DEFAULT JUDGMENT—APPEALABILITY.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 1188, providing that no appeal from an order granting a new trial shall be effectual unless the notice of appeal contains an assent by appellant that, if the order be affirmed, judgment absolute shall be rendered against him, an appeal from an order vacating a default judgment and granting a new trial made in the term at which the judgment was rendered must be dismissed, unless the notice of appeal contains appellant's assent to a judgment against him on the affirmance of the order.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2140-2143; Dec. Dig. § 417.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Craighead County; W. J. Driver, Judge.

Action by J. M. McPherson, administrator of Albert McPherson, against the Consolidated Casualty Company. From an order setting aside a default judgment, plaintiff appeals. Dismissed.

J. M. McPherson, as administrator of the estate of Albert McPherson, deceased, sued the Consolidated Casualty Company and the sureties upon the bond which it gave to do business in this state in the Craighead circuit court upon a certain policy of insurance set out in the complaint. It was alleged that plaintiff's intestate was entitled to certain indemnities on account of his illness prior to his death. The defendant failed to answer or otherwise plead, and on the fourth day of the term the court awarded judgment for the want of an answer for the amount sued for. Defendant's attorney, who lived at Pine Bluff, filed an affidavit in which he stated that he had never practiced in the Craighead circuit court, and was unacquainted with the terms of that court; that he had made inquiry, and had been misled as to the date of this court. The plaintiff, however, was in no manner responsible for this misapprehension. On the day of filing this affidavit, the defendant also filed an answer controverting all the material allegations in the complaint and specially pleaded as a bar to any recovery the intestate's failure during his illness to have reports made as, it alleged, was required by the terms of the policy of insurance. It also alleged that in the lifetime of the intestate it had paid to him all sums of money for which it could be liable under the policy. The court below treated this answer as a motion to vacate, and set aside the default judgment, and entered an order to that effect. Plaintiff excepted to the action of the court setting aside the default judgment and prayed an appeal, which was granted.

Basil Baker, of Jonesboro, for appellant. Hawthorne & Hawthorne, of Jonesboro, and Danaher & Danaher, of Pine Bluff, for appellee.

SMITH, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] This appeal must be dismissed for the reason that it was prematurely taken. Cases cannot be tried by piecemeal, and one cannot delay the final adjudication of a cause by appealing from the separate order of the court as the cause progresses. When a final order or judgment has been entered in the court below determining the relative right and liabilities of the respective parties, an appeal may then be taken, but not before. No such final judgment has been entered here, and the appeal must be dismissed.

[2] In the case of Ayers v. Anderson-Tulley Co., 89 Ark. 162, 116 S. W. 200, it was said: "It is only from final judgments and decrees which conclude the rights of the parties with respect to the subject-matter of the controversy that appeals may be taken to this court, and it must be conceded that an order vacating a judgment or granting a new trial made in the term at which the judgment was rendered is not appealable, except on the terms prescribed by the statute." The statute referred to is section 1188, Kirby's Digest. And in this case, even if the action of the court below was equivalent to the granting of a new trial, that action of the court could not be reviewed on an appeal, "unless the notice of appeal contains an assent on the part of the appellant that if the order be affirmed, judgment absolute shall be rendered against appellant." The language quoted is from the second subdivision of section 1188, Kirby's Digest. No such notice was filed in this case, and for this reason, if for no other, this appeal must be dismissed. And in the case last cited the following language was used in quoting from the case of Huntington v. Finch, 3 Ohio St. 445: "The Ohio court in construing a statute similar to the one prevailing in this state, with reference to appeals said: 'The court of common pleas has ample control over its orders and judgments during the term at which they are rendered and the power to vacate or modify them in its discretion. But this discretion ends with the term, and no such discretion exists at a subsequent term of the court.'" See, also, 1 Crawford's Digest, "Appeal and Error," I, d; Womack v. Connor, 74 Ark. 354, 85 S. W. 783; Gates v. Solomon, 73 Ark. 8, 83 S. W. 348; Osborn v. Le Maire, 82 Ark. 490, 102 S. W. 372; Sanders v. Plunkett, 40 Ark. 507; Mallett v. Hampton, 94 Ark. 119, 126 S. W. 92. Appeal dismissed.

Appeal from Pulaski Chancery Court; John E. Martineau, Chancellor.

Appellant brought suit in ejectment against appellee for the possession of lot 4, block 94, in the city of Little Rock, claiming to be the owner thereof, and that appellee had been in unlawful possession of same since September, 1908. Appellee answered denying that appellant was the owner of the property and that he was in unlawful possession thereof. Alleged that the property was purchased by his father, James Keith, and paid for with his own money, but for some reason, unknown, the deed was taken in the name of appellee; that his father continued in the undisputed and adverse possession of the property, claiming it as his own, until his death, on September 14, 1908, and pleaded the seven-year statute of limitations. Appellant replied, denying that James Keith purchased the property for his own use and benefit, alleged that it was purchased out of his consideration and love and affection for her and given to her on that account and for services rendered and to be rendered for him by her; that he was never in the adverse possession thereof, and at all times acted in the control of said property as her agent and made no adverse claim thereto. The cause was, by agreement, transferred to the chancery court, where appellant filed an amended answer and cross-complaint, reiterating his claim of equitable ownership as in the first answer and praying that the legal title to one-half of the property be divested out of plaintiff and vested in him and his title quieted thereto. Appellee replied to the cross-complaint, alleging that in 1850, when she was a small child, her mother, Elizabeth Wheeler, married James Keith, father of appellant, from which marriage he was born; that from that time until the death of James Keith she was a member of the family of said James Keith and lived at his home a greater part of the time and was treated by him as his daughter and looked upon him as her father, waited upon him as a daughter should, and that he advised her and attended to business matters for her, as a father would in such relations; that she was paid no regular sums for her services in the house or in his office, where she worked, but given various sums at different times, but nothing like what her services were reasonably worth; that he was from March, 1889, until the time of his death, a man of large property, and gave her a one-half undivided interest in the lot in controversy at that time in recognition of the services rendered by her in looking after business matters in St. Louis and elsewhere and for her services in waiting upon himself and plaintiff's mother, in consideration for love and affection. Denied that James Keith bought the lot in controversy for his own benefit, and that he held exclusive possession of the same and that appellant ever acquired a beneficial ownership in said lot, and that she never knew of the existence of the deed to said lot until after the death of James Keith. Denied that she had no possession of same until after June 2, 1910, nor any possession thereafter until by virtue of the commissioners' deed of June 22, 1910, conveying the other undivided half interest. Denied that the trust resulted to him in favor of James Keith, or that he became the equitable owner of the lot and that she held the title for him, and alleged that he acted solely as her agent in all matters in regard to the control of said property and the collection of the rents.

It appears that James Keith married Elizabeth Wheeler in St. Louis in 1850, who, at the time, was the mother of Amella Wheeler, appellee, and another daughter, who later became Mrs. Pierce, and that appellant is the only surviving child of said marriage. After the marriage, they lived in St. Louis, until 1874; the daughters by the former marriage living with the family as their children and were treated by James Keith as daughters and looked upon him as the head of the family and as their father and so recognized him. In 1874, James Keith and his wife moved to Little Rock, and the daughters, at the time being grown and working in St. Louis, did not come to Little Rock, although urged to do so by Mr. Keith, but remained in St. Louis in their dressmaking business for some years. The relations between the parties continued intimate and close through the years, and in 1891 Mrs. Pierce, in response to frequent invitations, came to Little Rock and made her home again with Mr. and Mrs. Keith, and two years later appellee also came in response to like invitations and did likewise. Appellee, before her coming to Little Rock, attended to the business interests of James Keith, still retained in St. Louis, and performed various and sundry services for him in relation thereto, without any charge for such services, being given presents by him and advice in regard to investments and matters of business. On March 9, 1899, James Keith purchased the lot in controversy, and had the deed thereto made to his wife, appellee's mother, and to appellee jointly. This was before she came to Little Rock to live with them. After her arrival, he told her, in the presence of her mother, that he had purchased the lot and had it deeded to herself and her mother as a present to them, and she later went into his office and helped to attend to his affairs in business, as well as to take care of his household and personal belongings, and attend to the wants of her mother, his wife, who was sick. He paid her $30 a month for two or three months after she went into his office, and thereafter, although she continued to work in his office and care for his affairs at home, for about 15 years and until his death, he paid her no stated salary, but gave her money along as she requested it.

Before his death, when he was an old man and during his visit to the old world, he frequently wrote to her about matters of business, his own feeling and health, and sent messages of affection to her, his son, Alex Keith, and appellee's sister. Appellee stated that he never, at any time, claimed to be the owner of the property after he told her he had it conveyed to her and her mother as a gift, and that he consulted her with reference to having another house placed upon the lot after its purchase, and approved her idea and had a house moved thereon. He collected the rent and paid the taxes, during the life of his wife and on up to the time of his death, and did not account to appellee for rents, but made no claim of ownership to the lot. It is not disputed that the conveyance was intended as a gift to the other undivided half of the lot to appellee's mother, nor that appellee became the owner thereof at the partition sale. Appellant was a man of large means and property on the date of the conveyance to his wife and daughter in March, 1899, and continued so until his death. The house testified to by appellee as having been moved upon the lot in controversy by James Keith after consultation with her and her approval of the plan was put there in 1904.

The court found that appellee was the owner of the lot and had been the owner of the undivided one-half interest in same since March 2, 1899, and was entitled to the rents and profits collected by appellant and rendered a decree for the recovery thereof, for the possession of the lot and said rents, from which judgment appellant appealed.

James Coates and John W. Blackwood, both of Little Rock, for appellant. Ratcliffe & Ratcliffe, of Little Rock, for appellee.

KIRBY, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] It is insisted for appellant that a trust resulted to James Keith, appellant's father, by operation of law, upon the purchase of the lot in controversy, and that appellee's claim is barred by laches and limitations.

[2] "When a man buys an estate and takes the deed in the name of a stranger, a trust results by operation of law to him who advances the purchase money. If, however, the nominal purchaser is the wife or the child of the person from whom the money comes, it is presumed to have been an advancement or a gift. But this presumption is not conclusive. It may be rebutted by antecedent or contemporaneous declarations and circumstances which tend to prove the intention of the person who furnished the money to buy the estate that the grantee should hold as trustee and not beneficially for himself." Milner v. Freeman, 40 Ark. 67; Foster v. Treadway, 98 Ark. 452, 136 S. W. 934; Spradling v. Spradling, 142 S. W. 850. "But a determination of the question as to whether or not such trust resulted from the transaction depends entirely upon the intention of the parties themselves. When a husband pays the purchase money and takes the deed in the name of his wife, the law presumes that it was his intention to make a gift to her of the land, because he is under obligations to provide for her." Spradling v. Spradling, 142 S. W. 850.

[3] Such a trust cannot be established by a slight preponderance of the testimony, nor anything short of evidence that is clear, convincing, and satisfactory. Foster v. Beldler, 79 Ark. 425, 96 S. W. 175; Crosby v. Henry, 76 Ark. 615, 88 S. W. 949; Chambers v. Michael, 71 Ark. 373, 74 S. W. 516; Tillar

v. Henry, 75 Ark. 451, 88 S. W. 573; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1040.

[4] "And although there is a presumption of the trust resulting to the party paying the consideration, the burden of proof on the whole case is upon the one who seeks to establish a resulting trust. 1 Perry on Trusts, § 139; cases last cited, supra.

Appellee was a child at the time of her mother's marriage and lived for years in the family with her stepfather, treating him as a father and being treated by him as a child, and after many years away from the family home, which had been transferred to Little Rock, upon his invitation and solicitation, resumed her place in the family, where the same relations continued, she assisting him at the office and caring for him and being cared for by him in the family, until his death, and her stepfather under these circumstances stood in loco parentis to her, and the conveyance is presumed to have been a gift. It is undisputed that the conveyance to herself and her mother was a gift to her mother of the property conveyed and always so regarded, and there is no sufficient reason to regard the conveyance to her otherwise, nor is the testimony sufficient to overcome the presumption that it was intended as a gift. From the purchase of the lot to the death of appellee's mother, James Keith looked after the lot for his wife, who was tenant in common with appellee until her death and from thence to the time of her death, being himself, during such last period, a tenant by the curtesy and in common with appellee. It is true he controlled the property, paid the taxes, collected the rents therefrom, and did not account to appellee therefor; but he did not dispute appellee's title thereto, nor make any claim of title in himself, inconsistent with her ownership, and such action was referable to his duty to his wife and appellee in the relation occupied by him and could not amount to adverse possession.

[5] Appellee was being cared for in the family and supported by her stepfather, and there was no reason why she should demand an accounting of the rents, and there was no knowledge of any adverse claim on his part brought home to her; and he had theretofore acknowledged her right upon the making of the gift and never thereafter disputed it. Under such circumstances, his possession, if he had been a stranger, being a tenant in common, could not have been regarded adverse to appellee, nor set the statute in motion against her. Singer v. Naron, 99 Ark. 451, 138 S. W. 958. It is not claimed that her suit was too long delayed after the death of her father, and possession taken by appellee.

The decision of the chancellor was right and is affirmed.

DEANE v. MOORE.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 18, 1912.)
ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 87*)—CONSTRUCTIVE POSSESSION—STATUTES.

Act March 18, 1899 (Laws 1899, p. 117), now Kirby's Dig. § 5057, providing that unimproved or uninclosed land shall be deemed to be in the possession of the person who pays the taxes thereon if he shall have color of title thereto, but that no person can have the benefit of this act, unless he and those under whom he claims shall have paid such taxes at least seven years in succession, at least three payments to be subsequent to the enactment of the statute, while retroactive, is not so as to persons under disability at the time of its enactment, and so will not create an adverse possession sufficient to bar by three payments the rights of the owner of realty who, at the time of the enactment of the statute and thereafter, was a married woman, but was not when plaintiffs began their payments under color of title under coverture.

Hart and Kirby, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Jefferson Chancery Court; John M. Elliott, Chancellor.

Action by G. A. A. Deane against Mary K. Moore. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

B. S. & J. V. Johnson, of Little Rock, and Danaher & Danaher, of Pine Bluff, for appellant. Crawford & Hooker, of Pine Bluff, for appellee.

*SMITH, J. This suit was commenced in the chancery court of Jefferson county by P. C. Dooley against Mary K. Moore to confirm his title to the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$, S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$, section 35, township 4 S., range 7 W., situated in that county. Afterwards, upon petition of G. A. A. Deane, suggesting the death of P. C. Dooley, and stating that before his death he had by his warranty deed conveyed said land to said Deane, an order was made substituting G. A. A. Deane as plaintiff.

There are no controverted facts which it will be material to consider, and the pleadings and proof present this state of case. During all the time herein mentioned plaintiff and his predecessors in title had color of title to the above-described tract of land, and the same was unimproved and uninclosed. With this color of title plaintiff and those under whom he claimed commenced paying taxes on the land for the year 1887, and, without a break in the payments, paid the taxes continuously until the year 1902, when he paid the taxes for the year 1901. The taxes for the year 1902 were paid in the year 1903 by the defendant, since which time neither party has paid taxes continuously for the statutory period. The defendant has been twice married; her first marriage having been to one John P. Murphy, April 7, 1875, but he died December 6, 1892. Thereafter she was a widow until June 11, 1895.

when she was married to her present husband, since which time she has been, and is now, a feme covert.

Both parties concede this case must turn upon our answer to the question: "Was the void apparent title of the plaintiff made good by limitation against Mrs. Moore, the holder of the original and valid title by reason of the Act of March 18, 1899 (Laws 1899, p. 117), and payment of taxes, notwithstanding Mrs. Moore's coverture?" This act is carried into Kirby's Digest as section 5057, and its provisions are as follows: "Unimproved and uninclosed land shall be deemed and held to be in the possession of the person, who pays the taxes thereon, if he have color of title thereto, but no person shall be entitled to invoke the benefit of this act, unless he and those under whom he claims, shall have paid such taxes for at least seven years in succession and not less than three of such payments must be made subsequent to the passage of this act."

This act has frequently been before the court, but this particular question has never been decided, although it was raised in the case of Taylor v. Leonard, 94 Ark. 122, 126 S. W. 387. However, the facts of that case were such that the decision of that point was unnecessary. Here the concession is made that plaintiff has paid such taxes as entitles him to have his title confirmed if this right is not defeated by the defendant's coverture. What, therefore, is the proper construction of the act under the facts stated? In determining the legislative intent, these propositions are urged upon our consideration: That while the act itself is not one of limitation it becomes so by reference to section 5056, Kirby's Digest, for, as Judge Frauenthal said in Taylor v. Leonard, above referred to: "This statute in itself is not a statute of limitation. It only declares that the land shall be deemed to be in the possession of the person paying taxes thereon under color of title. It only makes the payment of taxes under the conditions named in the act a constructive possession, and it is only by applying thereto the general statute of limitations contained in section 5056 of Kirby's Digest that such possession like actual possession can ripen into title by limitation. In order to make effective this act as a statute of limitation, it must be considered in connection with and a part of section 5056, Kirby's Digest, so that, in addition to the actual adverse possession required by that section, the constructive adverse possession, declared by this act, may also result in a complete bar by limitation. And in becoming thus a part of section 5056 of Kirby's Digest the provisos of that section relating to those laboring under disability apply also to this act." That where the seven consecutive payments of taxes have been made, at least three of which were subsequent to March 18, 1899, the date of the passage of the act, that the constructive possession, resulting from these payments, related back to the beginning of the seven-year period of payment, and gave the same title by defeating any proceeding to recover possession that seven years' actual possession gave under section 5056. This possession, whether actual, possessio pedis, for seven years or constructive from the payment of taxes for that time, defeats a recovery of possession by any one, except infants, married women, and insane persons. That, although this act was retroactive in its operation, the first case which construed it, that of Towson v. Denson, 74 Ark. 302, 86 S. W. 661, held it was not invalid on that account, for the reason that it gave reasonable time after its enactment in which an interested party could prevent the consequences of the act falling upon him. This constructive possession may therefore in a proper case relate back for a period of four years prior to the passage of the act, and it does so in this case if that result is not prevented by the coverture of the defendant at the time of its enactment.

If this act can be said to be retroactive as to persons who were under the disabilities mentioned at the time of its passage, then plaintiff's constructive possession relates back to a time prior to the defendant's present marriage, to a time when she was not under disability of coverture, and the statute was thus set in motion when she was under no disability, and its running was not arrested by her subsequent marriage. To sustain this view we are cited to those cases which hold that, where the statute is set in motion in the lifetime of the ancestor, its running is not arrested by the subsequent infancy of his heir during the remainder of the period of limitation; and to those cases which make the same holding where there is actual entry upon and adverse occupancy of the lands of a person, who subsequent to such entry and adverse occupancy becomes insane, and we are reminded, also, of the rule that subsequent marriage does not toll the statute, where it is set in motion during discoverture. And we also have before us the rule that, where the Legislature makes no exception in a statute of limitation, the court can make none, whatever be the hardships in individual cases. Hill v. Gregory, 64 Ark. 317, 42 S. W. 408.

These principles are here set out that it may appear that we have considered them, and because they explain the views of the two members of the court, who are of the opinion that the decree of the chancery court, refusing to confirm and quiet plaintiff's title, should be reversed. The view of a majority of the court is that, while the act is retroactive, it was not the legislative intent to so make it retroactive as to cut off the right to sue of persons under the disability of either insanity, infancy, or coverture at the time of its passage. To hold otherwise would be to say that the Legislature intended that one who was an infant or non compos mentis at the passage of the act could be defeated by three payments of taxes subsequent thereto, because in the lifetime of the infant's ancestor or during a same period of one who subsequently becomes non compos mentis taxes were begun to be paid by some one who had only color of title, and whose mere payments, for even an indefinite period, could never have ripened into title without this act; yet at the passage of the act and during all the time subsequent thereto, which was necessary for this constructive possession to ripen into title, these persons who are thus being shut off from their right to sue were without capacity to sue. It does not answer this argument to say that a married woman is sui juris, and may sue and was given a reasonable time to do so before she was barred after the passage of the act, and therefore should be held to be barred if she did not sue, because the statute gives a married woman exactly the same exemption it gives an infant or one non compos mentis, and, as we have reached the conclusion that the Legislature never had the intention of barring an infant or one non compos mentis by allowing only a period to sue for the recovery of his land during all of which time he had no capacity to sue, we have also concluded that there was no such intention in regard to women, who were under the disability of coverture at the time of the passage of the act and who have remained so since.

Affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Faulkner County; Eugene Lankford, Judge.

Action by E. A. Ramsey, administrator, against the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. H. Harrod, of Little Rock, for appellant. Thos. B. Pryor, of Ft. Smith, for appellee.

WOOD, J. This is a suit by the administrator of the estate of S. J. Calhoun, deceased, to recover damages for the death of Calhoun, who was locomotive engineer on the appellee's train, alleged to have been killed by the appellee's negligence in permitting a switch on the main line of its railroad to be left open. This is the second appeal in the case. The case on the first appeal is reported in 96 Ark. 37, 131 S. W. 44, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 383. The cause was reversed on the former appeal because the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict. At the last trial, after the evidence was heard, the court directed a verdict in favor of the appellee. The facts are fully stated in the opinion on the former appeal, and it is unnecessary to reiterate them here.

The appellant accounts for the open switch which is shown to have been the cause of the death of Calhoun by saying "there must have been a freight train on the siding that pulled out of the switch, after the fast mail passed, and went on to Diaz and took the side track there before Mr. Calhoun's train reached Diaz from Newport, where it met the fast train; that some of the employes on this train that was on the side track at that time must have left the switch open." But we are of the opinion that the uncontradicted evidence shows, on the part of the appellee, that there was no such train on the side track at Campbell as appellant contends.

Appellant's contention involves the theory that there was a freight train being operated on the main line of appellee's road on the day of the injury of which appellee's train dispatchers, whose duty it was to keep a record of the movement of the trains, had no knowledge. This contention is merely speculative and is directly in conflict with the affirmative evidence of witnesses who must have known if there had been such train as appellant contends. Their testimony was reasonable and consistent, overcoming the presumption of negligence, and could not be arbitrarily disregarded. See former opinion.

The testimony of the men who made the train sheets and kept the record of the movements of the train was introduced at the last trial, and their testimony shows conclusively that appellant's contention is unreasonable. There was testimony to the effect that the train sheets were the most important records of the appellee company; that the entire safety of all the trains and passengers depended on these records; and that the train sheets showed accurately the number of trains that passed over that part of the track where Calhoun was killed from 12 o'clock at night until the wreck occurred in which he was killed.

The judgment of the court instructing a judgment in favor of the appellee is therefore correct, and it is affirmed.

An application for writ of error to the Supreme Court, upon the grounds, as provided by Sayles' Ann. Civ. Error to Court of Civil Appeals of Fifth Supreme Judicial District.

Action by George Edwards against the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Company of Texas. Judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals (134 S. W. 264) reversing a judgment for plaintiff and remanding the case, and he brings error. Affirmed.

B. Q. Evans and Evans & Carpenter, all of Greenville, for plaintiff in error. Templeton, Craddock, Crosby & Dinsmore, of Sulphur Springs, and E. B. Perkins, of Dallas, for defendant in error.

BROWN, C. J. We copy from the opinion of the Court of Civil Appeals the following statement of the case: "This suit was brought by George Edwards against the railway company to recover damages for personal injuries to his wife, alleged to have been sustained by her by reason of being jumped against and knocked down by a cow she was leading becoming frightened at the blowing of the whistle of a passing train of the defendant at a private crossing over defendant's track, inside the inclosure of a farm on which plaintiff lived. Defendant pleaded the general issue, and specially that the train was properly operated and in the usual manner; that plaintiff's wife knew that the train was coming before she reached the gate that led to the crossing, and, after going through said gate, had ample time to have reached a place of safety; that she knew how trains were usually operated at said place; and that she assumed the risk and was guilty of contributory negligence. A trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff, from which the railway company appeals."

The verdict and judgment in the district court for plaintiff in the sum of $1,500 was reversed and the case remanded by the Court of Civil Appeals.

[1] To show jurisdiction in this court, the petitioner stated that, "the verdict and judgment of the trial court having been reversed and remanded, we ask this court to take jurisdiction in this case under subdivisions 5, 7, and 8 of article 941, Sayles' Civil Statutes." Article 1522, Rev. Stat. 1911.

The statement of the grounds of jurisdiction are not in compliance with the rules of this court. Subdivision 5 of article 941 reads: "Cases in which a Civil Court of Appeals overrules its own decisions or the decision of another Court of Civil Appeals or of the Supreme Court." The application does not point out any decision overruled in this case. Subdivision 7 of said article is in this language: "Cases in which any two of the Courts of Civil Appeals may hold differently on the same question of law." Subdivision 8 of said article reads: "Where the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals reversing a judgment practically settles the case, and this fact is shown in the petition for writ of error, and the attorneys for petitioners shall state that the decision of the Court of Civil Appeals practically settles the case, in which case, if the Supreme Court affirms the decision of the Court of Civil Appeals, it shall also render final judgment accordingly."

[2] The application was granted, for the reason that the decision of the Court of Civil Appeals practically settles the case. Such an application admits the correctness of the conclusion of facts, and that the applicant cannot, upon another trial, prove anything additional that would change the result. The application challenges the correctness of the law as applied by the Court of Civil Appeals in this case.

We copy the findings of fact: "Plaintiff's wife testified, in effect: That said crossing had been used frequently and for a long time by persons on the farm, and that persons might reasonably be expected to be on or about the crossing, intending to use it. That the track was fenced, with gates on either side, and the right of way was about 100 feet wide. That she was leading a cow, intending to cross the track to give her water. That when she approached the gate she heard a train, but paid no attention to it. She led the cow through the gate, and just as she reached the inside thereof the train passed and sounded the whistle at the crossing, which frightened the cow, causing her to jump against plaintiff's wife, injuring her."

Does the evidence show that the servants of the railroad company were negligent in operating the train, and that Edwards' wife was injured in consequence thereof?

[3] The injury having occurred at a farm crossing, the diligence required of the railroad employes is clearly stated by Judge Gaines, in Texas Central Ry. Co. v. Boesch, 103 Tex. 256, 126 S. W. 8, thus: "It is the right of the servants of a railroad company to move their trains with the usual and necessary noises, without keeping a lookout for frightened teams along the track." Hargis v. Railway Co., 75 Tex. 19, 12 S. W. 953.

Mrs. Edwards knew more of the cow's traits than the trainmen could know; and, she having led the animal to a place near to the railroad track, the operatives of the train could presume, and would naturally conclude, that the cow would not be frightened by the ordinary noises of the trains.

[4] Nothing occurred before the whistle was blown to give notice to the railroad employes that the cow would probably be alarmed by the sounding of the whistle. But counsel for plaintiff in error assert that the sounding of the whistle was unnecessary at that place. Article 6564, Revised Statutes 1911, contains this language: "A bell of at least thirty pounds weight and a steam whistle shall be placed on each locomotive engine, and the whistle shall be blown and the bell rung at the distance of at least eighty rods from the place where the railroad shall cross any public road or street, and such bell shall be kept ringing until it shall have crossed such public road, or stopped." The evidence shows there was a crossing of the railroad track over a public road west of the farm crossing in the direction the train was going. The whistle that frightened the cow was blown as a signal for that public crossing; therefore it was necessary, because required by law. But it is claimed that the farm crossing at which the whistle was sounded was more than 80 rods from the public crossing. The statute quoted above requires that the whistle must be sounded "at least" 80 rods, and, being sounded in obedience to that law, it was necessary and usual. It need not have been blown at any particular distance from the crossing, if not less than 80 rods, and at such point as would give notice of the train's approach to persons who might be near to and intending to use the public crossing.

The evidence fails to show negligence on the part of the employes of the railroad company; therefore plaintiff shows no right of recovery. It is accordingly ordered that the plaintiff take nothing, and that defendant go hence without day and recover of plaintiff all costs.

Error to Court of Civil Appeals, Fourth Supreme Judicial District.

Action by Mrs. Antoinette W. Davis against Lewis Vidal. There was a judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals (133 S. W. 1074) affirming a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

A. H. Goldstein and Jno. L. Dyer, both of El Paso, for plaintiff in error. Beall & Kemp, of El Paso, for defendant in error.

DIBRELL, J. [1] This is a suit by Antoinette W. Davis brought in the district court of El Paso county against Lewis Vidal, to recover the sum of $1,200 alleged to be due her by Vidal for the use of certain premises situated in the city of El Paso, of which Vidal was in possession as the assignee of the Dallas Brewery. The sole question of law involved in the case is whether a certain instrument of writing executed by the Dallas Brewery to the defendant, Vidal, on October 1, 1907, was an assignment of its lease from the plaintiff, Antoinette W. Davis, of date April 26, 1907, or a subletting of the premises in question. If the instrument referred to was an assignment of the lease, then plaintiff was authorized to recover of the defendant the rent due on her contract of lease with the Dallas Brewery, by virtue of the privity of estate and contract that subsists between them; but if, on the other hand, the instrument was a subletting of the premises to Vidal by the original lessee, the plaintiff could not recover against defendant as a subtenant, since in such case there is neither privity of estate nor of contract between the original lessor and the undertenant. Harvey v. McGrew, 44 Tex. 415; Legerse & Co. v. Green, 61 Tex. 131; Taylor's Landlord & Tenant, § 16.

The instrument in question was construed by the trial court and the Court of Civil Appeals to be a subletting of the premises by the Dallas Brewery to the defendant, Vidal, and in accordance with that holding judgment was rendered for the defendant. Upon appeal of the case to the Court of Civil Appeals the judgment of the lower court was affirmed.

That the question involved and decided may be fully understood we embody the instrument executed by the Dallas Brewery to Vidal: "Know all men by these presents, that, whereas, on the 26th day of April, 1907, Mrs. Antoinette W. Davis, acting by her agents, A. P. Coles & Brother, did lease to the Dallas Brewery the following parcel of land with the tenements thereon in the city of El Paso, county of El Paso, state of Texas, to wit, being the one-story and adobe composition roof building situated on lot 1 and south 24 feet of lot 2, block 135, Campbell's addition to the city of El Paso, Texas, known as Nos. 415-419 Utah street, same being leased from the 1st day of May, 1907, for three years, to be ended and completed on the 30th of April, 1910 and in consideration of same lease the said Dallas Brewery yielding and paying therefor during said term the sum of $100.00 per month, payable in advance on the first day of each and every month; and, whereas, said lease provides that said premises or any part thereof may be sublet by said Dallas Brewery without the consent of said Mrs. Davis; and, whereas, it is desired to transfer, assign and sublet all of said above premises so leased by the said Mrs. Davis to said Dallas Brewery to Lou Vidal: Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises and the sum of $300.00 to it in hand paid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, said the Dallas Brewery does hereby sublet, assign and transfer the said above premises and does assign and transfer the above said lease, to the said Lou Vidal, and in consideration thereof the said Vidal does well and truly agree and promise to pay the rents in said lease agreed to be paid, to wit, the sum of one hundred ($100.00) dollars per month, each and every month hereafter ensuing, beginning on the first day of November, 1907, in advance on the first day of each month so hereinafter ensuing. And the said Vidal does agree and bind himself and obligates himself to in all respects indemnify, save and hold harmless said Dallas Brewery by reason of any of the terms or conditions in said lease contained, including the payment of rent therein provided to be paid, and should the said Dallas Brewery elect to pay any rent therein provided, or be called upon to pay any rent therein provided, upon same being done the said Vidal agrees to pay the same with interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum; or if the said Vidal neglects or fails to pay said rent promptly, as in said lease provided to be paid, then and in such event the Dallas Brewery can and may at its option declare this transfer null and void, and thereupon oust the said Vidal, and assume possession thereof, and this without notice of any character or kind to the said Vidal; and the failure to pay any rent as in said lease provided to be paid, at the election of the said Dallas Brewery, can and may authorize it without notice to re-enter and repossess said premises."

[2] In construing the effect of the foregoing instrument it is not conclusive as to its form, since it may be in form an assignment and yet be in effect a sublease. The question is one of law to be determined from the estate granted by the instrument. As a general proposition, if the instrument executed by the lessee conveys the entire term and thereby parts with all of the reversionary estate in the property, the instrument will be construed to be an assignment; but, if there remains a reversionary interest in the estate conveyed, the instrument is a sublease. The relation of landlord and tenant is created alone by the existence of a reversionary interest in the landlord. Out of this fact arises the distinction made between assignments and subtenancies. To state the test slightly different from that already stated, if the instrument is of such character by its terms and conditions that a reversionary interest by construction remains in the grantor of the property, he becomes the landlord and the grantee the tenant. The tenant who parts with the entire term embraced in his lease becomes an assignor of the lease, and the instrument is an assignment; but where the tenant by the terms, conditions, or limitations in the instrument does not part with the entire term granted him by his landlord, so that there remains in him a reversionary interest, the transaction is a subletting and not an assignment. Forrest v. Durnell, 86 Tex. 647, 26 S. W. 481; G. C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Settegast, 79 Tex. 263, 15 S. W. 228; 24 Cyc. 974, 975; Wood on Landlord & Tenant (2d Ed.) § 65. It will be observed that, in stating the general rule as to what constitutes an assignment of a lease as distinguished from a sublease, the requirement is that the instrument must convey the whole term, leaving no interest or reversionary interest in the grantor.

[3] By the word "term," as used in the statement of this principle of law, is meant something more than the mere time for which the lease is given, and the instrument must convey not only the entire time for which the lease runs, but the entire estate or interest conveyed by the lease. Mr. Blackstone in his Commentaries (book 2, p. 144), in commenting on the significance of the word "term," when used in leases, says: "Thus the word, term, does not merely signify the time specified in the lease, but the estate also and interest that passes by the lease; and therefore the term may expire, during the continuance of the time, as by surrender, forfeiture and the like." The meaning of the word "term," as defined by Blackstone above, was adopted by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in the case of Dunlap v. Bullard, 131 Mass. 162, and by a number of text-writers on the subject of assignments and subleases.

[4] Mr. Blackstone, in his Commentaries (book 2, p. 327), defines an assignment to be, and draws the distinction between an assignment and a lease of property, as follows: "An assignment is properly a transfer, or making over to another, of the right one has in any estate; but it is usually applied to an estate for life or years. And it differs from lease only in this: That by a lease one grants an interest less than his own, reserving to himself a reversion; in an assignment he parts with the whole property, and the assignee stands to all intents and purposes in the place of the assignor." If we may accept this definition from so eminent authority upon the common law, which definition and distinction so concisely stated and drawn seems to have met the approval of this court in other cases, and apply it to the facts of the case at bar, the conclusion must be reached that the instrument executed by the Dallas Brewery to Vidal was a sublease and not an assignment. The instrument speaks for itself. By its terms the whole estate granted to the Dallas Brewery by its lease from Mrs. Davis is not conveyed, for the reason there is reserved to the Dallas Brewery a contingent reversionary interest in the estate, to be resumed summarily upon the failure of Vidal to pay rent. More than this, and of equal significance, by the terms of the instrument the Dallas Brewery reserved the right to pay the rent to the original lessor, and thereby the right was reserved to forestall Mrs. Davis, upon the failure of Vidal to pay the rent, from exercising the right to re-enter and possess the premises. That right was reserved to the Dallas Brewery and gave it the power to control the estate in the premises upon failure by Vidal to pay it the rent.

If the instrument was an assignment of the lease, the Dallas Brewery must of necessity have parted with all its estate and interest in said premises, and could therefore exercise no right in or control over the premises. If the instrument was an assignment of the lease, the legal effect was to substitute Vidal in lieu of the Dallas Brewery. But this was not the case. By the terms of the instrument the Dallas Brewery retained the control of the possession of the leased premises, thereby denying the legal effect of an assignment, which would have given Mrs. Davis the right of re-entry and possession of the property upon Vidal's failure to pay the rent.

We are aware that there is great conflict of authority upon this subject, and that it would be futile to attempt to reconcile such conflict. Many of the authors of the text-books on the subject of the assignment of leases and subletting under leases, and the decisions of a great many of the states in this Union, hold that the fact that the right of re-entry is reserved in the assignment to the assignor upon failure of the assignee to pay rent does not change the instrument of assignment from such to a sublease. The holding of such authors and decisions is based upon the theory that the right of re-entry is not an estate or interest in land, nor the reservation of a reversion. They hold that the reservation of the right of re-entry upon failure to pay rent is neither an estate nor interest in land, but a mere chose in action, and when exercised the grantor comes into possession of the premises through the breach of the condition and not by reverter.

Those authorities which hold the contrary doctrine base their ruling upon the idea that the reservation in the instrument of the right of re-entry is a contingent reversionary interest in the premises resulting from the conveyance of an estate upon a condition subsequent where there has been an infraction of such condition. This view of the law is strongly presented in the opinion in the case of Dunlap v. Bullard, 131 Mass. 163, as follows: "Where an estate is conveyed to be held by the grantee upon a condition subsequent, there is left in the grantor a contingent reversionary interest. It was said in Austin v. Cambridgeport Parish, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 215, 223, that the grantor's contingent interest in such case was an estate which was transmissible by devise and passed under a residuary devise in the will of the grantor. It was declared to be a contingent possible estate, which, united with that of the tenants, 'composed only the entire fee-simple estate, as much so as the ordinary case of an estate for life to A., remainder to B.' In Brattle Square Church v. Grant, 3 Gray (Mass.) 142, 147 (63 Am. Dec. 725), it was said that when such an estate is created 'the entire interest does not pass out of the grantor by the same instrument of conveyance. All that remains, after the gift or grant takes effect, continues in the grantor, and goes to his heirs. This is the right of entry, which, from the nature of the grant, is reserved to the grantor and his heirs only, and which gives them the right to enter as of their old estate, upon the breach of the condition.' These considerations are equally applicable whether the estate subject to the condition subsequent is an estate in fee, or an estate for life or years. They apply where, by the terms of an instrument which purports to be an underlease, there is left in the lessor a contingent reversionary interest, to be availed of by an entry for breach of condition which restores the sublessor to his former interest in the premises. The sublessee under such an instrument takes an inferior and different estate from that which he would acquire by an assignment of the remainder of the original term; that is to say, an interest which may be terminated by forfeiture on new and independent grounds long before the expiration of the original term. If the smallest reversionary interest is retained, the tenant takes as sublessee, and not as assignee."

We are not able to discern why there may not be a contingent reversionary estate or interest in land, as well as any other contingent estate or interest. It certainly cannot be contended upon sound principle that, because the right of re-entry and resumption of possession of land is contingent, it is thereby any the less an estate or interest in land. The very definition of a contingent estate as distinguished from a vested estate is that "the right to its enjoyment is to accrue on an event which is dubious and uncertain." 1 Washburn on Real Property, 38.

That the right of re-entry is an estate or interest in land seems to have been recognized by Platte, in his work on Leases (volume 2, p. 318): " * * * a right of re-entry, whether immediate or future, and whether vested or contingent, into or upon any tenement or hereditament in England, of any tenure, may now be disposed of by deed."

We think it deducible from respectable authority that where the tenant reserves in the instrument giving possession to his transferee the right of re-entry to the premises demised, upon failure to pay rent, he necessarily retains a part of or an interest in the demised estate which may come back to him upon the happening of a contingency.

The instrument under consideration does not convey the entire estate received by the Dallas Brewery by its lease from Mrs. Davis, but retains by the right of possible re-entry a contingent reversionary interest in the premises. That the interest retained is a contingent reversionary interest does not, it seems to us, change the rule by which an assignment may be distinguished from a sublease. If by any limitation or condition in the conveyance the entire term, which embraces the estate conveyed in the contract of lease as well as the length of time for which the tenancy is created, may by construction be said not to have passed from the original tenant, but that a contingent reversionary estate is retained in the premises the subject of the reversion, the instrument must be said to constitute a subletting and not an assignment.

The following test may be applied to determine whether the instrument in question is an assignment of the original lease, or a subletting of the premises: If it is an assignment, its legal effect must be a transfer of the right of possession of the property conveyed to Vidal and the creation of a privity of estate and contract between Mrs. Davis, the original lessor, and Vidal, to whom the possession was granted by the Dallas Brewery. This would be essential to constitute the instrument an assignment, and if it was an assignment Vidal obligated himself to pay the rent to Mrs. Davis, and the Dallas Brewery had no further connection with or interest in the transaction. But such a result can by no fair or reasonable construction of the language and provisions of the instrument be deduced therefrom. On the contrary, the Dallas Brewery reserved the privilege of paying the rent to its lessor, and upon nonpayment of rent by Vidal it reserved the right to declare the instrument forfeited and to repossess the premises without notice to or the consent of Vidal. There can be but one theory upon which the Dallas Brewery considered itself interested in seeing that the rent was promptly paid by Vidal, and that is that it desired to control the property in question, and therefore intended, and by the language and reservation in the instrument made, it a sublease.

We do not think the proposition tenable that by the express terms of the agreement between the Dallas Brewery and Vidal, or by implication, Vidal obligated himself to pay the rent to Mrs. Davis. The provision of the contract relied upon to establish the fact that Vidal obligated himself to pay the rent to the lessor in the original lease is the following, "and in consideration therefor the said Vidal does well and truly agree and promise to pay the rents in said lease agreed to be paid, to wit, the sum of one hundred dollars per month." Under the uniform rule of construction the latter part of the above sentence explains and qualifies the preceding part. The obligation of Vidal was to pay the rents in said lease agreed to be paid, that is, the sum of $100 per month, payable on the 1st day of each month in advance. There is nothing in the agreement from which it may be inferred that Vidal obligated himself to pay the rents directly to Mrs. Davis.

Having reached the conclusion that the instrument executed by the Dallas Brewery to Vidal conveying the premises in question was a sublease and not an assignment, by reason of the provision reserving to the Dallas Brewery the right of re-entry, which had the effect to withhold a part of the term granted by the original lease, or which retained an interest in said estate, and because by the other terms of the instrument reserving to the Dallas Brewery the discretion to pay the rents upon its own responsibility and upon the failure of Vidal to pay the same to it, the right to declare the instrument forfeited and to re-enter and take possession of the premises indicate the intention and purpose of the parties to enter into a subletting of the premises and not to assign the original lease, we conclude there exists no privity of estate or contract between the plaintiff, Mrs. Davis, and the defendant, Lewis Vidal, and that Mrs. Davis has no cause of action authorizing her to recover judgment against Vidal.

Other questions presented in briefs of counsel are not discussed, for the reason their disposition is not essential to the decision of the case, in consequence of the view we have taken of its merits.

The court is of opinion the judgments of the Court of Civil Appeals and of the trial court should be affirmed, and it is, accordingly, so ordered.

EDWARDS v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 13, 1912.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 814*)—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence tended to show that, when accused killed deceased, deceased was approaching him with an iron rod of sufficient length and dimensions to have inflicted serious bodily injury or death, an instruction that anger and insulting words coupled with sudden gestures as if to draw a deadly weapon well calculated to inflict serious bodily injury would constitute adequate cause was improper because inapplicable to the evidence; there being no claim that a weapon was drawn.

2. HOMICIDE (§ 300*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—SELF-DEFENSE.

An instruction that if, at the time accused killed deceased, deceased was making an attack on him with a piece of iron, or was about to do so, which, viewed from accused's standpoint, placed him in danger of death or serious bodily injury, the jury should acquit, should have been given, where it was justified by the evidence, and the charge given was in the abstract with no pertinent application to the facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 614-632; Dec. Dig. § 300.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—HOMICIDE (§ 300*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—SELF-DEFENSE.

An instruction that when a killing takes place to prevent murder, if the weapons and means used by the party attempting such murder are such as would have been calculated to produce that result, it is presumed that the person so using them designed to inflict the injury, and that if, at the time accused struck and killed deceased, deceased was making an attack upon him which, under the circumstances, reasonably indicated an intention to murder, maim, or disfigure him, with a piece of iron, and the weapon and manner of its use were calculated to produce murder, maiming, or disfiguration, the law would presume that deceased intended to murder accused, and that if under these circumstances, viewed from accused's standpoint, he killed deceased, he should be found not guilty, should have been given, and was not covered by an instruction that, if accused believed his life was in danger, the jury should acquit, since under White's Ann. Pen. Code 1911, art. 676, providing that when homicide takes place to prevent murder, maiming, etc., if the weapons or means used by the party attempting such murder, etc., are such as would have been calculated to produce that result, it is presumed that he intended to inflict the injury, there is a legal presumption that the attacking party under the circumstances mentioned intends to kill or inflict serious bodily injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829; Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 614-632; Dec. Dig. § 300.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 300*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—SELF-DEFENSE.

Where the evidence showed that accused and deceased had some trouble, but that they made friends, and went to deceased's room to spend the night, an instruction that the difficulty having been settled, and accused having abandoned further trouble, his right of perfect self-defense revived, and, if deceased became the aggressor, he had such right, should have been given.

Appeal from District Court, Knox County; Jo. A. P. Dickson, Judge.

J. W. Edwards was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

C. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of manslaughter; his punishment being assessed at two years confinement in the penitentiary.

This is the second appeal; the first being found reported in 60 Tex. Cr. R. 323, 131 S. W. 1078. The salient features of the case as shown by the facts are fairly well stated in the decision on former appeal.

[1] This record shows that the court gave all the definitions of murder in the first and second degree. The first 14 clauses of the charge were devoted to the definition of these two degrees of homicide. In the fifteenth section of the charge the court instructed the jury that they could not find defendant guilty of murder either in the first or second degree, and then proceeded to give a charge with reference to manslaughter. The nineteenth section of the charge is criticised. It is in the following language: "Anger and insulting words, coupled with sudden gestures as if to draw a deadly weapon well calculated to inflict serious bodily injury on the part of the person killed, would constitute adequate cause, in view of the case." This section of the charge is criticised upon several grounds. It is inaptly expressed to say the least of it. The theory upon which this charge was given is found substantially in the following testimony: Appellant and deceased had had a little difficulty in the evening in which appellant seems to have been the aggressor. They had made friends, and appellant had gone to the room of deceased at his request and invitation to spend the night. While in the room the trouble was renewed; the state's theory being that appellant was the aggressor. Appellant's testimony both from his res gestæ statement, his own testimony, and the evidence of other witnesses is to the effect that while they were in the room the deceased brought about and occasioned the difficulty, and approached appellant with an iron bar or rod of iron of sufficient length and dimension to have inflicted serious bodily injury or death; that appellant warned the deceased three different times to stop and not come upon him; that he was unarmed at the time, and backed away from the deceased. Finally, in reaching around in the dark, he picked up something which proved to be a piece of wood or scantling, and, as deceased came upon him, he struck him with it. On account of this lick the deceased subsequently died. Upon another trial the language complained of might be more guardedly expressed. The contention is that deceased had not drawn a deadly weapon as the jury was left to infer from this language, but appellant was being threatened with an assault from deceased with an iron rod, and not the drawing of a weapon, and the charge should be pertinently applied to the facts in instructing the jury in reference to adequate cause as suggested by these facts.

[2] Appellant asked several charges, which were refused by the court. The first reads as follows: "If you believe from the evidence that at the time defendant killed deceased the deceased was making an attack on defendant with a piece of iron or was about to do so, which, viewed from defendant's standpoint, placed him, defendant, in danger of death or serious bodily injury, and to save himself therefrom defendant struck and killed deceased R. L. King, you will acquit," etc. We are of opinion this charge should have been given. The court's charge was given in the abstract with no pertinent application of the law to the facts. It is the safer and better rule always in charging the jury to apply the law to the facts of the given case. The charge given by the judge in the trial court would have fitted any case in which there was danger or apparent danger, and made no application directly to the facts of the case. We call attention to the above matters, so that they may not occur on another trial.

[3] Another charge requested by appellant submitted article 676 of White's Penal Code. This the court refused to give. It is unnecessary to repeat this charge. The substance of it is the jury was instructed that if they believed, at the time the defendant struck deceased, the deceased was making an attack upon him, which, under the circumstances, reasonably indicated an intention to murder, maim, or disfigure him, etc., with a piece of iron, and the weapon and the manner of its use were such as were calculated to produce either murder, maiming, or disfiguration, etc., then the law would presume that the deceased R. L. King intended to murder defendant, and, if under these circumstances and they to be viewed from the defendant's standpoint defendant killed deceased, they would find him not guilty. That portion of the charge was preceded by the further charge that the jury is charged, as a matter of law, that when a killing takes place to prevent murder, etc., if the weapons and means used by the party attempting or committing such murder, etc., are such as would have been calculated to produce that result, it is to be presumed that the person so using them designed to inflict the injury. This charge should have been given, and its omission is fatal to this conviction. The court charged the jury that if the defendant believed his life was in danger, etc., they should acquit, but under the facts the deceased was approaching appellant with an iron bar which was capable of producing death or inflicting serious bodily injury. These acts viewed in the light of self-defense, under the terms of article 676, supra, called for and demanded that this phase of the statute be given, because it was a legal presumption made so by the statute that under such circumstances the attacking party designed to kill or inflict serious bodily injury. The facts being shown that the deceased was making such an attack, or about to make such an attack with such weapon, the law required the jury to presume that he did intend to kill or inflict the mentioned injury. It has always been held under such circumstances a fatal omission for the court not to so charge, and wherever the exception has been properly presented for such failure a reversal has followed. The statute so provides, and it should be followed.

[4] There is another matter presented by special charges, and not given in the court's charge. In the evening there had been some trouble between the parties not of a serious nature, in which appellant was the aggressor. Appellant it seems had assaulted the deceased, which amounted to a simple assault, striking him with his fist or hat. The parties made friends and deceased invited appellant to spend the night with him, and he had gone to the room with deceased for that purpose when the tragedy occurred. Appellant insisted by special charge, which was refused, that the jury should have been instructed that under these circumstances, the difficulty having been settled, appellant having abandoned any further trouble, and friendship renewed, his right of perfect self-defense revived, and, if deceased became the aggressor under those circumstances, he would have the right of perfect self-defense. It is not undertaken here to copy the charges, but only the substance is stated. Upon another trial of the case this phase of the law should be given to the jury.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

WOODS v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 6, 1912.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1091*)—APPEAL—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—SUFFICIENCY.

On appeal from a conviction for making sales of intoxicating liquor on Sunday, bills of exception reciting that defendant excepted to a question whether the witness issued defendant a liquor license on the ground that the license would be the best evidence, but that the question was answered in the affirmative and to testimony that he issued a license to one J. F. W., although the evidence had not shown J. F. W. and accused to be the same person, are insufficient to require a review.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1092*)—APPEAL—BILLS OF EXCEPTION.

Where an exception in a prosecution for the illegal sale of intoxicants was reserved to a question as to whether witness issued a retail license to one J. F. W. on the ground that he and defendant were not shown to be the same person, the court's approval of the bill of exceptions, reciting the objection, is not a certificate of the fact on which the objection was based, but merely of the exception.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2834-2861, 2919; Dec. Dig. § 1092.*]

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 234*)—PROSECUTIONS—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Whether or not a license to sell intoxicants had been issued to accused is a fact which may be proved otherwise than by the exhibition of the license, this being particularly true in view of Acts 31st Leg. (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 17, § 14, requiring the posting of licenses in some prominent place in the building in which the sale of intoxicants is carried on.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 298; Dec. Dig. § 234.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1091*)—APPEAL—MATTERS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW.

In a prosecution for violating the liquor laws, a bill of exceptions reserved to the reading of an entry in a stub book kept by the officer issuing licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquor shows no error, where it does not show that the stub book or its contents were introduced in evidence.

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 665*)—TRIAL—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—PUTTING WITNESS UNDER RULE.

It is within the discretion of the trial court to permit a witness who was placed under the rule and who heard the testimony to testify.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1519-1566½; Dec. Dig. § 665.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1168*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where a witness who was improperly permitted to testify was unable to answer the question propounded, the error was harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3129-3136, 3144; Dec. Dig. § 1168.*]

7. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 227*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a prosecution for illegal sales of intoxicating liquors, it is proper to allow witness to testify that accused was engaged in the saloon business, even if it had not been shown that the retail license introduced in evidence was issued to accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 237; Dec. Dig. § 227.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

In a prosecution for illegal sales of intoxicating liquors, where accused's own witness stated that he owned the saloon, the improper allowance of evidence showing that he was engaged in the saloon business was harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3088, 3137-3143; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

9. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 233*)—OFFENSES—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a prosecution for sale of intoxicants on Sunday, it is not error to ask a witness whether he saw the side door of accused's saloon open on a stated Sunday.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 293-297, 298½; Dec. Dig. § 233.*]

10. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1170½*)—APPEAL—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

A bill of exceptions complaining of the allowance of a question whether the witness remembered when the grand jury was summoned, and how long before this it was that accused's saloon was open, shows no error, where it appears that his answer was in the negative.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3129-3135; Dec. Dig. § 1170½.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

11. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1091*)—APPEAL—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

In a prosecution for sales of intoxicating liquor on Sunday, a bill of exceptions complaining of the admission of testimony by a witness that he got a pint of whisky for a sick man, taken by itself, shows no error.

12. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 224*) — OFFENSES—PRESUMPTIONS.

There is no presumption that local option laws are in effect in a given territory, and hence in a prosecution for sales of intoxicants on Sunday made by a licensed dealer, the state having introduced his application for a license in which he made affidavit that prohibition was not in effect in the place in which he carried on his business, is not bound to show that the local option law had not been adopted.

Appeal from Burleson County Court; R. J. Alexander, Judge.

Frank Woods was convicted of an illegal sale of intoxicating liquor, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Buchanan & Stone, of Brenham, and T. J. Carter, of Somerville, for appellant. C. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen. for the State.

PRENDERGAST, J. Appellant was prosecuted and convicted under article 615, P. C., which is section 14 of the act approved April 17, 1909 (Acts 31st Leg. [1st Ex. Sess.] c. 17), commonly known as the "Fitzhugh-Robertson Liquor Law," and his penalty fixed at a fine of $100.

This article of the statute is as follows: "Every person or firm having a license, who may be engaged in or who may hereafter engage in the sale of intoxicating liquors to be drunk on the premises (in any locality of this state, other than where local option is in force), shall close and keep closed their houses and places of business and transact no business therein or therefrom from and after twelve o'clock midnight until five o'clock a. m. of each week day, and shall close and keep closed their houses and places of business and transact no business therein or therefrom from and after twelve o'clock midnight Saturday until five o'clock a. m. of the following Monday of each week; and any such person or firm, or his or their agent or employé who shall open or keep open, or permit to be opened or kept open, any such house or place of business for the purpose of traffic, or who shall sell or barter any intoxicating liquor of any kind, or who shall transact or permit to be transacted therein or therefrom any such business, between the hours aforesaid, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall be punished by a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than two hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than three months, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

The information charged that appellant on or about April 23, 1911, was a retail liquor dealer having a license as authorized by said act of the Legislature, and was then engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors to be drunk on his premises where sold in a locality of the state other than where local option was in force, and that he did then and there unlawfully, after 12 o'clock midnight on Saturday, April 22, 1911, and before 5 o'clock a. m. of the following Monday, April 24, 1911, open and permit to be opened his place of business for the purpose of traffic, and did then and there barter and sell intoxicating liquor, to wit, whisky and beer in quantities of less than one gallon, and did transact therein and therefrom business between said hours. The evidence clearly shows that appellant violated said law, and was amply sufficient to sustain the verdict and judgment.

[1] Appellant has a large number of bills of exceptions. Most, if not all, of them are very meager, and do not show sufficiently what the record shows nor the case to require this court to pass upon them. The first is that upon the trial of the cause "while the witness for the state Wondrash was upon the stand, upon direct examination, counsel for the state asked him the following question: 'Q. Did you issue a retail liquor dealer's license to Mr. Frank Woods?' To which question the defendant objected on the ground that said evidence would be secondary, and, if such license had been issued, the license would be the best evidence thereof, which objection was by the court overruled, and the witness was permitted to answer said question, which he did, as follows: 'A. I issued a retail dealer's license to Mr. J. F. Woods.' To which action of the court the defendant, by counsel, then and there excepted, and here now tenders this bill of exception, and prays that it may be examined, approved, etc." which was done.

His second bill is fully as meager as the one above. It shows that while said same witness was on the stand the state asked him: "Q. Did you issue a retail liquor dealer's license to Mr. Frank Woods? A. I issued a retail liquor dealer's license to Mr. J. F. Woods. Here is Mr. J. F. Woods' application for a permit, his permit, his bond—[producing the instruments]." To which answer of the witness the defendant, by counsel, objected on the ground that the application, permit, and bond of J. F. Woods were not admissible in evidence against Frank Woods, and that J. F. Woods and Frank Woods had not been shown to be one and the same person, which objection the court overruled and the answer was permitted to go before the jury, to which appellant excepted. See section 857, p. 557, and section 1123, p. 732, White's Ann. C. C.

P., for the rules about bills of exception, and some of the cases there collated. Conger v. State, 140 S. W. 1112.

[2] It will be seen by each and both of these bills that there is no such statement made of the case as that this court can tell therefrom whether the questions and answers of the witness shown by these bills were admissible or not. It will be further noticed that the second bill shows that it was appellant's objections and not stated as a fact by the court in the bill in approving it or otherwise that J. F. Woods, to whom the license was issued and the application, bond, etc., were made, was not Frank Woods, the defendant in this case. It has too often been decided by this court to need a citation to the cases to show that the uniform holding of this court is that an objection made to evidence asserted as a fact in the objection only is not a certificate by the judge, in approving the bill, that such was a fact. It is a mere objection. In this case even if we could consider this bill, and we could look to the record to ascertain whether or not the evidence showed that J. F. Woods and the defendant, Frank Woods, were other than the same person, we might find ample evidence to show that that was a fact.

[3] The first bill does not show that the contents of the license itself was attempted in any way to be proven—simply and solely whether or not the clerk had issued to appellant a license. Whether or not the said clerk had issued a license to appellant was an independent fact, which could be proven by him without the introduction of the license or proving its contents. Besides, section 28 of said act of 1909 requires that such license shall be posted in some conspicuous place in the house where the business for which license is necessary is carried on, and, of course, it must be kept posted there. Again, the information in this case itself charges that the appellant had such license, and upon all these grounds said testimony was admissible. So that, even if we could consider appellant's bills on these grounds, no error is presented. If it had been attempted, and these bills had shown that the contents of said license was testified to by this witness, then quite a different question might be presented, but this is not the case.

The evidence in this case shows that on June 15, 1910, appellant applied to the Comptroller of this state for a license to engage in the retail liquor business at Clay, in Burleson county, Tex., in a sworn application, complying in every particular with the requisites of such an application as prescribed by said act of 1909; that the Comptroller passed upon the same, and, after stating that his application in every way complied with the law and that he was qualified under the law as shown by his application to receive such license, permitted him to so apply for such license; that on June 23, 1910, he properly filed his petition before the county judge of Burleson county for such license, his petition therefor containing all the allegations prescribed under the law therefor, and that he desired to engage in the retail liquor business in said town of Clay; that the county judge properly, upon hearing his petition with all the necessary requisites alleged therein, granted the same; that he executed bond with the conditions and in the amount and strictly in accordance with said law; that he paid to the tax collector of Burleson county the amount of the tax fixed by law to entitle him to a license, and to engage in such business at said place. All these papers are those which are required by law, and which are required to be kept by the county clerk, and were produced by such clerk and introduced in evidence on the trial of this cause. The testimony further shows that said town of Clay was a very small place, and a very few inhabitants therein; that the appellant was engaged in the saloon business in said town at the time it was charged he violated said Sunday law. By the testimony of several witnesses, it was shown that on the Sunday charged in the indictment appellant's saloon was open and kept open for some time for the business of selling intoxicating liquor, and that many sales were made of such liquor at the time; that a large crowd was in there, going back and forth, bringing out bottles of liquor and drinking, carousing around, making considerable noise and disturbance, and all drinking, and some more or less intoxicated; that appellant was in his house and place of business while this was going on on that date. One witness swore that he himself bought such liquor from appellant personally on that day and occasion. Others show that he was present, and saw and could have seen what was then done.

Appellant himself did not testify, but his only clerk did, introduced by him. He testified that he was appellant's clerk during said month of April, 1911, and worked in appellant's store and saloon, sold groceries and dry goods, as well as liquors, and shows that he himself on that day as well as other Sundays, had appellant's place of business open and sold liquor repeatedly on Sunday therein while working for appellant; but he claims that he did this against appellant's instructions, and without his knowledge or consent; that he had the saloon open on Sunday, April 23, 1911, some five or six times that day, not longer than 30 minutes at a time, and that at these times he sold intoxicating liquor; that he attended to all of the saloon business for appellant, but that appellant got the money therefor.

From all of the facts and circumstances in this case the jury were clearly justified in believing and finding that a license to sell intoxicating liquors at retail was issued and delivered to appellant.

Appellant's next bill shows that while this same witness Wondrash was on the stand he produced the original permit to apply for a retail liquor dealer's license, an application therefor, his bond, petition to the county judge, his annual tax receipt therefor, all in accordance with the requirements of said act of the Legislature which are all copied in full in the bill, and that they were introduced in evidence; that appellant objected to all of them for the reason that J. F. Woods had not been shown to be the same person as Frank Woods, the appellant in this case. What we have said in discussing the other bills applies to this, and shows that no error is shown.

[4] Appellant's next bill, No. 4, has the same heading as the above bills. Then states:

"While the state's witness Joseph Wondrash was upon the stand, upon direct examination he produced a stub book kept by him, and started to read therefrom, which said stub book from which the witness read is in words and figures as follows, to wit:

"Retail { liquor
 ~~malt~~
 Individual } Dealer's License.

"For the sale of spirituous, vinous or malt liquors or medicated bitters. No. 48. Burleson County, Issued to J. F. Woods. For the sale of spirituous, vinous and malt liquors and medicated bitters in quantities of one gallon, and less than one gallon, to be drunk on the premises, at No. ——— St. Clay, Burleson County, Texas.

"Date July 12, 1910. State Tax, $375.00. County Tax, $187.50. City Tax, $——.

"Note. The Clerk will retain this stub."

"To which reading the defendant, by counsel, then and there objected on the grounds:"

Then follow six separate and distinct grounds of objection. Then the bill proceeds: "Which objections were, by the court, overruled, and the defendant then and there excepted to the action of the court, and here now tenders this bill of exception, and prays that the same may be examined, signed, and by the court approved and ordered filed as a part of the record in this cause. This the 6th day of October, A. D. 1911. This was after the introduction of the different papers by the county clerk showing his authority to issue liquor dealer's license to J. F. Woods. Allowed with the above explanation. R. J. Alexander, County Judge Burleson County."

If we could consider this bill, it would show no error whatever, for it states that, when said witness started to read from said stub book, the appellant objected to the reading, and the bill nowhere shows that the said stub book or what it is shown above to have contained was in any way or anywhere introduced in evidence.

[5, 6] Appellant's next bill shows: That, when the state introduced its witness J. W. Woods, it asked him this question: "Mr.

Woods, is J. F. Woods and Frank Woods one and the same person?" That the appellant objected to this for the reason that at the commencement of the trial all the witnesses in the case were placed under the rule, but that this witness, although present in the courtroom, was not placed under the rule, but was sitting in the courtroom listening to all the testimony. That the court overruled appellant's objections and the witness answered: "I cannot say." To this action appellant excepted. It was within the sound discretion of the court to permit a witness, although he had not been placed under the rule, to testify in the case, and this bill does not show any such abuse of this discretion as would authorize this court to hold his action reversible error. Besides, the answer of the witness, as shown, did not, and could not, injure the appellant.

[7, 8] Appellant has nine bills of exceptions to this effect: That while the witness for the state, naming him, was upon the stand, upon direct examination, counsel for the state asked him this question: "What business is Mr. Woods engaged in at Clay? A. He is in the saloon business at Clay." To this question and answer appellant objected because said testimony was inadmissible; that ownership of a mercantile business could not be proven by general reputation; that the evidence was secondary, and not the best evidence to prove his occupation; that it was a mere opinion of the witness, and tended to prove an issuable fact by illegal method. The court overruled the objection, and in approving the bill qualified it by stating that it was allowed with the explanation that it was after the introduction of the papers by the county clerk showing the issuance of a liquor dealer's license to J. F. Woods. This is, in substance, the full of each of said bills. No error is shown thereby. It was not attempted by this to show ownership, but simply and solely, as the questions and answers show, that the appellant was running a saloon business at Clay, which was entirely proper. Besides, appellant introduced his clerk and barkeeper, and had him testify as shown above that appellant was engaged in the retail liquor business at said place on the date charged in the indictment; that he clerked for him, ran the business, etc., and appellant got all the proceeds of his Sunday sales.

[9] Neither does the appellant's bill complaining that the witness John Scott was asked the question, "Did you see the side door of Mr. Woods' saloon open on the Sunday in April you were in Clay?" and his answer that he saw it open on Sunday, but did not recollect whether it was church Sunday or not, show any error whatever.

[10] Nor does appellant's bill complaining that the state was permitted to ask the witness Jeff Morgan if he remembered when the men were summoned before the grand jury, how long before this it was he saw the saloon open, and his answer that he did not know, show any error whatever.

[11] Nor does appellant's last bill, which shows that the state asked the witness McKinney, "Did you get any whisky from Mr. Woods?" and to which he replied, "I went out to Mr. Woods' house and told him that Mark was sick, and sent me to get him a pint of whisky. Mr. Woods went with me to the saloon and got the whisky for Mark. Mark did not pay anything for the whisky"—show any error. The bill does not disclose what the status of the case was, nor what bearing this question and answer had on the case, and therefore we cannot tell from the bill that it was in any way incompetent.

[12] Appellant contends that the state failed to prove that local option was not in force at Clay where this offense is charged to have been committed. It has uniformly been held in this state by this court that we cannot presume, and do not judicially know, and cannot judicially know, that the prohibition law is in force in any county or subdivision thereof anywhere in this state; that such laws while general so far as being laws of the state are nowhere in operation or effective, unless and until a proper election is held therefor, carried and the law declared to be in force, and all this must be proven as a matter of fact where necessary in order to show that prohibition is effective in any given county or subdivision thereof. It has also been uniformly held by this court that the legal presumption is that prohibition is not in force in any given locality, but that every county and subdivision thereof in the state is presumed to be in what is ordinarily denominated "wet" territory. This being the case, we think it was not incumbent upon the state to prove that prohibition was not in force in the locality in Burleson county where appellant ran his retail liquor business. All the evidence and the uncontradicted evidence in this case introduced by both the state and the appellant showed that appellant was in the retail liquor business at the time and place in which this offense was charged, and that he applied for license, and obtained license, to conduct such business as a retail liquor dealer and had a license therefor, which could not have been issued without the location was in "wet" territory and prohibition not in force therein. Besides, the appellant, in his application for license, expressly swore that there was no statute or ordinance in force in said territory prohibiting the retail sale of intoxicating liquor, and that he had been engaged in such business for the past two years. So that we hold there is nothing in this contention by appellant, even if it was incumbent upon the state to make such proof.

There is no bill of exceptions to appellant's complaint of the claimed argument of the county attorney. So that we cannot consider appellant's assignment on that subject.

The judgment will be affirmed.

WHORTON v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 13, 1912.)

1. BURGLARY (§ 41*)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence in a prosecution for burglary held sufficient to sustain a conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Burglary, Cent. Dig. §§ 94-103, 109; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—CURE BY VERDICT.

In a prosecution for burglary, error, if any, in permitting evidence that defendant was 20 years of age, and that his companion was only 18, was harmless, where the jury assessed the minimum punishment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3088, 8130, 3137-3143; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 532*) — CONFESSION—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE—TIME.

In a prosecution for burglary, the testimony of the owner of the store entered that he heard that his store had been burglarized, given preliminary to proving a confession by defendant to witness, made the next morning, was admissible as fixing the time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1218; Dec. Dig. § 532.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*) — TRIAL — REQUESTED CHARGES.

Requested charges, which are fully covered by the main charge, are properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

5. BURGLARY (§ 28*)—PROSECUTION—ISSUES AND PROOF—OWNERSHIP.

Under an indictment for burglary of a store alleged to belong to the prosecuting witness, proof that it was the store of the witness and his son was not error, where the witness testified that he was in charge of it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Burglary, Cent. Dig. §§ 67-78; Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

6. BURGLARY (§ 22*)—PROSECUTION AND INDICTMENT—OWNERSHIP.

Where property is owned in common or jointly by two or more persons, an indictment for burglary may allege ownership to be in either or all of them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Burglary, Cent. Dig. §§ 55-61, 66; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 784*) — TRIAL — INSTRUCTIONS—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

Where a witness in a burglary trial testified that defendant admitted to him that he was guilty of the offense, it was not necessary to charge on circumstantial evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1883-1888, 1922, 1960; Dec. Dig. § 784.*]

Appeal from District Court, Parker County; J. W. Patterson, Judge.

O. L. Whorton was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Hood & Shadle, of Weatherford, for appellant. C. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

HARPER, J. Appellant was indicted and convicted of burglary, and his punishment assessed at two years' confinement in the penitentiary.

[1] The evidence on behalf of the state would show that appellant and one Ben Davis burglariously entered the store of J. F. Elam & Son, and J. F. Elam testifies that appellant approached him, the morning after his boys claimed to have detected them, and said: "Uncle Jim, I got in your store last night, and that it was not the first time; but he had never taken anything but little things, candy, cigars, tobacco, etc., about four or five dollars' worth, and that if the matter was not reported he would give anything." This statement is not denied, and this, with the testimony of S. D. and Roy Elam, who claimed to have witnessed the burglarious entry, amply supports the verdict.

[2] The appellant claims the court erred in permitting it to be shown that appellant was 20 years of age, while Ben Davis was only 18. As the punishment assessed against appellant is the minimum fixed by law, this testimony could not have been hurtful to appellant; but the youth of both seems to have been considered by the jury in making the penalty so light. The matter presents no error.

[3] While J. F. Elam was testifying, he was permitted to state he had heard that his store had been burglarized. This was objected to; but as the record discloses that this was but preliminary to proving the statement of appellant above referred to, and that it was the next morning when the statement was made to him by appellant, it was admissible as fixing the time, and the bill presents no error.

[4] The special charge, peremptorily instructing the jury to find appellant not guilty, should not have been given; and the other two special charges requested were fully covered by the main charge of the court.

The court did not err in charging on who are principals under the testimony of S. D. and Roy Elam, and the charge given was an admirable presentation of the law in this respect.

[5, 6] The indictment alleged that the house burglarized belonged to J. F. Elam, while the proof showed it was the store of J. F. Elam & Son. As J. F. Elam testified he was in charge of the store, this presents no error. Branch's Criminal Law correctly states the rule to be that, where property is owned in common or jointly by two or more persons, the ownership may be alleged to be in either or all of them, citing Samora v. State, 4 Tex. App. 508, and numerous other cases; and in section 789 the same author states that the state is not required to prove the want of consent of a person not mentioned in the indictment, citing Burt v.

State, 7 Tex. App. 590, and numerous other cases.

[7] As J. F. Elam testified that appellant admitted to him he was guilty of the offense, it was not necessary to charge on circumstantial evidence. Heard v. State, 24 Tex. App. 111, 5 S. W. 846, and Branch's Crim. Law, § 203.

The judgment is affirmed.

QUENTES v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 20, 1912.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1097*)—APPEAL AND ERROR—STATEMENT OF FACTS.

In the absence of a statement of facts in a criminal case, a question, raised by motion for new trial, on whether the verdict and judgment were contrary to the law and evidence, cannot be reviewed.

Appeal from Criminal District Court, Harris County; C. W. Robinson, Judge.

Louis Quentes was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Affirmed.

C. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

PRENDERGAST, J. The appellant was convicted of burglary, and given the lowest penalty.

There is no bill of exception and no statement of facts. The only question raised is by a motion for new trial, to the effect that the verdict and judgment is contrary to the law and the evidence. Of course, this cannot be passed upon without a statement of facts.

The judgment is affirmed.

CUBINE v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 6, 1912. Rehearing Denied Dec. 4, 1912.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 214*)—PRELIMINARY COMPLAINT—AMENDMENT—ERROR IN JURAT—LACK OF DATE.

Where by mistake the officer, in affixing his jurat to a criminal complaint, left off the year, the court, on request of the county attorney before trial, properly permitted the jurat to be amended to show the exact date upon which it was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 483½; Dec. Dig. § 214.*]

Appeal from Fannin County Court; Rosser Thomas, Judge.

Will Cubine was convicted of violating the local option law, and appeals. Affirmed.

Will Cubine, in pro. per. C. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

HARPER, J. Appellant was prosecuted and convicted of violating the local option law, and his punishment assessed at a fine of $80 and 30 days' imprisonment in the county jail.

There is no statement of facts accompanying the record. Consequently there is but one question presented that we can review, and that is presented in bills of exception Nos. 1 and 2. It appears that, when complaint was filed, the officer in affixing his jurat left off the year; the jurat reading: "Subscribed and sworn to before me this 31st day of August, A. D. 190—." The county attorney, before trial, requested the permission of the court to have the officer amend and correct his jurat, which leave was granted by the court, and the officer before whom the complaint was sworn to amended his jurat to read as follows: "Subscribed and sworn to before me this 31st day of August, 1911." This was permissible, and the court did not err in permitting the jurat to be amended. Scott v. State, 9 Tex. App. 434; Allen v. State (App.) 13 S. W. 998; Neiman v. State, 29 Tex. App. 361, 16 S. W. 253; Sanders v. State, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 156, 105 S. W. 803.

The judgment is affirmed.

LYSTER v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 20, 1912.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1101*)—APPEAL AND ERROR—DISPOSITION—FAILURE TO FILE STATEMENT OF FACTS WITHOUT FAULT.

Where a failure to file a statement of facts in a criminal cause within the time granted was due to no negligence of the appellant's counsel, but rather to a failure of the state's attorney to agree to one prepared, and his refusal to do anything in the way of getting such a statement, when requested to do so by the court, appellant was deprived of a statement without his fault, and a reversal is warranted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3204; Dec. Dig. § 1101.*]

Appeal from Morris County Court; C. M. Henderson, Judge.

T. C. Lyster was convicted of unlawfully carrying a pistol, and appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Moore & Hart and Henderson & Bolin, all of Daingerfield, for appellant. C. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of unlawfully carrying a pistol; his punishment being assessed at a fine of $100.

The county court that tried him adjourned on the 26th of August. There was a 20-day order entered, granting time to file statement of facts and bills of exception. The statement of facts was prepared by appellant's counsel. The county attorney kept the statement of facts until the 5th of September, when he returned same to appellant's attorneys with verbal disagreement. One of the attorneys for appellant then took the statement of facts to the county judge, and explained to him the disagreement, with a request that he make up a statement of facts. This the judge did not do. The statement of facts was carried to the county judge on the 8th of September. It is further stated that the county judge did not prepare a statement of facts, but, without approving the statement of facts prepared by appellant's counsel, it was filed by the county judge with the county clerk; that appellant had nothing to do with its filing, and had no connection with it. It is further shown by the affidavit that appellant did what he could, or his attorneys for him did, to secure a statement of facts approved and filed within the time required by law. The county judge does not make an affidavit, but writes a letter, which is found with the record, and makes about this statement: That the statement in the affidavit by Hon. G. D. Hart, the party making the affidavit above referred to, in regard to statement of facts, is practically correct; that he could not, from memory, give the exact dates of the different actions in regard to the statement of facts, but he states Judge Hart brought him the statement of facts on the 8th of September, 1911, and at the same time informed him that the county attorney, who tried the case, had refused to agree with him; that immediately afterwards he saw the county attorney, and inquired of him what the trouble was, and the county attorney informed him that he did not think the facts were correctly stated, and would not agree, and also said that there was a letter that had been offered in evidence that he specially wanted in the statement. He told the county attorney that the attorneys had left a place for the letter to be copied in, and were willing that it be inserted; that he found out from the county attorney that the letter was in possession of a Mr. Jones, who lived in the country, and afterwards he got the letter himself, but too late for the statement of facts to be filed in time, as required by law. "I asked the county attorney to get this letter himself, and put it in, if that was all that was the matter with the statement. He never did; in fact, he refused to do anything in the way of getting a statement of facts, except to refuse to agree on the one as prepared by the defendant's attorneys, and as result of this the statement of facts was not filed within the time required by law." The county judge signs the letter officially.

The transcript shows the following: "Statement of facts delivered to C. M. Henderson [County Judge] September 8, 1911. Filed 1—30—1912. J. W. Cason, County Clerk Morris County, Texas." The statement of facts is not signed by the judge. Under the showing made by the affidavit of Mr. Hart, one of the attorneys for appellant, and the statement made by the county judge in his letter, the appellant was not at fault. We are of opinion appellant has been deprived of a statement of facts without fault on his part. There are numerous decisions upholding this conclusion. Some of them are of very recent date. These commence with Trammell v. State, 1 Tex. App. 121, and end with Rawls v. State, 150 S. W. 431, decided at the present term of the court, and are unbroken to date.

Because appellant was deprived of a statement of facts on appeal, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 236*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS—GIFT OF LIQUOR TO MINOR—EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for giving intoxicating liquor to a minor without the consent of his parent or guardian, evidence held insufficient to sustain a conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 300-322; Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

Appeal from Scurry County Court; Fritz R. Smith, Judge.

Whitcomb Simpson was convicted of giving intoxicating liquors to a minor, and appeals. Reversed and remanded.

C. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. [1] The indictment charged appellant "with unlawfully giving and delivering, and causing to be given and delivered, and was concerned in the gift and delivery of, spirituous, vinous, malt, and intoxicating liquor to Jenkins De Shazo, the said Jenkins De Shazo then and there being a person under the age of 21 years, without the written consent of the parent or guardian of the said," without mentioning the name of the minor after the word "said." Verbal motion was made to quash the indictment. The court signs the bill with the statement that defendant made his motion orally, and same was not argued by his attorney and the county attorney in open court, and ruled on by the court in open court. We deem it unnecessary to review this question in the light of this record.

[2] The serious question is the want of sufficient evidence to justify the conviction. The alleged minor testified: "I live near Camp Springs, in Scurry county. I was at Mr. Jones' on or about the 1st day of March, 1911; was there at a gathering. While there I met and saw the defendant. While there the defendant and I went out in the yard, and outside of the yard gate. The defendant had a bottle of whisky. He went to where there was a post near the yard gate, picked up something and held it to his mouth, and then set it down by a post and stepped back some distance. I picked up what proved to be a bottle of whisky and took a drink out of it and set it back where I found it. We were standing near each other when we drank the whisky. The defendant did not give me any intoxicating liquor. He did not tell me where I could find any. When he set whatever it was down and stepped off, I just went and picked it up and got a drink and set it back down where I found it. He did not ask me to have a drink; nor did he tell me where it was." The father of the minor testified that he was under 21 years of age, at least was on March 1, 1911, but would soon be 21 years of age. These were the only witnesses who testified in the case; defendant offering no evidence. We are of opinion, under this state of facts, that this conviction cannot be sustained.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

MAYFIELD v. STATE

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 20, 1912.)

GRAND JURY (§ 7*)—DISMISSAL.

An order of court directing the summoning of grand jurors for the three succeeding terms of court is without authority of law, and a prosecution commenced under an indictment returned by a grand jury summoned for the second term after the order was made must be dismissed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Grand Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 2, 16, 21; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

Appeal from District Court, Harrison County; H. T. Lyttleton, Judge.

Beulah Mayfield was convicted of crime, and appeals. Reversed, with order to dismiss.

Jones, Bibb & Scott, of Marshall, for appellant. C. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

HARPER, J. In this case the court at the November term ordered the jury commissioners to summon grand jurors for the three succeeding terms of court, and appellant was indicted by a grand jury summoned for the second term after the order was made.

The questions presented on this appeal are so thoroughly discussed in the case of Woolen v. State, 150 S. W. 1165, decided at this term of court, we do not deem it necessary to do so again. There is no authority in law for the court to order a jury commission to summon a grand jury for any other than the next or succeeding term of court. As said in the Woolen Case, it may be more convenient and less expensive to have a jury commission to draw jurymen for several terms of court, but until the law authorizes or sanctions that method we cannot do so.

The judgment is reversed, and the prosecution ordered dismissed.

KELLY v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Oct. 16, 1912. Rehearing Denied Nov. 27, 1912.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1092*)—BILLS OF EXCEPTION—APPROVAL—TIME OF FILING.

Where the judge refused to sign defendant's bills of exceptions because not full and correct, and prepared his own bills, and defendant did not have his bills proved by bystanders, they could not be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2829, 2834-2861, 2919; Dec. Dig. § 1092.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 166*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a homicide case, evidence that the sheriff had made statements as to defendant's defeat in an election, loud enough for the latter, who was 15 or 20 feet away, to hear, was admissible to show motive, where it appeared that immediately afterwards he went to where deceased, who had opposed him in the election, was sitting, and the difficulty resulted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 320-331; Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 404*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY—DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE.

There was no error in admitting in evidence a bullet found on the ground where the killing occurred, where the position of deceased at the time he was shot was a contested issue, on which the finding of the bullet would have a strong bearing, and the bullet was shown to be of a size that fitted defendant's pistol, and was in a pool of blood that must have come from deceased.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 873, 891-893, 1457; Dec. Dig. § 404.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 166*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a homicide case, evidence elicited by the state on cross-examination that the witness was arrested by defendant at a given time was properly admitted where its only purpose was for the fixing of the time and place, and was followed by proof by the witness that appellant at that time told the witness he would let him go if he would tell on the deceased, since it tended to show his state of mind toward the deceased.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 320-331; Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 472*)—EVIDENCE—OPINIONS.

In a homicide case, where defendant contended that deceased had cut him immediately before the shooting, an answer by a qualified witness to the question, "If a man so cut should get up and walk 15 feet and turn around, would the presence of blood have appeared on his face?" was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1059; Dec. Dig. § 472.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 608*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where the defendant filed an application for a continuance, naming a number of witnesses, which the court overruled, it was an error at the close of the evidence to allow the state to show the presence of the witnesses in court in order to preclude a new trial or reversal for denial of the continuance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1364-1368; Dec. Dig. § 608.*]

7. WITNESSES (§ 392*)—IMPEACHMENT—CONTRADICTORY STATEMENTS.

Where defendant's witness on cross-examination was asked if he had not at the prior term made an affidavit to secure a change of venue for defendant, and he at first denied, but subsequently admitted, doing so, but denied he knew what was in the application, it was proper to show that in his affidavit he had stated he had "been fully informed of and had read the contents of the application and that the facts stated therein were true," since it went to his credibility as a witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1249-1251, 1257; Dec. Dig. § 392.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 419, 420*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY—HEARSAY.

In a homicide case, it was not error to refuse to permit defendant to testify that C. had told him that he had seen two cattle in S.'s brand, and not the brand of deceased, in a certain pasture; it appearing that deceased had sold cattle to the man who placed the cattle in the pasture, the testimony being hearsay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 973-983; Dec. Dig. §§ 419, 420.*]

9. WITNESSES (§ 347*)—CREDIBILITY—CONDUCT OF WITNESS.

Where a witness for defendant testified, among other things, that deceased had confessed to him that he had stolen a head of cattle, the state could properly prove that deceased was not indicted for the offense, and that the witness was a member of the grand jury that investigated the case, and had not called the attention of the grand jury to the fact of such confession, since it affected his credit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1134; Dec. Dig. § 347.*]

10. WITNESSES (§ 277*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION OF ACCUSED—EVIDENCE—PRIOR CONVICTION.

Though, when a former crime is admitted, the circumstances attendant upon it cannot be gone into, yet when a defendant himself brings it into a case and seeks to arouse sympathy for himself by showing that he was led into crime as a mere boy by older persons, then the state may show the real facts, and, if on cross-examination of such defendant it develops that defendant committed another crime, which the state's attorney immediately asked the court to instruct the jury not to consider, there is no error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 925, 979-984; Dec. Dig. § 277.*]

11. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 824*)—MURDER IN THE SECOND DEGREE—INSTRUCTIONS.

The words "mitigate, excuse or justify," used in a charge defining murder of the second degree, have a well-understood meaning, and, in the absence of a request, it is not necessary for the court to define them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1996-2004; Dec. Dig. § 824.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 309*)—MANSLAUGHTER—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the state showed only a case of murder, and the defendant as justification alleged an assault with a knife by deceased, and threats on occasions other than when the assault was made, a charge on manslaughter which dealt only with such assault was proper, since every charge must be viewed in the light of the evidence adduced in the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 649-656; Dec. Dig. § 309.*]

13. HOMICIDE (§ 39*)—MANSLAUGHTER—ADEQUATE CAUSE.

Manslaughter is predicated upon adequate cause, and, unless such cause exists, the homicide will not be reduced from murder, although committed under the influence of sudden passion, rendering the mind incapable of cool reflection.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 59-61; Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

14. HOMICIDE (§ 116*)—SELF-DEFENSE—THREATS.

Threats of themselves alone will not justify a killing, but if deceased raised from his seat with a knife, and defendant thought he was going to carry into effect previous threats to kill him, the right of self-defense arose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 158-163; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

15. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 761*)—INSTRUCTIONS—ISSUES—HOMICIDE.

A criticism of an instruction on self-defense, in that it "required the jury to believe the threats were made," is without merit, where it was not disputed that such threats were made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1731, 1738, 1754-1764, 1771; Dec. Dig. § 761.*]

16. HOMICIDE (§ 116*)—MANSLAUGHTER—THREATS.

Threats of themselves alone will not reduce a killing to manslaughter, but, though an assault by deceased later was such as would not reasonably cause one to believe that he was in danger of losing his life or of serious bodily injury, yet the conduct at the time was such, considering the previous threats, as to cause such a degree of anger or terror as to render the mind incapable of cool reflection, the offense would be only manslaughter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 158-163; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

17. HOMICIDE (§§ 300, 340*)—JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE—ABANDONMENT OF DIFFICULTY—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an instruction on the abandonment of the difficulty, the use of the words "in good faith abandoned," etc., was improper, in that the jury might infer that the defendant intended at some future time to renew the difficulty, but it is harmless error in a case where there is no evidence from which such an inference could be drawn.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 614-632, 715-720; Dec. Dig. §§ 300, 340.*]

18. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 728*)—REMARKS OF COUNSEL—REQUESTS FOR INSTRUCTION.

In the absence of a requested charge, remarks of the counsel for the state excepted to present no error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1699-1691; Dec. Dig. § 728.*]

19. HOMICIDE (§ 116*)—JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE—PROVOCATION—THREATS.

Threats made by one against another with the intention of provoking a difficulty on that occasion would not justify the other in killing him on another and different occasion before an act is done or word spoken.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 158-163; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

Appeal from District Court, De Witt County; John M. Green, Judge.

Henry Kelly was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Proctor, Vandenberg & Crain, of Victoria, S. C. Lackey, of Cuero, and W. T. Bagby, of Hallettsville, for appellant. Davidson & Bailey and Waldeck & Hartman, both of Cuero, and C. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

HARPER, J. Appellant was indicted, charged with murder, tried and convicted of murder in the second degree, and his punishment assessed at five years' confinement in the penitentiary.

Appellant's first assignments relate to the action of the court in overruling his application for a change of venue. It appears from the record that on the last day of the term at which appellant was tried he presented to the court for approval his bills of exception, in regard to the overruling of this plea, and the court on that day indorsed thereon a refusal of same because they were not full and correct bills, and stated he would prepare and file his own bills, and later the court did make and file bills of exception. Appellant insists we should consider his bills. Read in the light of the bills prepared and filed by the court, it is manifest that the bills prepared and presented by appellant were not complete, and, as presented in these bills, there is no error in overruling the application for a change of venue.

[1] Appellant is not entitled to have his bills considered, the law pointing out the method for him to pursue in case the court declines to approve a proper bill. When the court rejected the bills on the day presented on the grounds he did, appellant should have proven them by bystanders, if they were correct, and, when he fails to do so, we will consider the bills prepared by the court.

[2] There was no error in permitting witnesses to state what the sheriff said in regard to the result of the election. The witnesses testify that appellant was in 15 or 20 feet of the sheriff when he made the statement, and the statement was made loud enough for a man to hear it at that distance. The evidence is conflicting as to whether or not defendant knew he had been defeated for constable at the time of the difficulty. The defendant's evidence would present the theory he thought he was elected by a small majority; while the evidence for the state would show that he knew he was defeated, in fact had so stated himself to a witness, and that he went shortly thereafter to a point where deceased was sitting and the difficulty resulted. It was a material inquiry as tending to show motive, and all evidence which would tend to show that defendant knew the result would be admissible.

[3] There was no error in admitting in evidence the bullet found in the blood on the ground where the killing occurred. The bullet that killed deceased entered the right breast of deceased between the nipple and collar bone, passed through and made its exit on the left side. The doctor testified that, if not deflected, it passed through the lungs, and near or through the heart. The position of deceased at the time he was shot was a contested issue, and the finding of this bullet at the place it was found would have a strong bearing on this issue. The bullet was shown to be of a size that fit defendant's pistol, and was in a pool of blood that must have come from deceased.

[4] While Wm. Hoffman was on the witness stand he was permitted to state that he had been arrested by appellant at a given time charged with theft of cattle. This was objected to by appellant, and, if this was all his testimony, the objection would be well taken. State's counsel stated this was only for the purpose of fixing time and place, and followed it with proof by the witness that appellant at that time made Hoffman the proposition if that, "if he would tell on George Thomas (deceased), he (appellant) would turn him loose." Under the record in this case this testimony was decidedly admissible, for the evidence would show that the cause of the trouble between appellant and deceased was occasioned by appellant's insistence on prosecuting deceased for cattle theft, and, if he were willing to release another person charged with the same character of offense, if he would give evidence against deceased, it had a tendency to show the state of his mind towards deceased, and who really was in fact responsible for the bad state of feeling between the two men (theretofore friends), and which finally culminated in the death of one of them. The state was further permitted to show that this witness had been summoned by defendant. Taking into consideration the cross-examination of this witness, this presents no error.

[5] Defendant, when he arrived at home, called Dr. Hartman to attend the wound on his face. Appellant's contention was that this wound was inflicted by deceased just prior to the time he shot him. The state's contention was that deceased had no knife in his hand, and did not cut appellant, and that he was not cut at the time he left the scene of the difficulty. Dr. Hartman testified to the nature and character of the wound, and he then was asked the question: "If a man were lying on the ground, and that wound inflicted while in that position, and after the infliction of the wound the man drew a pistol and fired a shot, and then got up and walked 10 or 15 feet and turned and looked back, would the presence of blood have appeared on his face at that time?" To which question the witness answered that it would, and enough would have flowed from this wound for it to have gotten down on his clothing. This testimony was objected to by appellant, and a proper bill reserved. Dr. Hartman had qualified as an expert, and stated he was a graduate of a well-known medical college, explained the wound and the blood vessels necessarily severed, and the knowledge he demonstrated he possessed rendered the testimony admissible.

[6] Defendant filed an application for a continuance, naming a number of witnesses, which was by the court overruled. At the close of the testimony, the state proved by the sheriff that the presence of all these witnesses had been secured but one, and the testimony of the wife of this absent witness was introduced to show that he was in such a mental condition, if present, he would not be a competent witness. When the state offered to prove the presence of these witnesses, defendant objected, when the state's counsel stated his only purpose was to prove their presence in answer to the application for a continuance. It was merely shown they were present. This presents no error. If the counsel thought it would injure his client to merely show their presence, if he had requested the retirement of the jury, doubtless the court would have granted the request. Since appellant had filed an application for a continuance, on account of their absence, it was necessary to make it known to the court that they were present, otherwise, in case of conviction, the court might feel compelled to grant a new trial, or this court reverse the case, when, in fact, no just ground for complaint would exist if it were known that the witnesses attended court, and yet were not called by appellant. The application for continuance was not introduced before the jury, nor the witnesses called to the stand. The sheriff was merely permitted to state they were in attendance on court, without stating who had them summoned.

[7] When the witness W. S. Smythe was on the stand and had testified to material facts in behalf of defendant, on cross-examination he was asked if he had not, at the prior term of court, made an affidavit to secure a change of venue for defendant. He at first denied doing so, but subsequently admitted doing so, but denied he knew what was in the application made by appellant. The state was permitted to show that in his affidavit he had stated he had "been fully informed of the contents of and had read the application for a change of venue filed by appellant, and that the facts therein stated were true." This testimony properly went to the interest and bias of the witness, and would aid the jury in passing on his credibility, and was so limited by the court in his charge.

[8] There was no error in refusing to permit appellant to state while on the witness stand that Mr. Corcoran had told him that he had seen two cattle in Steinemann's brand (and not the brand of deceased) in a certain pasture, it appearing that deceased had sold cattle to the man who placed the cattle in the pasture. In so far as this record discloses, Mr. Corcoran was living and within reach of the process of the court, and, if this testimony was desired, he should have been summoned and placed on the stand. The testimony offered was hearsay and inadmissible.

[9] Marcus Morrow, a witness for defendant, had testified in behalf of defendant, and, in addition to testifying to threats made by deceased, had testified that deceased, Thomas, had admitted to him that, in fact, he had stolen the one head of cattle, and got him to go and see Joe Bennett; that deceased had told him that Bennett was the only man who could hurt him, and wanted him, witness, to find out if Bennett was going to tell it. The state proved that deceased was not indicted for the offense; that witness Morrow was a member of the grand jury that investigated the case, and had not called the attention of the grand jury to the facts he knew (the alleged confession of deceased), and had not had Bennett summoned before the grand jury. As a person who becomes a member of the grand jury is required to take an oath that he will leave no person "unpresented for love, fear, favor, affection or hope of reward, but shall present things truly as they come to his knowledge," this testimony was admissible as affecting the credit to be given by the jury to his testimony, and the court so limited it.

[10] While the state was developing its case, on cross-examination, appellant elicited the fact that deceased had used abusive epithets towards him, and said he was an ex-convict. He also introduced witnesses to show that deceased had approached them and requested them not to vote for appellant for the office he was seeking, and had told such witnesses that appellant was an ex-convict, and some had said appellant was a double ex-convict. Appellant when he took the stand in his own behalf testified: That he was raised in De Witt county, and when he was about 18 years of age he left with three grown men, and went to Harris county, and was subsequently arrested charged with committing the offenses of theft of a horse, and being concerned in a conspiracy to rob a train. That, on advice of friends, he had pleaded guilty to both offenses. He further stated that while in the penitentiary he was granted so much time "for good behavior." It is thus seen that appellant brought into the case the fact he was an ex-convict and in extenuation claimed while he was a young man he had been led astray by older men, and had made a good prisoner. The state on cross-examination attempted to show that he knew the character of the men when he joined them, and by going into the details, as far as appellant was concerned, to show there were no extenuating circumstances. As appellant brought these offenses, and his conviction of them into the case, and then to soften the effect of such evidence, and to really turn it so that it would create sympathy for him in the minds of the jury, there was no error in the court permitting the state to show the real circumstances by cross-questioning appellant. It is true that, when testimony of a former crime is admitted, the circumstances attendant upon it cannot be gone into. That case will not be tried. But when a defendant himself brings it into a case, and seeks to arouse sympathy for himself thereby, then the state will be permitted to show whether or not under the real facts he is entitled to such sympathy. He having injected the issue, he cannot object that the state attempts to meet it. However, in this cross-examination, the state developed that appellant had at that time stolen another horse in Lavaca county, and for which he had never been prosecuted. State's counsel at once stated to the court that it had not sought to develop that fact and the answer was a surprise to them, and they asked the court to instruct the jury not to consider this fact in their deliberations, which request the court promptly complied with, and then in his charge again instructed the jury they could not consider that fact for any purpose. Under these circumstances, we do not think the court erred in permitting this cross-examination of appellant.

This disposes of all the bills of exception in so far as they relate to the testimony, but a number of exceptions were taken to the charge of the court, and a brief résumé of the testimony may render the opinion more intelligible.

In 1908 appellant was elected constable of Cuero precinct, and at that time deceased was a warm supporter. In 1909 appellant's half-brother rented land from deceased, and during that year trouble arose between them. A portion of the testimony would indicate that the relations became strained also between appellant and deceased over this matter, but no real bitterness was manifested until later, when appellant learned some facts that led him to believe that deceased had stolen some cattle from Mr. Steinemann, and, when he communicated what he had heard to Mr. Steinemann, the latter swore out a search warrant, and the sheriff, appellant, and Mr. Steinemann went to deceased's pasture and searched it, finding none of Steinemann's cattle in deceased's pasture, but in an adjoining pasture found one head in Steinemann's brand and which Steinemann claimed. Deceased had purchased some cattle from Steinemann on two occasions, and also claimed this animal. Deceased was arrested, charged with theft of this animal. An examining trial was held and deceased discharged. He claimed that appellant did not swear the truth on this trial, and the feeling between the two men became intense. Appellant became a candidate for re-election, and deceased vigorously opposed him, and it is said that during the campaign used abusive epithets, charged him with being an ex-convict, and some witnesses testified that deceased said, if appellant was elected, it would do him no good, for he would kill him. Appellant, on the other hand, was also active; went to Victoria and voluntarily went before the grand jury in an effort to have deceased indicted; went to Duval county in an attempt to fasten a charge of theft against deceased. In these efforts he failed, but he also at times made remarks about deceased uncomplimentary. On one occasion they met in a saloon, high words ensued, and a personal combat followed. Election day, July 23, 1910, both were on the streets of Cuero, and after the polls closed both were around the courthouse, but finally deceased took a seat on some steps to a business house in the town with four or five citizens of the town. While seated there appellant approached them; got out of his buggy, and walked up to them with a buggy whip in his hand. He says to talk to his uncle (who was in the crowd) about the election. As he approached, he says deceased raised up with a knife in his hand, when he reversed the whip in his hand and struck deceased twice, when Mr. Pridgen interfered and pushed him back. He says he got loose and struck at deceased again, when deceased clenched him, and he fell with deceased on him, and while in that position deceased inflicted a dangerous wound on him with his knife, when he pulled his pistol and shot him. The state's witnesses would have appellant jumping out of his buggy, advancing rapidly on deceased, who was sitting down with nothing in his hands, striking him twice with the butt end of the whip, without a word being spoken; that he was then pushed off, when he ran around and got back to deceased, again striking him with the whip; that deceased then got up and started toward appellant, when appellant fell over an obstruction in the street, and deceased fell over him; that appellant raised up on his elbow and fired at deceased while he was on the ground, killing him. Numerous threats are shown, some by both men, and the state's contention is that, learning of his defeat, appellant went direct to deceased, attacked him with his whip, and, when deceased resented, appellant shot and killed him.

[11] The first complaint of the charge is that the court should have defined the meaning of the words "mitigate, excuse, or justify" in the charge defining murder of the second degree. These words have a well-understood meaning, and, in the absence of a request, it was not necessary for the court to define them, and this paragraph is drawn in language frequently approved by this court. Barton v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 445, 111 S. W. 1042; McGrath v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 423, 34 S. W. 127, 941; Smith v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 553, 78 S. W. 694; Carson v. State, 57 Tex. Cr. R. 398, 123 S. W. 590, 136 Am. St. Rep. 981; Harris v. State, 8 Tex. App. 90.

[12] Appellant also complains of the charge on manslaughter. Every charge must be viewed in the light of the evidence adduced in that case; and while in some of the opinions you find criticisms of a charge which are just and proper under the facts in that case, yet these would be wholly inapplicable to a different state of facts. What does defendant rely on in this case to raise the issue of manslaughter? The state's evidence would make a case of murder, embracing almost all the elements of express malice, without excuse or mitigation at the time of the killing. The appellant says the difficulty occurred as follows: Says he drove over to the place of the difficulty to see his uncle, Mr. Goodson; that he did not know deceased was there. He desired to ask his uncle if he had any returns from the election, and adds: "As I walked around to see Goodson, Thomas was there and he came up with that knife, and from the threats I heard and the abuse I heard I thought he was going to carry out the threats he made, and I hit him with the whip. I hit him to keep him off. I do not know how many licks I struck him—some two or three. He had not risen to any great extent, but was in the act of rising. Then Mr. Pridgen tried to shove me off, and I pulled my pistol out. When Mr. Pridgen turned me loose, I put my pistol back, and hit at Thomas again with the whip. Some one stepped between us and I started to my buggy, and Thomas ran around to the right and ran into me, and cut at me with a knife, and I jerked back and fell, and Thomas got on me. During the difficulty he cut me in the face after I fell and there were some other cuts on my coat and shirt, and I then shot him." This briefly gives appellant's contention as he tells it. The court instructed the jury: "By the expression 'adequate cause' is meant such as would commonly produce a degree of anger, rage, resentment, or terror in a person of ordinary temper sufficient to render the mind incapable of cool reflection. The following are deemed adequate causes: (1) An assault and battery by deceased, causing pain or bloodshed. (2) A serious personal conflict in which a great injury is inflicted by the person killed by means of a weapon or by means of great superiority of personal strength although the person guilty of the homicide were the aggressor, provided such aggression was not made with intent to bring on a conflict for the purpose of killing. Any condition or circumstance which is capable of creating and does create sudden passion, such as anger, rage, sudden resentment or terror, rendering the mind incapable of cool reflection, whether accompanied by bodily pain or not, is deemed adequate cause. And where there are several causes to arouse passion although no one of them alone might constitute adequate cause, it is for you to determine whether or not all such causes combined, might be sufficient to do so." This apparently is applying the law to the facts made by the testimony, and, if adequate cause existed in the case, it is made by this evidence, and, if the jury believed any part of it, they would necessarily find under it that deceased did make an assault causing pain and bloodshed; therefore the complaints of this charge would not present material error.

[13] Our decisions hold that manslaughter is predicated upon "adequate cause," and, unless adequate cause exists, the homicide will not be reduced from murder, although committed under the influence of sudden passion, rendering the mind incapable of cool reflection. McKinney v. State, 8 Tex. App. 626; Hill v. State, 11 Tex. App. 456; Neyland v. State, 13 Tex. App. 536; Clore v. State, 26 Tex. App. 624, 10 S. W. 242; Blackwell v. State, 29 Tex. App. 195, 15 S. W. 597; Treadway v. State, 144 S. W. 686, 687.

[14] If, when appellant approached deceased, he began to arise with the knife in his hand, and appellant thought he was about to carry the threats into execution, this would render appellant justifiable in his conduct. On this issue the court charged the jury: "If you believe that at the time of the killing, if any, the deceased by his acts and conduct, or by his acts coupled with his words, if any, reasonably induced the defendant to believe that he was about to attack the defendant with a deadly weapon, or a weapon which would probably cause the defendant's death or some serious bodily injury; or if by the acts of the deceased, or his acts coupled with his words, if any, it reasonably appeared to defendant at the time from his standpoint that the deceased was then about to attack him, defendant, with a deadly weapon, or a weapon which would probably cause the defendant's death or some serious bodily injury, and if the same was reasonably calculated to create in the mind of the defendant, and did create in his mind a reasonable expectation of fear of death or some serious bodily injury, and you further believe that the defendant then and there moved and actuated by such reasonable expectation or fear of death or serious bodily injury, if any, shot and killed the deceased, then, under such circumstances, the same would be in his lawful self-defense, and, if you so believe from the evidence, you will acquit the defendant; and if the deceased was armed at the time he was killed, and was making such attack on defendant, and if the weapon used by him and in the manner of its use were such as were reasonably calculated to produce death or serious bodily harm, then the law presumes the deceased intended to murder or aimed to inflict serious bodily injury upon the defendant." The court followed this paragraph with the following charge: "Where a defendant accused of murder seeks to justify himself on the ground of threats against his own life, he may be permitted to introduce evidence of the threats made, but the same shall not be regarded as affording a justification for the offense, unless it be shown that at the time of the homicide the person killed by some act then done manifested an intention to execute the threats so made. If you believe from the evidence in this case that the deceased did make such threats against the life of the defendant, and it reasonably appeared to the defendant at the time of the killing that deceased made such an act or demonstration as reasonably to produce in the mind of defendant a belief that deceased then and there intended to take the life of defendant, or do him some serious bodily harm, you will acquit; and if the defendant at the time of the killing did reasonably believe from some act or demonstration then and there made by the deceased, as it reasonably appeared to him, the defendant, judging from his own standpoint that the deceased did then and there intend to kill defendant or to do him some serious bodily harm, then you should acquit the defendant. You are instructed that it is not essential to the right of self-defense that real danger should exist. If from the defendant's standpoint, taking into consideration all the facts and circumstances surrounding the parties, it reasonably appeared to the defendant that he was in danger of death or serious bodily injury, under the law, he had the right to defend against such apparent danger to the same extent as if the danger were real."

[15] This we think properly presented the case as made by the testimony offered in behalf of the defendant. The criticism that it "required the jury to believe the threats were made" is without merit, as this was not a contested issue in the case. No jury could be misled in that respect for the proof was beyond dispute that ill-feeling existed, and deceased had made threats.

[16] To justify, however, there must have been manifested at the time in some way an intention to carry the threats into execution or cause defendant to so believe. Threats of themselves alone will justify no one in slaying a person, nor reduce the offense to manslaughter. If at the time of the fatal difficulty, by his acts or conduct, he leads one to believe that he is about to put the threats into execution and thereby cause the death of the person threatened, or do him some serious bodily injury, the right of self-defense arises, but if the acts and conduct are not such that would reasonably cause one to believe that he was in danger of losing his life or suffering serious bodily injury, yet the acts or conduct at the time were such, taking into consideration the previous acts and conduct of deceased, as to cause a degree of anger, rage, resentment, or terror as to render the mind incapable of cool reflection, the offense would be only manslaughter. In this case, however, there were no acts or conduct on the part of deceased at the time of the killing as to cause anger, or enrage defendant, unless it was the assault, and this was fully covered by the charge of the court. As before said, if deceased attempted to arise with the knife described in the evidence drawn in a threatening attitude, this would present the issue of self-defense, and not manslaughter, and the court fully covered both phases of the case in his charge. If, in addition to testifying that deceased attempted to arise with a knife in his hand, appellant had also shown that deceased used language, or was guilty of conduct, that would enrage a man of ordinary temper, his criticism of the charge might be well taken, but as it is not attempted to be shown that deceased said a word, or did any other act before the difficulty began than to attempt to arise with a knife in his hand (and this is disputed by all the testimony, except that of defendant and his uncle), the criticism of the charges on manslaughter and self-defense are without merit. In addition to the charges on manslaughter and on self-defense, the court also instructed the jury on the law of provoking the difficulty in language frequently approved by this court and in as favorable light as the law authorizes. White's Ann. Pen. Code 1911, art. 708, provides, if a person provokes a contest with the apparent intention of killing or doing serious bodily injury to the deceased, the offense does not come within the definition of manslaughter. The state's evidence would have defendant drive up in front of deceased, get out of his buggy, reverse ends of his buggy whip, directly walk up to where deceased was sitting, and strike him over the head with the butt end of the whip, the lick being so severe as to part the skin of the scalp, deceased at the time doing or saying nothing. This would show a manifest intention to do serious bodily injury, if not to kill, and the court correctly applied the law to the evidence. On the other hand, defendant denied this state of facts, and said deceased committed the first overt act by drawing his knife and raising his arm in a threatening attitude, and the court also fully charged on this theory, among other things telling the jury: "But if you do not find from the evidence and beyond a reasonable doubt the existence of the facts which would qualify the defendant's perfect right of self-defense under the law as it is given you in this paragraph of the charge, you will decide the issue of self-defense in accordance with the law on that subject contained in paragraph 19 of this charge, and without reference to the law on the subject of provoking the difficulty."

[17] All the other criticisms of the charge of the court are equally without merit, unless it be those paragraphs relating to abandonment of the difficulty. In this paragraph of the charge the court applies the law if defendant "in good faith" abandoned the difficulty. The use of these words in a charge on abandoning the difficulty has been frequently condemned by this court. See Renow v. State, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 281, 92 S. W. 801; Thornton v. State, 65 S. W. 1105; Wills v. State, 22 S. W. 969. In these cases it is held erroneous, in that the jury might infer that the defendant intended at some future time to renew the difficulty, if not at that time. In this case there is no evidence and circumstances from which the jury could draw such an inference. If appellant turned to go to his buggy, which he claimed was an abandonment of the difficulty, there was nothing said or done at this time, nor at any time during the difficulty, that could or would probably lead the jury to believe that at some future time he might renew it, so as applicable to the evidence in this case, if error, it would be harmless error. However, we do not believe under the evidence that this issue was raised and the charge in this respect was more favorable to defendant than he was entitled. The evidence shows one continuous difficulty. As appellant himself states it, when he struck deceased two or three times with his whip, Mr. Pridgen shoved him back. When released, he again renewed the attack, a third person getting between them. He says he then turned to go to his buggy, when deceased ran into him, and he stumbled and fell, deceased getting on him, when he shot; the whole transaction taking place in a few seconds of time. The state's evidence would have appellant pointing out deceased just a few seconds before the difficulty, and saying, "If he was defeated, deceased was the big belled son of a bitch that done it;" and, when he learned he was defeated, going direct to the place where Thomas was sitting, and before a word was uttered began an assault on him, which transaction was continuous, except when interrupted by others, until the fatal shooting, the distance from the place of beginning to where deceased lay not being over 15 to 20 feet. This question is discussed at length in the case of Roberts v. State, 30 Tex. App. 291, 17 S. W. 450, and cases there cited, and the rule laid down is: "But it is a rule, equally well settled and established, that, though the defendant may have provoked the conflict, yet if he withdraws from it in good faith and clearly announces his desire for peace, then, if he be pursued, his right of self-defense revives. The further rule is that the conduct of the deceased relied on to sustain such a defense must have been so marked in matter of time, place, and circumstances as not only clearly to evince the withdrawal of accused in good faith, but such also as fairly to advise his adversary that his danger had passed, and make his conduct thereafter the pursuit of vengeance rather than measures to repel the original assault." In this case there was nothing in the acts or conduct of the defendant, nor the circumstances of the case, to apprise the deceased that he had withdrawn from the difficulty; and, if the witnesses present are to be given credence, there was nothing said or done to apprise them the difficulty was over in so far as appellant was concerned, consequently the matter complained of in this paragraph of the court's charge would not present reversible error, yet we would not be understood as giving our sanction to the phrase in the charge that the abandonment must be "in good faith." In a proper case, calling for a charge in abandonment of the difficulty, it is better that these words not be used, although in cases it has been held not to be error. Puryear v. State, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 240, 118 S. W. 1042.

[18] In regard to the remarks of counsel for the state excepted to, no charge was requested, and, in the absence of a requested charge, it would not present error. Clayton v. State, 149 S. W. 119, and cases there cited. However, if a request had been made, we would not feel authorized to hold that the remarks complained of were not legitimate under the evidence.

[19] The two special charges requested were properly refused. It is not the law of this state that if a person makes threats against another on one occasion, even if done with the intention of provoking a difficulty on that occasion, on another and different occasion such threats would justify one in slaying his adversary before an act is done or word spoken on such subsequent occasion.

We have carefully considered all the assignments. This is a voluminous record, but we have carefully read and digested it to understand the various contentions advanced by both the state and defendant, and, after doing so upon mature reflection, we are of the opinion no such error is presented as should cause a reversal of the case, and it is therefore affirmed.

COGGINS v. STATE

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 20, 1912.)

1. BURGLARY (§ 41*)—PROSECUTIONS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In a prosecution for burglary, evidence held sufficient to sustain a conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Burglary, Cent. Dig. §§ 94-103, 109; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 792*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence showed that two persons participated in the offense, a charge on the law of principals was applicable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1818-1820; Dec. Dig. § 792.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 824*)—TRIAL—CHARGES—SPECIAL REQUEST.

In a prosecution for burglary, where evidence of explanations made by defendant as to his possession of the alleged stolen property was not objected to when offered, and not made the subject of a motion to strike, a charge on the issue of whether defendant was under arrest at the time he made the explanation was unnecessary; no special charge having been requested.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1996-2004; Dec. Dig. § 824.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1109*)—APPEAL—BILLS OF EXCEPTION.

An appellant who accepts a bill of exception as qualified is bound by its qualification.

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1090*)—APPEAL—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—RESERVATION.

Where the record contains no bills of exception to the admission of testimony, the error in its admission cannot be reviewed.

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 763, 764*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—COMMENT ON EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for burglary, where the state introduced evidence of defendant's explanation of the possession of the stolen property, a charge authorizing acquittal if the property was purchased as defendant stated, or if the jury had a reasonable doubt as to his so purchasing it, is not improper as a comment on the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1731-1748, 1752, 1768, 1770; Dec. Dig. §§ 763, 764.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1173*)—APPEAL—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

In a prosecution for burglary, where the state introduced evidence of defendant's explanation of his possession of the property alleged to have been stolen, and the falsity thereof, the failure to charge that defendant should be acquitted if the property was purchased as he stated, or if the jury had a reasonable doubt as to that fact, was harmless, where the entire evidence amply showed defendant's guilt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3164-3168; Dec. Dig. § 1173.*]

Appeal from District Court, Comanche County; J. H. Arnold, Judge.

Dave Coggins was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Affirmed.

C. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

HARPER, J. Appellant was prosecuted and convicted of burglary, and his punishment assessed at two years' confinement in the penitentiary.

[1] The evidence discloses that R. L. Graham's smokehouse was burglariously entered and a side of bacon stolen; at the same time and place a box of "honest snuff" was also taken. It rained the night of the burglary, and tracks were found around the smokehouse and buggy shed. These tracks were measured, and were trailed or followed some three or four miles to a path leading to the tent of appellant; the tracks corresponded with known tracks made by appellant. Along the trail, the wrapper from the snuff was found. In the tent of appellant was found a piece of bacon and a bottle of "honest snuff." Appellant, when approached, said he had purchased the meat from George Noel about two weeks prior to this time. Noel and his wife testified appellant had gotten no meat from them at the time named by him, but some six weeks or more prior to this time they had let appellant have a small piece of bacon. Graham had killed and cured the meat in his smokehouse, and he testified it was meat from a black Poland China hog. The meat found in appellant's tent was home cured, and had evidences that it was meat of a black hog. The meat was carried to Graham's, and the other side of bacon was cut just as the piece found in appellant's possession, and witnesses testify it corresponded exactly in looks, streaks of fat and lean, and identified it as positively as it is possible to identify this character of property. The appellant offered no explanation of his possession of a box of snuff of the make, character, and kind of that stolen. Appellant earnestly insists that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the conviction. The court gave a full and fair charge on circumstantial evidence, and we are not prepared to hold, in the face of the finding of the jury and the conclusion of the trial judge, that the verdict is unauthorized. Especially is this true when we find that the explanation of his possession of the meat found in his tent was proven to be untrue.

[2] There is no complaint of the charge on principals, but it is insisted that such charge was not called for. The evidence clearly discloses that two persons participated in the offense, and the court properly applied the law to the testimony.

[3, 4] There was no bill of exceptions reserved to the officer and others testifying to the explanation of defendant at the time he was accosted by the officer, but appellant presents a bill in which he states he objected to the "charge of the court because the charge failed and omitted to distinctly instruct the jury on the issue of whether or not appellant was under arrest at the time he made the statement. This bill does not disclose that the testimony was objected to on that or any other ground at the time it was offered, there is in the record no motion to strike it out, and no special charge requested in regard thereto, and, under such circumstances, it was not necessary for the court to charge thereon. In addition to this the court, in approving the bill, certifies that appellant was not under arrest at the time he made the explanation. Appellant accepts this bill and files it, and, as thus qualified, it presents no error. Again appellant complains of the remarks of the court to the jury, after they had reported they could not arrive at a verdict. The court in approving the bill, states: "The language I used was substantially that used by the court in the Dow Case, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 278 [20 S. W. 583], and also substantially the same language used by me in Nesbitt v. State, 144 S. W. 944." In the Dow Case Judge Davidson collates the authorities and discusses the question here presented, and, under the rule announced in that decision, this bill presents no error.

[5] The grounds in the motion for new trial complaining of the introduction of testimony cannot be reviewed by us, as no bills of exception were reserved; at least none are presented in the record.

[6, 7] The only serious question in the case is presented in the sixth ground of the motion for new trial, and third bill of exceptions—the failure of the court to charge on defendant's explanation of possession of recently stolen property. In approving the bill, the court states: "The defendant tried the case on the theory that the meat found at his camp was not Graham's meat, and I felt that to charge the jury on explanation of recently stolen property would prejudice his rights and might be construed as an intimation that the court believed the meat found was Graham's meat." We might say that it would have been proper for the court to have instructed the jury that if they believed that the meat found in his camp was purchased from Noel, or had a reasonable doubt as to defendant having so purchased it, to acquit him, and this would have given the jury no intimation as to the court's belief in the matter. Mathews v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 357, 23 S. W. 690. And in this case, if on the trial defendant had offered any proof that he had so purchased the meat, we would feel called upon to reverse the case. On the other hand, the defendant did not offer testimony on this issue, but the state introduced Noel and his wife and proved that the explanation was absolutely untrue; and such being the condition of the record, while it would have been proper for the court to have submitted the issue, yet it is not such error as necessitates a reversal.

The circumstances, taken all together, support the verdict, and the judgment is affirmed.

WAGONER v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 20, 1912.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1037*)—APPEAL AND ERROR—PRESENTATION AND RESERVATION OF GROUNDS—REMARKS OF COUNSEL.

Where, in a prosecution for crime, the court's attention was not directed to remarks of state's counsel complained of as prejudicial at the time, and no instruction was requested thereon, the propriety of the making of such statements is not presented for review.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1691, 2645; Dec. Dig. § 1037.*]

Appeal from District Court, Comanche County; J. H. Arnold, Judge.

Dude Wagoner was convicted of crime, and appeals. Affirmed.

J. M. Rieger, of Comanche, for appellant.
C. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

HARPER, J. This is a companion case to that of Coggins v. State, 151 S. W. 311, this day decided, and the facts and questions are so similar we do not deem it necessary to again discuss, but merely refer, to that case.

The only question presented by this record, not raised in the Coggins Case, is an objection to the remarks of state's counsel. It appears it was proven, without objection, that appellant had been convicted of swindling, and the district attorney, commenting on that fact, said, if he would "obtain property under false pretenses, he would also steal." The court states, in approving the bill, that he does not know whether the language was used or not; that, if used, his attention was not called to it at the time, and no charge was requested instructing the jury not to consider it. As the qualification renders it uncertain whether the language was used, and the court is certain that his attention was not called to it, if used, and no request was made to instruct the jury not to consider it, the matter does not present reversible error.

The judgment is affirmed.

DAVIS v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 20, 1912.)

1. GAMING (§ 98*)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to sustain a finding that defendant permitted a house under his control to be used as a resort for gambling.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gaming, Cent. Dig. §§ 291-298; Dec. Dig. § 98.*]

2. GAMING (§ 76*)—"RESORT FOR GAMBLING."

Where a person opens a house under his control and permits persons to gather there and gamble without invitation, it becomes a "resort for gambling."

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, p. 6174.]

3. GAMING (§ 76*)—PERMITTING GAMBLING ON PROPERTY—WHAT CONSTITUTES THE OFFENSE.

Where an unmarried man takes possession of a private house, by permission or otherwise, during the owner's absence, and permits gambling therein, he is guilty of unlawfully permitting property under his control to be used as a resort for gambling.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gaming, Cent. Dig. §§ 202, 208; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

4. GAMING (§ 76*)—PERMITTING GAMBLING ON PROPERTY—WHAT CONSTITUTES PERMISSION.

The act of a person in engaging with others in gambling on premises under his control constituted permission to the others to gamble.

6. GAMING (§ 94*)—EVIDENCE—ISSUES.

In a trial for permitting gambling on premises under defendant's control, evidence that one night shortly before the grand jury met he requested that gambling stop did not present the issue that the gambling took place without his consent, where it appeared that he engaged in the games on all prior occasions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gaming, Cent. Dig. §§ 274-283; Dec. Dig. § 94.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 717*)—TRIAL—CONDUCT OF COUNSEL—DISCRETION.

Whether the state's counsel shall be permitted to read cases and discuss law to the trial court is within the court's sound discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1682-1687; Dec. Dig. § 717.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—VERDICT.

In a trial for permitting gambling, error in permitting a witness to testify that he had never known defendant to work, and had frequently seen him in a pool hall, was harmless, where the jury assessed the minimum punishment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3083, 3137-3143; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

9. GAMING (§§ 88, 89*)—INDICTMENT—SUFFICIENCY.

An indictment for violating Pen. Code 1911, art. 559, by permitting property under the defendant's control to be used as a resort for gambling, need not describe the premises, further than to say that it was a house under defendant's control, or allege that the house was a public place, or name the games played therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gaming, Cent. Dig. §§ 241-243, 244-248; Dec. Dig. §§ 88, 89.*]

10. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§§ 86, 87*)—SUFFICIENCY.

An indictment alleging that defendant, on or about a certain day, in C. county, in the state, did then and there permit property under his control, to wit, one house in C., to be used as a resort for gambling sufficiently alleged the date, and that the offense was committed in C. county.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 230-243, 244-255; Dec. Dig. §§ 86, 87.*]

Appeal from District Court, Comanche County; J. H. Arnold, Judge.

M. H. Davis was convicted of permitting property under his control to be used as a gambling resort, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Smith & Palmer, of Comanche, for appellant. C. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

HARPER, J. Appellant was prosecuted under an indictment containing several counts, and convicted under the fifth count, in which he was charged with unlawfully and knowingly permitting property which was under his control, a house situate in Comanche, to be used as a place for people to resort to bet and wager upon certain games played with dice and cards.

[1] G. W. Fitch testified that his family consisted of himself and wife, and that defendant had been staying with him; that he and his wife took a trip to East Texas, and were absent some 13 or 14 days; that appellant continued to stay at his residence while he was absent. No one else stayed there, except appellant, while Mr. Fitch and his wife were absent. This would show that appellant was in control of the premises during that time, and the facts show that he was an unmarried man. During that time a number of witnesses testified that they went to this house and gambled there on several occasions, some saying they played poker, and others testified they threw dice. It is also shown that appellant played in part of the games and gambled with the others. Leslie Stewart testifies he played at this house, during the absence of Mr. Fitch, Thursday and Friday nights, and that six others were there and engaged in the games.

John Rhoads testifies he was there on occasions while Mr. Fitch was absent when gambling took place, twice in the daytime and three times at night, engaging in gambling, both with cards and dice; that he had gone to this place with appellant on one occasion, and on other occasions went with others. Frank Keeter testified he went to this house and gambled; that appellant was not there when he got there the first night, but came shortly afterwards; that on the second occasion appellant gambled with him and others; that on another occasion appellant and he gambled alone at the house—no one else being present. Joe Hulsey testified he had gambled at this house on two occasions, shooting craps on one occasion and playing cards on the other.

[2] This testimony, we think, sufficiently shows that appellant permitted a house under his control to be used as a resort for gambling. He knew the gambling was taking place, engaged in the games a portion of the time, and it is shown that while Mr. Fitch and his wife were absent that on at least five occasions the witnesses gathered there and gambled with his knowledge. The boys say they just "went there" knowing that they could gamble there. When a person opens a house under his control and permits people to gather there and gamble without invitation (for he testifies he invited none of them), it becomes, in law, what is termed a common resort for gambling. The fact that it was the residence of Mr. Fitch does not alter the fact that as soon as Mr. Fitch left he permitted it to become a resort for the boys to gather and gamble, and the testimony would support the verdict.

[3] There was no error in the court refusing to quash the indictment, on the ground that it did not negative the fact that it was a private residence, or allege that it was a private residence commonly resorted to for gambling. For the time being, it was not a private residence occupied by a family, but appellant, an unmarried man, was staying there by permission at least. It would be immaterial whether he was in possession by permission, or had taken possession during Mr. Fitch's absence, believing that it would be agreeable with the owner. If one should in any manner, while the family was absent, take possession of a house and permit gambling to be engaged in by all those who came to the house while he was in control of the house, and when it was shown that on five occasions during this time he permitted gambling to be carried on in the house, it would be an offense against the law.

[4] The court did not err in refusing the special charge requested by defendant, as it is shown that on more than one occasion he engaged in gambling with the others, and this, in law, would be construed to be permission for the others to gamble.

[5] There was no evidence upon which to base the second charge requested by defendant; and it is never improper to refuse a charge not called for by the evidence. Neither was there any evidence suggesting that the persons who gambled "were guests at the defendant's house, engaged in gaming for pleasure"; consequently the court did not err in refusing the special charge presenting this issue.

[6] Special charges Nos. 4 and 5 were covered by the main charge of the court, in so far as they presented the law of the case. The fact that one night just before the grand jury met the appellant requested them to stop gambling on that occasion would not present the issue that the gambling took place without his consent, when it is shown that he engaged in the games with the others on all prior occasions.

[7] The question of whether or not the state's counsel shall be permitted to read cases and discuss the law to the court is one within the sound discretion of the court. The qualification of the bill shows that no authorities were read to the jury, but all were read to the court prior to the preparation of his charge. As thus qualified, the bill presents no error.

[8] The defendant complains that a witness was permitted to testify that he had never known defendant to do any work, and had seen him in the pool hall a number of times. This testimony was inadmissible; but, inasmuch as the jury only gave appellant the minimum punishment fixed by law to this offense, it does not present such error as should cause a reversal of the case.

[9] The grounds of the motion in arrest of judgment should not have been sustained. Under article 559 of the Penal Code it was not necessary to describe the premises in which it was alleged the gaming took place, further than to say it was a house under his control. It was not necessary to allege that it was a house for retailing spirituous liquor, or other public place, under the article of the Code under which this prosecution was brought.

[10] The indictment alleges that "on or about the 13th day of October, 1911, in the county of Comanche and state of Texas, appellant did then and there unlawfully and knowingly permit property which was under his control, to wit, a house situate in Comanche, to be used as a place for people to resort to bet and wager upon certain games played with cards and dice." This sufficiently alleged the date, and that the offense was committed in Comanche county; and it was not necessary to name the games played with the dice and cards.

The judgment is affirmed.

DRAKE v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 6, 1912. Rehearing Denied Dec. 4, 1912.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 736*)—CONFESSION—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where a confession, signed by accused, stated that he made same to the county attorney freely and voluntarily, after having been warned that he did not have to make it, and that it could be used against him, it was not inadmissible, under the statute relating to the admissibility of confessions, though accused's testimony raised the issue that it was not freely and voluntarily made, and that he was not aware of its contents; such issue being for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1219, 1220, 1701, 1702, 1705, 1716; Dec. Dig. § 736.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 489*)—EXPERT TESTIMONY—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Where, in an incest case, a doctor testified, on cross-examination by accused, that the hymen would have been injured by penetration beyond a certain depth, it was not improper for the state to adduce, on redirect examination, that there were cases of women being impregnated without destroying the hymen.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1078; Dec. Dig. § 489.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 338*)—EVIDENCE—MATERIALITY.

Testimony of accused's witness in an incest case, that she had stopped visiting at accused's home because she believed a third party and accused's wife were criminally intimate, was properly excluded, where neither the wife nor the third party were used as witnesses, especially where other witnesses were permitted to state all facts showing such criminal intimacy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 752-757, 787, 788, 801, 855; Dec. Dig. § 338.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 656*)—CONDUCT OF COUNSEL—ADMONITION BY COURT.

Where counsel for accused sought by certain remarks to get excluded evidence before the jury, it was proper for the court to state, in the jury's presence, that counsel's statement was improper, and he must not again make such statements.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1520-1523, 1527, 1535; Dec. Dig. § 656.*]

5. INCEST (§ 13*)—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In an incest case the court properly excluded testimony as to what police and detectives told the prosecutrix and her mother when the complaint was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Incest, Cent. Dig. § 11; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 675*)—CUMULATIVE CHARACTER—EVIDENCE.

Where some dozen witnesses testified to accused's reputation, and the state admitted that his reputation as a law-abiding citizen was good, it was not error to refuse to permit other witnesses to testify to the same fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 850, 1607; Dec. Dig. § 675.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 824*)—INSTRUCTION—DEFINING TERMS.

Failure of the court to define the words "carnal knowledge" and "carnally know," as used in an instruction in an incest case, was not error, in the absence of a request therefor; such words having a plain, well-understood meaning.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1996-2004, Dec. Dig. § 824.*]

8. INCEST (§ 6*)—NATURE OF OFFENSE.

The depth of the penetration is not material to the crime of incest, where there is an emission.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Incest, Cent. Dig. § 5; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 945*)—NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS.

The fact that a doctor, after testifying in an incest trial to making an examination of the person and clothing of prosecutrix, in which he discovered a certain state of facts, subsequently testified at the hearing on a motion for new trial that he made another examination after accused's conviction and discovered a different state of facts, did not present ground for a new trial, where there was no evidence that the conditions discovered at the later examination existed at the time of the former examination, especially where the facts discovered at the former examination were corroborated by other testimony and accused's confession, made shortly after the alleged occurrence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2324-2327, 2336; Dec. Dig. § 945.*]

10. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1099*)—APPEAL AND ERROR—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—REVIEW OF GROUND.

Where the testimony relied upon as a ground for a new trial in an incest case was not filed until after adjournment of the term of court at which the accused was convicted, such ground could not be reviewed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2866-2880; Dec. Dig. § 1099.*]

Appeal from District Court, Tarrant County; R. H. Buck, Judge.

T. Drake was convicted of incest, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Poulter & Johnson and Mays & Mays, all of Ft. Worth, for appellant. C. E. Lane, Asst. Atty Gen., for the State.

HARPER, J. Appellant was prosecuted and convicted of the offense of having sexual intercourse with his daughter.

[1] The state introduced the following confession of defendant: "My name is T. Drake. I make the following statement to the county attorney, John W. Baskin, freely and voluntarily, and after having been warned by him, the said John W. Baskin, first, that I do not have to make any statement at all, and, second, if I do make any statement, such statement can be used in evidence against me in my trial for the offense concerning which the statement is made, and cannot be used for me. I am 42 years of age. I have been living in Ft. Worth for six years. I am a car repairer on the Rock Island Railroad. I have four children. My oldest daughter's name is Eva Drake, and she is 15 years of age. Last night, to wit, the 11th day of August, 1911, about 8 or 9 o'clock, I was sitting on my front steps, and Eva came out and sat down by me. My wife was at a lodge meeting. She (Eva) began picking at me and teasing me, and I began picking at her and teasing her. My passion then got the best of my judgment. I got up and went out back toward the barn. Eva followed me. When we got back there, I threw my arm around her and drew her up to me. I then reached down and unbuttoned her drawers and let them drop down. I then told Eva to lay down on the ground, which she did. I then got down on her with my penis out. I spit on my hand and rubbed it on her private parts. I attempted to insert my penis in her private parts, but could not make the entry. I kept up the motions, and finally succeeded in inserting my penis in her private parts a short distance, not more than an inch, I am sure. I withdrew my penis to keep from making a discharge in her, and discharged between her legs. Just before I got through, she complained of it hurting her. That is the only time I ever had anything to do with her. My wife is delicate to such an extent that I am unable to gratify my passion with her, and I just let my passion get the best of me. [Signed] T. Drake."

Many objections were urged to the introduction of this confession, but none of them are tenable. This court has been frequently called upon to construe this statute, and the construction finally adopted is announced in Henzen v. State, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 336, 137 S. W. 1141, and this confession is in accordance with the rule there announced. While the defendant's testimony raised the issue that it was not freely and voluntarily made, and that he was not aware of the contents of the paper when he signed same, yet the court submitted that issue to the jury in his charge, and in a way that is not criticised by defendant in his motion for a new trial.

[2] In his next bill of exceptions it is shown that Dr. McElroy had testified that on the day following the alleged offense that he had examined the private parts of the prosecuting witness; that he found an inflamed condition, etc., and on her clothing a discharge that indicated intercourse with a man. On cross-examination defendant developed that her hymen was not destroyed nor punctured, and, in his opinion, that if she had been penetrated by the male organ of a man more than a given depth it would have injured the hymen. On direct examination the state developed that in the medical world it was known that there were cases where women had become impregnated without destroying the hymen. This latter testimony was objected to by defendant. As the doctor had testified, at the instance of defendant, that, in his opinion, the girl, if penetrated, had been penetrated only a given depth, and based his opinion on the fact that the hymen had not been destroyed nor injured, the testimony adduced on redirect examination was admissible as an aid to the jury in passing on the weight of the testimony of the opinion of the doctor that penetration could not have been beyond a given depth without the hymen being affected.

[3] Appellant desired to prove by a witness that she had stopped visiting at the home of defendant, because she believed that one B. M. Howard and the wife of defendant were criminally intimate. As neither the wife of defendant, nor B. M. Howard, were used as witnesses in the case, the court did not err in excluding the testimony. It further appears in the record that defendant had summoned Howard as a witness, and moved to continue the case on account of his absence; but when the attendance of Howard was secured the defendant declined to place him upon the witness stand. The same ruling applies to the excluded testimony of the witness Wentzell.

[4] When the defendant's counsel made the remarks he did in the presence of the jury, what the court said to him was not improper. He had brought about the occasion for the remark that the statement made by counsel was an improper one, and he must not make such statements again. When the court has sustained an objection to evidence, counsel should not seek to get the testimony before the jury in this way; and when he does, if the court only informs the jury that it was improper for counsel to have made such statement, he is dealing with the matter as leniently as one should expect.

It appears from the qualification of the court that he permitted the witnesses to state all facts and circumstances which would show improper relations between the wife of defendant and Howard; and this was certainly as far as defendant was entitled to go, in the absence of either of them testifying.

[5] The court properly excluded the testimony as to what the city police and detectives told the prosecuting witness and her mother on the occasion when complaint was made as to the alleged crime of defendant.

[6] Some dozen witnesses had testified to the reputation of defendant, and the state admitted that the reputation of defendant as a law-abiding citizen was good. The record being in this condition, there was no error in the court declining to permit other witnesses to testify to the same fact.

[7, 8] In his motion and in his brief defendant earnestly insists that the facts do not show that defendant had a completed act of sexual intercourse with his daughter, and the court erred in not defining the words "carnal knowledge" and "carnally know." These words have a plain, well-understood meaning, and the jury could not have been misled by their use. If defendant desired them explained, he should not have waited to complain in his motion for a new trial, but should have requested that a definition be given at the time of trial. When the meaning of words are so well understood by all mankind as are these words, if a definition of them is desired, a request must be made at the time of trial. As to the facts not showing a completed act of intercourse, the confession of defendant herein copied answers that complaint. The testimony of the daughter is also ample upon which the jury would be authorized to so find. The depth of penetration, if there is penetration, is immaterial, where there was an emission, as shown by the testimony of the daughter and the confession of the father.

[9] The only other ground in the motion alleges newly discovered testimony. Dr. Kibbie had testified on the trial to examining the girl a day or so after the alleged offense, and examining the discharge found on the dress, and stated, in his opinion, it was an emission from the male organ, and had stated: "So far as my knowledge goes, I do not believe this spot could have been any other mixture than the discharge of the male. I do not know of any other discharge that would give me those cells. There is some difference in the discharge from a man and the discharge from a woman. I do not believe this could have been a discharge from a woman, because, in the first place, the quantity attracted my attention, and the amount of stiffness there; and, secondly, the character of cells that are thrown out from the male, which differ from the female—the epithelium cells. It is almost impossible to make a practical explanation of it, because the cells in the body vary according to where they come from; but the little granules in the cells that were present in this discharge indicated to me that it was the seminal discharge of a male of some sort." After the conviction of defendant, on the hearing of the motion for a new trial, he again testified, and stated the date of the original examination was August 11th, the day after the alleged offense; that since the trial of the case, on December 2d, he again examined her, and found that at that time she was suffering from a venereal disease—clap—and that the character of discharge from this disease might have produced the spot he found on the dress on August 11th. There is no positive testimony offered that if the girl was suffering from this character of disease in December that she was also suffering from it in the month of August prior thereto; and it seems remarkable to us that if the physician could tell in December that she was afflicted with this disease, if she had the disease in August, in his examination of her—the character and kind he says he made in August—he would not have discovered and thus diagnosed the case in August. But, be that as it may, without proof that the girl was suffering from this disease at the time of the examination in August, it does not present ground for a new trial, especially in the light of the confession of defendant, made shortly after the alleged occurrence. Our decisions all hold that the newly discovered evidence must be such that it would probably produce a different verdict; and in passing on this question we must consider the testimony adduced on the trial. Burns v. State, 12 Tex. App. 269; Hassel-meyer v. State, 6 Tex. App. 21; Wharton's Crim. Law, § 3161; Arch. Cr. Pr. & Pl. (6th Ed.) 178, § 26. In the light of the testimony and defendant's confession, testimony that this discharge could have been produced from the discharge of a female suffering with this disease would not have changed the result, and the court did not err in overruling the motion.

[10] While we have discussed this ground of the motion, yet this testimony on an issue found on a ground in the motion for a new trial, was not filed until after the adjournment of court, and cannot properly be considered by us. Probest v. State, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 608, 133 S. W. 263, and cases there cited.

The judgment is affirmed.

WALKER v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Oct. 23, 1912. Rehearing Denied Nov. 27, 1912.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 86*)—VENUE—AVERMENT—"THEN AND THERE."

An information charging that in a certain town, voting precinct, and county of the state, while a public election was being held on a certain day, defendant then and there unlawfully and willfully gave to another intoxicating liquor, sufficiently charged, by the use of the words "then and there," that the offense was committed in the town specified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 230-243; Dec. Dig. § 86.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 6946-6948.]

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 221*)—STATUTORY OFFENSES—NEGATING APPLICATION OF PROVISIO.

An information charging the giving of intoxicating liquors to another while an election is being held need not state that the defendant is not a druggist, etc.; the proviso of the statute relating to such offense forming no part of its definition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 240-248; Dec. Dig. § 221.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 970*)—ARREST OF JUDGMENT—DEFECTS IN INFORMATION—DUPLICATION.

An information charging a gift of intoxicating liquor while an election was being held was not defective so as to furnish a ground for arrest of judgment because it also charged that the defendant informed the other person of the whereabouts of the intoxicating liquor; it being permissible by the use of the conjunction "and" to allege that a misdemeanor was committed in any of the ways defined by statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2445-2462; Dec. Dig. § 970.*]

4. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 226*)—EVIDENCE—CREATION OF PRECINCT.

In a prosecution of a defendant charged with giving intoxicating liquor to another while an election was being held in a certain town, precinct, and county of the state, evidence of the orders of the commissioners' court creating such precinct as well as the fact that the town was in such precinct was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 282-286; Dec. Dig. § 226.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 772*)—INSTRUCTIONS—VENUE OF OFFENSE.

Where, in the trial of one for giving intoxicating liquor to another in a certain town and precinct while an election was being held, an instruction that the jury should convict if they believed beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant committed the offense charged at the time stated could not have been misleading, because it did not require the jury to find that the acts took place in the town and precinct charged in the information.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1812-1814, 1816, 1817; Dec. Dig. § 772.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 814*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—INSTRUCTION.

Nor was such instruction erroneous for failure to state the purpose for which the election was being held, where the information stated that the purpose was to determine whether the sale of intoxicating liquors should be prohibited in the state, and the evidence did not put in issue the legality of the election.

Appeal from Delta County Court; C. C. Dunagan, Judge.

Joe Walker was convicted of giving intoxicating liquor to another while a public election was being held, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Patteson & Patteson, of Cooper, for appellant. C. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

HARPER, J. Appellant was prosecuted under an information alleging that in the town of Cooper, voting precinct No. 1, in the county of Delta, state of Texas, while a public election was being held on July 22d to determine whether the sale of intoxicating liquors should be prohibited in this state, he did then and there unlawfully and willfully give to Henry Nidever intoxicating liquor, etc. When tried, he was convicted, and his punishment assessed at a fine of $200.

[1] The motion in arrest of judgment was not well taken. By the use of the words "then and there," it was charged that the offense was committed in the town of Cooper. Moreno v. State, 143 S. W. 156; De Los Santos v. State, 146 S. W. 919, and cases cited.

[2] Neither was it necessary for the information to state that appellant was not a druggist, etc. The proviso forms no part of the definition of the offense. Dankworth v. State, 61 Tex. Cr. R. 157, 136 S. W. 789; Slack v. State, 61 Tex. Cr. R. 372, 136 S. W. 1073.

[3] The other grounds in the motion—that the information charged both a gift of intoxicating liquor and charged that appellant "informed Nidever of the whereabouts of intoxicating liquor"—present no ground in arrest of judgment. By the use of the conjunction "and," it is permissible to allege that a misdemeanor was committed in any of the ways defined by the statute. Hart v. State, 2 Tex. App. 39; Davis v. State, 23 Tex. App. 637, 5 S. W. 149; Gage v. State, 9 Tex. App. 259; Nicholas v. State, 23 Tex. App. 317, 5 S. W. 239; Lancaster v. State, 43 Tex. 519.

[4] As qualified by the court, bill of exceptions No. 8 presents no error. The information having alleged that the election was held in Cooper, voting precinct No. 1, in the county of Delta, in the state of Texas, the orders of the commissioners' court creating precinct No. 1 were admissible in evidence as well as the fact that Cooper was in said voting precinct.

[5] The court charged the jury: "If you believe from the testimony in this case beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant on the 22d day of July, 1911, and you further believe that said day was an election day as alleged in the information in this case, that the said defendant did then and there unlawfully during the said day on which said election was being held as stated in the information willfully give Henry Nidever intoxicating liquor, and the said defendant did then and there inform the said Henry Nidever of the whereabouts of said intoxicating liquor, then, in that event, if you so believe, you should find the defendant guilty as charged herein." The objection that the charge does not require the jury to find that the acts took place "in Cooper in voting precinct No. 1" is rather hypercritical. When we take the complaint and information in connection with the charge, and the reference therein to the information, it is readily seen that it is impossible for the jury to have been misled, or have thought they were authorized to convict the defendant of an offense committed at any place other than as alleged. The evidence suggests no other place, and shows beyond question that the offense, if committed, was committed in the town of Cooper; consequently, if subject to the criticism of appellant, we would not be authorized to reverse the case under article 723 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

[6] It was not necessary to state the purpose for which the election was being held in the charge. The information sufficiently stated the purpose, and that it was a legal election cannot be questioned under the evidence.

The other criticisms of the charge and grounds in the motion present no error.

The judgment is affirmed.

CURRY v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 20, 1912.)

SEDUCTION (§ 46*) — EVIDENCE — CORROBORATION.

In a prosecution for seduction, the testimony of the prosecutrix need not be corroborated in each of the necessary elements of the offense; but the corroborative evidence is sufficient if it tends to connect accused with the commission of the offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Seduction, Cent. Dig. §§ 83-86; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

Appeal from District Court, Taylor County; Thos. L. Blanton, Judge.

Roy Curry was convicted of seduction, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

J. F. Cunningham, of Abilene, for appellant. O. E. Lane, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

PRENDERGAST, J. The appellant was convicted for seducing Belle McFarland, an unmarried woman under the age of 25 years, charged to have been committed on or about January 15, 1910, and given the lowest penalty.

Soon after the crime was alleged to have been committed, an examining trial was held, at which appellant was present and heard and cross-examined the state's witnesses. Belle McFarland testified on that trial, and the substance of her testimony was taken down in writing, which she signed, all of which was identified and introduced on this trial. We know that the practice in taking down the testimony on such examining trials is to give the substance only, and not the details, of the witness' testimony. That seems to have been done in this case. After this testimony was taken down, and after the indictment was found in this case, the said girl died. Her evidence on this examining trial as thus taken down was proven up and introduced on the trial of this case. Her mother and sister also testified. No other member of the family did so. The record shows that the case was not fully developed. As an illustration, no direct proof was made that the girl was unmarried. This, if true, could have been so easily proven by the mother and sister, and doubtless many others, that it is strange the record does not disclose that it was. However, this can be proved by circumstantial as well as direct testimony, like any other fact. The appellant did not testify. He introduced several witnesses, who testified that Belle McFarland had stated to them that she had sworn falsely in previous trials in several particulars. They also testified that her general reputation for chastity was bad at a time long after the alleged seduction. None of them attempted to testify that that was her reputation at the time or about the time of her charged seduction. It was also disclosed by this testimony that none of these parties disclosed the fact, if so, that the girl had stated to them that she had sworn falsely, or said anything about this to any one until after the death of the girl. Of course, on the trial, she, being dead, had no opportunity to explain or deny any of this. It was disclosed, however, that these claimed statements by her were made after the appellant had been seen to be with her shortly before these witnesses claim she made such statements to them.

The only ground of complaint by appellant of this conviction is that the testimony is insufficient to sustain the verdict. This is contended on several grounds. We doubt if appellant's contention is well taken, save and except on one ground only; that is, that the testimony of Belle McFarland was not corroborated, as required by law. We sustain appellant's contention on that point, and on that point alone will reverse and remand this cause.

It is unnecessary to discuss or detail the evidence. Probably it is not proper to do so. However, we do say that the law is that the testimony of the injured party in cases of this character does not have to be corroborated in each and all of the necessary elements of the offense, and that the corroborative evidence may be slight, and that the requirements of the statute are fulfilled if there be any corroborating evidence which, of itself, tends to connect the accused with the commission of the offense. Such corroboration only is necessary as is sufficient to satisfy a jury, beyond a reasonable doubt, of the truth of the charge, in connection with the testimony of the accomplice. Nourse v. State, 2 Tex. App. 316; Jones v. State, 4 Tex. App. 531; Tooney v. State, 5 Tex. App. 193; Simms v. State, 8 Tex. App. 243; Clanton v. State, 13 Tex. App. 157; Moore v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 415, 83 S. W. 1117; Nash v. State, 61 Tex. Cr. R. 284, 134 S. W. 709; Williams v. State, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 347, 128 S. W. 1120; Bost v. State, 144 S. W. 589; Murphy v. State, 143 S. W. 618. It is needless to cite other cases. This must necessarily be the law and the proper construction of the statute in cases of this character; for acts of intercourse between persons are always as secret and private as can be, and under such circumstances as the parties believe will prevent their detection or even suspicion at the time. Also, engagements of young persons to marry are made in private and in secret between them; and very generally, if not entirely, the fact of engagement, for at least some length of time, is kept as privately and secretly between them as can well be. Therefore proof, in the nature of these things, generally cannot be made other than by the testimony of the accomplice, corroborated by such circumstances as to time and place, opportunity, and the course of dealing or treatment between the parties along about the time, such as the man being the accepted suitor, devoting his attention at the time to the girl, so recognized and understood by her family, his frequent attendance upon her, the fact, if so, of his exclusive attentions to her, and the attention of no other man to her during the time, and such like matters. Yet in this case the evidence was not developed sufficiently so that we can hold, as a matter of law, the evidence was sufficient to corroborate the prosecuting witness. These matters may be developed on another trial of the case sufficiently to authorize the jury to find and believe that the accomplice is corroborated, as required by law.

For the want of this, as stated above, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded.

INTERNATIONAL ORDER OF TWELVE KNIGHTS & DAUGHTERS OF TABOR v. WILSON et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. San Antonio. Nov. 13, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 742*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—STATEMENTS.

An assignment of error, not followed by a statement, will not be considered, though there is a reference to the record for a bill of exceptions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3000; Dec. Dig. § 742.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 818*)—FRATERNAL INSURANCE—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action against a negro fraternal organization on a benefit certificate, payable to the deceased member's wife and father, a letter written after the member's death, notifying the wife of her expulsion because of her disregard of the laws of the order and her application to the white courts concerning her husband's death, was inadmissible; the issue being whether the member at his death was a member in good standing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 2003-2006; Dec. Dig. § 818.*]

3. INSURANCE (§ 815*)—FRATERNAL INSURANCE—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

Where the petition in an action on a certificate issued by a fraternal organization alleged that decedent was a member of a subordinate temple, it was error to introduce in evidence the financial card of another temple.

4. INSURANCE (§ 747*)—FRATERNAL INSURANCE—GOOD STANDING OF MEMBER AT TIME OF DEATH.

Where a fraternal benefit certificate was made payable on condition of the member's good standing in his subordinate temple, and the evidence showed that decedent was not in good standing in the only temple to which he belonged, or could belong, at the time of his death, there could be no recovery on the certificate, merely because he sent money by some one not authorized to handle money to the grand body of the order.

Appeal from Dallas County Court; W. F. Whitehurst, Judge.

Action by A. G. Wilson and another against the International Order of Twelve Knights & Daughters of Tabor. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed and rendered.

J. L. Turner, of Dallas, for appellant. Hiram F. Lively and R. A. Ritchie, both of Dallas, for appellees.

FLY, C. J. A. G. Wilson, the surviving wife of G. W. Wilson, deceased, and G. W. Wilson, his father, instituted this suit against appellant, a negro fraternal organization, on a certificate for $300, issued by appellant to the deceased; $200 being payable to the wife and $100 to the father. It was alleged that at the time of his death G. W. Wilson "was a member of Green Bay Temple Number 19, of Dallas county, Texas, which said Green Bay Temple is a subdivision of the defendant order." The defenses were that deceased was never a member of Green Bay Temple, but had been a member of King Solomon Temple, and that "he was unfinancial with said temple, and was in no way entitled to any benefits therefrom." It was also alleged that the deceased had been suspended from King Solomon Temple on account of his "unfinancial" condition, which seems to mean that he had not paid all his dues and endowment and burial funds. Twenty-four pages of the typewritten transcript are devoted to setting out the cause of action and defenses.

The testimony tended to show that G. W. Wilson, deceased, was never in reality a member of Green Bay Temple because of his failure to obtain a transfer from King Solomon's Temple, of which he was a member, and to pay the amounts due that temple. It appears that he attempted to join Green Bay Temple to avoid the dues he owed in the other temple, from which he was suspended in May, 1910, for failure to pay his indebtedness. He died in July, 1910.

[1] The first assignment is not followed by a statement, and will not be considered. Reference to the record for a bill of exceptions will not take the place of a statement.

[2] The second assignment of error complains of the introduction in evidence of a letter from Mount Olive Tabernacle to "Daughter A. G. Wilson," written on September 10, 1910, long after the death of her husband, notifying her of her expulsion, "on account that you disregard the laws of Tabor, and have applied to the white courts concerning the death of your husband." The letter was improperly admitted in evidence. It had no bearing, whatever, on the issues in the case, and was calculated to arouse a prejudice against appellant. It was written by a subordinate of appellant, which had no connection with the case.

[3] The petition alleged that deceased was a member of Green Bay Temple; and it was error to introduce in evidence the "financial card" of Rice Temple, and the third assignment of error is sustained. For the same reason the letter from S. S. Reid to counsel for appellees, although its contents do not seem to be injurious to appellant.

The testimony as to conversations between officers of appellant and the attorney for appellees was immaterial, and should not have been admitted.

[4] The good standing of the deceased with the subordinate was what fixed his standing in the organization; and it was error to instruct the jury that if the Supreme Secretary of the order had accepted certain dues its liability was fixed. It was provided in the certificate of the dead man that the payment of the $300 was conditioned on his good standing in his temple. The proof showed that deceased was not in good standing in the only temple to which he belonged, or could belong. He was not a legal member of Green Bay Temple, and his standing therein was worth nothing to him. He could not obtain a standing in the grand body by sending up money by some one not authorized to handle or send in such money. Such money could not, and did not, give him standing in King Solomon's Temple, to which he belonged.

The overwhelming weight of the testimony was against the contention of appellees; and the evidence showed that the deceased was in arrears to his temple and was rightfully suspended, and was so suspended when he died. His wife and father are not, under the rules of the organization, which were fully accepted by deceased, entitled to the insurance.

The judgment is reversed, and judgment here rendered that appellees take nothing by their suit, and that appellant recover all costs in this behalf expended.

MORTGAGES (§ 115*)—TRUST DEED—"ASSUMED."

Where defendants were deeded certain property on which plaintiff held a vendor's lien, evidenced by notes, and asked for an extension of time, for which they executed a trust deed, which contained the recital that the defendants "are justly indebted to the plaintiff, as evidenced by certain notes assumed" by the defendants, an indebtedness was created on the part of the defendants, although the ordinary office of a trust deed is to furnish security for a debt already created; the expression "notes assumed" meaning that payment was assumed (citing Words and Phrases, 588, 587).

Appeal from District Court, Travis County; Chas. A. Wilcox, Judge.

Action by Joe C. Kerbey and others against Charles Peterson and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Love & Williams, of Uvalde, for appellants. W. B. Garrett and J. H. Hart, both of Austin, for appellees.

Findings of Fact.

JENKINS, J. Appellee Kerbey owned an addition to the town of Uvalde, consisting of a large number of lots, and on May 29, 1909, entered into a contract in writing with appellants, by the terms of which they became the sole agents for the sale of said property, upon the terms stated in the agreement, their authority as such agents to continue until June 1, 1910. In said contract appellants bound themselves to sell, or to purchase themselves, by June 1, 1910, not less than 200 of the lots mentioned in said contract, at the price and upon the terms therein set forth. On May 21, 1910, appellants, having failed to sell the required number of lots, requested appellee Kerbey to deed said number of lots to four other parties. Appellee made such deed, receiving one-fifth of the purchase money, and the vendor's lien notes of said parties, payable in 6, 12, 18, and 24 months, respectively, after date. The grantees in said deeds were not financially responsible, and appellants desired the deeds to be made to them and their notes taken for the remainder of the purchase money, in order to avoid personal responsibility, and also that they might be entitled to their commission. The grantees in said deeds in fact paid nothing, the one-fifth purchase price being advanced by appellants, and said deeds were taken with the intention that the same should inure to the benefit of appellants. These facts were all known to appellee Kerbey at the time he executed said deeds. Within a short time thereafter the grantees in said deeds executed a deed to said lots to appellants, reciting the consideration of $10, and other valuable considerations. In fact, nothing was paid to said parties by appellants. Said notes provided that upon the failure to pay those first maturing the holder of same might declare all of said notes due. As the time approached for the payment of the first of said notes, appellants requested appellee Kerbey to grant an extension of the same. There was considerable negotiations between Kerbey and appellants with reference to the granting of such extension; but the same was finally granted in consideration of appellants' executing a deed of trust on all of said lots, which deed of trust, among other things, contained the following recital: "Whereas, Peterson and Avant, the said parties of the first part, are justly indebted to Joe C. Kerbey of the county of Travis and state of Texas, party of the third part herein, as evidenced by 508 certain promissory notes executed as stated below, and assumed by the parties of the first part and payable to the order of the said party of the third part as follows: [Describing said notes]."

The case was tried before the court, without a jury, and the court filed findings of fact, from which we quote as follows: "(6) I find that at the maturity of notes No. 1 of each of said series of notes the defendants Peterson and Avant requested plaintiff Joe C. Kerbey to extend the date of maturity of all of said notes included in the deed of trust herein referred to, and which deed of trust is set out in full in the statement of facts, to which reference is made for the terms of same; that at said time said Peterson and Avant were the owners, through said deeds of conveyance from Foote, Baxter, Hughlett, and Gainsberg, of most of the lots described in said deed of trust; that on December 3, 1910, said Peterson and Avant executed a deed of trust, in which they conveyed to John H. Cunningham, in trust for plaintiff Joe C. Kerbey, all of the lots involved in this suit to secure to said Kerbey the payment of the 508 promissory notes herein sued on, said deed of trust reciting an extension of the notes then due, and in which deed of trust said Peterson and Avant acknowledged that they were justly indebted unto said Kerbey in the sum represented by said 508 notes, and in which they assumed the payment of said notes."

The court rendered judgment for appellee against the makers of said notes, foreclosing the deed of trust lien, and also a personal judgment over against appellants Peterson and Avant. No complaint is made as to this judgment, except as to rendering personal judgment against Peterson and Avant.

Opinion.

The only issue in this case is as to the proper construction of that clause of the deed of trust executed by appellants, above set out. Upon the facts above found, the court filed its conclusions of law, from which we quote as follows: "(2) I conclude, as a matter of law, that by the execution of the deed of trust introduced in evidence the defendants Charles Peterson and A. M. Avant assumed and became liable to pay to plaintiff Joe C. Kerbey the said notes, and each and all of them, and that a personal judgment should be rendered in favor of plaintiff and against said defendants Charles Peterson and A. M. Avant, and each of them, for the amount of said notes, principal, interest, and attorney's fees; and such judgment is so given."

It is true, as contended by appellants, that the ordinary office of a deed of trust is not to create an indebtedness, but to furnish security for the payment of indebtedness theretofore created. But there is no reason why an indebtedness should not be created by such instrument; and we think the court did not err in holding that this deed of trust created such indebtedness on the part of appellants. Prior to the execution of this deed of trust, and pending negotiations for the same, appellants were asserting that they were not personally liable to Kerbey for the purchase money of said lots. They were asking an extension of the notes. What were they offering as an inducement for such extension? The deed of trust, without personal liability on their part, would have been no additional security to Kerbey; for he already held a vendor's lien on and the superior title to all of said lots. Said deed of trust recites that appellants are justly indebted to Joe C. Kerbey, as evidenced by 508 certain promissory notes, but those notes were signed by other parties, and appellants had denied their personal responsibility for the payment of same; but here they admit responsibility by stating that they are justly indebted to Kerbey, as evidenced by these notes, "executed as stated below, and assumed by the parties of the first part." What is meant by the expression "assumed by the parties of the first part"? The ordinary meaning of this term is that payment is assumed. When and how? Evidently by the execution of this instrument, carrying into effect whatever verbal agreements might have preceded the execution of the same. We think the common sense and legal meaning of this instrument is that it declares that appellants are indebted in the amount of said notes; and that they thereby assume payment of the same. Am. & Eng. Ency. Law, vol. 20, pp. 989, 990; Words and Phrases, book 1, pp. 586, 587, and authorities there cited.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

CONTRACTS (§ 176*) — CONSTRUCTION — EVIDENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action to recover defendant's portion of certain expenses for the advertising of certain farm lands because of defendant's alleged failure to procure for plaintiff an option extending a prior contract of sale, evidence held to require submission to the jury of the question whether a provision in the agreement to procure the extension, that it should be sufficient to protect plaintiff in the full exercise and enjoyment of the original contract and its terms, required defendant to obtain proper agreements and releases from the holders of superior liens against the land so that a merchantable title thereto could be conveyed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 767-770, 917, 956, 979, 1041, 1697, 1825; Dec. Dig. § 176.*]

Error to District Court, Harris County; Wm. Masterson, Judge.

Action by John J. McPherson against C. W. Hahl & Co. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed and remanded.

C. R. Wharton, of Houston, for plaintiff in error. L. B. Moody and L. A. Kottwitz, both of Houston, for defendant in error.

HIGGINS, J. This is an action for the recovery of $2,000 deposited in escrow with the Houston National Bank, and is the second appeal; Judge Reese's opinion upon the previous appeal being reported in 133 S. W. at page 515, where a full and complete statement of the case is made, and we will therefore not restate the same further than as may be rendered necessary by an amendment to plaintiff's petition filed subsequent to the former appeal. As we construe Judge

Reese's opinion, he held that, under the state of pleadings and such of the evidence as could properly be considered a part of the statement of facts, the trial court erred in holding the agreement of date February 23, 1909, did not require the extension agreement called for therein to be binding upon any one other than Hahl & Co. and upon the owner of the land, W. J. Candlish. The court did not hold the clause of the contract, the meaning and scope of which was in issue, to be unambiguous, but emphasizes the fact that there were no allegations in the petition that the terms in the agreement, "in the full exercise and enjoyment of the contract and its terms," bore other than the ordinary signification, or that they were understood by the parties in any other sense, or that by mutual mistake the contract failed to express the meaning and intention of the parties, and they further state, "if there was anything in the circumstances under which this contract was executed to indicate that the parties understood this contract to bind Hahl & Co. to get such an instrument as would protect appellee against these liens, it is not alleged in the petition nor shown by the evidence, which shows only the existence and assertion, in a pending suit, of the vendor's lien and right to rescind and recover the land; all of the other liens having been discharged. It may be that the evidence which the court evidently made the basis of its findings, and which appellee in his brief relies upon to support them, would put a different view upon the matter; but we are precluded, we think, as stated in limine, from going into this evidence."

The amendment to the plaintiff's petition, upon which it was last tried, contains the following allegations: "That at the time this contract was executed, neither plaintiff nor his attorneys knew with any accuracy the state of the title to these lands; they had never seen an abstract of the title, and the only information they had with reference thereto was from rumor and from statements made by defendants; that the defendant C. W. Hahl represented that, on the day following the execution of the supplemental agreement heretofore copied in this pleading, he was going to consummate a transaction that would enable him to place the lands in plaintiff's hands for sale, free from any imperfection as to title, and that the title would be in good and satisfactory condition, and that the extension of the contract which he was to procure under this supplemental agreement would be sufficient to protect the plaintiff and his associates in the full exercise and enjoyment of the contract in all its terms. By this expression it was meant and understood that the defendants would procure an extension of the contract, binding upon the owners of the superior title to the land, whoever they might be, or would exhibit releases of any liens or incumbrances that might be menacing sale or foreclosure of the land, and it was especially understood that the defendants were to procure the concurrence of certain clients of Messrs. Cocke & Cocke, attorneys of San Antonio, who held certain liens against the land, the names of these clients not being divulged to the plaintiff or his attorneys at the time of these negotiations, and since neither plaintiff nor his counsel was familiar with the details of the title or the nature and extent of the imperfection that existed in it, if any, or the nature and extent of the liens that might be against the land and subjecting it to sale, these things were not enumerated or set out at length in the contract, but, under the assertions of the defendants that all of the objections to the title would be obviated in such way that the sales could go forward without interruption, and that plaintiff and his associates could make sales and deliveries of the land free from objections on account of the title, it was written in the contract of the 23d of February, 1910, that this extension agreement to be procured would be sufficient to fully extend the original contract and protect the said McPherson and Prudential Land Company in the full exercise and enjoyment of the contract and its full terms, which meant, and was so understood by the parties thereto to mean, that defendants were then entering into various negotiations and arrangements, the full nature of which were not disclosed to plaintiff or his counsel, and the names of the parties with whom had were not disclosed to the plaintiff or his counsel, but that, under these arrangements then going forward and in process of early completion, the title to the lands would not only be left in good condition and be made acceptable to plaintiff and his counsel and any purchaser that plaintiff might have for the lands, but the title to the land would be in fact made good and merchantable."

As we construe the opinion of Judge Reese and, as heretofore stated, the Galveston court did not hold the clause "in the full exercise and the enjoyment of the original contract and its terms" was unambiguous, but upon the contrary we think they clearly intimate that, under proper allegations supported by proper proof, it was a question of fact whether or not this clause would have required Hahl & Co. to obtain from the holders of the vendor's lien and other superior liens agreements whereby plaintiff, McPherson, would have been fully protected, in the exercise of the original contract and its terms, and under the paragraph of the plaintiff's petition above quoted, we think it was permissible to show these facts; the language quoted being ambiguous.

Upon trial before a jury, the court gave a peremptory instruction in favor of Hahl &

Co., and the material question involved upon this appeal is whether or not an issue is raised by the testimony as to what was understood and meant by the parties by the clause above quoted, the meaning of which is in dispute. The nearest approach to any testimony showing that it was contemplated by the parties that this clause was intended to require Hahl & Co. to obtain proper agreements from the lienholders is that of the witness Thos. P. Fenlon of Kansas City, attorney for McPherson, and of Mr. Wharton, likewise Mr. McPherson's attorney, who drew the agreement sued upon, and the testimony of Mr. Cocke of San Antonio, an attorney for one of the lienholders.

Mr. Fenlon testified as follows: "Hahl represented to Mr. Wharton and myself, at the time this supplemental contract was drawn in Mr. Wharton's office, that he was perfecting an arrangement by which all liens would be lifted from this land before March 5, 1909, and stated that he was going to San Antonio on the night of the 23d of February, 1909, the date upon which this supplemental contract was signed, for the purpose of negotiating a deal which would leave the land entirely free and enable him to procure us the extension called for in this supplemental contract referred to. Mr. Hahl was told by both Mr. Wharton and myself that unless he had these liens extinguished, or procured an agreement from the holders of these liens, and especially from the holders of the superior title, that the extension of the contract would be useless to us; that we could not sell the land unless we could represent to our clients that the title was merchantable. Mr. Hahl assured us that there would be no trouble on this score, and was given a copy of this supplemental contract, which he was to show to Cocke & Cocke at San Antonio, Tex., attorneys for P. E. Bialack, and with whom Hahl said he was negotiating. Mr. Hahl undertook to procure the consent of these parties to this extension, with the understanding that, if it was not procured, the extension would be worthless, and that we would be unable to handle the land under the contract of September 10, 1908, or any extension thereof."

Wharton testified: "We told Hahl we would sue him for breach of contract on account of the money we had spent unless we got an extension on the contract that was made by our clients with him. I asked him about the title to the land, as I had no abstract; he said the abstracts were in San Antonio, but that title would be fixed up all right; that he was going to San Antonio that night, to see some lawyers there, and they were going to fix up the title to the land. We discussed some of the matters with reference to the land—that is, some judgment liens—and Mr. Hahl said those liens would all be released, or, if not released, would be left in such shape that anybody else holding any liens against it would agree to this extension. He did not go into detail as to exactly what he was going to do; seemed to be in considerable of a hurry; said he had to get out of town that night. The contract was drawn up, and several copies were made; one of the copies was put in the bank with the $2,000; one of the copies was taken by Mr. Hahl to San Antonio, where he agreed to show it to Cocke & Cocke, and get them or their clients to agree to the extension if the liens were not extinguished."

Cocke testified: "We had certain negotiations with Hahl & Co. in January and February, 1909, by which we purchased from Hahl & Co. about $51,000 in vendor's lien notes held by Hahl & Co. against the northern portion of the Nutt pasture in Bee county. These were second vendor's lien notes, and were subject to another set, which had been theretofore executed by Hahl in favor of Nutt, the original owner of the land. The notes we purchased were secured by a deed of trust and vendor's lien on the land. I know there was some conversation about it, and I am sure that Hahl told us he would have to lose this $2,000 in order to get rid of the controversy with McPherson. I do not know whether Hahl made a formal request for our concurrence in the contract, but, if he did not do so, it was because he had been told in advance that neither we nor our clients would concur in the extension agreement in the manner proposed and under the conditions proposed. Hahl told us he had agreed to get our concurrence in this extension, or, in lieu thereof, lose $2,000 then in the Houston bank."

We think the testimony quoted sufficient to raise the issue of whether or not it was contemplated and understood by the parties that Hahl & Co. were required to obtain proper agreement or releases from the holders of the superior liens by the clause in the contract of February 23d that the extension contract to be secured by Hahl & Co. should be sufficient to protect McPherson in the full exercise and enjoyment of the original contract and its terms. The testimony which we have quoted is not entirely clear and satisfactory to our minds that the clause was so understood and interpreted by the parties, as neither Wharton nor Fenlon testify directly to that effect, but we think it sufficient to have raised an issue to be submitted to the jury, and therefore hold that the court erred in giving a peremptory instruction for the defendant. The fourth assignment is not considered. It is not supported by a proposition and is not a proposition within itself.

Reversed and remanded.

Error from District Court, Cameron County; John O. Scott, Judge.

Trespass to try title by C. H. Maris, trustee in bankruptcy of the Brownsville Lumber & Manufacturing Company, against the National Lumber & Creosoting Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Allen & Rich, of Brownsville, for plaintiff in error. F. W. Seabury, of Brownsville, for defendant in error.

FLY, J. Defendant in error, as trustee in bankruptcy for the Brownsville Lumber & Manufacturing Company, instituted an action of trespass to try title to an undivided one-half interest in 10 lots in West Brownsville, Cameron county, Tex., and for partition, against the plaintiff in error herein. Defendant in error specially pleaded his title, in which it was alleged that plaintiff in error claimed the land through a deed from C. H. Mason, Jr., who held the same in trust for defendant in error. The cause was tried by jury and resulted in a verdict in favor of defendant in error, the plaintiff in the court below. No statement of facts has been filed in this court.

[1] In trespass to try title the plaintiff is not required to plead his title, but, if he does plead it, he is confined to proof of that title; and, if his allegations of title are not sufficient to show a good one, a general demurrer should be sustained. Hughes v. Lane, 6

Tex. 289; Pilcher v. Kirk, 55 Tex. 208; Snyder v. Nunn, 66 Tex. 255, 18 S. W. 340; McDonald v. Bank, 74 Tex. 539, 12 S. W. 235; Mayers v. Paxton, 78 Tex. 196, 14 S. W. 568. It has never been held otherwise in this state, and, appellee having specially pleaded his title, his case must stand or fall upon that plea, and he cannot, in order to resist a general demurrer, fall back upon his general action in trespass to try title. This is said in view of defendant in error's contention that the petition, containing the statutory allegations of trespass to try title, is not subject to general demurrer, even if the title specially pleaded is insufficient to maintain the action. The two cases cited are not actions of trespass to try title, and have no bearing on the proposition stated. The case of Staples v. Llano County, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 203, 28 S. W. 569, was an action for debt; the case of Oheeves v. Anders, 87 Tex. 294, 28 S. W. 274, 47 Am. St. Rep. 107, was a suit on an insurance policy. An exception to the rule is where title by limitation is pleaded in addition to the ordinary action of trespass to try title. Mayers v. Paxton, 78 Tex. 196, 14 S. W. 568.

[2] On general demurrer every reasonable intendment must be indulged in favor of the pleading assailed by it, and, if any cause of action or ground of defense is shown by the pleading, the general demurrer should be overruled.

In this case it was alleged that W. H. Mason, Jr., Albert Snyder, and O. K. Mason incorporated their business under the name of the Snyder-Mason Lumber & Manufacturing Company, and afterwards sold to the Brownsville Lumber & Manufacturing Company all of the business of the first-named corporation for $16,000 and the assumption of its debts; that the last-named corporation was a reincorporation of the Snyder-Mason Lumber & Manufacturing Company, with the same stockholders, and occupied the same relation to the land in controversy as did the original lease and option owners, which was the ownership of a certain lease on said land and option to purchase the same from the Brownsville Land & Improvement Company; that the terms of the lease and option were that the said company leased the land to Snyder and Mason for five years on condition that within 30 days from October 1, 1908, it should begin the construction of a planing mill, not to cost less than $5,000, on the land and should complete the same within five months and continue to operate it thereafter, and to put a lumber yard on the land, and that the lessees should have the right to buy the land for $800 at any time after the planing mill and lumber yard had been installed; that afterwards the time for installing the two plants was extended to November 1, 1909; that Snyder and Mason transferred all their rights to the Snyder-Mason Lumber & Manufacturing Company on August 10, 1909, and the same were acquired from that corporation by the Brownsville Lumber & Manufacturing Company; that Snyder and Mason did place the lumber yard on the land, and the two corporations maintained it, and the construction of the planing mill was begun on September 1, 1909, and was being carried on when on October 12, 1909, an attachment was levied on all the property of the corporation by a United States marshal, the same having been sued out by the appellant in this suit, and on December 4, 1909, bankruptcy proceedings were begun and were pending in the federal court.

It was further alleged: "Your petitioner further represents that upon the levy of the said writ of attachment, namely, on October 12, 1909, the said Albert Snyder and W. H. Mason, Jr., for the purpose of protecting the said Brownsville Lumber & Manufacturing Company from a forfeiture of its said lease and option by the Brownsville Land & Improvement Company, which forfeiture was then and there anticipated by reason of the aforesaid attachment, procured from the Brownsville Land & Improvement Company a conveyance of the said block 3, in West Brownsville, which conveyance they took in their own names, and they then and there paid said Brownsville Land & Improvement Company the sum of $800 as required by the terms of the aforesaid lease and option; the said conveyance being made expressly, subject to said lease and option. And that by reason of the premises the said Snyder and Mason thereby obtained and held the title to said block of land in trust for the benefit of the said Brownsville Lumber & Manufacturing Company, subject only to the return to them of their expenditures in the premises. That thereafter the said Albert Snyder acknowledged said trust, and together with W. C. Feild, to whom he had transferred half his title to said land, conveyed to plaintiff herein, as trustee for the Brownsville Lumber & Manufacturing Company, then in bankruptcy, his right in and to said block, being one undivided half thereof, which undivided half was thereafter conveyed to plaintiff under an order of sale issued in said bankruptcy proceeding out of the said district court of the United States to the said National Lumber & Creosoting Company, the defendant in this cause. But that the said W. H. Mason, Jr., wholly failed to transfer to plaintiff the legal title in and to the remaining undivided half of said premises, but subsequently, on June 29, 1910, conveyed same to the defendant herein. And your petitioner represents that he is ready and willing to pay to the defendant herein as assignee of said W. H. Mason, Jr., the aforesaid moneys paid by him to said Brownsville Land & Improvement Company, to wit, the sum of $400, with legal interest thereon, and all legitimate expenses connected with the obtaining of said conveyance from said Brownsville Land & Improvement Company, and he now here offers so to do, and avers that he is entitled to have from defendant a conveyance of its right and interest in and to said undivided half of said block, held from and under the said W. H. Mason, Jr."

[3] If the bankrupt corporation owned the lease and option, and Snyder and Mason, stockholders in the concern, paid the $800 specified in the contract for the express object of protecting the corporation in its lease and option, the deed made to them inured to the benefit of the corporation. They were members of the corporation managing its affairs, and, if they obtained the benefit of the option from the owner of the land for themselves, they could have obtained it for the corporation. It owned the lease and the option; it had been striving to perform the conditions of the option; and the sale was based upon a lease and option to which Snyder and Mason had no right nor title. When they bought the land they bought for the corporation, no matter in whose name the deed was executed. One of them recognized the trust that was reposed in him, and, when the money that he had paid out was refunded, he conveyed the land to the trustee. The other, however, repudiated the trust and sold to another person. The stockholders under the allegations were acting for the corporation, and they cannot defeat the claims of creditors by claiming property bought for the corporation by having it conveyed to them in their individual capacity.

The land could not have been bought by Snyder and Mason except through the assistance of a contract owned by the corporation, and, when it was bought by means of and under the shadow of that contract by men in control of the corporation, equity, in order to work out right and justice, even though the stockholders did not intend or desire to create a trust relation, will raise a constructive trust in favor of the corporation. The stockholders occupied a fiduciary relation to the corporation, and for them to be permitted to acquire rights that are and ought to be the rightful property of the corporation would be inequitable and unjust. Constructive trusts "arise when the legal title to property is obtained by a person in violation, express or implied, of some duty owed to the one who is equitably entitled, and when the property thus obtained is held in hostility to his beneficial rights." "Persons acting in a fiduciary relation to a corporation will not be permitted to acquire title to the trust property, but equity impresses a constructive trust upon the property purchased or obtained for the benefit of the party beneficially entitled." Pomeroy, Eq. §§ 1051, 1052. The trustee will not be permitted to trade and speculate in the necessities of the person to whom he occupies a fiduciary relation.

There is no merit in the third, fourth, and fifth assignments of error, and they are overruled. There being no statement of facts, the remaining assignments cannot be considered. The corporation having been declared a bankrupt, all of its property passed to the trustee in bankruptcy.

The judgment is affirmed.

GAMBLE v. MARTIN et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. El Paso.
Oct. 24, 1912. Rehearing Denied
Nov. 27, 1912.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 289*) — VENDOR'S LIEN—FORECLOSURE—RIGHTS OF PERSONS NOT PARTIES.

Where a subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer is not made a party to a suit to foreclose a vendor's lien, his right to redeem is not prejudiced by the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 820, 821; Dec. Dig. § 289.*]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 279*)—FORECLOSURE OF VENDOR'S LIEN—PARTIES—INSTRUMENTS NOT RECORDED.

Under the statute providing for registration of all instruments affecting title to real estate, a junior mortgagee who is not in possession, and whose mortgage is not of record at the time of the institution of the suit and entry of judgment of foreclosure of a vendor's lien, and of whose rights the prior lienholder is not otherwise advised, is not a necessary party, and such foreclosure of the first lien bars his rights.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 778-782; Dec. Dig. § 279.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 289*) — VENDOR'S LIEN—FORECLOSURE—JUNIOR INCUMBRANCER—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where the lien of a junior incumbrancer was not of record at the time of foreclosure of a senior vendor's lien, and such junior incumbrancer was not made a party to the suit, the burden was on him to show possession or other facts sufficient to put the holder of the vendor's lien on notice of his rights at the time of the foreclosure proceeding, in order to retain his right to redeem.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 820, 821; Dec. Dig. § 289.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 231*) — BONA FIDE PURCHASERS — DISCONNECTED DEED—EFFECT.

A recorded deed disconnected from the title is not notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 513-539; Dec. Dig. § 231.*]

5. MORTGAGES (§ 426*)—FORECLOSURE—PARTIES.

The only proper parties to a suit to foreclose a mortgage are the mortgagor, the mortgagee, and those who have acquired rights or interests under them subsequent to the execution and delivery of the mortgage; a stranger claiming adversely to the title of the mortgagor not being a necessary or proper party, as he could not be affected by the foreclosure suit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 1272-1287; Dec. Dig. § 426.*]

6. ESTOPPEL (§ 29*)—ESTOPPEL BY DEED—ACCEPTANCE OF QUITCLAIM.

In a suit by a junior lienholder to redeem from foreclosure of a vendor's lien, mere acceptance of a quitclaim deed by the purchaser on foreclosure of the lien was insufficient to create an estoppel.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. §§ 69-73; Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 548*)—REVIEW OF EVIDENCE—NECESSITY OF BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

An objection to the admission of testimony cannot be reviewed in the absence of a bill of exceptions reserved at the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2433-2440; Dec. Dig. § 548.*]

8. EVIDENCE (§ 317*)—HEARSAY.

Evidence of a witness as to certain statements made to him by J. in explanation of J.'s failure to testify on a former trial was inadmissible as hearsay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1174-1192; Dec. Dig. § 317.*]

9. EVIDENCE (§ 271*)—RECORDS—ABANDONED PLEADINGS.

Abandoned pleadings drawn by one not a party, containing self-serving declarations, were properly excluded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1068-1079, 1081-1104; Dec. Dig. § 271.*]

10. TRIAL (§ 237*)—INSTRUCTIONS—BURDEN OF PROOF—"ESTABLISHED."

An instruction that, if plaintiff had established by a preponderance of the evidence that at a certain conference he had accepted defendant's proposal, then the jury should answer a certain question submitted in a special verdict in the affirmative was not objectionable on the ground that the word "established" imposed a greater burden on plaintiff than he was required to bear; the word being used in its common acceptance and therefore not misleading.

Appeal from District Court, Taylor County; Thomas L. Blanton, Judge.

Suit by E. C. Gamble against George B. Martin and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 129 S. W. 336.

Edwin H. Yeiser and James H. Robertson, both of Austin, and S. P. Hardwicke, of Abilene, for appellant. H. G. McConnell, of Haskell, A. H. Kirby, of Abilene, and Montgomery & Britain, of Wichita Falls, for appellees.

HIGGINS, J. This suit was brought in the district court of Taylor county by Gamble against Geo. B. Martin and King county to recover four leagues of land situated in Lamb county, Tex., patented by the state to King county and being the King county school land. Recovery of said land was sought upon two counts: First, upon an alleged right to specific performance of an agreement to convey to Gamble; and, second, to enforce a right of redemption as a junior mortgagee, which appellant claimed under the mortgage hereinafter referred to, executed by Ashby S. James to L. C. Grant, trustee, for the use and benefit of Gamble. Upon trial before a jury, the cause was submitted upon special issues, and upon such findings, and upon additional findings of fact by the court, judgment was rendered in favor of the appellees. This is the second appeal of this case; former opinion appearing in 129 Southwestern Reporter at page 387. On March 22, 1892, the land in controversy was conveyed by King county to Powell & Bradford in consideration of their note for $22,139, payable on or before 20 years after date, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, payment of which was secured by a vendor's lien. This deed was duly recorded on April 13, 1892. By deed dated April 13, 1892, recorded April 26, 1892, Powell & Bradford conveyed to John G. James, in consideration of $2,000, cash and assumption by the vendee of the purchase-money note due King county. By deed dated July 20, 1893, duly recorded August 4, 1893, John G. James conveyed to the First National Bank of Childress, Tex., for a consideration of $1 per acre and other valuable considerations. By deed dated August 1, 1893, recorded October 27, 1894, the First National Bank of Childress conveyed the land to Ashby S. James in consideration of $4,000. By deed dated September 1, 1893, recorded September 20, 1893, Ashby S. James conveyed the land in trust to L. C. Grant for the use and benefit of Gamble, securing James' note to Gamble in the sum of $3,000, due January 1, 1896, and in addition to the other terms and provisions usually incorporated in instruments of this character it was provided that a substitute trustee might be appointed in case Grant for any reason failed to act. In February, 1907, the land was sold under the deed of trust by a substitute trustee, and by deed dated February 5, 1907, recorded March 4, 1907, it was conveyed by the substitute trustee to appellant. This suit was filed April 29, 1907. On January 5, 1894, King county filed suit against Powell & Bradford, John G. James and First National Bank of Childress to recover judgment on the note executed by Powell & Bradford to King county in payment for said land and for foreclosure of the vendor's lien securing its payment. Neither Ashby S. James nor the appellant Gamble were parties to this suit. The First National Bank of Childress disclaimed any interest in the land and on October 23, 1894, judgment was entered in favor of King county for the sum of $25,615.17, with foreclosure of vendor's lien, under which judgment the land was sold and conveyed on March 5, 1895, to King county, for the sum of $9,000. By ordinary quitclaim deed dated January 9, 1898, recorded May 4, 1898, Ashby S. James, in consideration of the sum of $10, released and quitclaimed unto King county and its assigns all of his right, title, and interest in and to the land. On February 16, 1899, the commissioners' court of King county entered an order accepting the proposition of appellee to purchase the land for $1 per acre, to be paid on or before 20 years from date, with interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, payable in advance, and ordering the county judge upon the execution by Geo. D. Martin of his note covering the purchase money, to execute to him a bond for title, the note to be secured by lien upon the land. On October 2, 1900, King county, by J. M. Martin, its county judge executed a deed to the appellee covering the land in controversy, reciting authority of the commissioners' court, but referring to no order. A deed having been given for the land instead of the bond for title, as directed by the order of February 16, 1899, the commissioners' court of King county therefore, on August 13, 1906, entered an order ratifying the above-mentioned deed of October 2, 1900, executed by its county judge to Geo. D. Martin, and directed the county judge of the county to execute to appellee a deed ratifying the said deed of October 2, 1900, and in pursuance to this last-mentioned order R. E. Lassiter, county judge of King county, on August 13, 1906, executed a deed to Geo. D. Martin conveying the land in controversy.

It is unnecessary to detail the evidence upon which the appellant claims a right to specific performance of an agreement to convey the land to him as it was a controverted issue whether or not such an agreement was ever made, and this issue, having been submitted to the jury, was determined adversely to the appellant.

Coming now to a consideration of appellant's asserted right of redemption, it will be noted that neither he nor Ashby S. James, under whom he claimed, were parties to the foreclosure suit instituted on January 5, 1894, by King county against Powell & Bradford, John G. James, and the First National Bank of Childress. It will also be noted that, while the deed of trust to L. C. Grant, trustee, was of record when the foreclosure suit was instituted, yet the deed from the First National Bank of Childress to Ashby S. James was not of record and was not recorded until October 27, 1894, subsequent to the entry of the judgment of foreclosure. It is contended by appellant that, inasmuch as he had a valid lien upon the premises, his right to redeem the land was not affected by the foreclosure of the senior lien in favor of King county because he was not a party to the suit.

[1] The general rule is well settled that, in case of a foreclosure of a vendor's lien, a subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer, who is not made a party thereto, is not affected by the judgment rendered, and it does not prejudice the rights of such parties to redeem the land. In other words, in order to bar the equity of redemption, they must be parties to the suit and to the judgment.

Ufford v. Wells, 52 Tex. 612; Foster v. Power, 64 Tex. 247; Railway Co. v. Whitaker, 68 Tex. 634, 5 S. W. 448; Pierce v. Moreman, 84 Tex. 596, 20 S. W. 821; McDonald v. Miller, 90 Tex. 309, 39 S. W. 89; Spencer v. Jones, 92 Tex. 520, 50 S. W. 118, 71 Am. St. Rep. 870; Rogers v. Houston, 60 S. W. 445; Milmo Nat. Bank v. Rich, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 364, 40 S. W. 1032. This is but the application of the well-settled rule that the rights of parties interested in the subject-matter of litigation are not affected by the judgment rendered unless they are parties to the suit.

[2] Our statutes, however, provide for the registration of all instruments affecting title to real estate, so that parties dealing with the same may have notice and be apprised of the rights of all parties therein, and, in the absence of such record, possession of the land, or other facts sufficient to affect one with notice, innocent parties dealing with the land take same discharged of such secret and unknown claims, and it seems to be well settled that, in a suit to foreclose a lien upon land, a junior mortgagee who is not in possession, and whose deed is not of record at the time of the institution of the suit and entry of the judgment of foreclosure, and of whose rights the prior lienholder is not otherwise advised, is not a necessary party to such suit, and such foreclosure of the first lien bars the rights of the junior mortgagee in the land. Webb v. Maxan, 11 Tex. 678; Bradford v. Knowles, 86 Tex. 508, 25 S. W. 1117; Rogers v. Houston, 94 Tex. 403, 60 S. W. 870; Adoue v. Town of La Porte (Sup.) 124 S. W. 135; 27 Cyc. 1572; Wiltzie on Mortgage Foreclosure (1st Ed.) §§ 191, 192, 418, 419, and 420.

[3] Of course the rights of the junior lienholder would not be affected by the decree of foreclosure if the holder of the first lien had notice of his rights by possession or otherwise; but, in the absence of constructive notice afforded by the record, the burden of proof is upon the junior incumbrancer to show possession or other facts sufficient to put the holder of the first lien upon notice of his rights at the time of the foreclosure proceedings. Rogers v. Houston, supra. There is nothing in the record to show that King county had any notice of the rights of Ashby S. James, or of E. C. Gamble, unless the record of the deed of trust given by James to Grant, trustee, was constructive notice thereof. The deed from the First National Bank of Childress to Ashby S. James, appellant's mortgagor, not being of record at the time of the institution of the foreclosure suit by King county, appellant's mortgage, though recorded, was disconnected from the chain of title upon which King county was seeking to foreclose.

[4] Being entirely disconnected from the title, it was not notice to King county of any rights in the title to the land against which King county had its lien and desired to foreclose. Many titles are clouded and obscured by transfers and incumbrances emanating from parties disconnected from and in no wise related to the title, and in a foreclosure suit we think it necessary only to proceed against those whose claims in the land appear to be connected with the title against which the foreclosure is sought.

[5] Mr. Wiltsie in his work on Mortgage Foreclosure, par. 420, says: "The only proper parties to a foreclosure are the mortgagor and the mortgagee and those who have acquired rights or interests under them subsequent to the execution and delivery of the mortgage, for they are the only persons who have any rights or obligations growing out of the mortgage, or who can be affected in any manner by the litigation. A stranger claiming adversely to the title of the mortgagor can in no way be affected by the foreclosure suit. It can make no difference to him whether the mortgage is valid or invalid, whether it is discharged or foreclosed, or whether the estate mortgaged, the only estate which can be affected by the decree, remains in the mortgagor, or is transferred to another. As such adverse claimant is a stranger to the mortgage and to the mortgaged estate, he can have no interest in the subject-matter of the action; there is no privity between him and the plaintiff; and the plaintiff has no right to make him a party defendant to a foreclosure, for the purpose of trying his adverse title." This statement of the rule, we think, bears out the conclusion reached by us. The Grant mortgage, under which appellant claims, having emanated from one who was an apparent stranger to the title of Powell & Bradford, the presumption would be that his claim was adverse to that of the Powell & Bradford title, and as such he would not be a proper party to the foreclosure proceedings, as questions of title cannot be passed upon in those proceedings.

It is contended by appellant that King county recognized the Ashby S. James title and thereby became estopped to show the invalidity thereof by reason of its acceptance of above-mentioned quitclaim deed from James taken after the foreclosure of its lien. It is not a question, however, of whether or not the James title was valid or invalid, and it may be conceded that same was valid; but this does not alter the fact that neither James nor Gamble were necessary parties defendant to the foreclosure suit, for the reasons indicated above.

[6] Furthermore, by the mere acceptance of a quitclaim deed, no element of estoppel is raised in a case of this kind. The case of Waco Bridge Co. v. City of Waco, 85 Tex. 327, 20 S. W. 137, and other cases cited by appellant, wherein grantees have been held estopped to deny certain facts by the acceptance under certain circumstances of deeds, we do not regard as applicable.

In the former opinion of this case there is a discussion of whether or not appellant's right of redemption was barred by limitation, and upon this appeal it is again contended that appellant's right was so barred. Under the view which we take, however, that the foreclosure proceeding barred the right of redemption, we find it unnecessary to pass upon the questions now presented regarding the plea of limitation.

[7] The ninth assignment of error is overruled. It complains of the admission of certain testimony, but our attention is called to no bill of exceptions questioning the admission of the testimony of which complaint is made.

[8] The court properly refused to permit the witness Yelser to testify to certain statements made to him by Ashby S. James in explanation of the failure of James to testify upon the former trial of this case; such statements were hearsay and inadmissible.

[9] Neither did the court err in refusing to permit appellant to offer in evidence the abandoned pleadings in the case which had been drawn by James; the declarations therein were self-serving and inadmissible. The various assignments relating to the sufficiency and validity of the deed dated October 2, 1900, from King county by its county judge, J. M. Martin, to Geo. B. Martin, are overruled. The validity of this instrument is immaterial in view of the execution of the subsequent deed by King county dated August 13, 1906. We do not think the charge of the court is subject to the objections urged in the seventeenth and eighteenth assignments, and they are therefore overruled.

[10] By the nineteenth assignment complaint is made of that portion of the charge which reads as follows: "In case the plaintiff has established, by a preponderance of the evidence, that he had at said conference in Ft. Worth accepted the said proposal of defendant, then you will answer said question 'yes,' otherwise you will answer the same 'no'"—the contention being that by the use of the word "established" a greater burden is imposed upon the appellant than the law requires. Literally and technically, this may be true, but in its common acceptation, and considering the charge as a whole, we do not think the jury could have been misled by the use of the word quoted.

The twentieth assignment is also overruled. This complains of the refusal of the court to submit a special charge requested by the appellant which was properly submitted in the court's general charge. It was therefore not error to refuse a special charge submitting the same issue.

Affirmed.

ST. LOUIS SOUTHWESTERN RY. CO. OF TEXAS v. LEE.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas, Texarkana. Nov. 6, 1912. On Motion for Rehearing, Nov. 14, 1912.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 103*)—FENCES—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—"FIELD."

The word "field," in Rev. Civ. St. 1911, arts. 6595-6598, requiring every railroad company whose road passes through a "field" to place and maintain cattle guards at the points of entry, etc., means land inclosed by a fence which will prevent the ingress of live stock, and a railroad company need not provide cattle guards unless its track passes through an undivided field inclosed by the owner, as distinguished from separate fields so inclosed.

On Motion for Rehearing.

2. RAILROADS (§ 103*)—FENCES—CATTLE GUARDS—DUTY TO CONSTRUCT AND MAINTAIN.

Where a railroad company maintaining a track through a plantation fenced its right of way, and constructed cattle guards at the points of entry, and the owner subsequently inclosed the land and joined his fences to the right of way fences without intending to subdivide his land into separate fields, the track passed through a field within Rev. Civ. St. 1911, arts. 6595-6598.

3. DAMAGES (§ 62*)—INJURIES TO PROPERTY—MITIGATION.

Where a railroad company failed to maintain proper cattle guards at points of entry into a field, the owner damaged by trespassing hogs passing over the cattle guards was not required to minimize damages by fixing the cattle guards and the right of way fence built by the company.

Appeal from District Court, Bowie County; P. A. Turner, Judge.

Action by Luck Lee against the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Company of Texas. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Appellee owns a plantation of about 500 acres in Bowie county, which the appellant's line of railroad enters on the east, running through in a southwesterly direction to the west side. The conclusion is reasonably warranted that appellee cleared and inclosed the land after the railway was built. Prior to the injury in suit, the railway company had erected a fence on its right of way, on both the east and the west side, entirely through the tract of land. Appellee's fences around his land joined to the right of way fences. In addition to the right of way fences, the appellant had constructed cattle guards or stops at the points where the railway enters the appellee's farm on the east and west. There is evidence that the right of way fences were insufficient to prevent hogs from entering the appellee's cultivated land, which was situated on each side of the right of way fences, if the hogs once entered the inclosed railway track at the cattle guards or stops on the east and west sides of the farm where the railway enters the same. It was established, without conflict of evidence, that hogs entered appellee's inclosed farm by first getting over or through the cattle guards or stops on the east side, and then getting through the right of way fence into appellee's growing crops, and destroyed a large amount of same. The suit, among other things, was to recover the value of the crops thus destroyed. It was alleged as ground for suit that appellant had neglected and failed to place, and keep same in good repair, good and sufficient cattle guards or stops at the points where its line of railroad entered appellee's inclosure, as required by law. The court charged the jury: "The evidence shows that the railroad of defendant enters the inclosure or field of plaintiff in two places, one on the east and one on the west. It was the duty of defendant to put in cattle guards where its railroad enters the field of plaintiff that would prevent stock of every kind from entering said field. If you believe from the evidence that hogs crossed either of said cattle guards and thereby entered the field of plaintiff and injured or destroyed any of his corn or peas standing therein, and thereby damaged plaintiff, then you will find for plaintiff as to this item of damage."

Glass, Estes, King & Burford, of Texarkana, and E. B. Perkins and D. Upthegrove, both of Dallas, for appellant. Mahaffey & Thomas, of Texarkana, for appellee.

LEVY, J. (after stating the facts as above). The reasons relied on, among others, in the first, second, and third assignments for error in the charge of the court are (1) because the charge made it the absolute duty of the railway company to put in cattle guards sufficient to turn the hogs of appellee; and (2) made the railway company liable for the damage from depredation, regardless of its negligence. The charge assumed as a matter of law a violation on the part of appellant of an express statutory provision imposing upon a railway company the duty to place and keep in repair such good and sufficient cattle guards or stops at the points where the railway enters a field or inclosure of the owner as to protect such field or inclosure from depredations of stock of every description. Articles 4523-4527, Revised Civil Statutes 1895 (articles 6595-6598, Rev. Civ. St. 1911). As the charge was evidently applied to the facts proven, the objection here made, that it was error to impose absolute liability on appellant upon the finding that the hogs got over the cattle guards, necessarily extends to and involves a determination of the correctness of the charge as applied to the facts proven. If the court was in error in assuming the facts established, a violation of an express statutory provision, then imposing absolute liability, or liability at all, for the damage, was error, as claimed. The railway company had erected a fence on its right of way on both the east and west sides, extending entirely through the appellee's land. Appellee's fences around his farm joined and connected to the right of way fences. The appellant had, in addition to the right of way fences, constructed cattle guards or stops at the points where the railway enters the appellee's farm on both the east and the west. The hogs got over or through the cattle guards or stops, and then got through the right of way fences into appellee's growing crop. These are the facts admitted by the record. The statute above referred to was intended as well to relieve the landowner from the necessity of making cross fences because of the right of way as to protect the crops and inclosed land as a whole of adjacent landowners or their tenants from the incursions of live stock from the outside.

[1] "A field" evidently means that the part of the land used as such must be evidenced by a fence or some form of inclosure on the part of the owner which will prevent the ingress of live stock, since it would be an idle thing to require the railroad company to protect such cultivated land by a cattle guard or barrier to stock when by reason of the lack of a fence or other form of inclosure running to that portion of the right of way occupied by the railway company such cattle guard or stop would afford no protection. The statute, as can be seen, imposes the duty upon the railway company to put in the cattle guards or stops only "where the railway passes through a field or inclosure." A railway company has the legal right to fence in its track or right of way. Considering the purpose and language of the statute, in connection with the legal right of the company to fence in its track or right of way, it is evidently implied that, before the neglect of the duty to provide the cattle guards or stops is established, it must be shown that the track of the railway passed through the single or undivided field or inclosure of the landowner, as distinguished from two separate fields or inclosures of the landowner's making and intention. As appellee's fences were joined to the right of way fences on each side of the right of way of appellant, with his intention to have separate fields and inclosures, his field and his inclosure were partitioned from the single field and inclosure, and became and were by intention and design separate and distinct as such field and inclosure, lying one on each side of appellant's right of way and fence. After such partition by the landowner, the railway then and thereafter passed through and within its own fenced, separate, and exclusive inclosure, and not through either of the fields or inclosures of appellee on each side of the right of way. In answering a certified question in Railway Co. v. Wetz, 97 Tex. 581, 80 S. W. 988, the Supreme Court, in making distinction of the Adams Case, 63 Tex. 200, remarked: "The only difference between that case and this is that in the one there were and in the other there were not fences built along the margins of the right of way. Obviously that makes no difference in the application of the statute." This latter remark was not involved in the question there to be answered, and we do not think that the court meant it to decide the question in the instant case being considered. And in that case there was no question of the intention of the landowner to partition his land by fences into two fields or inclosures, one on each side of the right of way. It is the simple question here, and no other, of whether the statute is applicable to the peculiar facts proven. In the case of Southwestern Telegraph & Telephone Co. v. Krause, 92 S. W. 431, the court in the opinion cited the case supra, but the facts of the case and the question involved there are entirely different from the peculiar facts of the present case. In the facts of the instant case we think the statute is not applicable and that the court erred in the charge, as contended by appellant. Though the cattle guards have been also erected, the railway company has not done so under legal requirement here and is not absolutely obligated to maintain same to prevent stock depredations on appellee's land.

The judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded in so far as the particular recovery appealed from is concerned. The judgment for stock killed at Findly Station will be affirmed.

On Motion for Rehearing.

[2] In the first consideration of the case, we treated the evidence as showing that appellee had joined his fence with the right of way fence of the railway company, with the intention and purpose of using and having the railway fence to subdivide his tract of cultivated land into two separate and distinct inclosures, one on each side of the right of way. It was because of this fact appearing that appellee had intentionally subdivided and used his tract in two separate and distinct fields, one on each side of the railway, that we ruled that he had not so brought himself within the terms of the statute in question as to make it applicable, for it would not appear in such circumstances that the railway passed "through a field or inclosure" of his. Upon a reconsideration of the case, we find that we were in error in so treating the facts. We would not be warranted in the evidence in concluding that appellee in fencing only to the right of way intended, and had the purpose of, having the railway fence operate to subdivide his cultivated land into two separate fields or inclosures, one on each side of the right of way fence. This difference in fact makes, we think, the first ruling erroneous, and the appellee's motion for rehearing is granted.

The assignments are further considered and ruled on. The objection to the charge of the court heretofore set out must be overruled to the effect that it was erroneous as imposing absolute liability for the damages shown in the evidence because of the failure of the company to put in a stock guard that was sufficient to turn the hogs in evidence. The charge was in substantially the language of the statute in such respect. See articles 6595-6598, R. S. of 1911. And statutes upon like subjects have been held constitutional as within the police powers of the state. See Railway Co. v. Childress, 64 Tex. 346; Railway Co. v. Rowland, 70 Tex. 298, 7 S. W. 718.

A further point made by the assignments is based upon the assumption that the evidence showed that it was impossible for the company to construct a stock guard that would be sufficient to turn the hogs in evidence. The proof does not, we think, warrant the assumption, and therefore such question is not properly before us. There is no proof that the hogs were not hogs of ordinary disposition and docility. The appellee testified, and there is no proof to the contrary, that "my hogs were not any worse than anybody else's before they went through that guard."

[3] Error is predicated upon the refusal of the court to give special charges to the effect that it was the duty of the appellee to minimize the damages to his growing crop by fixing the stock guards and the right of way fence so as to keep the hogs out of his field. The question here has been heretofore decided, and the assignments are overruled. Railway Co. v. Young, 60 Tex. 201; Railway Co. v. Adams, 63 Tex. 201; Railway Co. v. Knoepfl, 82 Tex. 270, 17 S. W. 1052; Railway Co. v. Blackwell, 40 S. W. 860; Kendall v. Railway Co., 95 S. W. 757.

The judgment is in all things affirmed.

POWELL v. STEPHENS et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Austin.
Nov. 27, 1912.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 756*)—BRIEFS—FORM AND REQUISITES.

Act April 8, 1909 (Laws 31st Leg. [1st Called Sess.] c. 6) provides that on appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals the attorneys for both parties may file written or printed briefs, if written, not to exceed 15 pages; and rule 37, as amended October 30, 1912 (see Amendment to Rules, 149 S. W. x), provides that briefs may consist of 15 pages of foolscap. A typewritten brief containing 22½ pages of double-spaced typewritten matter, on paper of the size of ordinary letter heads, gotten up in book form, and which, if single-spaced, would not have contained over 12 pages of letter size, does not violate the rules or the statute, and will not be stricken out on motion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3091; Dec. Dig. § 756.*]

Appeal from District Court, Coleman County; John W. Goodwin, Judge.

Action between Mrs. M. E. Powell and W. H. Stephens and others. Judgment for Stephens and others, and Mrs. Powell appeals. Opinion on appellees' motion to strike brief of appellant. Motion overruled.

Walter O. Woodward and Woodward & Baker, all of Coleman, for the motion.

RICE, J. Appellees have filed their motion to strike out appellant's brief, on the ground that the same contains more than 8 pages of foolscap paper, and more than 15 pages of typewritten matter, and is not printed as required by the rules of the Supreme Court, adopted January 24, 1912, and the statute relative to the preparation and filing of briefs in this court, alleging that said brief of appellant is typewritten and contains 22 pages, and is therefore in conflict with law and the rules of said court.

As this motion involves a matter of considerable importance to the bar, it is deemed advisable to collate the statute and rules pertaining thereto, and to express our views thereon. By the act of April 8, 1909 (Laws 31st Leg. [1st Called Sess.] p. 270), it is provided that, "when any case or suit may be taken up from any inferior court to the Court of Civil Appeals, whether by appeal, writ of error or otherwise, it shall be lawful for the attorney for both the plaintiff and defendant to file in the papers of said suit or cause, written or printed briefs or argument; if written, not to exceed fifteen pages, and that said court shall be required to notice the same as if it were the personal appearance of said attorney, and shall not dismiss any suit or cause where such brief or argument of counsel is filed with the papers for want of other or further prosecution."

Prior to the enactment of this statute, the Supreme Court had formulated rule 37 for the preparation of briefs in this court, which reads as follows: "The brief of the parties framed in accordance with these rules must be signed by the party or his counsel; and if by counsel it shall appear for and on behalf of what party or parties, by name, it is signed; and the copies thereof filed in the appellate court shall be plainly written or printed, and if it covers more than eight pages of foolscap, they shall be printed." This rule, however, was amended by the Supreme Court on October 30, 1912, by providing that said brief may consist of 15 pages of foolscap, instead of 8, as theretofore, so as to conform with the statute just quoted on this subject. See Amendment to Rules, 149 S. W. x.

The brief complained of contains 22½ pages of double-spaced typewritten matter, on paper of the size of ordinary letter heads, and is gotten up in book form. Many of the pages are so spaced that their contents, double-spaced, could have been placed on half a page of foolscap, for which reason the brief comes within the purview of the statute and rule. If this brief had been single-spaced, as many are, it would not have contained over 12 pages of letter-size paper. We therefore hold that the brief in question does not violate the rule or statute, and is not subject to the objection made.

We wish to commend the manner in which this brief is prepared, in that it is double-spaced, clearly written on heavy paper, which renders it much more legible than if single-spaced and written on thin paper. It sets out the assignments, propositions, and statements, each on a line to itself, in capital letters, and in a manner to readily catch the eye, all of which materially aid the court in its examination of the brief.

For the reasons above stated, we overrule appellees' motion to strike out said brief.

NATIONS et al. v. HARRIS.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. El Paso. Oct. 31, 1912. Rehearing Denied Nov. 27, 1912.)

1. DAMAGES (§ 159*)—PLEADING—VARIANCE—EVIDENCE.

A prayer for "damages as the result of the operation of a slaughterhouse, etc., for a period of two years next immediately preceding the filing of plaintiff's petition" would not warrant a recovery of damages up to the time of the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 429-438, 440-444, 447, 449-453; Dec. Dig. § 159.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 191*)—DAMAGES—INSTRUCTIONS—ASSUMING FACTS.

In an action to abate a slaughterhouse as a nuisance and for damages, a requested instruction that the jury should not consider the annoyance or harm caused by flies was properly refused as withdrawing from the jury the question whether the flies were due to the slaughterhouse and its condition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 420-431, 435; Dec. Dig. § 191.*]

3. DAMAGES (§ 228*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CURE BY REMITTITUR.

In an action for damages and an injunction, any error in instructions as to damages are cured by a remittitur of the entire amount of damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 576-579; Dec. Dig. § 228.*]

4. NUISANCE (§ 36*)—JUDGMENT—CONFORMITY TO FINDINGS AND EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence raised the issue whether a slaughterhouse was a nuisance, and damages were allowed the plaintiff, though there was evidence that the premises had been made clean before the trial, it was proper to abate it, especially where the verdict in answer to a special charge to determine whether it was an existing nuisance found that it was.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Nuisance, Cent. Dig. § 95; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 221*)—OBJECTION BELOW—NECESSITY—SCOPE OF DECREE.

Assignments of error to the decree enjoining a nuisance cannot be sustained where the decree follows the prayer of the petition and the findings that the matter was a nuisance, and no steps were taken by defendant to limit the scope of the injunction in the lower court.

Appeal from District Court, El Paso County; J. R. Harper, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Annie Hays Harris against J. H. Nations and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed on condition.

W. B. Ware, Turney & Burges, and T. A. Falvey, all of El Paso, for appellants. Nealon, Neill & Thomason, of El Paso, for appellee.

HIGGINS, J. This was a suit by Annie Hays Harris against J. H. Nations and the J. H. Nations Meat & Supply Company for damages in the sum of $2,000 and for an injunction restraining the defendants from using on the property described in plaintiff's petition, or on any property near plaintiff's home, any of the buildings, slaughterhouses, and things complained of, and from butchering cattle or keeping cattle on the premises near plaintiff's home, or for using said property for the purpose or purposes for which it is now used, or for any purpose or purposes similar thereto. It resulted in a judgment in the sum of $250 in favor of the plaintiff against J. H. Nations, dismissing the J. H. Nations Meat & Supply Company, and for an injunction in favor of the plaintiff, in substantial accord with her petition.

[1] In the plaintiff's petition she prayed as follows with reference to damages: That she recover $2,000 damages to her health and for the loss and impairment of the use and comfortable enjoyment of her property, which she has suffered as a result of the operation of said slaughterhouse, etc., for a period of two years next immediately preceding the filing of plaintiff's petition; that is, the 13th day of April, 1911. The first and second assignments of error and propositions thereunder complain that the trial court, in the face of this pleading, submitted the issue of damages up to the time of trial, and that this was error. Appellee explains in oral argument the condition of the record by saying that the portion of the prayer quoted was inserted to meet defendant's plea of two years' limitation, and that it was not intended thereby to refrain from asking for damages up to the time of trial. We are of the opinion, however, that, in the absence of anything in the record explaining or limiting the effect of the portion of the prayer quoted, the assignments mentioned must be sustained. We do not think, however, that the sustaining of these assignments requires a reversal of the case, as it can be cured by remittitur of the entire amount of the damages. This we shall require, as we do not think that this court can undertake to apportion the damages embraced in the finding for $250 which occurred prior to the time of filing the petition and those which occurred afterwards.

[2] The third assignment of error complains that the trial court erred in refusing to give a special charge, in its nature peremptory, telling the jury that they could not consider, in arriving at said damages, the annoyance or harm caused by flies. We do not think the court erred in refusing to give this charge. Possibly a special charge requesting an issue as to whether these slaughterhouses, etc., caused flies might have been properly given under this testimony, but it could certainly not have been proper to peremptorily tell the jury that the flies present were not caused by the slaughterhouses and their condition.

[3] The fifth assignment of error recites that the court erred in charging the jury to find for plaintiff the damages she had sustained by flies being attracted by defendant's slaughterhouses. The court did not so tell the jury, but told the jury, if they believed that she had sustained damages by flies which were attracted by defendant's slaughterhouses, they might find for plaintiff. It would seem, however, that both the last two assignments are addressed to the damages rather than the injunction, and that requiring plaintiff to remit the damages would cure any question raised by these assignments.

[4] The fourth and sixth assignments of error complain because it was decreed that the said premises of the defendant were a nuisance at the time of trial, when the evidence showed that, for a period of 10 days before the trial, the premises had been cleaned up and rendered cleanly, etc.

The court on the trial charged that the operation of a slaughterhouse, etc., is lawful and not necessarily a nuisance, but may become a nuisance if conducted in such manner as to cause flies or disagreeable or unhealthy odors. The defense asked a special charge to the effect that the jury would find whether or not the slaughterhouse, etc., in the condition it is now conducted, is a nuisance, and that they would so state in their verdict, and by their verdict the jury answered that the slaughterhouse was a nuisance. The testimony being sufficient to raise an issue of whether or not the slaughterhouse was a nuisance, it would probably have been correct for the court to abate it by injunction. See Burditt v. Swenson, 17 Tex. 489, 67 Am. Dec. 665. But, in view of the special charge asked and the jury's answer thereto, there can be no question that the court properly by the injunction abated the nuisance.

[5] The remaining assignments are addressed to the form of the permanent injunction rendered in the judgment; the point being made that the judgment, without a hearing on the question, enjoined defendant from using said land for any purpose similar to a slaughterhouse, without regard to whether or not the said use would be a nuisance.

If we should sustain these assignments, it would only necessitate the reformation of the judgment; but we are of the opinion that they should not be sustained. The injunction ordered ran substantially in the language of the petition praying therefor; no exception was taken to this prayer; nor did defendant below point out or suggest any purpose similar to a slaughterhouse for which the property might be used which would not be a nuisance. In other words, we believe that if the defendant below, appellant here, desired to limit and narrowly define the extent to which the injunction should go, if granted, steps to effect that purpose should have been taken during the trial in the court below, and that it is not improper for the injunction to run substantially as prayed for, after the facts had been submitted to a jury, who found the premises a nuisance.

If within 10 days from this date the appellee shall file a remittitur of $250, the cause will be affirmed; otherwise it will be reversed and remanded.

BOOKER v. COULTER.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Austin.
Nov. 6, 1912.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 138*)—SETTING ASIDE DEFAULT—DILIGENCE—PROCURING COUNSEL.

A nonresident defendant, who, though knowing for some time that he was without counsel in an action, did not attempt to engage counsel until a few days before the beginning of the term at which the case was to be tried, did not exercise sufficient diligence to warrant the setting aside of his default because he was unrepresented by counsel.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 249-251, 254; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 145*)—VACATION OF DEFAULTS.

A default judgment will not be vacated, on the ground that defendant was not represented by counsel, where it appears that, had he been represented by counsel, the result could not have been changed.

3. JUDGMENT (§ 138*)—VACATION—DEFAULTS—OBTAINING TESTIMONY.

Where a nonresident defendant knew, at least a month before the trial of an action, that he could not be present, and that his defense could alone be made by his testimony, his failure to have his deposition taken was such a lack of diligence that a default will not be set aside to allow him to present his defense.

4. JUDGMENT (§ 158*)—VACATION—DEFAULTS—MERITORIOUS DEFENSE.

Appeal from District Court, Tom Green County; J. W. Timmins, Judge.

Action by J. D. Coulter against S. W. Booker. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 150 S. W. 219.

I. J. Curtsinger, of San Angelo, for appellant. C. E. Dubois, of San Angelo, and Stone & Wade, of Ballinger, for appellee.

Findings of Fact.

JENKINS, J. Appellee recovered a judgment for $1,000 against appellant, the amount paid by him for stock in the Booker-Jones Oil Company, which he alleged he was induced to purchase by the fraudulent representations of appellant. Appellant assigns error on the action of the court in overruling his motion for a new trial, first, because he was not represented on said trial by any attorney; and, second, because he was not present at said trial.

The facts show: That appellant had formerly resided at San Angelo, Tom Green county, Tex., but that at the time of the trial he was a resident of Eminence, Ky. That at the institution of this suit in 1910 he employed a firm of lawyers of San Angelo, Tex., to represent him in this case. Said lawyers moved away from San Angelo prior to the trial of this cause, which fact appellant learned from a letter from one of them on November 16, 1911. On December 6, 1911, he wrote I. J. Curtsinger, who represents appellant on this appeal, asking what he would charge him to represent him; and on December 12th had his bank at Eminence, Ky., wire the San Angelo National Bank to pay said Curtsinger the amount of the fee demanded, of which telegram, by reason of a mistake in transmitting same, Curtsinger was not notified until December 16th. Court convened on December 11th, and this case was tried on the 14th. At the time of said trial, and at least a month prior to said time, appellant's wife was seriously sick at their home in Eminence, Ky., so that he could not leave her.

Opinion.

[1] 1. No sufficient diligence was shown as to the employment of an attorney to represent him after appellant learned that his attorneys would not be present to represent him at the December term of court.

[2] 2. Had Mr. Curtsinger been employed on December 12th, the date of appellant's telegram to the bank, it is not probable that his presence at the trial would have changed the result, as the testimony in appellee's behalf was ample to sustain the judgment, and Mr. Curtsinger would have had no testimony to offer in rebuttal; it not appearing that the facts of appellant's alleged defense were known to any one but himself.

[3] 3. Appellant was a citizen of another state, and knew, for at least a month before the trial, that he could not be present at said trial, and yet he took no steps to have his deposition taken. This shows a lack of diligence as to procuring his testimony on said trial. Mayer v. Duke, 72 Tex. 445, 10 S. W. 566.

[4] 4. It is not properly made to appear that appellant had a meritorious defense to appellee's suit. The motion states that appellant did not sell said stock to appellee, and did nothing to induce him to buy the same; but this is not supported by affidavit.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

Affirmed.

Appeal from Presidio County Court; W. W. Bogel, Judge.

Action by J. D. Kane against J. A. Pitts, in which the defendant appealed from an adverse judgment. On motion to affirm on certificate. Motion granted, and judgment affirmed.

Hays & Miller, of Marfa, for appellant. P. H. Clarke, of Marfa, for appellee.

HARPER, C. J. This case was brought by J. D. Kane in the county court of Presidio county against J. A. Pitts, upon written contract for certain moneys, which the record shows to be within the jurisdiction of the trial court. And the record also shows that the trial court had jurisdiction of the parties to the suit.

Judgment was rendered by the trial court, without jury, for the plaintiff, after which the defendant, J. A. Pitts, appealed by giving notice in open court, and by filing, on May 28, 1912, an appeal bond in compliance, in form and substance, with article 2097, Revised Civil Statutes of 1911; but the transcript was presented too late to be filed under the rule prescribed by article 1608, Revised Civil Statutes of 1911—that is, the transcript prepared by the clerk of the trial court, and the certificate accompanying the motion to affirm, show that the judgment was rendered May 11, 1912; that on May 28, 1912, the appeal bond was filed in the lower court; and that on the 27th day of August, 1912, the transcript was delivered to the clerk of this court, and this court refused to file same because not having been presented within the time (90 days) prescribed by law (Revised Civil Statutes 1911, art. 1608; Rio Grande & E. P. Ry. Co. v. Mendoza, 66 S. W. 578; Welsh v. Weiss, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 257, 90 S. W. 160; Wandelohr v. Grayson County Nat. Bank, 90 S. W. 180); that thereafter, on the 9th day of October, 1912, the defendant in error filed a motion to affirm on certificate thereto attached, regardless of the merits (authorities above cited), which motion is sustained, and the judgment of the lower court is in all things affirmed as to appellant and the sureties on the appeal bond.

Subsequent to filing of motion to affirm on certificate, appellant presented to the court transcript upon writ of error, and asked that same be filed. This comes too late, because the appeal was perfected to this court upon filing of the appeal bond.

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 127*)—COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION—AMENDMENT OF PLEADINGS.

A railway employé who had been riding on a hand car was struck and killed by a train while attempting to cross the track to a place of safety after ineffectually attempting to remove the hand car from the track. The original complaint alleged as a cause of action the negligence of his foreman in compelling the crew to stay with the hand car too long. After a cause of action for his death would have been barred by limitations, except for the commencement of the action, the petition was amended to allege negligence on the part of the engineer of the train. Held, that the amendment did not introduce a new cause of action against which limitations had run.

Appeal from District Court, Harrison County; H. T. Lyttleton, Judge.

Action by W. L. Myers and wife against the Texas & Pacific Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 125 S. W. 49; 134 S. W. 814.

On the afternoon of April 9, 1908, Charley Myers was struck and instantly killed by one of the appellant's freight locomotives. He was a member of a regular bridge gang in the service of the appellant that were working on the bridges north of Woodlawn. At 4:30 in the afternoon, which was the usual hour to stop work, the bridge gang loaded their tools on a hand car furnished by the company for the purpose of transporting the tools, and started south to the town of Woodlawn. The regular boarding car of the bridge crew was stationed at Woodlawn, about three miles distant from the bridge they were working upon. While the bridge crew were proceeding from their work to Woodlawn on the hand car, the bridge foreman, who was on the lookout, discovered a freight train approaching from the north. It was proven that the operatives of the freight train saw the bridge crew on the hand car about the same time that the bridge foreman saw the freight train. The hand car at the time of the discovery of the approaching train was at a point about the middle or towards the south end of a narrow cut, and this is the point at which the operatives of the train saw the hand car. The cut was about 300 yards long, of narrow width; and the banks on each side were perpendicular and about 10 feet high. From the point of location of the hand car towards the south the track was straight, but upgrade. The bridge foreman testified that, when he first saw the approaching train, it was about 250 yards, or about 3 or 4 telegraph poles, distant. A member of the bridge crew testified that the train was about a quarter of a mile distant from the hand car. The engineer of the freight train testified that the hand car and crew were inside and towards the south part of the cut when he first saw them, and his locomotive was about 700 yards distant from the hand car at the time. The fireman on the locomotive gives the same distance as the engineer. Upon discovering the approaching train, the foreman immediately ordered the hand car stopped, and ordered the men to their places to assist in removing the car from the track. In compliance with the command of the foreman, the bridge crew endeavored to remove the hand car from the track, and lifted it until one of the employés dropped his end of the car and ran away. The car was gotten off the track except for one wheel, which hung to the rail. The employés then scattered away from the hand car, and Myers ran north on the right-hand or east side of the track, being the same side on which the hand car was being lifted, and being the outside of a curve. After running a few feet, Myers attempted to cross the track to the other side, where the other members of the crew were, so as to be out of the way of the hand car, which was sure to be struck by the approaching train. It was dangerous to be near the hand car in the collision, because it was loaded with tools such as axes and the like. Just as he had crossed the rails to the ties on the west side of the track he was struck by the pilot beam of the engine, and instantly killed. The operatives of the freight locomotive admit that Myers and his crew were all the time in a perilous situation and place from the approaching train because it was in a narrow and deep cut and the hand car was on the track. These operatives further say that they saw and knew the perilous situation to the crew from the time of their first seeing the crew. The engineer testified that during all the time to the injury there was only once or twice, and then for a few seconds only, when some one of the bridge crew was not on the track with the hand car. According to the testimony of the engineer, there were 25 cars in the train, and at the time he first saw the bridge crew the engine was running at a speed of not less than 25 miles an hour or more than 28 miles an hour; that the time card limit was 18 miles an hour, but that the officers of the company had authorized him to run the train as fast as he thought it was safe; that as soon as he saw the bridge crew he applied the emergency brakes, and caused the whistle to be sounded and the bell to be rung. He said it was not possible to stop the train in the distance to be run, but that he slackened the speed down to between 12 and 15 miles per hour, and that this was the rate of speed of the train at the time of the injury. The fireman testified substantially as did the engineer about what was done to stop the train, except that the fireman testified that he did not see the engineer try to put sand on the rails in front of the wheels. Both the fireman and the engineer say that, after the deceased was struck, the train was stopped within five or six car lengths distance, and that at the time it struck deceased it was running between 12 and 15 miles per hour. The foreman of the bridge gang testified that the rate of speed of the train when it was first discovered by him was about 20 miles, and that it was running at the same rate of speed when it struck deceased. At the time of his death deceased was 20 years and 2 months old, and unmarried, and was earning about $60 per month. His father and mother claim damages for loss of services during his minority and of expected pecuniary benefits after attaining his majority. The alleged grounds for negligence are (1) in the bridge foreman in ordering the members of his crew to remove the hand car from the track and in keeping them too long at work in the effort to remove the car from the track; and (2) in the operation of the locomotive after the operatives saw the perilous situation of the bridge gang. The court submitted only the second ground of alleged negligence to the jury, and confined a recovery to plaintiffs on that ground.

We conclude that the operatives of the freight train were guilty of negligence as pleaded, proximately causing the death of deceased; and the verdict of the jury in this respect is sustained.

F. H. Prendergast, of Marshall, for appellant. S. P. Jones, of Marshall, for appellees.

LEVY, J. (after stating the facts as above) The several assignments mainly present the two points as argued by appellant in its brief: (1) That the cause of action upon which recovery was had was barred by limitation; and (2) that there was no act of negligence shown on the part of the engineer and fireman to support the judgment.

[1] The precise contention as to the first point made is that the claim growing out of the negligence of the engineer of the freight train was barred by limitation because it was not set up until the filing of the second amended petition in June, 1910, more than two years after the death of Myers. The first petition was filed about a month after the death of deceased. This petition set up the fact that the deceased was struck and killed by a freight locomotive, and the circumstances under which it occurred; and charged the negligence to be in the foreman of the bridge crew in compelling the crew to stay with the hand car till the last to get it out of the way of the approaching freight train. The amended petition in 1910 charged substantially the same facts, reasserting the negligence of the bridge foreman, and also asserting the negligence of the engineer of the freight train in failing to discover Myers in time, or, having discovered him, in failing to stop his engine before it struck Myers. We do not think that the amended petition, upon which the case was tried, introduced a new cause of action against which limitation had run. Caswell v. Hopson, 47 S. W. 54, and authorities there cited.

[2] There was sufficient evidence, we think, to raise the issue of negligence on the part of the operatives of the locomotive proximately causing the death of Myers requiring its submission to the jury, and sufficient to support their findings. Myers v. Railway Co., 134 S. W. 814 (on former appeal). The assignments presenting these two questions, being Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 12, 14, and 15, are therefore overruled.

Assignments Nos. 8, 9, 10, and 13 are without injury, and are overruled.

The eleventh and sixteenth assignments are to the point that the judgment is excessive. Besides other things, it was shown that the deceased was young, strong, and healthy, and was earning money, and that his father was 51 years old. Under the language of the statute, broad authority is given the jury to measure the pecuniary injury in this character of cases. There is nothing in the record or the size of the verdict to suggest any passion or prejudice on the part of the jury. The assignments are overruled.

It is unnecessary, we think, to discuss appellees' cross-assignments. They are overruled.

The judgment is ordered affirmed.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Texarkana. Oct. 24, 1912.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 210*)—REVIEW BY CERTIORARI—JUDGMENT ON STATUTORY BOND.

Where defendant, against whom a default judgment was rendered in justice's court, brought the case to the county court by certiorari, giving the statutory bond, plaintiff, obtaining a judgment showing a trial on the merits in the county court, was entitled to judgment against the sureties on the bond filed in the county court, as required by Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 749.

Appeal from Wise County Court; E. M. Allison, Judge.

Action by J. J. Ingram against R. C. McClure and another. From a judgment of the county court granting insufficient relief to plaintiff, on defendant bringing the case from justice's court to the county court by certiorari and giving the statutory bond, he appeals. Reformed and affirmed.

R. E. Carswell and Robert Carswell, both of Decatur, for appellant. C. V. Terrell, of Decatur, for appellees.

LEVY, J. [1, 2] The suit was filed in the justice's court on a promissory note, and a judgment by default was entered. The defendant R. C. McClure carried the case to the county court by certiorari, giving the statutory bond. The county court rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants for the amount of the note, interest, and attorney's fees sued for, but refused to enter judgment against the sureties on the certiorari bond. The chief question presented on the appeal is on the action of the court in refusing to enter judgment against the sureties on the bond given. The plaintiff was entitled to have judgment rendered against the sureties on the certiorari bond. Article 749, R. S. of 1911; Yates v. Collins, 19 Tex. 138. The face of the judgment shows a trial on the merits, and not a judgment by agreement. For agreements of counsel to be enforced by the courts, the agreements must be made as provided by the rules of court. See rule 47 for district and county courts (142 S. W. xxi).

The judgment as entered by the trial court is here reformed so as to allow the plaintiff further to have judgment against C. B. Beard, J. A. Moore, and R. L. Hunt, sureties on the certiorari bond, for the amount of the judgment rendered against the defendants Fannie and R. C. McClure, and as so reformed the judgment is affirmed, costs of appeal to be taxed against appellees.

CLAYTON D. BROWN CO. v. O'CONNOR et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. San Antonio. Nov. 13, 1912.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 76*)—RIGHT TO ASSIGN OR SUBLET.

Where a lease provided that the premises should be used for mercantile purposes and not otherwise, and that the lessee should not assign or underlet the premises or any part thereof, without the consent of the lessor in writing, the lessee had no right without the consent of the lessor to permit a third person to place signboards on the roof, especially as Rev. St. 1895, art. 3250, expressly provides that lessees shall not rent or lease the leased premises during the term to any other person without the consent of the landlord, his agent or attorney.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 123*)—EXTENT OF PREMISES LEASED.

Where an owner of a one-story building containing several rooms leases them to different tenants, each lessee has merely an easement in the roof for the purpose of protection from the weather and has no control over it.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 76*)—RENT—PAYMENT—OPERATION AND EFFECT.

An owner of a one-story building containing several rooms, who leased them to different tenants, was not estopped by the acceptance of the rent from compelling a removal of signboards erected on the roof by a third person with the consent of the lessees; such consent not being a subletting, but an attempt to rent the property of another without authority.

Appeal from District Court, Dallas County; Kenneth Foree, Judge.

Action by the Clayton D. Brown Company against J. C. O'Connor and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Alex F. Weisberg and Spence, Knight, Baker & Harris, all of Dallas, for appellant. Cockrell, Gray, Thomas & McBride, of Dallas, for appellees.

FLY, C. J. This is a suit instituted by appellant to restrain appellees from injuring or destroying any signboards erected and maintained by appellant on the roof of a building owned by J. C. O'Connor. It appears from the pleading that J. C. O'Connor owns a certain one-story building in Dallas, Tex., which is divided into several stores, the stores being occupied by different lessees, and appellant, which is in the business of advertising through the medium of signboards, obtained from such lessees permission to place such signs on the roof of J. C. O'Connor's building. The owner, through his agents, objected to such use of his building, and appellant sought to enjoin the owner and his agents from interfering with the signs. A temporary writ of injunction was granted, but was dissolved upon motion of appellees, after a full hearing on the facts.

The facts show that J. C. O'Connor owned the house in question, which is divided into several storehouses occupied by tenants. In the lease to each tenant it was provided that the storehouse should be used "for mercantile purposes and not otherwise." The following provision was also embodied in each lease: "That the lessee shall not assign this agreement or underlet the premises, or any part thereof, or make any alterations in the building or premises, without the consent of the lessor in writing, or occupy or permit or suffer the same to be occupied for any business or purpose deemed extra hazardous on account of fire." The tenants, or a portion of them, it may be assumed from the facts, undertook to lease the roof to appellant to be used for signboards. The owner was not a party to such agreement with appellant, but protested against the roof being used by appellant. Appellant placed signboards on the roof, and the owner's agents were threatening to take them down. Appellees accepted rent from the lessees after the signboards had been placed on the roof, but constantly protested against their presence on the roof and told the tenants they must be taken down.

[1, 2] Under the terms of the contract, as well as under the law, the tenants had no authority to rent any portion of the building without the consent, in writing, of the owner. Article 3250, Rev. Stats. No such consent was obtained, and we might rest our decision on the contract, but we go further and hold that the tenants did not control the roof. The house, in this instance, included several rooms, each of which was leased to a different tenant, and such leasing certainly did not include the roof. It was a one-story building, and each lessee had merely an easement in the roof for the purpose of protection from the weather. McNair v. Ames, 29 R. I. 45, 68 Atl. 950, 16 Ann. Cas. 1208; Payse v. Irvin, 144 Ill. 482, 33 N. E. 756; Krueger v. Ferrant, 29

Minn. 385, 13 N. W. 158, 43 Am. Rep. 223; Hanley v. Banks, 6 Okl. 79, 51 Pac. 664; Shipley v. Fifty Associates, 101 Mass. 251, 3 Am. Rep. 346.

In the cited case of McNair v. Ames, in the Supreme Court of Rhode Island, the cases on the subject are reviewed and the following quotation is made and approved from the case of Gude Co. v. Farley, 28 Misc. Rep. 184, 58 N. Y. Supp. 1036: "The purpose of the roof of a building is primarily to shelter it and all of its occupants, and the tenant of the top floor has no better title to the roof or better right to use it for any other purpose than shelter than has the tenant of any other floor, and his right to use the roof over him is like his right to use the supporting walls of the foundation—one that is necessary and essential to the safety and quiet enjoyment of his apartments under the roof in the usual manner—and any extension of that right must be by agreement with or license from the owner. It is clear, therefore, that McMenamery had no right to sublease the roof of the building, as his subletting was by the terms of his own lease restricted to 'the second and third floors.'" In the Rhode Island case, that of a one-story building, it was said: "Doubtless it would have been competent for the parties to have contracted specifically that the complainant lessee should have control of the roof; but the lease is silent on that point, and we cannot say that the lessee of a part only of this business block is entitled to more than the lease describes—that is to say, the store and basement in the building as distinct from the land on which it stands, and as distinct, also, from the entire building."

The test that could be applied in this case would be, Who would be responsible for damages resulting from a failure to keep the roof in repair, the landlord or the tenants? The question is answered by the Supreme Court in O'Connor v. Andrews, 81 Tex. 28, 16 S. W. 628, and the liability for damages, under facts like those in this case, is placed upon the owner, for he alone controlled the roof. The duty of repairing the roof in this case devolved on the owner because he alone held control of it.

[3] If the owner had received the rent arising from the use of the roof by appellant, it would operate perhaps as a waiver of the right to complain of the renting of the roof, but that was not done, and receipt of the rent for the storerooms, while protesting against the unlawful use of the roof, was not a waiver. The owner received no compensation for the use of the roof. This was not a case of subletting but an attempt to rent the property of another without the semblance of authority.

There is no merit in this appeal, and the judgment is affirmed.

Error to Travis County Court; R. E. White, Judge.

Action by James Cofield and another against the Supreme Camp of American Woodmen. There was a judgment for plaintiffs, and they bring error. Affirmed.

D. R. Pickins, of Austin, for plaintiffs in error.

RICE, J. This suit was instituted by plaintiffs in error Jas. Cofield and wife, Indiana Cofield, against defendant in error, to recover the full amount of a policy issued to Indiana Cofield for $500, together with premiums thereon paid, amounting to $52.85, as well as for interest, attorney's fees, and statutory damages, alleging that defendant in error had theretofore issued a policy of insurance upon the life of Indiana Cofield, basing their right of recovery chiefly upon the contention that said camp had illegally canceled said policy, and denied her the right of membership therein. Defendant in error answered by special exception, general denial, and by special answer, denying that it had ever canceled her policy or denied her membership, but, on the contrary, that she had failed and refused to pay certain assessments and dues, which authorized it, under the terms of said policy, to suspend her on account of nonpayment, averring, however, that it had offered to reinstate her, provided she would comply with the rules and regulations of said order by the payment of said dues, etc., which she declined to do. A jury was waived, and the case was tried before the court, who rendered judgment in behalf of plaintiff in error for the sum of $1.80 and costs, from which judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

[1, 2] The court filed its conclusions of fact and law upon the request of plaintiff in error, from which it appears that plaintiff in error had failed to pay her assessment and dues for several months preceding the filing of said suit, and that she had not been expelled nor denied membership by reason thereof; but, on the contrary, said defendant had offered to reinstate her if she would pay same in accordance with its by-laws and regulations, that said policy had never in fact been canceled, but that plaintiff in error had failed and refused to pay said dues and assessments, and declined to continue her membership therein, and concluded as matter of law therefrom that she was not entitled to recover on said policy, but rendered judgment in her favor for $1.80, which she had improperly paid to an officer of the subordinate lodge not authorized to receive same.

These findings are assigned as error, and, without intending to intimate that they are incorrect, we cannot review them for the reason that there is no such statement of facts as can be considered by us, in that the same was filed more than 30 days after the adjournment of court without any order having been entered, authorizing the same to be so filed. See section 7, Acts of 32d Leg. p. 266, approved March 31, 1911. And in addition to this, even if said statement had been filed in due time, it could not be considered for the further reason that the same is not prepared in accordance with the law regulating the same.

Finding no error in the proceedings of the trial court, its judgment is affirmed.

Affirmed.

MILLER et al. v. LAYNE & BOWLER CO.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. El Paso. Oct. 31, 1912. On Rehearing, Nov. 27, 1912.)

1. PLEADING (§ 174*)—ANSWER—SUPPLEMENTAL PETITION—RESPONSIVENESS.

An allegation of the supplemental petition in an action on a note given for work in drilling a well, denying that plaintiff had guaranteed that the water was of a certain quality, was responsive to the allegation in the answer that, after the development of a well, plaintiff represented that the water equalled 1,000 gallons per minute of a quality suitable for rice irrigation, and the note was executed in consideration of such representations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 342; Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1040*)—HARMLESS ERROR—RULINGS ON PLEADINGS.

Any error in overruling an exception in an action on a note given for drilling water wells, to an allegation of the supplemental petition denying that plaintiff guaranteed that the water was any certain quality, on the ground that such allegation was not responsive to any issue, was harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4089-4105; Dec. Dig. § 1040.*]

3. CONTRACTS (§ 198*)—CONSTRUCTION—DIGGING WELLS.

A contract for drilling water wells provided that the contractors agreed to furnish all material and labor to put down "a test well for water," and that, in case they find sufficient water-bearing strata to justify them in doing so in their opinion, from which a supply not less than 800 gallons per minute could be obtained "suitable for irrigation" purposes as shown by test wells, they will develop it, and that the contractors do not guarantee a well of any certain quantity of water, and the contract is made upon the express understanding that, if the contractors fail to obtain water, they shall be under no obligation to the owners, but that, if they should not succeed in getting a well which would produce 800 gallons per minute, they should receive no pay, but, if the well would produce 800 gallons per minute, the owners shall pay the sum named. Held, that the contractors were not required to obtain water suitable for irrigation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 861-883; Dec. Dig. § 198.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 251*)—INSTRUCTION—ISSUES.

Even though an issue be raised by the evidence, it should not be submitted as such to the jury unless raised by the pleadings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 834-839; Dec. Dig. § 251.*]

5. FRAUD (§ 28*)—ACTS CONSTITUTING.

If a test well was drilled by a contractor according to his contract, the fact that after it was completed he made untrue representations as to the quality of the water would not constitute actionable fraud so as to be a defense to an action on a note given for the work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 8, 26; Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

6. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT (§ 15*)—EFFECT.

Where persons for whom a water well was drilled were not satisfied with it when it was completed, and the note given for the work was not executed until the parties had considerable negotiations and some mutual concessions were made, the owners would be precluded from denying the validity of the note on the ground that it was obtained by false representations as to the quality of the water; it having been executed in compromise of existing differences.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Compromise and Settlement, Cent. Dig. §§ 61-63; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

Appeal from District Court, Harris County; Norman G. Kittrell, Judge.

Action by the Layne & Bowler Company against Anson Miller and others, in which defendants pleaded set-off. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Harbert Davenport, of Brownsville, and J. H. Davenport, of Houston, for appellants. Andrews, Ball & Streetman, of Houston, for appellee.

HIGGINS, J. Appellee, a corporation, entered into a written contract with Anson Miller and Sylvester Shaffer, appellants, by the terms of which appellee, as contractor, agreed with appellants, as owners, to put down on certain land of the owners a test well for water. Those portions of the contract material to a consideration of the rights of the parties are as follows: "(a) Contractors agree to furnish all the material, machinery and labor except hereinafter stated necessary to put down on the land of the owners, hereinafter described, a test well for water. (b) The contractors further agree that, in case they encounter sufficient water-bearing strata to justify them doing so, in the opinion of the contractors, from which a supply of water of not less than eight hundred (800) gallons of water per minute can be obtained suitable for irrigation purposes as shown by test well, they will develop same. (c) The contractors do not guarantee a well of any certain quantity of water, and this contract is made by the contractors only upon this express understanding: That if, for any reason whatever, the contractors should fail in their attempt to obtain water, the contractors shall be under no obligation to the owners whatsoever, and no liability shall rest upon them on account of the making of this contract. In this connection, however, it is understood and agreed that, if the contractors should not succeed in getting a well that will produce eight hundred (800) gallons of water per minute, they are to receive no pay under proposition No. 2 of this contract. They are, nevertheless, to have the right to remove such of their material as they desire. (d) If, however, the well put down is capable of producing eight hundred (800) gallons of water per minute, when pumped to its capacity, the owner shall pay to the contractors the sum of $799.78, which will include a No. 6 Layne Ball-Bearing New Model Pump and one 24" steel pit properly set by the use of the Layne interlocking coupling device and 20' of screen to each 100' of hole drilled. In addition to this, the owners agree to pay to the contractors the sum of $5.50 per foot on the total depth of the hole, and $5 per foot for each additional foot of screen used in excess of 20' to each 100' of hole drilled. (e) The owners agree to pay to the contractors full settlement in cash the foregoing amounts as soon as well has tested eight hundred (800) gallons of water per minute."

By virtue of said contract appellee proceeded to bore a well upon the land described in the contract, and at a depth of 482 feet they encountered a water-bearing strata which they proceeded to develop; but being unable to obtain a flow of 800 gallons per minute, as provided by the contract, they proceeded deeper, and at a depth of about 900 feet they encountered another water-bearing stratum, which they developed, and produced a flow of 1,020 gallons of water per minute. Some controversy then arose between the parties as to whether or not the well complied with the contract, but appellants finally executed in payment therefor their joint and several promissory note in the sum of $3,918.90 in favor of appellee, with interest and attorney's fees, and upon which this suit is based. Appellants answered, admitting the execution of the note described in the petition, and admitted that plaintiff had a good cause of action, except as same was avoided by reason of the special defenses thereafter pleaded, and which will be hereafter adverted to. Upon trial the jury was given a peremptory instruction to find in favor of appellee upon the note sued upon. As to certain items pleaded in offset by defendants, the issues involved therein were submitted to the jury, and upon this cross-bill the jury found in their favor in the sum of $300, which was deducted from the amount due upon the note sued upon, and judgment rendered accordingly, from which appellants prosecute this appeal, assigning numerous errors alleged to have been committed. We will not discuss the assignments in detail, for the reason that the issues involved upon this appeal are few, and the various assignments are but repetitions presenting in different forms these issues.

[1] In appellants' answer it was averred that, after the development of the 900-foot well, appellee stated and represented that the water produced therefrom equalled 1,000 gallons per minute, of a quality suitable for rice irrigation, and that, in consideration of these representations, defendants executed the note sued upon. Appellee in a supplemental petition denied that it had guaranteed that the water was of any certain quality, and to this allegation appellants excepted upon the ground that it was not responsive to any issue raised by their answer and was immaterial and irrelevant.

[2] If their contentions were correct, the overruling of the exception would have been harmless error. But we think it was responsive to the allegation in their answer that the note was executed in consideration of representations and assurances that the water produced from the well was suitable for rice irrigation. Passing to a consideration of the correctness of the court's action in peremptorily instructing the jury to find in favor of the appellee upon the note sued upon, we think the court committed no error in this respect.

[3] In the first place, a careful consideration of the contract will disclose that it imposed no obligation upon the Layne & Bowler Company to produce a well whose water would be suitable for rice irrigation; they obligated themselves, by the clause which we have designated as "a," merely to put down "a test well for water." Clause "b" is the only one which even hints at any obligation to produce water of any given quality, and this obligation has reference to the developing of the well and the water after it has been bored, rather than to its original boring. In other words, this clause imposes upon them an obligation to develop the water after they reached the water-bearing stratum, in the event only the contractor was of the opinion that it was suitable for irrigation purposes and would produce not less than 800 gallons per minute. The only thing which the contractor guaranteed under the contract was that the well should produce 800 gallons of water per minute; all of which is more fully shown by the remaining clauses "c," "d," and "e"—especially clause "e," which provides that the owners would pay as soon as the well has tested 800 gallons of water per minute, the condition of payment being dependent upon amount, and not quality. We think the construction which we place upon this contract clearly correct; but, if we should be in error in this respect, defendants' answer is insufficient to raise the issue of want of failure of consideration upon which the defense is predicated.

[4] A careful examination of the defendants' answer discloses that it is nowhere alleged that, under the terms of the contract entered into between the parties, the appellee was under any obligation to bore a well which would produce water suitable for irrigation purposes; and, in the absence of any such allegation, it would have been error for the court to have submitted such an issue, even if it were raised by the evidence. Loving v. Dixon, 56 Tex. 75; Railway Co. v. Sillegman, 23 S. W. 298; Traction Co. v. Jamison, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 55, 85 S. W. 305. It is true it is alleged in the answer that, after the well had been developed, the appellee represented to and assured appellants that the water was suitable for rice irrigation, and that the note was executed in consideration solely of these representations; but this is not sufficient to relieve appellants from the necessity of directly averring that the contract required them to produce water suitable for rice irrigation, and it does not raise the issue of a failure of consideration. If their contract did not require them to furnish a well producing water adapted to such purposes, the fact that they may have made such representations and assurances after completion would not then impose such an obligation upon them. As to the issue of fraud suggested by the alleged falsity of the statements made in regard to the quality of the water, appellants' answer does not seem to have been based upon fraud alleged to have been perpetrated in procuring the note, defendants treating the same as raising the issue of a want of consideration rather than fraud; and we do not think the answer sufficient to raise any issue of fraud in the execution and delivery of the note.

[5] But if the answer could be properly so treated as sufficient, under the view which we take of the rights of the parties as determined by the written contract entered into between them, no such issue of fraud could be raised by the mere fact that, after it had completed its contract in accordance with the terms thereof, appellee may have made representations in regard to the quality of the water which were not in fact true, as its right to compensation had been fixed by compliance with the terms of its contract.

[8] Furthermore it is apparent, from the testimony of the defendants themselves, that they were not satisfied with the well when it was developed, and the note was not executed until considerable negotiations had taken place between the parties and some concessions made by appellee in regard to offsets and counterclaims asserted by the appellants. Under such circumstances, appellants would be precluded from denying the validity of the note, because it was executed in settlement and compromise of the differences then existing between the parties.

With reference to certain issues of partnership and issues in regard to the original contract and the alleged supplemental contract, these are of no merit. In reply thereto, it is sufficient to say that this suit and plaintiff's cause of action herein is based upon the joint and several promissory note of appellants, and these questions could not arise under those circumstances.

Affirmed.

On Rehearing.

Appellants' motion for rehearing herein is overruled. In our original opinion we stated what we conceived to be all of the material facts in the case, but appellants have filed motion for additional conclusions of fact, and, in deference to this motion, we file the following additional conclusions:

The well-drilling contract referred to in the opinion, in its entirety, reads as follows:

"The State of Texas, County of Harris—This memorandum of agreement made and entered into this 15th day of April, 1910, by and between the Layne & Bowler Company, a corporation, hereinafter called the contractors, and Sylvester Shaffer and Anson Miller of Anahuac, Chambers county, Texas, hereinafter called the owners. Witnesseth:

"Proposition No. 1.

"1. Contractors agree to furnish all the material, machinery and labor except hereinafter stated necessary to put down on the land of the owners, hereinafter described, a test well for water.

"2. The well shall be put down at a point to be designated by the owners on the following described land, to wit, being James Price 160 survey.

"3. The owners agree to furnish a 25 H. P. J. I. Case traction engine, lumber and nails for derrick.

"4. The contractors and owners each agree to keep a correct account of all moneys spent on this work, including all freight, drayage and transportation to Anahuac and return; and the owners agree to pay to the contractors in cash upon completion of this test, the actual cost of work plus 25%.

"Proposition No. 2.

"1. The contractors further agree that, in case they encounter sufficient water-bearing strata to justify them doing so, in the opinion of the contractors, from which a supply of water of not less than eight hundred (800) gallons of water per minute can be obtained suitable for irrigation purposes as shown by test well, they will develop same.

"2. The contractors agree to furnish all material, machinery and labor to drill the well; setting same with 11% casing and finishing the same with Layne patent screen, or Layne Shutter screen, at the option of the contractors.

"3. The owners agree to do all hauling in connection with said well and to furnish the derrick; said derrick to remain the property of the owner.

"4. The contractors do not guarantee a well of any certain quantity of water, and this contract is made by the contractors only upon this express understanding: That if, for any reason whatever, the contractors should fail in their attempt to obtain water, the contractors shall be under no obligation to the owners whatsoever, and no liability shall rest upon them on account of the making of this contract. In this connection, however, it is understood and agreed that if the contractors should not succeed in getting a well that will produce eight hundred (800) gallons of water per minute, they are to receive no pay under proposition No. 2 of this contract. They are, nevertheless, to have the right to remove such of their material as they desire.

"5. If, however, the well put down is capable of producing eight hundred (800) gallons of water per minute, when pumped to its capacity, the owner shall pay to the contractors the sum of $799.78, which will include a No. 6 Layne Ball-Bearing New Model Pump and one 24" steel pit properly set by the use of the Layne interlocking coupling device and 20' of screen to each 100' of hole drilled. In addition to this, the owners agree to pay to the contractors the sum of $5.50 per foot on the total depth of the hole, and $5.00 per foot for each additional foot of screen used in excess of 20' to each 100' of hole drilled.

"Terms.

"6. The owners agree to pay to the contractors full settlement in cash the foregoing amounts as soon as well has tested eight hundred (800) gallons of water per minute.

"In testimony whereof witness our hands and seal this the 15th day of April A. D. 1910.

We decline to make any further finding of fact, believing that all material facts are stated in the original opinion. We make the additional conclusion as to the contents of the above-mentioned contract in deference only to the insistence of appellants that we have not correctly interpreted the contract.

KEASLER LUMBER CO. et al. v. CLARK.
(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Texarkana.
Nov. 14, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 78*)—ORDER APPEALABLE.

An order to preserve the property under the control of the court in replevin is interlocutory, and not appealable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 426, 464-483; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 71*)—APPEALABLE ORDERS—COMPPELLING ACCEPTANCE OF REPLEVIN BOND—PROCEEDINGS.

Where defendant in replevin showed that the property in controversy was levied on by a constable who refused to accept a sufficient replevy bond, and prayed that the constable be compelled to accept the bond and deliver the property to defendant, the proceeding resulting in granting the relief demanded could not be treated as one granting a temporary mandatory injunction, within Rev. St. 1911, arts. 4644-4646, allowing appeals from orders granting or dissolving temporary injunctions, but the proceeding must be treated as one for mandamus independent of the replevin action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 386-401; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

3. REPLEVIN (§ 48*)—CUSTODY OF PROPERTY—ORDERS.

Where the officer in replevin has accepted the bond tendered by plaintiff, and has delivered the property in controversy to him, the court on the petition of defendant may not require the officer to accept defendant's bond and deliver to him the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Replevin, Cent. Dig. § 179; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

4. COURTS (§ 122*)—AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY—PLEADING.

Where the petition for mandamus in the district court to compel an officer to accept a replevy bond and deliver property in controversy to the principal obligor therein did not show the value of the property, the court did not acquire jurisdiction, since to give the court jurisdiction the value of the property must have been less than $200 or more than $500.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 427; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

Appeal from District Court, Harrison County; H. T. Lyttleton, Judge.

Action by the Keasler Lumber Company against Chesley Clark, who filed a petition to compel T. J. Johnson, a constable, to accept a replevin bond, and deliver the property to defendant. From a judgment granting relief on the petition, plaintiff and the constable appeal. Reversed and dismissed.

Beard & Davidson, Jno. W. Scott, and R. A. Hall, all of Marshall, for appellants. Jones, Bibb & Scott, of Marshall, for appellee.

WILLSON, C. J. The Keasler Lumber Company sued Chesley Clark for the title and possession of a wagon, several mules, some harness, etc., and on April 12, 1912, procured the issuance of a writ of sequestration, which on the same day was levied on the property by T. J. Johnson, a constable. June 2, 1912, Clark, as found by the court below, presented a good and sufficient replevy bond to the constable, who declined to accept and approve it. June 5, 1912, the lumber company presented a replevy bond to the constable, and he accepted and approved it. June 7, 1912, Clark petitioned the court as follows: "Now comes the defendant Chesley Clark and shows that heretofore, to wit, on or about the 4th day of April, 1912, the personal property described in the plaintiff's original petition in this cause and in the plaintiff's amended petition was levied upon by T. J. Johnson, constable, and the defendant was dispossessed of same, and that on, to wit, on the ——— day of May, 1912, the said defendant presented to the said T. J. Johnson, officer aforesaid, a good and sufficient replevy bond conditioned as required by law, with more than two good sureties, to wit, W. H. Killingsworth, Ike Killingsworth, and Lee Killingsworth, and said defendant requested said officer aforesaid to accept the said bond and approve the same, and demanded that the said property levied upon by said officer in said suit be turned over to the said defendant; that the said T. J. Johnson refused to accept and approve the said bond for no other reason than that he claimed that the same came too late. Wherefore the defendant prays that notice be issued at once, and that the said T. J. Johnson be cited to appear before this honorable court, and that he be required to approve the said bond and turn over to the defendant the said property, dating the approval of the said bond as of the date that the same was actually tendered and presented to him." The petition was verified by Clark's affidavit. June 8, 1912, the constable filed a sworn answer denying that Clark had ever presented a replevy bond to him, and averring that on June 5, 1912, the lumber company had presented such a bond to him, and that on the day it was presented he approved it and delivered the property to said lumber company. June 8, 1912, the court, after hearing testimony offered by the parties, decreed as follows: "It is adjudged, decided, and decreed that the said replevy bond bearing date of June 1, 1912, with Chesley Clark as principal and W. H. Killingsworth, Ike Killingsworth and Lee Killingsworth as sureties is hereby approved as of date June 2, 1912, and the said T. J. Johnson aforesaid is required to turn over to the said Chesley Clark the possession of the said property at once." The constable and the lumber company, which also had filed an answer contesting the right of Clark to the relief he asked, prosecute the appeal to this court.

[1] If the order should be treated, as appellee contends it should be, as an ordinary one for the purpose of preserving property under the control of the court during the pendency of the lumber company's suit against Clark, the appeal should be dismissed for want of jurisdiction in this court to hear and determine it; for such a judgment would be interlocutory. Lumber Co. v. Williams, 71 Tex. 444, 9 S. W. 436; Linn v. Arambould, 55 Tex. 611. Except in cases specially provided for by statute, this court has power to review final judgments only. Fidelity Funding Co. v. Hirshfield, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 517, 91 S. W. 246; Baumberger v. Allen, 101 Tex. 352, 107 S. W. 526.

[2, 3] If the order should be treated as the lumber company and constable treat it—not as an ordinary one, but as one granting a temporary mandatory injunction—then by virtue of the statute (articles 4644 to 4646, Revised Statutes of 1911) an appeal could be prosecuted, notwithstanding the judgment was an interlocutory one, and it would be the duty of this court to dispose of it on its merits. In that event, it conclusively appearing from testimony in the record that the constable had accepted and approved the replevy bond tendered to him by the lumber company, and that by virtue of the bond it held possession of the property, we would vacate the order of the court below and dissolve the injunction, on the ground that it required the officer to do something he lawfully could not do; for we think it should not be assumed that the lumber company would return the property to him. Unless it did he could obtain possession thereof only by force. As he did not have a right forcibly to resume possession of the property, he could not without violating the law comply with the order of the court. The officer should not have been placed in a position where if he complied with the order he must violate the law and subject himself to a suit by the lumber company for damages, and where, if he did not comply with it, he would subject himself to punishment by the court for contempt.

However, we have concluded that the case should not be viewed as one granting a temporary injunction in the suit of the lumber company against Clark, and therefore appealable under the statute referred to, but that it should be viewed as a suit by Clark against the constable for a mandamus, independent of the lumber company's suit. The effect of the order, if complied with, would not be temporary, in the sense that it would give to Clark the possession of the property subject to a right in the court, should it be made to appear during the pendency of the suit that he should do so, to revoke it and thereby restore the possession of the property to the officer, but it would be permanent, in the sense that it would give to Clark the possession of the property during the pendency of the suit, without a right in the court during that time to deprive him of it; for certainly, having directed the property to be delivered to Clark on his bond, conditioned as the law directed, and a delivery thereof having been accordingly made, the court could not by merely revoking his order restore the possession of the property to the constable.

[4] Treating the proceedings as an independent suit by Clark for a mandamus, we think the judgment should be reversed and the cause dismissed, because it does not appear from the petition for the writ that the court below had power to hear and determine it. To give that court jurisdiction, the value of the property must have been less than $200 or more than $500 (Lazarus v. Swafford, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 367, 39 S. W. 389; Bigby v. Brantley, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 44, 85 S. W. 311; Calhoun v. Wren, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 618, 64 S. W. 786); and whether it was either did not appear from the allegations in the petition (Lillard v. Freestone County, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 363, 57 S. W. 339; Needham v. Austin Electric Ry. Co., 127 S. W. 904; Royal Fraternal Union v. Bedford, 105 S. W. 523).
